The defendants, who were the proprietors and vendors of a medical preparation called "The Carbolic Smoke Ball," published the following advertisement:—"100*l.* reward will be paid to any person who contracts the increasing epidemic, influenza, after having used the ball three times daily for two weeks" in a certain specified manner; "1,000*l.* is deposited with the A. Bank, showing our" (the defendants') "sincerity in the matter." The plaintiff, on the faith of this advertisement, purchased from a chemist one of the defendants' smoke balls, and used it in the manner required, and then contracted influenza:—Held, that the advertisement was an offer to contract; that by the performance of the conditions therein contained, the plaintiff had accepted the offer, and thereby created a contract with the defendants; that, having regard to the character of the transaction, no notification of acceptance of the offer was necessary; that there was consideration moving from the plaintiff; and, consequently, there was a binding contract by the defendants to pay the 100*l.* Gerhard v. Bates (2 E. & B. 476) discussed. Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., 62 L. J., Q. B. 257; [1893] 1 Q. B. 256; 4 R. 176; 67 L. T. 837; 41 W. R. 210; 57 J. P. 325—C. A.

On the 29th May the defendant instructed his printers to print handbills offering a reward of 25*l.* to the person who should give information to a superintendent of police, leading to the conviction of the perpetrator of a certain crime. The plaintiff, a police officer, on the same morning, before the instructions to print the handbills had been given by the defendant, had communicated the desired information to C., a fellow police officer, with instructions to forward it to the superintendent, and C. thereupon communicated the information, in accordance with the rules of the force, to his own immediate superior officer, L., who sent it on the same evening to the superintendent, whom it reached in due course on the following morning, the 30th May, after the time when the said handbills had been delivered to and had been distributed by him to the neighbouring police-stations:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the reward, C. and L., through whom such information was conveyed to the superintendent, being the plaintiff's agents to convey, and not the superintendent's agents to receive the message. Gibbons v. Proctor, 64 L. T. 594; 55 J. P. 616.

See further cases sub tit. ADVERTISEMENT.

—— Of Sale.]—The advertisement of a sale without reserve:—Held, to create a binding contract between the auctioneer and the highest bidder that the goods should be knocked down to him. Warlow v. Harrison, 1 El. & El. 295.

An advertisement by an auctioneer that a sale of certain articles would take place on a certain day:—Held, not to bind the auctioneer to sell the articles, nor to indemnify persons who had come to attend the sale. Harris v. Nickerson, 42 L. J., Q. B. 171; L. R. 8 Q. B. 286; 28 L. T. 414; 21 W. R. 635.

Statement of Minimum Price by Vendor.]—The mere statement by a vendor of the lowest price at which he will sell certain real estate contains no implied contract to sell it at that price to the persons making the inquiry. Harvey v. Facey, 62 L. J., P. C. 127; [1893] A. C. 552; 1 R. 428; 69 L. T. 504; 42 W. R. 129—P. C.

H. telegraphed to F., "Will you sell B. property? Telegraph lowest cash price." F. replied by telegram, "Lowest price for B. property 900*l*." H. thereupon by telegram agreed to buy for that sum:—Held, that there was no completed contract; the respondent would be bound as to the lowest price he would accept, but no further. Ib.

Announcement of Examination for Scholarship.]—An announcement that an examination for a scholarship will be held does not imply a condition that the scholarship will be given to the competitor obtaining most marks. Consequently there is no contract on which such competitor can sue the trustees of the scholarship. Spencer v. Harding (L. R. 5 C. P. 561) followed. Rooke v. Dawson, 64 L. J., Ch. 301; [1895] 1 Ch. 480; 13 R. 269; 72 L. T. 248; 43 W. R. 313; 59 J. P. 231.

Vague and Indefinite Offers.]—See Uncertain Contracts, infra, D. 1. h.

Necessity for.]—A person who does work for another without the knowledge or consent of that other cannot sue for the value. T. was engaged to command L.'s ship. He threw up his command during the expedition but helped to work the vessel home, and then claimed reward for services thus rendered:—Held, that he could not recover. See Taylor v. Laird, 1 H. & N. 266; 25 L. J., Ex. 329.

Receipt.]—The delivery of a receipt containing terms of the contract constitutes the offer of the party who tenders it. If the form is accepted without objection by the person to whom it is tendered, this person is, as a general rule, bound by its contents, and his act amounts to an acceptance of the offer made to him, whether he reads the document, or otherwise informs himself of its contents or not. To this general rule there are, however, the following exceptions:—(1) The nature of the transaction may be such that the person accepting the document may suppose, not unreasonably, that the document contains no terms at all, but is a new acknowledgment of an agreement, not intended to be varied by special terms. (2) In case of fraud. (3) Where the document is misleading, and does actually mislead the person who takes it. (4) An exception has been suggested of conditions unreasonable in themselves, or irrelevant to the main purpose of the contract.—Per Stephen, J., in Watkins v. Rymill, infra.

—— Delivered to Customer—Incorporation of Conditions exhibited upon Premises.]—The defendant was keeper of a repository for the sale on commission of horses and carriages. The plaintiff delivered to him a wagonette to be sold, and took from him a printed form which contained a receipt for the wagonette, followed by the words, "Subject to the conditions as exhibited upon the premises." By one of the conditions exhibited upon the premises the defendant had power to sell any property sent to his repository which remained over one month unless all expenses were previously paid. The plaintiff did not read this receipt, but put it in his pocket without noticing it. The defendant having sold the wagonette in the exercise of the power of sale in the conditions, the plaintiff brought an action to recover its value, and at the trial, the jury, having been directed that the question was whether the defendant had or had not given the plaintiff reasonable notice of the conditions, found a verdict for him:—Held, that the jury had been misdirected, for the condition was not unreasonable, and, having regard to the circumstances, there was nothing to take the case out of the general rule that if a document in a common form is delivered by one of two contracting parties to and accepted without objection by the other, it is binding upon him, whether he informs himself of its contents or not, and that judgment ought to be entered for the defendant without a new trial, for there was no evidence upon which the jury could have properly found for the plaintiff. Zunz v. S. E. Ry. (L. R. 4 Q. B. 539); Henderson v. Stevenson (L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 470); and Burke v. S. E. Ry. (5 C. P. D. 1) considered. Watkins v. Rymill, 52 L. J., Q. B. 121; 10 Q. B. D. 178; 48 L. T. 426; 31 W. R. 337; 47 J. P. 357.

Notice relieving Owner of Tug against Negligence of Servants.]—Where the owners of a tug gave notice that they would not be answerable for any loss or damage occasioned to any tow by any negligence or default of them or their servants, and such notice was brought to the knowledge of the owners of the tow, and the latter was lost through the tug taking more vessels than she could properly manage, and more than were allowed by regulations made under the Piers and Harbours Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), and the Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Act, 1866:—Held, that the owners of the tug were exempt from liability. The United Service, or Cole v. Great Yarmouth Steam Tug Co., 53 L. J., P. 1; 9 P. D. 3; 49 L. T. 701; 32 W. R. 565; 5 Asp., M. C. 170—C. A.

A master of a steam-tug, of which the defendant was owner, was employed by the plaintiff to tow his smack out of a harbour. In so doing, the smack was stranded through the negligence of the master. The plaintiff had on previous occasions hired the defendant's steam-tug, and on paying the charge had received a receipt upon the back of which was printed a notice that the defendant would not be answerable for damage occasioned by any supposed negligence of his servants:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the contract was made on the terms printed on the back of the receipts. Symonds v. Pain, 6 H. & N. 709; 30 L. J., Ex. 256.

Ticket—Conditions.]—If in the opinion of the jury a passenger receiving a ticket from a shipping company does not see or know that there are any conditions thereon, he is not bound by the conditions. If he knew there was any writing on the ticket it is a question of fact whether he had reasonable notice that the writing contained conditions, and he is or is not bound thereby according as he had such notice or not. Parker v. S. E. Ry. (2 C. P. D. 416), approved. Richardson v. Rowntree, 63 L. J., Q. B. 283; [1894] A. C. 217; 6 R. 95; 70 L. T. 817; 58 J. P. 493; 7 Asp. M. C. 482—H. L. (E.)

contract is a question independent of circumstances which may excuse its non-performance. If terms proposed by two parties to each other in themselves constitute a complete contract by which the one party is to do for the other a definite work at a certain time, and to receive a specified rate of remuneration, it is not the less a binding contract, which will subject the party who was to do the work to an action for not doing it, because at the time the terms were accepted something remained to be disclosed (as to the nature of the work, &c.) upon which it might depend whether there might not be a legal justification for refusing to perform it. Lara v. General Apothecaries' Co., 26 L. J., Ex. 225.

iii. Lapse or Revocation.

Lapse—Unreasonable Time.]—A proposal on one side, not answered by the other until after a delay of some months, and then not assented to, but some months after acceded to, is no evidence of a contract. Emmott v. Riddell, 2 F. & F. 142.

Where an application is made for shares, the directors are bound to allot them within a reasonable time, or the allottee may refuse to accept them and recover back the deposit, whether he has withdrawn his application or not. Ramsgate Hotel Co. v. Montefiore, 4 H. & C. 164; 35 L. J., Ex. 90; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 455; 13 L. T. 715; 14 W. R. 335.

An allotment on 23rd November of shares applied for on 8th June, is not made within a reasonable time. Ib.

Revocation — Valid before Acceptance.] — Where a defendant offered to purchase a house from the plaintiff, and to give him six weeks for a definite answer:—Held, that before the offer was accepted, the defendant might retract it at any time during the six weeks. Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653; 1 M. & P. 717; 3 Car. & P. 267; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 166; 29 R. R. 672.

The defendant, on the 19th of August, 1853, contracted to purchase of the plaintiff a parcel of chassum waste silk, "to arrive, in all probability, in January and February next; but further particulars will be furnished respecting the name of the ship or ships in the next mail, or on receipt of the next after that." The second mail after the 19th of August arrived in London on the 19th of September; no name of any ship was then communicated to the defendant; and on the 18th of January, 1854, the defendant wrote: "We give you one week from this day's date to give to us the name of the ship which the 20,000 lbs. of chassum are on board; and in default of your compliance with our request, we shall consider the same as a breach of the contract of the 19th of August last." To this the plaintiff replied on the same day: "I am happy to be able to remove the uneasiness you feel respecting the arrival of the 20,000 lbs. chassum to your contract of 19.8.53, by informing you that it has already arrived, and that you will receive invoice in due course." On the 19th the defendant wrote: "Your letter of yesterday is not an answer to ours of the same date, which required the name of the ship on which the chassum has been shipped, and this is the information which we now again call for; but as you say the chassum has arrived, there is no occasion for the delay of a week in giving the information which we now ask for in the course of to-morrow; in default of which, we shall act as indicated in our letter of yesterday." The names of two ships were given on the 24th and 25th of January:—Held, that the defendant's offer to renew the contract not having been in terms accepted by the plaintiff, the defendant was at liberty to retract it, and that his letter of the 19th of January was a sufficient retractation. Gilkes v. Lemino, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 485; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 537; 6 W. R. 620.

An offer to guarantee moneys to be advanced to a third party on discount, to a certain extent, "for the space of twelve calendar months," is countermandable within that time. Offord v. Davies, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 748; 31 L. J., C. P. 319; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 22; 6 L. T. 579; 19 W. R. 758.

—— Invalid after Acceptance.]—A company advertised for tenders for the supply of stores for a period of twelve months. The defendant sent in a tender to supply the stores required for the period named, at certain fixed prices, "in such quantities as the company's storekeepers might order from time to time," and the company accepted his tender:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise to supply the goods, although there was no binding contract on the part of the company to order any. G. N. Ry. v. Witham, 43 L. J., C. P. 11; L. R. 9 C. P. 16; 29 L. T. 471; 22 W. R. 48.

Two of the plaintiffs were the legal owners of a leasehold interest in a house, and claimed 37*l.* from the defendant for the use and occupation of it during the three last months of their term. They authorised him to pay this amount to another of the plaintiffs, who was owner of the reversion. She called on the defendant, who expressed his willingness to pay her the money, though he did not make any actual tender of it, but she refused to receive it and demanded more. The plaintiffs then sued the defendant for the use and occupation, and claimed 238*l.* The defendant paid 37*l.* into court:—Held, that as soon as the defendant expressed to the agent his readiness to pay the 37*l.* there was a concluded agreement between him and the plaintiffs for that amount, and that the plaintiffs could not recover more. Gretton v. Mees, 7 Ch. D. 839; 38 L. T. 506; 26 W. R. 607.

Held, also, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of the action from the time of the payment into court. Ib.

Communication of Revocation—Necessity for.] —The defendant, being possessed of warrants for iron, wrote from London to the plaintiffs at Middlesborough asking whether they could get him an offer for the warrants. Further correspondence ensued, and ultimately the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs fixing 40*s.* per ton, nett cash, as the lowest price at which he could sell, and stating that he would hold the offer open till the following Monday. The plaintiffs on the Monday morning at 9.42 telegraphed to the defendant: "Please wire whether you would accept forty for delivery over two months, or if not, longest limit you could give." The defendant sent no answer to this telegram, and after its receipt on the same day he sold the warrants, and at 1.25 P.M. telegraphed to plaintiffs that he had done so. Before the arrival of his telegram to that effect, the plaintiffs having at 1 P.M. found a purchaser for the iron, sent a telegram at 1.34 P.M. to the defendant stating that they had secured his price. The defendant refused to deliver the iron, and thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against him for non-delivery thereof. The jury found at the trial that the relation between the parties was that of buyer and seller, not of principal and agent. The state of the iron market was very unsettled at the time of the transaction, and it was impossible to foresee when the plaintiffs' telegram was sent at 9.42 A.M. how prices would range during the day :—Held, that in the circumstances the plaintiffs' telegram at 9.42 ought not to be construed as a rejection of the defendant's offer, but merely as an inquiry whether he would modify the terms of it, and that, although the defendant was at liberty to revoke his offer before the close of the day on Monday, such revocation was not effectual until it reached the plaintiffs ; consequently the defendant's offer was still open when the plaintiffs accepted it, and the action was therefore maintainable. Cooke v. Oxley, infra, discussed. Stevenson v. McLean, 49 L. J., Q. B. 701 ; 5 Q. B. D. 346 ; 42 L. T. 897 ; 28 W. R. 916.

—— By Letter posted before but received after Acceptance.]—An offer of a contract sent by letter cannot be withdrawn by merely posting a subsequent letter which does not, in the ordinary course of the post, arrive until after the first letter has been received and answered. By a letter of the 1st of October the defendants wrote from Cardiff offering goods for sale to the plaintiffs at New York. The plaintiffs received the offer on the 11th and accepted it by telegram on the same day, and by letter on the 15th. On the 8th of October the defendants posted to the plaintiffs a letter withdrawing the offer. This letter reached the plaintiffs on the 20th :—Held, that the withdrawal was inoperative, a complete contract binding both parties having been entered into on the 11th of October when the plaintiffs accepted the offer of the 1st, which they had no reason to suppose was withdrawn. Byrne v. Van Tienhoven, 49 L. J., C. P. 316 ; 5 C. P. D. 344 ; 42 L. T. 371 ; 44 J. P. 667.

M. applied in writing for shares in a company, and forwarded a deposit. After a letter of allotment was posted to M., but before it was received, he became aware of an alteration in the prospectus, and wrote withdrawing his application. Negotiations subsequently took place between M. and the chairman of the company, who was authorised by the directors to arrange a compromise with M., as the result of which an agreement was come to that M.'s name should be removed from the register. A petition to wind up the company was then presented, and a few days afterwards there was a meeting of the company, at which the directors resolved that the allotment of shares to M. should be cancelled :—Held, that as M.'s letter of repudiation was not received until after the letter of allotment was posted, M. became a shareholder, but that a binding compromise, releasing him from his contract, had been concluded before the commencement of the winding-up, and that therefore he was not liable to be fixed on the list of contributories. Scottish Petroleum Co., In re, Maclagan's case, 51 L. J., Ch. 841 ; 46 L. T. 880.

Where an offer is made in such circumstances that it must have been within the contemplation of the parties that, according to the ordinary usages of mankind, the post might be used as a means of communicating the acceptance, the acceptance is complete as soon as it is posted ; but this doctrine does not apply to the revocation or modification of an offer. Henthorn v. Fraser, 61 L. J., Ch. 373 ; [1892] 2 Ch. 27 ; 66 L. T. 439 ; 40 W. R. 433—C. A.

The defendants handed to the plaintiff, at their office in Liverpool, an offer in writing to sell him certain real property in Birkenhead, where he resided. On the following day the plaintiff's solicitor wrote by his direction accepting the offer. After the letter was posted, but before it reached its destination, the plaintiff received through the post a withdrawal of the offer :—Held, that the acceptance was complete before the offer was withdrawn. Ib.

—— Where held Unnecessary.]—A., having proposed to sell goods to B., gave him a certain time at his request to determine whether he would buy them or not ; B., within the time, determined to buy them, and gave notice to A. :—Held, that A. was not liable for not delivering them, for B. not being bound by the original contract there was no consideration to bind A. Cooke v. Oxley, 3 Term Rep. 653 ; 1 R. R. 783.

A. and B. being together, B. offered goods to A. at a certain price, and gave A. three days to make up his mind. Before the three days expired B. offered the goods to C. A. cannot declare against B. as upon an absolute bargain. Head v. Diggon, 3 M. & Ry. 97 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 36.

On Wednesday A. signed and delivered to B. a memorandum in these words :—"I hereby agree to sell to B. certain freeholds for 800*l.*" Then followed a postscript, also signed by A. :—"This offer to be left over until Friday, nine o'clock A.M." On Thursday A. entered into a contract to sell the freeholds to C. On Friday morning, before nine o'clock, B., who had become aware that A. had entered into a contract for the sale of the property to C., but had received no notice of such contract from A., handed to him a written acceptance of the offer, which A. refused to receive, saying that the property was already sold. On a bill by B. for specific performance :—Held, that the memorandum signed by A. was a mere offer, which he was entitled to withdraw at any time before acceptance ; that it was too late for B. to accept the offer after he had become aware that A. had entered into a contract to sell the property to another person, and that the bill must therefore be dismissed with costs. Dickinson v. Dodds, 45 L. J., Ch. 777 ; 2 Ch. D. 463 ; 34 L. T. 607 ; 24 L. T. 594—C. A.

A person to whom a written offer to sell an estate has been made cannot turn the offer into a binding contract by accepting it after he has heard that the person making the offer has sold the property to somebody else, although there has been no formal retractation of the offer. Ib.

b. Acceptance.

i. Generally.

Contract requires Two Parties.]—A contract requires two parties to it, and a man in one character can with difficulty contract with himself in another character. Collinson v. Lister, 20 Beav. 356.

Acceptance—Must be Absolute and Unconditional.]—Where letters are produced to prove an agreement, the answer to the written proposal must unequivocally and expressly accept the terms proposed, without the introduction of new matter. Holland v. Eyre, 2 Sim. & S. 194.

An agreement is the result of the mutual assent of two parties to certain terms; and if it is clear that there is no consensus, what may have been written or said becomes immaterial. Ely (Marchioness), In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 638.

As soon as the fact is established of the final mutual assent of the parties to certain terms, and those terms are evidenced by any writing signed by the party to be charged or his agent lawfully authorised, there exist all the materials which a court of equity requires to make a legally-binding contract. Ib.

But where to a proposal or an offer an assent was given subject to a provision as to a contract:—Held, that the stipulation as to the contract was a term of the assent, and there was no agreement independent of that stipulation. Ib.

There must be mutuality in a contract to render it binding. Staines v. Wainwright, 8 Scott, 280; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 174; 9 L. J., C. P. 107. And see cases sub. iii. infra.

—— Contract dates from.]—Semble, that the acceptance of an offer to sell constitutes a contract for sale only as from the time of the acceptance. The contract does not relate back to the time when the offer was made. Dickinson v. Dodds, 45 L. J., Ch. 777; 2 Ch. D. 463; 34 L. T. 607; 24 W. R. 594.

Want of Mutuality—When no bar to Performance.]—Where a contract is made which both parties to it know at the time cannot be carried out without the act or consent of a third party, and that act or consent is done or given by the third party within a reasonable time, and he does nothing inconsistent with such act or consent, want of mutuality at the time of contract is no bar to its performance. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 26 W. R. 57.

ii. Communication of.

Binding when sent through Post.]—The defendant applied for shares in the plaintiff company. The company allotted the shares to the defendant, and duly addressed to him and posted a letter containing the notice of allotment, but the letter never was received by him:—Held, by Baggallay and Thesiger, L. JJ., Bramwell, L. J., dissenting, that the defendant was a shareholder. British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson, infra, overruled. Household Fire Insurance Co. v. Grant, 48 L. J., Ex. 577; 4 Ex. D. 216; 41 L. T. 298; 27 W. R. 858—C. A.

When an offer is made by letter sent through the post, and is accepted by letter also sent through the post, the contract is made at the moment that the letter of acceptance is put into the post. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Harris's case, 41 L. J., Ch. 621; L. R. 7 Ch. 587; 26 L. T. 781; 20 W. R. 690.

H. made an offer to take shares by a letter sent from Dublin to London by post on the 5th of March. At 4 A.M. on the 16th of March, a letter of allotment was posted in London, directed to H. in Dublin. On the 16th March, at a later hour in the day, a letter was posted by him in Dublin withdrawing his offer. Both letters were delivered on the 17th of March:—Held, that he was bound. Ib.

A. applied for shares in a company. Shares were allotted on the 15th March, 1866, and the letter of allotment posted on the 16th, but owing to the applicant having omitted to add the name of the post town "Dublin" to his address, the letter miscarried, and was returned to the company, who immediately forwarded it through the brokers at Dublin on the 20th of March. The letter was delivered on the 21st, but in the meantime the applicant had written on the 20th a revocation of his application for shares, and subsequently repudiated the allotment and demanded a return of his deposit. No steps were taken by A. to have his name removed from the register of shareholders, and calls made by the company were not enforced against him:—Held, that the miscarriage of the first letter of allotment being caused by the incorrect address furnished by A. himself, the contract was complete at the time when, but for A.'s fault, the letter would have been delivered. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Townsend's case, 41 L. J., Ch. 198; L. R. 13 Eq. 148; 25 L. T. 692; 20 W. R. 164.

Held, also, that the letter posted on the 20th of March was posted within a reasonable time, and was a good notice of allotment; and that A. was a contributory. Ib.

When an application for shares in a company has been sent by post, the contract to take shares is complete and binding from the moment that the letter announcing the allotment is put into the post, whether such letter subsequently reaches the allottee or not. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Wall's case, 42 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 15 Eq. 18.

A proposed contract is not binding on the proposer until its acceptance by the other party has been communicated to him, and posting a letter communicating the acceptance to him is not sufficient to make it binding on him if he does not in fact receive the letter. British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson, 40 L. J., Ex. 97; L. R. 6 Ex. 108; 23 L. T. 868.

—— Notwithstanding Posting of Revocation.]—See Byrne v. Van Tienhoven; Scottish Petroleum Co., In re; and Henthorn v. Fraser, supra, cols. 9, 10.

—— Reply by Return.]—On the 22nd November, 1871, the plaintiff wrote to the defendants, asking their lowest price for 800 tons of iron, delivered at P., at the rate of 200 tons per month, March, April, May, and June, 1872; to which, on the 24th November, they replied:—"We beg to offer you 800 tons at 69*s.* per ton delivered at P., and waiting your reply by return, remain," &c. The plaintiff did not reply by return, but on 27th November wrote to the defendants as follows:—"Your price is high; if I made the quantity 1,200 tons, delivery 200 tons a month for the first six months of next year, I suppose you would make the price lower." In answer to this the defendants, on 28th November, wrote as follows to the plaintiff:—"In reply to yours of yesterday we are willing to make you an offer of further 400 tons, 200 tons in January, 200 tons in February, at the same price we quoted you in ours of the 24th inst., though the rate of freight will, doubtless, be higher then than that of the following months. Let us have your reply by return of post as to whether you accept our offers of, together, 1,200 tons." No reply was actually sent by return, but on the same day, the 28th November, the plaintiff wrote and posted a letter to the defendants :—"You can enter me 800 tons on the terms and conditions named in your favour of the 24th inst., but I trust you will enter the other 400 tons, making in all 1,200 tons, referred to in my last, at 68*s*." These two letters crossed each other in the course of post, and on the 29th November the defendants replied to the plaintiff's letter of the 28th, that they could not "book his order for 1,200 tons at less than 69*s*., and even that offer they could only leave on hand for reply by to-morrow before 12 o'clock." The plaintiff did not reply within that time, and subsequently the defendants declined on that ground to deliver any iron at all to him, whereupon he brought this action for breach of contract, contending that, at all events, there was a binding contract for 800 tons :—Held, that there was no contract to deliver the 800 tons, as the plaintiff did not accept the defendants' offer of the 24th November, his letter of the 28th November being too late for that purpose ; and the defendants' offer of the 1,200 tons was only open until noon on the 30th, and was not accepted within that time. The defendants' letter of the 28th November was one offer of 1,200 tons, and not two separate offers of 800 and 400 tons. Tinn v. Hoffmann, 29 L. T. 271—Ex. Ch.

"Reply by return of post" does not mean exclusively "reply by letter by return of post." A reply by telegram or by verbal message, or by any means, not later than a letter sent by post would reach its destination, would equally satisfy the requisition. Ib.

In an action for the breach of an agreement in not delivering coals, a letter from the defendant, containing the terms of the contract between him and the plaintiff, concluded by stating, as to the proposition therein contained, that it was desirable that he should have an answer per return, as he could have a vessel to charter at the price stated, which would not wait any longer for the defendant's answer ; and, failing her, he feared he should not be able to get another ; and there was no averment in the declaration that the plaintiff had sent an answer per return :—Held, that this amounted to a mere request, and formed no part of the contract, and consequently that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Johnson v. King, 2 Bing. 270 ; 9 Moore, 482.

A letter offering a contract does not bind the party to whom it is addressed to return an answer by the very next post after its delivery, or to lose the benefit of the contract ; an answer, posted on the day of receiving the offer, is sufficient. Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. Cas. 381 ; 12 Jur. 295.

A person putting into the post a letter declaring his acceptance of a contract offered has done all that was necessary for him to do, and is not answerable for casualties occurring at the post-office. Ib.

By Letter in answer to Telegram.]—An acceptance of the terms of a contract must on the face of it include an acceptance of all the terms offered. An offer by telegram is presumptive evidence that a prompt reply is expected, and an acceptance by letter may be evidence of such unreasonable delay as to justify a withdrawal of the offer. Quenerduaine v. Cole, 32 W. R. 185.

Misdirection.]—A contract is complete upon the posting by one party of a letter addressed to the other, accepting the terms offered by the latter, notwithstanding such letter never reaches its destination. Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 225.

A., by letter, offered to sell B. certain specified goods, receiving an answer by return of post ; the letter being misdirected, the answer notifying the acceptance of the offer arrived (two days later than it ought to have done) on the day following that when it would have arrived if the original letter had been properly directed. A. sold the goods to a third person :—Held, that there was a contract binding the parties, from the moment the offer was accepted, and that B. was entitled to recover against A in an action for not completing his contract Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681 ; 19 R. R. 415.

Time.]—A purchaser offered a price for an estate, and the vendor, by a letter sent by post and received by the purchaser the day after it was put into the post-office, accepted the offer :—Held, that the vendor was bound by the contract from the time when he posted his letter, although it was not received by the purchaser until the following day. Potter v. Sanders, 6 Hare, 1.

Does not make Binding Contract.] — The plaintiff, who proposed to enter the service of the defendant, a calico printer, as salesman, on the 21st of September wrote as follows :—"Referring to my conversation with you, I have now the pleasure to state my willingness to enter the service of your firm for one year on trial, on the following terms, viz., a list of merchants to be regularly called on by me to be made, and corrected as occasion requires. My salary for the year to be 120*l*., and in addition a commission of ½*d*. per piece on all sales effected or orders taken by myself, &c. If the terms herein specified are in accordance with your ideas, kindly confirm them by return, and I will prepare to enter on my duties at your warehouse on Monday morning next." The defendant on the following day replied :—"Yours of yesterday embodies the substance of our conversation and terms. If we can define some of the terms a little clearer, it might prevent mistakes ; but I think we are quite agreed on all. We shall therefore expect you on Monday." Then followed this postscript :—"I have made a list of customers, which we can consider together" :—Held, that these two letters did not constitute a binding contract in writing, the defendant's answer not being an absolute and unqualified acceptance of the plaintiff's offer. Johnson v. Appleby, 43 L. J., C. P. 146 ; L. R. 9 C. P. 158 ; 30 L. T. 261 ; 22 W. R. 515.

The defendant applied by letter to a projected railway company for one hundred shares, undertaking to accept the same or any less number, and to pay the deposits. He received a letter of allotment for sixty shares. This letter was headed "Not transferable." In an action by the company against him to recover the amount of the deposits :—Held, that there was no binding contract, the proposal being absolute and the acceptance conditional, it containing a qualification that the contract was not to be transferable. Duke v. Andrews, 5 Railw. Cas. 496 ; 2 Ex. 290.

A. wrote to B. on the 15th of July, proposing a partnership, saying, "As to the time, I certainly should wish it by the end of August." To this B. answered on the 16th, "I am ready to accede to your proposal. With regard to time, if you could possibly defer my coming until the second week in September, it would suit much best, as our season in August is at the height." On the 19th A. again wrote, "The time is very important, and ought not to be later than August":—Held, that these letters did not constitute an absolute agreement; and that the judge, having left it to the jury to determine whether B.'s letter of the 16th of July was a positive acceptance of A.'s proposal of the 15th, was a misdirection. Cheveley v. Fuller, 13 C. B. 122.

The defendant, on 20th November, 1851, wrote to plaintiffs in these terms:—"I agree to supply you with coals for three years from this date, at 4*s.* 6*d.* per ton. This offer to extend to your whole consumption." On the same day the plaintiffs answered the above in these terms:—"We agree to take our whole consumption of coals from you for three years next ensuing, commencing from 1st October, 1851":—Held, that the second letter was not an unqualified acceptance of the terms contained in the first, and that therefore there was no contract in writing. Haworth v. Barnes, 2 C. L. R. 783; 2 W. R. 375.

The first of the above letters having been put in, and it having been elicited in cross-examination that an answer to it in writing had been sent:—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to show parol acceptance of the terms contained in the first letter. Ib.

When it appears from the correspondence between the parties that some of the terms of an agreement have been arrived at, but that others remain unsettled, there is no contract between the parties, and consequently, there can be no part performance. Bertel v. Neveux, 39 L. T. 257.

C. made a written proposal to D. for the exchange to him of a new engine for an old one, with 10*l.* and a ton of iron. D. afterwards verbally assented to these terms, with the exception of the ton of iron; and in the course of the conversation advised C. to remove the fittings at once, and subsequently told him that he could not allow the engine to remain on his premises beyond quarter-day. Before quarter-day, C. sold the old engine to the plaintiff, but refused to let the plaintiff have it, alleging that the bargain was (as the written proposal rather imported), that it was not to be removed until the new engine was completely fitted up, and that this had not been done. In an action against D. for conversion of the old engine, the judge told the jury that it was for them to consider, under all the circumstances, whether or not the contract between C. and D. was for an immediate transfer of the old engine, and if so, to find for the plaintiff, which they did:—Held, that as the written proposal had not been accepted simpliciter, the real contract was by parol; that the direction was right, and that there was evidence to sustain the verdict. Stones v. Dowler, 29 L. J., Ex. 122.

A contract stated in a declaration was "five tons of linseed cake, to be delivered within a reasonable time in that behalf." The contract proved was, "I can take the five tons of linseed cake, but it must be put on board directly." Answer, "I shall ship you five tons to-morrow":—Held, that the proof did not support the declaration. Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 225; 18 L. J., C. P. 310. See also Ulloch v. Reddelieu, 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 208.

Introduction of New Term.]—A letter allotting shares stated that the allotment-money must be paid on the 21st of March, and punctual payment was requisite, and that the bankers were instructed not to receive payment after that day without interest at 10 per cent.:—Held, that this addition relative to interest was not an introduction of a new term. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Harris's case, 41 L. J., Ch. 621; L. R. 7 Ch. 587; 26 L. T. 781; 20 W. R. 690.

The plaintiff sent his horse for sale to a livery stable and there bargained with B., who bid 75*l.* for the horse if sound. The parties, however, did not then come to any final agreement, and the plaintiff left the horse with S., the livery-stable keeper, to see if the defendant would buy the animal, arranging with S. that the latter was not to have any commission on the sale unless a price of 75*l.* or more was paid. A veterinary surgeon having reported a slight unsoundness in the horse, B. wrote to S.:—"When we bid 75*l.* for the horse we did it on the understanding that he should be passed sound; as it is, we think 70*l.* as much as we should give, and therefore you can make that bid for us." S. did so, inclosing B.'s letter to the plaintiff, who wrote in reply:—"As the horse is with you, he shall go at 70*l.* clear to me. I will pay no expenses; you must get what you can of Mr. B. I cannot allow anything off the 70*l.*":—Held, that as the plaintiff by his answer to the defendant's offer stipulated that they should bear expenses to which he as vendor was primâ facie liable, he added a new term to those proposed, and in the absence of an acceptance of that term there was no complete contract between the parties. Lewis v. Pedrick, 29 L. T. 178.

Where the defendant offered to purchase on certain terms, "possession to be given on or before 25th July," and the plaintiff agreed to the terms, and said he would give possession on the 1st of August:—Held, no acceptance of the defendant's offer. Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653; 1 M. & P. 717; 3 Car. & P. 267; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 166; 29 R. R. 672.

A letter accepting an offer to purchase an estate on the terms stated in an advertisement, added a sum for deposit and a day for completing the purchase. No reply was given to this letter:—Held, that there was no complete contract on which to sustain a bill for specific performance. Honeyman v. Marryatt, 6 H. L. Cas. 112; 26 L. J., Ch. 619; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 17.

When an offer for the sale of an estate is accepted "subject to the title being approved by our solicitors," a new term is introduced, and there being no unconditional acceptance of the offer there is no contract. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 47 L. J., Ch. 751; 8 Ch. D. 670; 38 L. T. 543; 26 W. R. 703—C. A. But see dicta of Cairns, L. C., S. C., 48 L. J., Ch. 846; 4 App. Cas. 311; 41 L. T. 1; 27 W. R. 585.

Where there has been by means of letters an offer and an acceptance constituting a completed contract, and specific performance is sought of that contract, the fact that the person seeking specific performance had in letters subsequent to the letters constituting the contract sought to insert a new stipulation, which was resisted by the other party, is not sufficient to show that there had been no complete contract constituted by the prior letters. Hussey v. Horne-Payne (4 App. Cas. 311) explained. Bolton v. Lambert, 58 L. J., Ch. 425; 41 Ch. D. 295; 60 L. T. 687; 37 W. R. 434—C. A.

The defendant by letter offered to sell his business on certain terms to the plaintiffs, which the plaintiffs by letter accepted. On a formal memorandum being submitted to the plaintiffs they added a clause prohibiting the defendant from carrying on a similar business within a certain radius. Subsequent negotiations followed as to this clause, and the defendant declined to complete. The plaintiffs then offered to complete on the original terms in the letters, omitting the disputed clause. In an action by the plaintiffs for specific performance:—Held, that, looking to the subsequent negotiations, there was no concluded agreement constituted by the original letters, and the action was dismissed. Hussey v. Horne-Payne (4 App. Cas. 311) followed; and the criticism on that case in Bolton v. Lambert (supra) dissented from. Bristol Aërated Bread Co. v. Maggs, 59 L. J., Ch. 472; 44 Ch. D. 616; 62 L. T. 416; 38 W. R. 393.

The defendant made an offer by letter to the plaintiff to purchase from him an estate, which offer was accepted by the plaintiff by letter. After this the plaintiff sent to the defendant a formal contract for his approval and signature. This contract contained several new terms, which the defendant struck out. The defendant returned the contract as altered to the plaintiff, saying that he could not agree to the "special conditions." Further negotiations took place between the parties, and ultimately the defendant wrote to the plaintiff declining to go on with the negotiations. The plaintiff thereupon commenced an action against the defendant for the specific performance of the agreement contained in the two letters:—Held, that a complete contract was contained in the two letters of offer and acceptance, and that, as these letters contained all the terms agreed on between the parties, the complete contract could not be affected by subsequent negotiations relating to the new terms introduced by the vendor. Bellamy v. Debenham, 60 L. J., Ch. 166; 45 Ch. D. 481; 63 L. T. 220; 39 W. R. 257. See S. C. in C. A., 60 L. J., Ch. 166; [1891] 1 Ch. 412; 64 L. T. 478; 39 W. R. 257.

A letter purporting to accept an offer for the purchase of land, but enclosing for signature conditions of sale importing new terms into the contract, is a counter offer and not an acceptance. Crossley v. Maycock (L. R. 18 Eq. 180) followed; Giblins v. North-Eastern Metropolitan District Asylum (11 Beav. 1) distinguished. Jones v. Daniel, 63 L. J., Ch. 562; [1894] 2 Ch. 332; 8 R. 579; 70 L. T. 588; 42 W. R. 687.

—— Enquiry as to Date of Purchase—Request that Fences be Seen to.]—In answer to a letter by the agent of the defendant containing an offer to sell freehold land, the plaintiff wrote accepting the offer, but added, "I should like to know from what time Mr. Hughes wishes the purchase to date"; also, "You do not mention fences, but I should be obliged if they may be seen to at once, as they really need attention": —Held, that these remarks were not to be treated as part of the bargain, and the letter of the plaintiff was a complete acceptance of the offer. Simpson v. Hughes, 66 L. J., Ch. 334; 76 L. T. 237—C. A. Affirming 45 W. R. 221.

Omission of Term contained in Offer.]—Two letters may be sufficiently identical to constitute a contract, although the letter of proposal may mention a term which is omitted in the letter of acceptance. Metzler v. Gounod, 32 L. T. 656.

The defendant signed a letter whereby he guaranteed to the plaintiffs 250 subscriptions to the "Choir" newspaper, of which they were proprietors, in consideration of their giving him the free use of one column of space in such newspaper, and the defendant also undertook to insert the name of the "Choir" as his organ in a foreign newspaper. The plaintiffs signed a letter agreeing to insert the defendant's advertisements in consideration of the subscriptions being guaranteed, but omitting to mention the promise of the defendant as to the foreign newspaper, and afterwards added a postscript to the effect that the payment of the subscriptions should be completed within a certain time:—Held, that the two letters formed a good special contract between the parties, which the addition of the postscript did not invalidate. Ib.

A. wrote to B. offering to sell him an estate for 37,500*l.*, or a part of the estate for a less sum, and added a postscript reserving the right to remove the materials of a house. B. replied, "I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter stating that you are willing to accept 37,000*l.* for the whole of your freehold land at N. I hereby accept your terms as above, and agree to pay you the said sum of 37,500*l.* for your land":—Held, that this was an acceptance of the terms in A.'s letter, including the postscript. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 47 L. J., Ch. 751; 8 Ch. D. 670; 38 L. T. 543; 26 W. R. 703—C. A. See also S. C., in H. L. 48 L. J., Ch. 846; 4 App. Cas. 311; 41 L. T. 1; 27 W. R. 585.

Contract subject to Vendor's Approval.]—At a sale by auction on the 10th of August, 1880 (an announcement of which, indorsed on the particulars and conditions, had the auctioneer's name printed at foot), D. signed a memorandum appended to the particulars and conditions, acknowledging that he had "this day purchased from Mr. Stafford, the vendor, by public auction, subject to his approval, the premises mentioned in the annexed particulars, for the sum of 2..0*l.*, subject to the conditions of sale also annexed hereto"; but there was no signature by the vendor, nor any subsequent adoption of the contract under his hand. At the time of sale D. paid a portion of the purchase-money in cash, and for the balance of the stipulated deposit he gave his I O U. Three days afterwards D. paid a further sum on account of the deposit, and was handed a receipt dated the 13th August, 1880, signed by the auctioneers' clerk, on behalf of "Michael Crooke" (the auctioneer), and acknowledging that he had "received from Mr. Dyas (the purchaser) 30*l.* sterling, which with 20*l.* paid 10th August, makes 50*l.* deposit on his purchase, 84*l.*, Mr. Stafford's property." The vendor's solicitor subsequently wrote to D. recognising the sale, furnished him with copies of the title-deeds, and approved of the draft conveyance to him, which, however, the vendor refused to execute; whereupon D. having brought an action for specific performance:—Held, that there was no agreement enforceable against the defendant, as the contract of the 10th of August having been made expressly "subject to his approval," the memorandum of that date only amounted to a proposal, and did not constitute a note in writing, within the Statute of Frauds; there not being then in fact any contract in existence that subsequent parol approval by the defendant or his agents could not have the effect of altering the character in which his name appeared in the memorandum, so as to convert it into an authentication of a contract; and that the auctioneer's name at foot of the indorsement on the particulars and conditions merely authenticated the announcement of the sale. Dyas v. Stafford, 9 L. R. Ir. 520—C. A.

Subject to Approval of Solicitor.]—A., the defendant, wrote to his solicitor, who was also the solicitor of E., the plaintiff:—"You may make Mr. E. an offer of the T. hotel at 150*l.* per annum from Lady-day, 1881; tenant to pay all rates and taxes, except property tax, and do internal and external painting and repairs; the roof and walls to be kept in repair by the landlord. Term, ten years; a proper lease to be drawn up with all proper clauses, and to be approved by me and my solicitor." This letter was forwarded to the plaintiff, who at once wrote and accepted the offer. There was some evidence that the defendant knew the plaintiff was a brewer:—Held, that the words "to be approved by me and my solicitor" did not prevent the letters forming a complete contract, and that the defendant was not entitled to insist on the lease containing a covenant against underletting. Eadie v. Addison, 52 L. J., Ch. 80; 47 L. T. 543; 31 W. R. 320.

—— Refusal of Approval.]—No action lies upon an agreement to buy a lease, and sign a "formal contract" when approved by the purchaser's solicitor, in the event of such solicitor not approving of it, unless the approval is withheld malâ fide or unreasonably. Bartlett v. Greene, 30 L. T. 553.

Where a contract is made subject to the approval of the solicitor of one party it is an essential condition of the contract that that approval should be given unless the purchaser has acted unreasonably or the solicitor does not act bonâ fide, and in an action to enforce a contract the fact that such consent has not been given is a sufficient answer. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78; 29 R. R. 61.

By a letter which contained all essential terms of a contract, the defendant offered to take a lease of a number of houses from the plaintiff, but there was this provision at the end:—"Such lease to be approved in the customary way by my solicitor." The offer contained in this letter was accepted by the plaintiff. The defendant's solicitor subsequently refused to approve the lease, or to complete:—Held, that there was a binding, and not a conditional, contract, which must be specifically enforced. The meaning of the provision was, that the defendant's solicitor was to see that nothing irregular or unusual was inserted in the formal lease which was to carry out the agreement. Chipperfield v. Carter, 72 L. T. 487.

—— Introduction of New Term.]—See Hussey v. Horne-Payne, supra.

More formal Agreement to be Drawn up.]—Specific performance of an agreement "subject to a contract to be settled," or "subject to a proper contract," will not be enforced. Harvey v. Barnard's Inn, 50 L. J., Ch. 750; 45 L. T. 280; 29 W. R. 922. See also Donnison v. Peoples Café Co., 45 L. T. 187.

When the cardinal points of a proposed contract are definitely agreed upon by letters, the mere fact that in the course of the correspondence reference has been made to a more formal agreement, or subsidiary non-essential stipulations, will not deter the court from considering the agreement arrived at by the letters as concluded. Cayley v. Walpole, 39 L. J., Ch. 609; 22 L. T. 900; 18 W. R. 782.

The owners of land, in answer to a written offer to buy it, wrote saying they had received the offer, and added, "which offer we accept, and now hand you two copies of conditions of sale which we have signed; we will thank you to sign same, and return one of the copies to us":—Held, that this was not an unqualified acceptance, and did not make a contract of which specific performance could be enforced as against the purchasers. Crossley v. Maycock, 43 L. J., Ch. 379; L. R. 18 Eq. 180; 22 W. R. 387.

Where the parties have come to a final agreement, and one of the terms is that such agreement shall be embodied in a formal contract, the agreement may be enforced, even though such formal contract has not been executed. Rossiter v. Miller, 48 L. J., Ch. 10; 3 App. Cas. 1124; 39 L. T. 173; 26 W. R. 865.

An estate belonging to R. was offered for sale in lots subject to printed conditions of sale, one of which provided that the purchaser should be required to sign a contract embodying the conditions. M. made a verbal offer for the purchase of certain lots in accordance with the conditions. The authorised agents of the vendors wrote to him recapitulating the terms of his offer, and accepting it on behalf of the proprietors, and adding that he had requested the solicitors "to forward to him the agreement for purchase." M. wrote back that, unless he was left free to build or not as he liked, the offer had better be reconsidered. The agent replied that the acceptance was not conditional, and that he was at liberty to do as he thought best. M. afterwards refused to complete the purchase:—Held, that the letters amounted to a binding contract within the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

By a written agreement the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to take a lease of a house for a certain term at a certain rent, "subject to the preparation and approval of a formal contract." No other contract was ever entered into between the parties:—Held, that there was no final agreement of which specific performance could be enforced against the defendant. Winn v. Bull, 47 L. J., Ch. 139; 7 Ch. D. 29; 26 W. R. 230.

A. wrote "to confirm" a previous verbal offer of 6,000*l.* for property. B. accepted the offer in writing, coupled with the words, "I will send draft contract in due course":—Held, there was no contract contained in the writings. Vale of Neath Colliery Co. v. Furness, 45 L. J., Ch. 276; 34 L. T. 231; 24 W. R. 631.

In reply to a telegram from an intending purchaser offering 1,200*l.* as the purchase-money of lands, with respect to which negotiations for a sale had been previously pending, the vendor telegraphed, "Accept your offer of 1,200*l.*, subject to letter and agreement to be sent to your solicitor." A draft contract of sale was subsequently furnished to the purchaser's solicitor; but, owing to differences as to the details, such as the commencement of the title, registry searches, &c., the treaty was broken off by the vendor:—

Held, that the vendor's acceptance by telegram, being expressly made subject to a further agreement to be entered into between the parties, did not amount to a concluded contract, specific performance of which the intending purchaser was entitled to enforce. Brien v. Swainson, 1 L. R. Ir. 135.

The plaintiff wishing to sell a medical practice, with the lease of the house where it was carried on, placed it on the books of a medical agent. This led to negotiations with the defendant. The premiums asked for the practice and for the lease were stated in a letter from the agent to the defendant, but no time for completing the purchase was mentioned. The defendant replied in a letter to the agent accepting the terms offered, and adding that he should be ready to pay the deposit-money "on receipt of corrected agreement," and at the same time he wrote to the plaintiff personally, also accepting the terms offered, and adding, "I shall trust to you to give me the best introduction you can during three months and afterwards, if necessary." The plaintiff replied, thanking the defendant for acceding to his terms, and saying that "it would be his aim as well as his duty to give him an effectual introduction to his patients." A formal agreement was drawn up, but never signed, and after some further correspondence the defendant refused to complete the purchase: —Held, that as the time for the commencement of the purchase was left uncertain, and the stipulation as to the three months' introduction was not agreed to, and as the parties contemplated a formal agreement, there was no binding contract between the parties, and the action was dismissed. May v. Thomson, 51 L. J., Ch. 917; 20 Ch. D. 705; 47 L. T. 295—C. A.

The plaintiff and defendant signed a written document whereby the defendant agreed to buy and the plaintiff agreed to sell an estate therein described at a specified price, "subject to a formal contract being prepared and signed by both parties as approved by their solicitors." A correspondence ensued, in the course of which the defendant's solicitor stated that the defendant was "quite firm in adhering to the agreement he entered into" to give a certain sum per acre for the property, which amounted to less than the specified price. A formal contract was prepared in draft, but was not, nor was any other formal contract, signed by the parties or approved by their solicitors. In an action for specific performance of the agreement as modified by the correspondence:—Held, that there was no concluded agreement between the parties which was capable of being specifically enforced. Winn v. Bull (supra) followed. Hawkesworth v. Chaffey, 55 L. J., Ch. 335; 54 L. T. 72.

An action was brought by vendors for specific performance. The following telegram had been signed and sent by the purchaser's solicitor to the vendor's solicitor:—"Mr. H. will purchase Stonyrood at the sum named to me as owing to the mortgagees. Will write to-night." A telegram in reply was sent by the vendor's solicitor as follows:—"Telegram with offer received, which I accept as solicitor to the second mortgagees." The purchaser's solicitor then wrote to the vendor's solicitor thus:—"I am in receipt of your telegram accepting Mr. H.'s offer. If I recollect rightly, the amount was some 1,578*l.* Send me the contract, and I will get it signed." It was admitted by the purchaser that his solicitor was his agent, duly authorised on his behalf to send the telegram. Beyond this there was no distinct evidence of agency:—Held, that there was no sufficient note or memorandum in writing to satisfy s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds; that it could not be inferred that the purchaser's solicitor was his agent to write the letter; but even if this could be inferred, the words "send me the contract," &c., showed that it was not the intention of the parties that the letter should constitute a contract between them. Goodall v. Harding, 52 L. T. 126.

A. and B. agreed to take C. into partnership at a future date, the agreement required by both sides to be drawn up by solicitors. The parties had not considered, and could not afterwards agree upon, several terms of the intended partnership:—Held, that there was no concluded agreement between the parties. Connery v. Best, 1 Cab. & E. 291.

In July, 1884, P., who was entitled in fee to a beerhouse at B. as trustee, agreed to sell the same to the plaintiffs, but he declined to complete the purchase, and the plaintiffs threatened him with legal proceedings. Subsequently fresh negotiations were entered into for the purchase of the property, and on the 20th December P. authorised his solicitor to sell to the plaintiffs for 1,000*l.* on condition that they relinquished any right of action they might have against him. At that time 1,000*l.* was the best price obtainable for the property. The plaintiffs' solicitors were authorised to make a contract for the plaintiffs. On the 24th P.'s solicitor wrote to the plaintiffs' solicitors, "I now send you for approval draft contract containing the terms on which P. is willing to sell this property to your clients. My client declines to produce an earlier title than that stated as the commencement of the title in the draft contract." The draft contract contained stipulations as to payment of price and commencement of title, but it contained no provision as to the relinquishment of any right of action. The contract was shortly after returned by the plaintiffs' solicitors approved. Upon P.'s refusal to complete, the plaintiffs brought an action against him for specific performance:—Held, that there was no concluded agreement between the parties. Held, also, that the draft contract was not in accordance with the authority given to P.'s solicitor. Whether an agreement in accordance with such authority would have been a breach of trust, quære. Bushell v. Peacock, 53 L. T. 860.

The fact that a simple acceptance of an offer contains a statement that the acceptor will instruct his solicitor to prepare the necessary documents does not render the acceptance a conditional acceptance. Crossley v. Maycock (L. R. 18 Eq. 180) approved. Bolton v. Lambert, 58 L. J., Ch. 425; 41 Ch. D. 295; 60 L. T. 687; 37 W. R. 434—C. A.

A "rough draft" containing all the essential terms of a contract, and signed by the party to be charged, is a sufficient acknowledgment within the Statute of Frauds, and can be enforced against such party, though a more formal document was intended by the parties to be prepared. Gray v. Smith, 59 L. J., Ch. 145; 43 Ch. D. 208; 62 L. T. 335; 38 W. R. 310—C. A.

By a letter, dated the 17th April, 1893, and signed by the plaintiffs, they offered the defendants 145,000*l.* for their business, including "the freehold brewery and premises at Deptford, the forty-six freehold and six leasehold houses enumerated in the list given to us, the book-debts amounting to 5,000*l.* and the loan 7,800*l.*, and all consumable and rolling stock, fixed and loose plant, horses, drays, carts, and other effects now used in connection with the business." The letter contained the following condition:—"This offer is made subject to our approving a detailed contract to be entered into." The letter also mentioned the date for completion, and referred to the payment of the purchase money in cash and preference and debenture stock of a brewery company to be formed. The defendants accepted the terms contained in the letter by signing it. They also had the letter stamped as an agreement. Subsequently they refused to complete. No company was ever formed. An action was brought by the plaintiffs for specific performance:—Held, that the above letter was not a binding contract between the parties, inasmuch as not only was it expressed on the face of it to be made subject to the parties "approving a detailed contract to be entered into," but also because it was evident that various important details were left to be discussed and agreed on—matters that could not be settled without a further document:—Held, therefore, that specific performance could not be ordered. Page v. Norfolk, 70 L. T. 781—C. A.

An offer to purchase land contained the words "and if my offer is accepted I will sign contract on the auction particulars." The offer was accepted in writing "subject to contract as agreed," and a draft contract was enclosed:—Held, that there was a concluded agreement, specific performance of which could be enforced. Filby v. Hounsell, 65 L. J., Ch. 852; [1896] 2 Ch. 737; 75 L. T. 270; 45 W. R. 232.

And see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

—— Waiver by Vendor—Specific Performance.]—An agreement in writing between the plaintiff and the defendant provided that the former was willing to sell to the latter a leasehold house, "subject to the preparation by my' (the plaintiff's) "solicitor, and completion of a formal contract":—Held, that this condition prevented the agreement from being final; that it was not for the benefit of the plaintiff only, and, therefore, could not be waived by him, and, consequently, that he could not enforce specific performance of the agreement. Hawksley v. Outram ([1892] 3 Ch. 359) distinguished. Lloyd v. Nowell, 64 L. J., Ch. 744; [1895] 2 Ch. 744; 13 R. 712; 73 L. T. 154; 44 W. R. 43.

—— Question of Intention.]—W. was owner of G., leased to M., under whom R. occupied it for some years. In 1849, R. applied to W. for a lease of G. to himself from 1852, when the original one to M. would expire. W. referred R. to C., his agent, and between them there were interviews and correspondence, which resulted in the specification of terms, which were sent as instructions by C. to W.'s solicitor to prepare a lease. Both W. and C. denied that the one had given, or the other received, authority to conclude a binding agreement, though some evidence on the part of R. went to show that the terms for the intended lease had been finally settled so as to constitute an agreement:—Held, that there was no concluded binding agreement. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas. 238; 27 L. J., Ch. 46; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 173; 5 W. R. 804.

If contracting parties agree on terms of which there is sufficient evidence, but contemplate in addition a more formal document, it becomes a question of intention merely whether they intend it as a memorial of the terms already agreed on, or as the instrument by which alone they meant to be bound. Ib.

—— Altering Draft Lease.]—The defendant having proposed to take a lease of premises for the term of seven years, a draft lease was prepared, to which the defendant made some objections. He ultimately took it away, to be settled by his solicitors. His solicitors returned the draft to the plaintiff's solicitors, with the following letter:—"We have seen our client, and have altered the draft lease in accordance with his instructions. We trust there will be no impediment to prevent an early completion, and shall be glad to receive the draft as soon as you can, that we may engross the counterpart." The plaintiff's solicitors replied, returning the draft and engrossment of the lease and counterpart, stating that, according to the practice, where there is no definition on the subject, the lessor's solicitor invariably prepares both lease and counterpart:—Held, that there was no evidence of any contract binding the defendant to take the lease, and no memorandum of any contract sufficient for that purpose, within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Forster v. Rowland, 7 H. & N. 103; 30 L. J., Ex. 396; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 998.

G. on 25th November signed a letter addressed to B.'s agent, whereby G. agreed to buy the lease of a house of B. for a certain price, the purchase to be completed before Christmas then next, and "a formal contract to be signed" by G. "when prepared" by the solicitors of B., and "when approved" by the solicitors of G. A draft agreement prepared on behalf of B. was materially altered by the solicitors of G., and B.'s solicitors declining to accept such alterations, the bargain went off:—Held, that no action was maintainable upon G.'s letter. Bartlett v. Greene, 30 L. T. 553.

—— Agreement for Lease - Mere Proposal.]—A memorandum of an agreement for a lease for twenty-one years was signed by the intended lessee, but not by the lessor, and named referees. The lessor's agents prepared a draft lease, and wrote to the lessee, saying they hoped on a certain day to have the agreement prepared and ready for inspection; to this the lessee replied by a letter, making an appointment, and hoping all would be satisfactorily arranged. The lessee refused to complete:—Held, that there was an agreement sufficiently signed by the lessor, but that the agreement imported a proposal merely, and was not an unconditional agreement. Warner v. Willington, 3 Drew. 523; 25 L. J., Ch. 662; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 433; 4 W. R. 531.

—— Parol Negotiations.]—Where, after a parol contract, before the parties separate, one asks that he may have a note of it, and the other writes out a note or memorandum of it, which purports to contain the contract, and does contain all the essential elements of it, the latter must be taken to contain the terms of the contract, and the previous parol contract cannot be referred to. Bromley v. Johnson, 5 L. T. 715; 10 W. R. 303.

If there are parol negotiations, which are afterwards reduced into writing, the writing must be looked to as showing the final arrangement. Sinclair v. Stevenson, 2 Bing. 514; 1 Car. & P. 582.

—— Whether Equivalent to New Term.]—When an offer in writing is accepted in writing, the mere reference in the document accepting the offer to the preparation of a more formal contract does not amount to the introduction of a new term. Bonnewell v. Jenkins, 47 L. J., Ch. 758; 8 Ch. D. 70; 38 L. T. 81; 26 W. R. 294—C. A.

B. wrote to estate agents, in whose hands J. had placed a leasehold property for sale:—"In reference to Mr. J.'s premises, I think 800*l.* for the lease, fixtures, fittings, &c., is about what I should be willing to give. Possession to be given me within fourteen days from date," &c. The agents, having received authority from J. to accept the offer, replied:—"We are instructed to accept your offer of 800*l.* for these premises, and have asked Mr. J.'s solicitor to prepare contract":—Held, that the reference to the preparation of a formal contract did not prevent the two letters from constituting a binding contract. Ib.

An intimation in the written acceptance of a tender that a contract will be afterwards prepared, does not prevent the parties from becoming bound to perform the terms in the tender and acceptance respectively mentioned, if the intention of the parties was thereby to enter into an agreement, and if the preparation of the contract was contemplated merely for the purpose of expressing the agreement already arrived at in formal language. Lewis v. Brass, 3 Q. B. D. 667; 37 L. T. 738; 26 W. R. 152—C. A.

Details to be Embodied.]—A vendor and purchaser had agreed by parol upon the sale of a house at a specified price. The purchaser, by arrangement, wrote a letter to the vendor confirming his offer, repeating the terms, and requesting a reply. The vendor's solicitor replied, stating that he was instructed to carry out the sale of the house according to the purchaser's letter, but adding, "there are some details to be embodied in a contract of sale which I will prepare and forward for your approval and signature":—Held, that the latter words, as to details to be embodied, qualified the otherwise unconditional acceptance of the offer in the purchaser's letter, and that there was not a sufficient memorandum in writing within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Ball v. Bridges, 30 L. T. 430; 22 W. R. 552.

Signatures to be Affixed.]—It is a general principle that when parties enter into any agreement, and the understanding is, that it is to be reduced into writing, or if it is already in a written form, that it is to be signed before it is acted upon, or is to take effect, it is not binding upon them until it is so written or signed. Boyd v. Hind, 25 L. J., Ex. 246.

The defendants and T. were partners in a colliery, and in October, 1835, the defendant signed an agreement with the plaintiff, purporting to be made between the defendants and T. of the one part, and the plaintiff on the other part, by which they of the first part agreed to supply the plaintiff with coals from the colliery for a term of three years, to commence on the 1st July, 1837; the instrument contained a stipulation, by the parties of the first part, for a lease to the plaintiff of a wharf. At the date of the agreement the parties were acting under a similar one, which would expire on the 1st July, 1837, and was executed by T. also, but T. never signed the agreement in question, and on being asked to do so in July, 1837, refused. There was also evidence that the plaintiff had treated this agreement as not binding:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendants on the agreement, that it was a question for the jury, whether the parties intended the instrument to be binding only on the condition of T. signing it. Latch v. Wedlake, 3 P. & D. 499; 11 A. & E. 959; 9 L. J., Q. B. 201.

"Subject to Final Arrangements."]—In an action against a defendant for the breach of a contract to go as surgeon on board an Australian emigrant vessel, the letter, containing the terms proposed by the plaintiffs, required the defendant to remit them one-third of the passage-money. The defendant's acceptance of the proposal was in these words:—"I will accept the appointment of surgeon to your vessel, on the terms you propose"; and he added, "I expect to be in London Saturday or Monday, when I will call on you, and make final arrangements":—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that the contract was complete, so as to bind the defendant, though he did not remit the money required, or call to make final arrangements. Richards v. Hayward, 2 Scott (N.R.) 670; 2 Man. & G. 574; 10 L. J., C. P. 108.

Matter to be Arranged by Agent.]—The agents of A., who had a lease of premises, No. 22, Belgrave Road, to dispose of, wrote to B. as follows:—"We have been requested by Mrs. B. to find her a lodging-house in this neighbourhood; and we forward for your approval particulars of two which we think most likely to suit." Inclosed were particulars of two houses, one of which was No. 22, Belgrave Road, the terms for which were stated to be:—Premium, 250 guineas; rent, 80*l.*; and certain fixtures and planned furniture to be taken at a valuation. B. replied as follows:—"I have decided on taking No. 22, Belgrave Road, and have spoken to my agent, Mr. C., of, &c., who will arrange matters with you if you will put yourselves in communication with him. I leave town this afternoon; so, if you have occasion to write to me, please address to Cirencester":—Held, that these two letters did not constitute a complete agreement binding on the defendant. Stanley v. Dowdeswell, L. R. 10 C. P. 102; 23 W. R. 389.

By Tender.]—The guardians of the poor of a place, with a view to obtaining tenders for meat for the use of the workhouse, issued an advertisement, stating that they would receive tenders for the supply of the workhouse with meat for three months, from thirty to fifty stone, more or less, per week (describing the sort of meat); that sealed tenders were to be sent to the clerk of the guardians, and that all contractors would have to sign a written contract after the acceptance of the tender. The defendant wrote to the guardians to say that he proposed to supply the workhouse with meat, according to advertisement, for the ensuing three months, at sixpence per pound. This tender was accepted, and the defendant was informed that he was appointed butcher; but, immediately afterwards, he wrote to the guardians to say that he declined the appointment:—Held, that as a written contract was to be executed, the acceptance of the tender did not form a binding contract, so as to render the defendant liable for refusing to supply the workhouse with meat in accordance with his tender. Kingston-upon-Hull (Governors, &c.) v. Petch, 10 Ex. 611; 3 C. L. R. 196; 24 L. J., Ex. 23.

A proposal to receive tenders for certain things to be sold (specifying no limitation or qualification), and an acceptance (also specifying no limitation or qualification), is a contract for the whole. Thorn v. Public Works Commissioners, 32 Beav. 490.

The defendants advertised that offers would be received for old Portland stone of Westminster Bridge. The plaintiff made an offer for the stone of a particular quality, which was accepted:—Held, that this was a contract for the purchase of all the stone of that quality. Ib.

Qualification should be Clearly Stated.]—When a contract is composed of an offer by letter and an acceptance of the offer by letter, if the offer is clear and unambiguous, and the party who answers it wishes to add to it any condition or qualification, the onus rests upon him of stating clearly and precisely what that condition or qualification is; if the answer, though ambiguous, is capable of being construed as an acceptance, pure and simple, of the offer, the party making the offer is justified in acting upon it in that sense. English and Foreign Credit Co. v. Arduin, 40 L. J., Ex. 108; L. R. 5 H. L. 64.

Conditional or Absolute Acceptance.]—A., the agent of an intending purchaser of leaseholds, wrote to B., the vendor's agent, that he "could give him 50*l.* for the lease, plant, &c., if accepted at once." B., in reply, asked A. to allow the offer to remain open for twenty-four hours, in order that he might submit it to his employer. On the following day he wrote to A., "I am directed to accept your offer of 50*l.* for the lease, &c. . . . I shall be here at 11 to 11.30 to-morrow morning to sign contract." A. did not reach B.'s office until twelve o'clock. B. had waited for him until a quarter to twelve, and then sold the property to a third party:—Held, that the letters constituted a binding contract, and specific performance was enforced against the vendor. Branson v. Stammers, 28 W. R. 180.

c. Inferred from Circumstances or Conduct.

Circumstances.] — Whenever circumstances arise in the ordinary business of life in which, if two persons were ordinarily honest and careful, the one of them would make a promise to the other, it may properly be inferred that both of them understood that such a promise was given and accepted. Ford, Ex parte, Chappell, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 406; 16 Q. B. D. 307.—Per Esher (Ld.), M.R.

Wherever a relation exists between two parties which involves the performance of certain duties by one of them, and the payment of reward to him by the other, the law will imply, or a jury may infer, a promise by each party to do what is to be done by him. Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265; 30 L. J., Ex. 131; 3 L. T. 784; 9 W. R. 376.

Conduct.]—Where the plaintiff sent goods to the defendant's house, and defendant kept part of them, it was held that he was liable on an implied contract to pay the value of the goods. Hart v. Mills, 15 M. & W. 85, 87; 15 L. J., Ex. 200.

The defendant ordered of the plaintiff a publication, to be delivered in monthly parts. He received eight parts, and then refused to receive more. No action could be brought upon the original contract owing to the Statute of Frauds, but it was held that there was a promise to pay for the parts received. Mavor v. Pyne, 3 Bing. 285, 288; 11 Moore, 2; 2 Car. & P. 91.

—— When Insufficient.]—A., having a horse to sell, agreed to let B. have him for thirty guineas, if he liked him, and that he should take him a month on trial: B. accordingly took him, and kept him about a fortnight, and then told A. he liked the horse, but not the price, and A. desired him, if he did not like the price, to return the horse; B., however, kept him ten days more, and then returned him; but A. refused to receive him, and brought an action on the contract for thirty guineas, the price of the horse:—Held, that he could not maintain such action. Ellis v. Mortimer, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 257.

D. & Co. were manufacturers of light fabrics, of which the patterns were supplied by their own artists. Every spring and autumn they introduced new patterns into the English market, and after the season was over, they were in the habit of selling their surplus stock at a greatly reduced price, but always for the purpose of having it shipped to foreign countries, where its sale at the reduced price could not affect their home trade. G., plaintiffs' agent, accordingly sold some lots of such surplus stock to P., at Manchester, as he alleged, upon the express understanding and agreement that the goods were to be shipped by P. to the United States and the West Indies, and were not to be sold in the home market. It appeared that P. obtained a longer than the usual term of credit in the transaction, as plaintiffs stated, at P.'s request, on the ground that he could not sooner get the money from abroad in return for the goods. Upon a bill for specific performance, and praying for an injunction to restrain P. from selling the goods in England:—Held, that the evidence of the contract was insufficient, and that the proper remedy in such a case was at law. Dollfus v. Pickford, 2 W. R. 204.

Acting on Terms.]—Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either. Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry., 2 App. Cas. 666.

A mere mental assent to the terms stated in a proposed contract would not be binding, but acting upon those terms, by sending coals in the quantities and at the prices mentioned in it, amounted to sufficient to show the adoption of the writing previously altered and sent, and to constitute it a valid contract. Ib.

The onus of showing that both parties had acted on the terms of an agreement which had not been, in due form, executed by either, lies upon the party who rests his case on that circumstance. Ib.

E. & Co. being indebted to the plaintiffs, who were bankers, the defendants, by a writing expressed to be made between the plaintiffs and the defendants, in consideration of the agreement thereinafter contained on behalf of the plaintiffs agreed that they would pay all moneys which then were or at any time should be due from E. & Co. to the plaintiffs, not exceeding 35,000*l.*, by instalments of 3,000*l.* a year, for five years, and two subsequent annual instalments of 10,000*l.*; and in consideration the plaintiffs agreed that they would not charge more than five per cent. interest to E. & Co.; and when all debts of E. & Co., except 15,000*l.*, should have been paid, would grant them a full release. This agreement was signed by the defendants, and handed by them to the plaintiffs, who had pressed for it. The plaintiffs had acted upon, but never executed it:—Held, that the agreement was binding upon the defendants, notwithstanding that it had not been executed by the plaintiffs. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Eccles, 4 H. & N. 139; 28 L. J., Ex. 122.

Differences having arisen between B., a shareholder, and the managing director of a registered company, and the other directors, the board, at a duly constituted meeting, came to the following resolution:—"The board is willing to accept Mr. B.'s resignation, and to pay him the proportion of salary due, say in round numbers, 150*l.*, and at the same time the members of the board will jointly relieve him of his shares, and guarantee him against all calls thereon. The directors, being desirous that this matter should be definitely settled, request that Mr. B. will reply to the offer now made to him by the next board day, the 4th of September; unless the terms of agreement proposed are accepted by that date, the directors are to be no longer bound by them. (Signed) T. A., Chairman." B. replied within the time mentioned:—"I accept your offer. It may be arranged as speedily as you can wish, and, in fact, I accept the offer as one to be at once carried out, and on receiving the guarantee as to the shares, in which I presume your chairman, Mr. C., concurs, and advice that the sum fixed is paid in to my account at L., my resignation shall be at once forwarded." At a meeting of the directors, the board, by a minute, accepted B.'s resignation, and requested the secretary to get the guarantee prepared by the solicitors, and to take other steps to carry out the negotiation:—Held, that the resolutions and letters constituted a complete agreement, and bound the directors individually who were present when the offer was made; and that B. having resigned, and been compelled to pay calls on his shares, might maintain an action against the directors for not indemnifying him, although no guarantee was tendered for execution. Barker v. Allan, 5 H. & N. 61; 29 L. J., Ex. 100; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 23; 1 L. T. 167; 8 W. R. 127.

——Draft Agreement "Approved."—The word "approved," written by one of the parties at the end of a draft agreement, must be taken as an approval of the substance of the draft, and not, as in the case of a conveyancer's or solicitor's draft, an approval of the mere form. Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry. supra.

B. had for some years supplied a railway company with coals. At last it was suggested by B. that a contract should be entered into between them. After their agents had met together the terms of agreement were drawn up by the agent of the company and sent to B. B. filled up certain parts of it which had been left in blank, and introduced the name of the gentleman who was to act as arbitrator in case of differences between the parties, wrote "approved" at the end of the paper, and signed his own name. B.'s agent sent back the paper to the agent of the company, who put it in his desk, and nothing farther was done in the way of a formal execution of it. Both parties for some time acted in accordance with the arrangements mentioned in the paper. Coals were supplied and payments made as therein stated, and when some complaints of inexactness in the supply of coals, according to the terms stated in the paper, were made by the company, there were explanations and excuses given by B., and the contract was mentioned in the correspondence, and matters went on as before. Finally disagreements arose, and B. denied that there was any contract which bound him in the matter:—Held, that these facts and the actual conduct of the parties established the existence of such a contract, and there having been a clear breach of it, B. must be held liable upon it. Ib.

B. was the chief partner in a partnership of three persons. The word "approved," written by him and signed with his name, was treated as an assent binding on all the partners (whose names were mentioned in the paper), although the usual form of signature of the partnership was that of "B. & Sons." Ib.

Signing "Turn-Paper."]—Defendants having purchased a cargo of coals on board a ship lying in the port of London, signed, in conjunction with the factor who sold the coals, and in the usual course, a turn-paper, addressed to the shipmeter, who was thereby directed to unload after a certain rate per working day, at a certain dock; and on the following day the captain, having arrived at the dock, gave notice to the dockmaster that he was ready for unloading. In consequence, however, of there being already several vessels at the dock entitled to precedence, the unloading of the ship was delayed:—Held, in an action for demurrage by the shipowner, that the turn-paper, in the absence of any evidence of custom, did not constitute a contract, nor was it evidence of one, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, that the unloading should commence immediately upon the arrival of the ship at the appointed place. Shadforth v. Cory, 32 L. J., Q. B. 78; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 910. Affirmed, 32 L. J., Q. B. 379; 8 L. T. 736; 10 W. R. 919—Ex. Ch.

d. Unaccepted Proposals.

To Pay Salary.]—A., the manager of a theatre, by letter, proposes to B., an actor, an engagement at 2*l.* per week, determinable by a month's notice. B. performs under this proposal. Notice is given by letter to B. to determine the employment, unless B. will consent to a reduction of salary. In a third letter, A. writes:—"I have received your letter, and upon reconsideration will give you the same terms, 2*l.*, for the summer season":—Held, that the first and third letters contained merely proposals, and that as no agreement was constituted between the parties, until those proposals had been expressly accepted or tacitly acquiesced in by B., the correspondence was admissible in evidence without an agreement stamp. Hudspeth v. Yarnold, 9 C. B. 625; 19 L. J., C. P. 321; 14 Jur. 578.

To Pay Debt of Third Party.]—A declaration stating that J. being indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum, the defendant, by his agent, wrote to the plaintiff as follows:—"Without prejudice to any proceedings you may think proper to take, Mr. A. (the defendant) offers to pay a composition of 7s. in the pound on your account against his nephew, on your giving proper indemnification to both. In the event of your accepting the offer I will thank you to forward me the particulars of your account, in order that the same may be properly examined"; and that the plaintiff accepted the offer, and thereupon forwarded the particulars of his account; and although he has always been ready and willing and offered to give a proper indemnification, yet the defendant has not paid the composition:—is bad, as not showing any binding contract, but a mere offer to pay. Cope v. Albinson, 8 Ex. 185; 22 L. J., Ex. 37.

R., a nephew of defendant, being indebted to plaintiff, defendant wrote a series of letters to plaintiff, on which plaintiff relied to prove the guarantee on which the action was brought. In the first, on 8th November, 1861, he wrote, "I have no doubt I can send R. money to pay on Tuesday next, November 12th; just give him time, and I will see you don't lose a shilling by him." On 6th December he wrote, saying, "I really don't know what to do for the best, but something shall be done, so that you shall have your money; I hope I shall be able to get some in, and discharge your bill as soon as possible; you shall hear from me this day week without fail. I have been disappointed, but you shall be paid." And on 8th February, 1862, he wrote, "I received a letter from your solicitor requesting payment of 25*l*. You are aware that this is all loss to me. I am sorry to say I am still liable to other claims upon me; under these circumstances I hope you will be as favourable as you can. I think if I make an effort to pay 15*l*. to you for my release from this transaction, I will do so at once, as you will then have R. to sue for the balance":—Held, that the above letters were mere unaccepted proposals, and did not constitute a sufficient promise binding within the terms of the Statute of Frauds. Newport v. Spivey, 7 L. T. 328.

Per Channell, B.:—When a guarantee is given for the debt of another, it is accepted by the party to whom it is given, the consideration for it being an agreement by him to forbear payment for the required time; but there was nothing of that sort here. Ib.

To Insure—After Avoided Agreement.]—The plaintiff, through J., his insurance broker, effected an insurance on the ship B., then on her voyage from Newcastle to Genoa, from the 21st of January, 1857, to the 20th of January, 1858; the policy was subscribed by the defendant on the 19th of January for 3,000*l*. On the 15th, the plaintiff received a letter from the captain, informing him that the vessel had been on shore on the coast of Spain on the 2nd of January, and had sprung a leak, and was forced to go into port for repairs. The plaintiff sent the letter to J., but he did not inform the defendant of the circumstance, and he first heard of it on the 22nd, from an entry in the Casualty Book at Lloyd's, made that day from particulars supplied by the plaintiff. The defendant immediately wrote the following letter to J.—"Understanding that the steamer B. had been on shore, I do not consider that my risk commences until the vessel has been surveyed and repaired." J. did not answer this letter, nor communicate it to the plaintiff. The ship was repaired, and fit for use on the 2nd of April. In October she was totally lost:—Held, that the fact of the vessel having been aground was material to the risk, and that its non-communication to the defendant avoided the policy, and that the defendant's letter of the 22nd of January did not in law or fact create a fresh contract of assurance from the time the repairs were effected, for, at the utmost, the letter was a mere unaccepted proposal. Russell v. Thornton, 6 H. & N. 140; 30 L. J., Ex. 69; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1080; 8 W. R. 615—Ex. Ch.

2. Statute of Frauds.

See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71).

a. Generally.

Utility.]—Lord Nottingham's opinion "that the Statute of Frauds is so wise and beneficial to the public, that it deserved a subsidy," adopted. Popham v. Eyre, Lofft. 786.

Not Retrospective.]—A demurrer to a bill exhibited subsequently to the Statute of Frauds, for the performance of a parol agreement prior, overruled, the statute not being retrospective. Statutes restrictive of the common law receive a restrictive construction. The Statute of Frauds originated with Lord Nottingham. Ash v. Abdy, 3 Swanst. 664.

Does not invalidate Contract.]—A contract which is not enforceable by reason of the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, nevertheless is an existing contract and is not void altogether, and a fresh contract cannot be implied from acts done in pursuance of it. Britain v. Rossiter, 48 L. J., Ex. 362; 11 Q. B. D. 123; 40 L. T. 240; 27 W. R. 482—C. A.

The contract mentioned in s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds is not absolutely void if not in writing, as required by the statute, that section relating to the mode of procedure, and not to the contract itself. Consequently such parol contract, though made in a foreign country, where it is good and capable of being enforced, cannot be sued on in this country. Leroux v. Brown, 12 C. B. 801; 22 L. J., C. P. 1; 16 Jur. 1021; 1 W. R. 22.

The statute if relied on must be pleaded. Towle v. Topham, 37 L. T. 308.

b. Sufficiency of Note or Memorandum.

i. Generally.

Substantial Compliance Sufficient.]—The substance of the Statute of Frauds being complied with in the material parts, the forms have never been insisted upon where an agreement has been reduced to a certainty. Welford v. Beazley, 3 Atk. 503.

A "rough draft" containing all the essential terms of a contract, and signed by the party to be charged, is a sufficient acknowledgment within the Statute of Frauds, and can be enforced against such party, though a more formal document was intended to be drawn up. Gray v. Smith, 59 L. J., Ch. 145; 43 Ch. D. 208; 62 L. T. 335; 38 W. R. 310—C. A.

Sealing Unnecessary.]—Sealing not necessary to bring an agreement out of the Statute of Frauds. Wheeler v. Newton, Pre. Ch. 16.

When made.] — A memorandum in writing of a contract, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, must have been made before action brought. Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36; 11 L. J., Ex. 81.

A note or memorandum of a contract for the purposes of s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds must, in order to be available in an action on the contract have been in existence when the action was commenced. Lucas v. Dixon, 58 L. J., Q. B. 161; 22 Q. B. D. 357; 37 W. R. 370—C. A.

A note or memorandum in writing, made subsequently to, but evidencing a previous parol contract, is sufficient, within s. 4. Bradford v. Roulston, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 468.

Must be of Complete Agreement.]—The memorandum or note of an agreement required by s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds must be a memorandum of an agreement complete at the time the memorandum is made. Hanly v. Asprey, 49 L. J., Ch. 216; 13 Ch. D. 855; 28 W. R. 347.

A letter from an alleged purchaser inclosing and referring to a draft conveyance in which it was recited that he had agreed to purchase land:—Held, not to be a memorandum of a completed agreement. Ib.

And see cases, supra, 1 b.

ii. Names or Description of Parties.

Vendor.]—In order to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the note or memorandum of an agreement for the sale of real estate must contain either the names of the contracting parties or such a description of them that there cannot be any fair dispute as to their identity. Potter v. Duffield, 43 L. J., Ch. 472; L. R. 18 Eq. 4; 22 W. R. 585.

Where a memorandum of agreement did not contain the name of the vendor, but his name was referred to in a subsequent letter written by the purchaser:—Held, that this was a sufficient reference within the Statute of Frauds. Warner v. Willington, 3 Drew. 523; 25 L. J., Ch. 662; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 433; 4 W. R. 531.

During parol negotiations for the purchase of an estate, the vendor wrote to the purchaser's solicitor, proposing that the solicitor's client should advance a sum to pay off a mortgage on the property. After further parol negotiations as to the terms, they were agreed upon by parol, and the vendor signed and handed to the purchaser a written statement of the particulars of the property and of the price. On the following day he signed and addressed to the purchaser a letter containing the following passages: "I am about to relet the land at P. for another year, concluding you will agree to it. . . . The Lady-day rents will be mine, and the Michaelmas yours":—Held, that the signed statement of particulars was not a sufficient memorandum in writing, the purchaser's name not being mentioned in it, and that the defect was not supplied by the correspondence. Skelton v. Cole, 1 De G. & J. 587.

On the sale of real estate by auction the particulars stated that the property was put up for sale by "the proprietor." No further description of the vendor was given in the particulars or conditions. The auctioneer signed a memorandum in his own name, by which he agreed "that the vendor on his part should in all respects fulfil the conditions of sale mentioned in the particulars." On a bill for specific performance by the purchaser:—Held, that on the particulars and memorandum there was a sufficient description of the vendor within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Sale v. Lambert, 43 L. J., Ch. 470; L. R. 18 Eq. 1; 22 W. R. 47.

An agreement for the sale of real estate did not disclose the name of the vendors, but it appeared therefrom that the vendors were a company in possession of the property offered for sale, and that they had carried on operations thereon:—Held, that the vendors were sufficiently described to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Commins v. Scott, 44 L. J., Ch. 563; L. R. 20 Eq. 11; 32 L. T. 420; 23 W. R. 498.

A contract for the sale of land in which the vendor is not named, but is stated to be "a trustee selling under a trust for sale," is sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Catling v. King, 46 L. J., Ch. 384; 5 Ch. D. 660; 36 L. T. 526; 25 W. R. 550—C. A.

If, in a contract for sale, the vendor is described simply as "proprietor," "owner," "mortgagee," or the like, the description is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds; but not so if he is described as "vendor," or "client," or "friend" of a named agent, or as "solicitor to the vendor," even where the solicitor is himself the vendor and is described in the contract as "A. B., solicitor to the vendor." Jarrett v. Hunter, 56 L. J., Ch. 141; 34 Ch. D. 182; 55 L. T. 727; 35 W. R. 132; 51 J. P. 165.

Semble, a mere reference in a condition of sale to a conveyance or other document of title relating to the property, the name or description of the vendor not being stated in the condition, is not sufficient to import its contents into the contract so as to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, even if such conveyance or other document, does show who is the vendor. A contract, which under the Statute of Frauds is invalid through not naming or sufficiently describing the vendor, is not rendered valid by the fact that the purchaser knew, at the time he entered into the contract, who the vendor was. Ib.

The memorandum which was at the foot of the particulars and conditions stated that V. & Son were agents for the "vendor," who was described as "vendor" throughout the conditions. The particulars stated that the sale was by direction of the "owner." The eighth condition, by mistake, stated that the vendor was a trustee for sale:—Held, that although the word "owner" was by itself a sufficient description of the vendor, the subsequent mistake was fatal, and the vendor was not sufficiently designated. Butcher v. Nash, 61 L. T. 72.

A purchaser undertook, in writing, to buy land at a certain price, and to complete within a certain time; but the vendor was not named in the writing, although there was a reference to a certain firm by name as the vendor's agents, and a provision that "the landlord" should be considered as an outgoing tenant. Subsequently, the purchaser wrote a letter to the vendor's agents with reference to the payment of the purchase-money and the execution by "Mr. C. . . . ." of "the deeds":—Held, that there was no sufficient identification of the vendor in writing in the original document, and the subsequent letter did not so clearly refer to the original document as to supply the deficiency and satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3). Coombs v. Wilkes, 61 L. J., Ch. 42; [1891] 3 Ch. 77; 65 L. T. 56: 40 W. R. 77.

Where a written offer to purchase land is made to an agent whose name, but not that of his principal, appears in the offer, and the agent accepts on behalf of his principal, naming him, it is sufficiently shown in writing who the contracting parties are to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Filby v. Hounsell, 65 L. J., Ch. 852; [1896] 2 Ch. 737; 75 L. T. 270; 45 W. R. 232.

Mortgagee—Solicitors to "Proposing Lender."]—Upon a contract for a mortgage of land, the solicitor for the intending mortgagor wrote a letter in which he said that he had called on "the solicitors to the proposing lender, and had arranged the proposed loan":—Held, not to be a sufficient description of the intended mortgagee to satisfy s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Pattle v. Anstruther, 4 R. 470; 69 L. T. 174; 41 W. R. 625—C. A.

Lessor—"Sir."]—The defendant wrote and signed a letter beginning with the word "Sir," and offering to take the lease of a theatre for a fixed term at a fixed rent. This letter was delivered to W., for delivery to the lessor. W. delivered it, and as lessor's agent wrote and sent to the defendant a letter containing an acceptance of the offer by the owner: but this letter was not signed by the defendant nor referred to in any subsequent writing of his. The lessor brought an action for specific performance:—Held, that the lessor being only described as "sir" in any writing signed by the defendant, there was no binding contract under the Statute of Frauds, and the action was dismissed with costs. Williams v. Jordan, 46 L. J., Ch. 681; 6 Ch. D. 517; 26 W. R. 230; and see Donnison v. People's Café Co., post, col. 40.

"The Tenant"—Inference.]—By a memorandum of agreement the plaintiff agreed to let a certain brickfield for five years, "the tenant" to pay a certain rent and royalty. Only the name of the plaintiff appeared in the body of the agreement, but it was signed by the defendant and plaintiff:—"Held, that it could not be reasonably inferred that the defendant signed the agreement in any other capacity than that of tenant, and therefore so far as regarded the Statute of Frauds the agreement was valid. Stokell v. Niven, 61 L. T. 18—C. A.

Person for whom Guarantee Intended.]—A defendant wrote, signed, and handed to T. and O. the following document: "Sir, I beg to inform you that I shall see you paid to the sum of 800*l.* for the ensuing building which you undertake to build for Messrs. T. and O., Thomas Lake." He intended it to be handed over by T. and O. as a guarantee to J., who was then negotiating with T. and O. to erect for them the building referred to. T. and O., however, having agreed with the plaintiff, instead of J., that the plaintiff should erect the building, delivered the document to the plaintiff, without the defendant's knowledge or authority. The defendant afterwards heard of and ratified this delivery. The plaintiff, having erected the building, sued the defendant on the document, as a guarantee:—Held, that the document was not a sufficient written agreement, or note or memorandum thereof, by the defendant, to answer for the debt or default of T. and O.; inasmuch as the name of the person for whom the document was intended did not in any way appear upon the face of it, so that it did not contain the names of both the parties to the contract. Williams v. Lake, 2 El. & El. 349: 29 L. J., Q. B. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 45; 1 L. T. 56; 8 W. R. 41.

iii. Identification of Property.

Admission of Parol Evidence.]—A vendor of leasehold premises wrote a letter to her solicitor stating: "I have closed with Mr. W. for this place":—Held, a sufficient memorandum in writing within the Statute of Frauds, and that parol evidence was admissible to show what "this place" was. Waldron v. Jacob, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 131.

Parcels—Extrinsic Evidence.]—A written agreement to sell and purchase "twenty-four acres of land at T." must be taken to refer to land belonging to the vendor, and is a sufficient description within the Statute of Frauds to make extrinsic evidence admissible for the purpose of identifying the land. Plant v. Bourne, 66 L. J., Ch. 643; [1897] 2 Ch. 281; 76 L. T. 820; 46 W. R. 59—C. A.

Connecting Documents.]—H. agreed to sell to O. a freehold estate for 2,375*l.*, and signed a memorandum which contained all the essentials of the contract except that it omitted to mention or refer to the property agreed to be sold. Two days afterwards O., pursuant to the contract, sent H. a cheque of 375*l.* as a deposit and in part payment of the 2,375*l.*, and H. replied by letter: "I beg to acknowledge receipt of cheque value 375*l.*, on account of the purchase money for the F. estate":—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to explain the circumstances under which the letter was written, and that, as such evidence connected the letter and the memorandum, the two documents read together constituted a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds. Oliver v. Hunting, 59 L. J., Ch. 255; 44 Ch. D. 205; 62 L. T. 108; 38 W. R. 618.

The plaintiff claimed specific performance of a contract to purchase a house and premises sold by auction. After the sale the auctioneer signed the following memorandum at the foot of the conditions: "The property duly sold to A. Shardlow, butcher. Pinxton, and deposit paid at close of sale," and he also signed this receipt: "Pinxton, March 29th, 1880. Received of A. Shardlow the sum of 21*l.* as deposit on property purchased at 420*l.* at Sun Inn, Pinxton, on the above date. Mr. G. Cotterell, owner." The Statute of Frauds was set up in defence. The conditions contained no description of the property sold, but posters had been put up describing the property to be sold on the 29th of March at the Sun Inn :—Held, that the word "purchased" was enough to connect the receipt with the conditions of sale, though not with the poster. That the description in the receipt and conditions was sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Shardlow v. Cotterell, 51 L. J., Ch. 353 ; 20 Ch. D. 90 ; 45 L. T. 572 ; 30 W. R. 143 —C. A.

Land indefinite—Land belonging to Another—Agency.]—A proposal had been made that the two plaintiffs should buy a triangular field of about three acres, and that the defendant should buy half an acre of it from them. One of the plaintiffs and the defendant met on the field; the defendant wished to have a piece in one of the angles, and the plaintiff stepped so as to mark out where a base line would cut off half an acre. Some days afterwards the same plaintiff wrote to the defendant asking her to let them have a letter agreeing to purchase the half acre she had selected for 350*l*. She wrote back, not expressly referring to the other letter, that she was willing to take half an acre of the land as agreed upon for 350*l*. The plaintiffs did not obtain a contract with the owner of the land for the purchase until the 4th of November, which was three months afterwards. On the 13th of November the defendant threatened to withdraw, and on the 20th of November her solicitors wrote that she did withdraw from the contract :—Held, that the small element of uncertainty in the measurement of the land might be disregarded, and that the parties must be considered as having determined the exact piece of land to be taken ; that the second letter contained a sufficient reference to the first ; and that the two letters formed a valid contract within the Statute of Frauds, and that, though the two plaintiffs were the purchasers of the land, and the letters forming the contract passed between the defendant and one only of the plaintiffs, he must under the circumstances be considered as agent for the other as well. Wylson v. Dunn, 56 L. J., Ch. 855 ; 34 Ch. D. 569 ; 56 L. T. 192 ; 35 W. R. 405 ; 51 J. P. 452.

iv. Time.

For Commencement of Term.]—An executory agreement for a lease does not satisfy the Statute of Frauds unless it can be collected from it on what day the term is to begin, and there is no inference that the term is to commence from the date of the agreement in the absence of language pointing to that conclusion. Jaques v. Millar (6 Ch. D. 153) overruled. Marshall v. Berridge, 51 L. J., Ch. 329 ; 19 Ch. D. 233 ; 45 L. T. 599 ; 30 W. R. 93 ; 46 J. P. 279—C. A. See also May v. Thomson, 20 Ch. D. 705.

The plaintiff offered to take a lease of furnaces from the defendant, conditionally upon his being able to make arrangements with other persons as to ore. A loosely-drawn memorandum was shortly afterwards signed by the parties, substituting certain other rents for the rents mentioned in the letter, which in other respects was to form the basis of the agreement. The defendant, understanding that the lease was to begin immediately, offered possession to the plaintiff at once, but the plaintiff refused to take it as he had not yet made arrangement for ores, and continued to treat the agreement as conditional on his making those arrangements. Ultimately the parties differed as to the covenants to be inserted in the lease, and the plaintiff commenced his action for specific performance :—Held, that although where an agreement is clear the court must act upon its own view of the construction without regard to the view entertained by the parties, yet where a party has throughout insisted on one construction of an obscure agreement he cannot get specific performance on the footing of the opposite construction. Ib.

A paper in these terms, "I agree to let the premises in G. L., containing three stables, &c., for the same rent, and subject to the same conditions that I hold them myself," even though ratified by the proposed lessee, as it does not state the duration of the term, does not contain enough to constitute a memorandum within the Statute of Frauds. Fitzmaurice v. Bayley, 9 H. L. Cas. 78 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1215 ; 3 L. T. 69 ; 8 W. R. 750.

A lessee, D., wrote to his landlord's agents, asking for an extension of his term for twenty-one years from the termination of his present lease, and offering a premium. The landlord wrote to his agents declining D.'s offer, but adding, "As the lease will not run out for the next two years, I think there is plenty of time to think over the matter. However, if Mr. D. is very urgent, I will consent to grant him a lease for twenty-one years at 50*l*. a year, and a premium of 100*l*." The latter part of the letter was communicated to D., who accepted the offer :—Held, that D. was entitled to a lease for twenty-one years at a rent of 50*l*. a year, and a premium of 100*l*., commencing from the expiration of his existing lease. Wood v. Aylward, 58 L. T. 662—C. A.

An agreement in writing between A. and B., that on paying 20*l*. B. was to get possession of a farm of land, and also a lease for twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of 16*l*. a year ; and that B., on giving up possession at the end of twenty-one years, having done no injury, was to get his money returned :—Held, to constitute a valid agreement for an executory demise for twenty-one years from the date of the payment of the 20*l*. Erskine v. Armstrong, 20 L. R. Ir. 296—C. A.

Where an agreement in writing for a lease for a term of years did not expressly state the date at which the term was to commence, but contained a reference to circumstances from which such date could be clearly ascertained :—Held, sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance of the agreement was decreed. Phelan v. Tedcastle, 15 L. R. Ir. 169.

The plaintiff made a proposal in writing to the defendant as follows :—June 7th, 1886, to rent same (i.e. licensed house), with fixtures, &c., at 2*l*. 10*s*. a week. This tenancy to be for two years certain. The plaintiff to have the option of purchase at any time within that term, at a sum of 1,200*l*. to give solvent security in the sum of 500*l*. for the preservation of the retail licence attached to said premises, and for payment of above weekly rent. The defendant accepted the above proposal in the following terms :—"I accept the within proposal, provided Mr. M. C. is the security." An action being brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of the premises, and for specific performance, the statement of claim alleged that M. C. was ready and willing to become security, as the defendant was aware, and that the plaintiff went into possession of the premises under the proposal and continued therein until the defendant resumed possession. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) the Statute of Frauds :—Held, that the proposal and acceptance did not satisfy the requirements of the statute, as no date was fixed expressly or by reference from which the term was to run; also that the acceptance was conditional, and that as performance of the condition was not averred, the documents could neither constitute a present demise nor a complete agreement, entitling the plaintiff to specific performance. White v. McMahon, 18 L. R. Ir. 460.

An agreement for a lease of a public-house, dated 1st April, provided for a term of three years with an option to renew for another seven years, and for possession to be given "within one month from this date" :—Held, that the commencement of the term could be collected from the agreement as a whole, and that the day possession was given—a fact on which evidence was admitted—was the date from which the lease was to commence, and consequently that there was a valid contract. Marshall v. Berridge (19 Ch. D. 233) discussed and applied. Lander and Bagley's Contract, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 707; [1892] 3 Ch. 41; 67 L. T. 521.

Where a tenant agreed to surrender an existing lease in consideration of his lessors granting him a new lease, but no date was fixed for the surrender or for the commencement of the new term, such agreement cannot be specifically enforced. Oxford Corporation v. Crow, [1893] 3 Ch. 535; 8 R. 279; 69 L. T. 228; 42 W. R. 200.

On the 28th March, 1894, the plaintiff and defendant signed a memorandum of agreement, by which the defendant was to take an underlease of a house on certain terms. The date from which the underlease was to commence was omitted in this agreement, but it was understood by the parties, at the time, that it was to be the 7th April, 1894. This date was specifically agreed to in writing by subsequent letters :—Held, that there was a contract made on the 28th March, 1894, sufficiently evidenced in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. White v. Hay. 72 L. T. 281.

For giving Possession on Assignment—Name of Vendor or Sufficient Description.]—Plaintiff was the lessee of vaults in the city of London, under a lease granted by the Mayor and Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company. The defendant company entered into a negotiation for the purchase of the lease. The secretary of the company wrote to the house agents acting for the plaintiff a letter in which he said that the directors thereby offered to purchase the vaults for 2,500*l.* cash, and to take over a mortgage for 3,500*l.* on the lease, these terms to include the lease, goodwill, fixtures, &c. The house agents answered as follows : "In reply to your letter of the 7th inst. we are now instructed to accept the offer therein contained, and will forward contract as soon as we obtain it from the solicitor." Differences subsequently arose respecting the time when possession should be given, and eventually the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for breach of contract :—Held, that no binding contract had been entered into, first, because the name of the vendor had not been disclosed or a sufficient description given so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds; and, secondly, because the letters mentioned only what was the property to be purchased and the price to be given for it, but left the other necessary terms of the agreement, such as the time when possession was to be given, to be settled by a formal contract to be prepared by a solicitor in the ordinary way. Donnison v. People's Café Co., 45 L. T. 187—C. A.

For Payment—Quality of Goods.]—Where a broker employed by the seller alone, effects a contract by means of a note sent to and accepted by the purchaser, a variation between this note and a note sent by the broker to the seller is immaterial. Letters not containing any reference to the quality or the time for payment of goods sold as agreed upon, do not constitute a sufficient memorandum of a contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. McCaull v. Strauss, 1 Cab. & E. 106.

Omission to state Sale by Sample.]—The defendants purchased at an auction certain lots of maize, the property of the plaintiffs, the bulk of which was in store. In an action for not removing the maize within the time mentioned in the conditions of sale, and to recover the loss upon a re-sale, the plaintiffs and the auctioneer deposed that the sale was by sample, and it appeared that samples had been exhibited at the auction, but the entry in the auctioneer's book of the sales to the defendant omitted to state that the sale was by sample :—Held, that the sale having been in fact by sample, the entry in the auctioneer's book omitted a material term of the contract in not stating that the sale was by sample, and therefore was not a sufficient memorandum of the contract under the Statute of Frauds. McMullen v. Helberg, 6 L. R., Ir. 463—C. A.

The plaintiffs having, subsequently to the auction, furnished the defendant with an invoice of the lots sold, stating the quantities, prices, and places where stored, accompanied by a letter referring to such invoice, and requesting payment, the defendant replied by a letter signed by him, in which he acknowledged the receipt of the invoice, and offered to accept the plaintiffs' draft at three months for the amount, and to give them a lien on the goods in the meantime :—Held, that the letters were affected with the same infirmity as the entry in the auctioneer's book, and did not constitute a sufficient memorandum of the contract under the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

Lease of Quarry—As Lessee might Direct.]—A., to whom the owner of a quarry had agreed to grant a lease, agreed on behalf of himself and all persons interested to sell the quarry to B., and "that the lease agreed to be granted by the lessor should be granted as B. might direct." B. having refused to complete the purchase, A. brought an action for specific performance, and in his statement of claim stated his agreement with the owner of the quarry as well as the memorandum of agreement with B., and alleged that B. was aware of the nature of A.'s interest in the quarry, and had accepted the title. B. demurred, on the ground that the memorandum was not sufficient within the Statute of Frauds :—Held, that it was sufficient, but that a defence founded on the Statute of Frauds could not since the Judicature Acts be

v. Consideration.

Disclosing.]—An agreement was made and signed between the plaintiff and A., the daughter of defendant, by which, in consideration of deposit money paid by the plaintiff in part of the consideration, A. agreed to sell to the plaintiff her interest in a public-house, conditionally, that if the plaintiff was not accepted as tenant by the landlord upon the terms on which she then occupied, the deposit money should be returned and the agreement cancelled. At the same meeting between the parties, but after the agreement had been signed, the following memorandum was written on the back of the agreement, and signed by the defendant:—"I hereby undertake that my daughter, A., shall perform all the covenants and conditions named in the annexed agreement, and hold and consider myself responsible for her":—Held, that the whole formed one transaction, and the memorandum and agreement might be read together; and, therefore, there was disclosed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Coldham v. Showler, 3 C. B. 312; 2 Car. & K. 261; 15 L. J., C. P. 261; 10 Jur. 562.

The defendant being solicitor for a purchaser of real estate, who had made default, wrote to the solicitor of the plaintiff, who was the vendor, in the following terms:—"To save the purchaser from danger of entire destruction of his credit, there appears to be no alternative but for me to undertake to settle the purchase. After long consideration I very reluctantly undertake to settle it within two months if that will be satisfactory to your client":—Held, that this expressed a promise conditional on the plaintiff's accepting the offer, and was therefore a memorandum of a contract in consideration that the plaintiff would accept the offer, sufficiently showing the consideration to satisfy s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Powers v. Fowler, 4 El. & Bl. 511.

A memorandum that A. had paid to B. 50*l*. as a deposit, in part payment of 1,000*l*. for the purchase of a house, the terms to be expressed in an agreement to be signed as soon as prepared, is not a sufficient agreement in writing. Wood v. Midgley, 5 De G. M. & G. 41; 23 L. J., Ch. 553; 2 W. R. 301.

An agreement by B. to serve only for a twelve-month, and so on from twelve-month's end to twelve-month's end, and to give twelve-month's notice to quit, is bad under the Statute of Frauds, as showing no consideration moving from the master, and no consideration can be inferred from the implied promise of the master to pay sufficient wages. Sykes v. Dixon, 1 P. & D. 463: 9 A. & E. 693; 8 W. W. & H. 120; 8 L. J., Q. B. 102.

—— Marriage — Matter of Inference.]—In order to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the consideration for a contract need not appear in express terms in the memorandum, but it will be sufficient if any person of ordinary capacity must infer from a perusal of the memorandum what was the consideration—and the only consideration—for the promise. The inference must be well grounded, and must necessarily be collected from the terms of the memorandum, and mere conjecture will not suffice. The court would not, therefore, infer that marriage was the consideration for a promise by a father to give his daughter an annuity and a sum of money at his death, which was contained in a letter addressed to a person who was not a member of the family, but who subsequently married the daughter. Hawes v. Armstrong (1 Scott, 661) followed and applied. Eyre, In re, McAnbrew v. Norris, 13 R. 674; 72 L. T. 585; 43 W. R. 538.

vi. Several Documents.

Connection of.]—Two distinct written instruments cannot be coupled together so as to constitute a sufficient memorandum of a contract within the Statute of Frauds, unless, on the face of them, they appear to be necessarily connected with each other. Smith v. Dixon, 3 Jur. 770.

If there is a signed paper, signed by an agent duly authorised thereto, which paper, though agreeing to do something, leaves the subject-matter of the agreement unexplained, but refers to another paper which contains the full particulars of the explanation, the two may be connected together, so as to constitute a contract valid under the Statute of Frauds. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas. 238; 27 L. J., Ch. 46; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 173; 5 W. R. 804.

The contract so constituted by the act of A.'s duly authorised agent will be binding on A., though the second paper may have been sent by the agent to A.'s solicitor, to put it into form, provided that the agent and the person with whom he was dealing agreed that it should be sent for that purpose, but not otherwise. The act of sending such a paper to a solicitor to have the matter reduced into form affords generally cogent evidence that the parties do not intend to bind themselves till it is reduced into form. Ib.

One paper referring to another in which the terms of an agreement are stated, will constitute a contract sufficiently executed according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds; but where the first paper was in these words, "I agree to let the premises in G. L., containing three stables, &c., for the same rent, and subject to the same conditions that I hold them myself." even though ratified by the proposed lessee, as it did not state the duration of the term, it did not contain enough to constitute a memorandum of an agreement sufficient to satisfy the statute. Fitzmaurice v. Bayley, 9 H. L. Cas. 78; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1215; 3 L. T. 69; 8 W. R. 750.

—— Reference to Invoice—Refusal to Accept.]—A. having sold some cheeses and candles to B. sent him an invoice of the goods. B. returned the invoice with a note, signed by him, on the back to the following effect:—"The cheese came to-day, but I did not take them in, for they are very badly crushed. So the candles and cheese are returned":—Held, that the contents of the invoice were sufficiently referred to by the note on the back of it, and that the two together constituted a sufficient memorandum in writing of the bargain to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Wilkinson v. Evans, 1 H. & P. 552; 35 L. J., C. P. 224; L. R. 1 C. P. 407; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 600: 14 W. R. 963.

A verbal contract was entered into at Liverpool for the sale of a cargo of deals at a price exceeding 10*l*. The deals were conveyed by a carrier designated by the purchaser to the carrier's wharf at Manchester, and an advice note was sent to the purchaser, which contained a description of the deals corresponding with the description in the invoice. The purchaser twice inspected the deals at the wharf, and then wrote across the advice note and signed the following statement, "Refused. Not according to representation." Ten days after the arrival of the deals the purchaser notified his refusal to the vendor:—Held, first, that there was no sufficient connection between the advice note and the invoice to constitute a memorandum in writing of the contract; secondly, that there was no acceptance within the Statute of Frauds. Page v. Morgan (15 Q. B. D. 228) distinguished. Taylor v. Smith, 61 L. J., Q. B. 331; [1893] 2 Q. B. 65; 67 L. T. 39; 40 W. R. 486—C. A.

A letter signed by the defendant cancelling a contract, and referring to an enclosed invoice which contained all the terms of the contract, is a sufficient note or memorandum within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. Elliott v. Dean, 1 Cab. & E. 283. Affirmed in C. A.

—— Letter containing Name of One Party only—Enclosed in Envelope.]—An envelope, addressed to a vendee and received by him, enclosing a letter which set out the terms of the contract, but in which the name of the vendor only appears, is sufficiently connected with the enclosure to be admitted in evidence in order to prove a memorandum in writing of the contract within the meaning either of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds or of s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. Pearce v. Gardner, 66 L. J., Q. B. 457; [1897] 1 Q. B. 688; 76 L. T. 441; 45 W. R. 518—C. A.

—— Guarantee.]—In 1879 the defendants wrote to the plaintiff, by letter dated September 15: "Burton, Balderson. Dear Sir,—We hereby guarantee the safety of the above investments;" and by letter dated September 16: "We acknowledge to have received from you the sum of 710*l.* as under: a mortgage on the estate at T., the property of Mr. Burton, 360*l.*; a mortgage on the estate at F., the property of Mr. Balderson, 350*l.*" The plaintiff A. advanced to Burton on mortgage of the estate at T. the sum of 360*l.*, through the defendants. In 1891 the plaintiff A. conveyed and transferred to the plaintiff B., in consideration of 300*l.*, the benefit of the mortgage. In 1896 the plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover the sum of 360*l.* from them as guarantors of the mortgage:—Held, (1) that the two letters could be read together, and were a sufficient memorandum of the contract within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds; (2) that the defendants guaranteed that the loan would be repaid; and (3) that the plaintiff B. could not sue upon the guarantee, and the plaintiff A. could recover only 60*l.* Sheers v. Thimbleby, 76 L. T. 709—C. A.

—— Previous Parol Contract.]—Two or more documents which do not refer to each other, but do refer to the same parol contract, and which, when taken together, contain all the terms of the parol contract, may together constitute a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds. On the 22nd of September, 1882, the defendant verbally agreed with the plaintiff to sell him her share in certain property, for 200*l.*, and signed and gave to him the following receipt: "Sept. 22nd, 1882. Received of J. Studds one pound of my share in the Barrett's Grove property the sum of two hundred pounds." No time was fixed for completion, and no abstract was delivered, and on the 19th of March, 1883, the defendant wrote to plaintiff: "Mr. Studds,—Sir,—If the balance of 199*l.* on account of the purchase of my share of the property be not paid on or before the 22nd instant I shall consider the agreement (made 22nd of Sept., 1882) not any longer binding":—Held, that the word "balance" in the letter sufficiently referred to the receipt to enable the two documents to be read together, and that they constituted a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Studds v. Watson, 54 L. J., Ch. 626; 28 Ch. D. 305; 52 L. T. 129; 33 W. R. 118.

Held, also, that even if the word "balance" was not sufficient to connect the two documents, yet that, as they both referred to the same parol contract, all the terms of which were contained in one or other of them, they could be read together, and together constituted a good memorandum within the statute. Ib.

Bought and Sold Notes — Variation.]—A broker having bought for defendant part of a cargo of fruit, lying at a wharf belonging to one owner, was desired by defendant to buy some more, and bought, on the same day, another part of the same cargo, lying at the same wharf, but belonging to the plaintiff, and he sent sold notes of each lot to each owner, but one bought note of the whole to defendant, all three notes being signed by himself as broker. Defendant having refused to accept the fruit:—Held, in an action for not accepting the parcel bought of plaintiff, that even if evidence of a custom, in such cases, to send one bought note was admissible, yet, that as the bought and sold notes varied there was no contract with plaintiff within the Statute of Frauds. Fisenden v. Lery, 11 W. R. 259. And see Cowie v. Remfry, 5 Moore, P. C. 232; 3 Moore, Ind. App. 448; 10 Jur. 789.

Reference to Document containing Terms of Agreement.]—The plaintiff had signed a memorandum setting forth the terms of a contract by which the plaintiff agreed to let a carriage to the defendant for the period of a year. The defendant in a subsequent letter to the plaintiff signed by him referred to "our arrangement for the hire of your carriage." There was no other arrangement for the hire of a carriage than that the terms of which were contained in the memorandum signed by the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant's letter sufficiently referred to the document containing the terms of the contract to constitute a good memorandum of the contract within the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Cave v. Hastings, 50 L. J., Q. B. 575; 7 Q. B. D. 125; 45 L. T. 348. See also Boydell v. Drummond, 11 East, 141; 2 Camp. 157; 10 R. R. 450; post, col. 64.

The defendant entered into a verbal agreement with the plaintiff to grant him the lease of a house for a term of years. A draft for the proposed lease was furnished by the plaintiff's solicitor to the defendant's solicitors, and returned by them approved of on behalf of the defendant. The defendant subsequently wrote a letter to the plaintiff complaining that the lease had not been engrossed. Upon the defendant declining to carry out the agreement, the plaintiff applied for a decree for specific performance:—Held, that the letter contained a sufficient reference to the draft of the lease to admit parol evidence to show that there was such a draft, and thus to connect the draft with the letter signed by the defendant; and that these papers so connected constituted a sufficient writing to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Craig v. Elliott, 15 L. R., Ir. 257.

Upon a sale of lands by auction, a written contract, indorsed on the conditions of sale, was signed by the purchaser only: letters were subsequently written by the vendor to the purchaser's attorney, distinctly referring to the contract, and insisting upon the completion of the purchase:—Held, that this contract and the letters together constituted a sufficient note or memorandum, to enable the vendee to sue the vendor for the expenses of investigating the title, upon such title being found defective. Dobell v. Hutchinson, 5 N. & M. 251; 3 A. & E. 355; 1 H. & W. 394; 4 L. J., K. B. 201.

In an action for specific performance of a contract to sell real estate, the purchaser relied on several letters taken together as constituting a sufficient memorandum in writing signed by the vendor's authorised agent, into whose hands the property had been put for sale by the vendor. The last letter was written by the vendor's agent to the vendor's solicitor, and contained the essential terms of the contract other than the amount of the purchase-money, which, however, was specified in earlier letters written to the vendor in the name of the agent with his authority by the agent's clerk. There was nothing on the face of the last letter to show that the agent was referring to the former letters written by his clerk:—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to connect the documents, and that, therefore, there was no sufficient memorandum in writing within the Statute of Frauds. Potter v. Peters, 64 L. J., Ch. 357; 72 L. T. 624.

Although a signed document, not containing the terms of an agreement therein referred to, but referring to another written (but unsigned) document, which does contain these terms, may be connected with the later documents by parol evidence so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, the answer of the defendant, wherein the statute is pleaded and insisted on, cannot be made use of for this purpose: and a reference to "the agreement which your client alleges he entered into" in a signed document, is not a sufficient acknowledgment of the existence of an agreement at all, to take the case out of the statute. Jackson v. Oglander, 2 H. & M. 465; 13 L. T. 936; 13 W. R. 936.

Memorandum Incorporating Part of Deed.]—Action on an Irish judgment. Plea, that the judgment was recovered against the defendant as surety for S. & Co., to secure payment of moneys advanced to them by the plaintiff, and that S. & Co. paid all moneys due from them to the plaintiff, for which the judgment was to be such security. Replication, that a deed was made between S. & Co. and the plaintiff, whereby, after reciting the judgment and various unsettled accounts between S. & Co. and the plaintiff, it was witnessed that, for the sake of winding up the transactions, S. & Co. and the plaintiff agreed that the plaintiff should advance to a banking company 800*l.*, guaranteed by him on behalf of S. & Co., and should also advance to S. & Co. 200*l.*, and that 1,000*l.* should be the debt thenceforth due from S. & Co., which should be payable, with interest, and that the agreement should be without prejudice to the judgment against the defendant; that before execution of the deed by the plaintiff, in consideration that he would execute it, and would advance the 800*l.* and 200*l.*, the defendant promised the plaintiff that the judgment should remain as a security for the payment of the 1,000*l.* and interest, that the plaintiff executed the deed, and advanced the 800*l.* and 200*l.*, but that S. & Co. had not repaid the same. At the trial the plaintiff gave in evidence the following memorandum, which was signed by the defendant and another security before the plaintiff executed the deed: "We hereby consent to the within deed being executed by and between the parties thereto, and that the same shall be without prejudice to the plaintiff's rights and remedies under his judgment against us, and that the judgment shall remain in full force and effect." This memorandum had been annexed to the deed, but was detached and sent to the defendant, who signed it without seeing the deed:—Held, that assuming this was a transaction within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, which semble it was not, then it was a sufficient memorandum in writing to satisfy the statute, since the document signed by the defendant incorporated so much of the deed as formed the consideration and promise. Macroy v. Scott, 5 Ex. 907; 20 L. J., Ex. 90.

In Writing.]—The plaintiffs agreed in writing with the defendant to let him a public-house from year to year, with an option for him to call on them to grant him a lease for twenty-eight years, and a stipulation that if he sold such lease for more than 1,200*l.* he should give the plaintiffs half the difference. The plaintiffs subsequently granted him a lease differing from that agreed to be granted in the following particulars:—It was for thirty-two years instead of twenty-eight. The rent was 105*l.* instead of 100*l.* The premium was 800*l.* instead of 1,200*l.* There was no covenant, as had been agreed, against assignment without the lessors' consent, nor binding the lessee to take his beer of the plaintiffs. Some other covenants burthensome on the defendant which had been agreed for were omitted. These alterations were arranged by parol only. The defendant sold the lease for 2,500*l.* The plaintiffs sued upon the agreement for half the difference between that sum and 1,200*l.* The jury found that the stipulation as to dividing the surplus remained in force or was renewed:—Held, that the effect of the alteration of the original terms agreed upon between the parties was that the old agreement was dissolved, and a new one made incorporating such parts of the old agreement as the parties did not choose to alter; and that as such new agreement related to land, and was not in writing within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, it could not be enforced by action. Sanderson v. Graves, 44 L. J., Ex. 210; L. R. 10 Ex. 234; 33 L. T. 269; 23 W. R. 797.

The terms of a written contract for the sale of goods falling within the operation of the Statute of Frauds cannot be varied or altered by parol; and where a contract for the bargain and sale of goods is made, stating a time for the delivery of them, an agreement to substitute another day for that purpose must, in order to be valid, be in writing. Marshall v. Lynn, 6 M. & W. 109; 9 L. J., Ex. 125.

An agreement to guarantee a composition to all the creditors of a third person who should, before a day specified, sign a release to the debtors of their respective claims, being an agreement to pay the debt of another, is within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and cannot, in the absence of fraud, be varied by a subsequent parol agreement. Emmet v. Dewhurst, 3 Mac. & G. 587; 21 L. J., Ch. 497; 15 Jur. 1115.

Date.]—In a written contract within s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds, to deliver on a certain day, goods of a fluctuating value, to be paid for by bill at three months from delivery, the time of delivery is the essence of the contract, and any agreement to substitute another day must be in writing. Stead v. Dawber, 2 P. & D. 447; 10 A. & E. 57; 9 L. J., Q. B. 101.

A contract for the sale of goods exceeding 10*l.* in value having been reduced to writing, and signed so as to be binding on the parties, it was subsequently agreed verbally between them that the times of commencing and concluding delivery should be respectively a fortnight later than the times for commencing and concluding delivery fixed in the written contract:—Held, that by the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, this latter agreement, not being in writing, could not be allowed to be good for any purpose, and therefore that the previous contract remained unaffected by it, and could be enforced in all its terms. Noble v. Ward, 4 H. & C. 149; 36 L. J., Ex. 91; L. R. 2 Ex. 35; 15 L. T. 672; 15 W. R. 520—Ex. Ch.

By bought and sold notes signed by brokers acting both for the buyer and seller, the last of which was dated April 25th, A. bought of B. 500 tons of iron, the delivery to extend over three months. None of the iron was delivered by the 25th July. A correspondence ensued between the brokers and the seller's agent until February following, from which a jury might properly come to the conclusion that the buyer waited for the delivery of the iron at the request of the seller; he then went into the market and bought, the price of iron being higher than at the end of July:—Held, that as the buyer had not bound himself to wait, there was no alteration of the contract within the Statute of Frauds, and therefore for the breach of the contract he might recover from the seller the difference between the contract price of iron and the market price in February. Ogle v. Vane (Earl), 7 B. & S. 855; 36 L. J., Q. B. 175; L. R. 2 Q. B. 275; 15 W. R. 564. Affirmed on appeal, 9 B. & S. 182; 37 L. J., Q. B. 77; L. R. 3 Q. B. 272; 16 W. R. 463—Ex. Ch.

Place.]—Under a contract required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, goods were sold, to arrive by a certain ship, to be taken from the quay. The purchaser afterwards verbally consented to the goods being delivered from the quay:—Held, in an action for non-delivery of the goods, that such consent did not support a plea of rescission of the contract. Moore v. Campbell, 10 Ex. 323; 2 C. L. R. 1084; 23 L. J., Ex. 310.

Additions.]—Where the contract is for the sale of goods to be manufactured, and alterations or additions are made in the progress of the work, such alterations or additions need not be made the subject of a distinct contract in writing. Hoadley v. Maclaine, 4 M. & Scott, 340; 10 Bing. 482; 3 L. J., C. P. 162.

Telegram.]—See Goodwin v. Francis, L. R. 5 C. P. 121; and McBlain v. Cross, 25 L. T. 804, post, col. 55.

Bill of Exchange—Contract of Suretyship.]—Where the contract between a creditor, debtor and surety is contained in a bill of exchange, in an action by the creditor against the surety on the bill no other evidence save the bill is required to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, if the obligation appearing on the face of the bill is the precise obligation the surety has agreed to undertake. Holmes v. Durkee, 1 Cab. & E. 23.

Recital in Will.]—A recital in a will is a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of contract within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Hoyle, In re, Hoyle v. Hoyle, 62 L. J., Ch. 182: [1893] 1 Ch. 84; 2 R. 145; 67 L. T. 674; 41 W. R. 81—C. A.

Affidavit.]—An affidavit made in chancery is a sufficient writing within the statute. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 153; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 5 W. R. 155.

Receipt.]—E., holding a lease of four cottages, agreed to underlease them to D. for the whole term, less a reversion of a few days, and signed the following receipt:—"Received of D. 10*l.* as part purchase-money of 390*l.* of four cottages" (describing them), "the lease and counterpart to be paid for by Mr. D.":—Held, that the receipt was not a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Dolling v. Evans, 36 L. J., Ch. 474; 15 L. T. 604; 15 W. R. 394.

Receipts signed by the party sought to be charged, which partly disclosed the nature of the agreement:—Held, not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Caddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1185.

—— By Auctioneer's Clerk Three Days after Sale—Name Printed.]—A receipt given by the auctioneer's clerk to D. three days after the auction and signed by the clerk, acknowledging payment of part of the purchase-money for "Lot 4, Mr. John Stafford's property," is not such a memorandum in writing as would bind the vendor within s. 4 of the statute. Semble, that the name of the auctioneer printed on the back of the particulars and conditions of sale is sufficient to bind the vendor. Dyas v Stafford, 7 L. R., Ir. 590. Affirmed, 9 L. R., Ir. 520—C. A.

Entry in Broker's Book.]—A. agrees with B.'s broker for 500*l.* stock; the broker, according to usage, made an entry of this agreement in his pocket-book; it being no otherwise reduced into writing, is within the Statute of Frauds. Mussell v. Cooke, Pre. Ch. 533.

The entry of sale made in the broker's book is not, of necessity, to be treated as the only evidence of a contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Therefore where the terms of a contract of sale were entered in the broker's book, and not signed by him, but he delivered to the parties the bought and sold notes, embodying the terms of the entry, and signed these notes, it was held that the parties were bound. Goom v. Afflalo, 6 B. & C. 117; 9 D. & R. 148; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K.B. 31.

Entry in Rent Roll.]—R. agreed to become tenant of certain premises to one S., who instructed an agent, J., to prepare a lease. J. caused his clerk to make an entry in his rent-roll of "lease for 200 years, from 25th March, 1880; yearly rent 100*l*." S. died, and the lease was never made; but R. went into possession, and expended 3,000*l*. on the premises:—Held, a sufficient agreement for a lease, and specific performance was decreed. Sullivan's Estate, In re, 23 L. R. Ir. 255.

Communications to Third Persons.]—On bill for specific performance of parol agreement to let lands, evidence that defendant had suffered his wife to receive money from the plaintiff in consideration of fines (he being incapable of receiving them), and had written a letter to a third person acknowledging the demise, and stating that he was ready to make leases:—Held, sufficient to take case out of statute. Hartley v. Wilkinson, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 357.

Agreement by letter to third person to sell sufficient to take case out of statute. Seagood v. Neale, 1 Stra. 426.

The executrix of a lessee agreed to sell to A. the residue of her term (except a day) and the fixtures on the premises for 400*l*. This agreement was entered into by the executrix without advice, and there was no written memorandum of it except by a letter written by the executrix to her own solicitor a few hours afterwards. Subsequently the landlord, knowing that there had been a negotiation, if not an agreement, between the executrix and A., agreed with her for the purchase of the residue of the term for 550*l*. A., on hearing of this, offered the executrix, if she would complete her contract with him, 1,000*l*. as purchase-money, and indemnity against any proceedings on the part of the landlord. She accepted the offer, and demised the premises to A. for the whole term, wanting a day:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to a specific performance of his agreement, not only against the executrix, but against A. Goodwin v. Fielding, 4 De G. M. & G. 90.

Quære, whether the letter to the solicitor was a sufficient memorandum in writing within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, &c. Ib.

—— Agent.]—Defendant having orally instructed R. to buy a particular mare for him from the plaintiffs, R. wrote to defendant stating that he had bought the mare of the plaintiffs for 42*l*., and asking for a cheque. In answer to this, defendant wrote to R.:—"I only returned home yesterday evening or I should have at once answered your first letter, and sent you a cheque for the mare which you were kind enough to buy for me." There was no communication between defendant and plaintiffs, nor was the mare ever received by defendant. In an action by plaintiffs for the price of the mare:—Held, that the above letters were a sufficient "memorandum of the bargain" to satisfy s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds. Gibson v. Holland, 1 H. & R. 1; 35 L. J., C. P. 5; L. R. 1 C. P. 1; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 13 L. T. 293; 14 W. R. 86.

A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of the purchase-money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of the same for his sister, if C. approved of it. B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with a remark that it was "a great price":—Held, that C. must be considered the agent of A., and that as he had signed the contract acknowledging the receipt of the purchase-money, A. was bound to perform the agreement. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

Promise not Addressed to Anyone—Payment by Instalments.]—A. verbally promised to give 20,000*l*. to the Jubilee Fund of the Congregational Union, and also filled up and signed a blank form of promise, not addressed to any one, but headed "Congregational Union of England and Wales—Jubilee Fund," whereby he promised to give 20,000*l*., in five equal annual instalments of 4,000*l*. each, for liquidation of chapel debts. A. paid 12,000*l*. to the fund within three years after giving the promise, and then died, leaving the last two instalments of 4,000*l*. each unpaid and unprovided for:—Held, that there was no enforceable contract, on the ground that there was no sufficient memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Hudson, In re, Creed v. Henderson, 54 L. J., Ch. 811; 33 W. R. 819.

Letter of Solicitor.]—An intended vendor of freehold property, who had bought under stringent special conditions, instructed her solicitor, in conformity with his own advice, to sell the property subject to the same or similar conditions as or to those under which she had bought. Acting under this limited authority, the solicitor gave the necessary instructions by letter to a house-agent, whom at a personal interview on the same day he expressly forbade to sign anything, saying that any contract would have to be prepared by the solicitor's firm. An intended purchaser, by letter handed to the agent, agreed to give the price which the agent was authorised to accept (not, however, simply accepting the terms of the prior letter), and at the same time requested an acceptance of this offer by the agent in writing, a request to which the agent declined to accede, giving as his reason the prohibition under which he was from entering into any contract. The intended vendor at this stage of the proceedings repented of her intention to sell, but was willing to proceed if the solicitor was of opinion that she could not honourably recede. A personal interview having taken place between him and the intended purchaser, who declined to give up the intended purchase, the solicitor wrote to the intended purchaser a letter saying that his firm were instructed to proceed with the sale, and adding that the draft contract was being prepared, and would be forwarded for approval. Disputes having subsequently arisen, and the intended purchaser having filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, first, that at the date of the letter of the intended purchaser to the agent no contract was in existence, and that that letter, coupled with the prior letter of the solicitor to him, did not amount to a sufficient memorandum in writing of the terms of a contract. Chinnock v. Ely (Marchioness), 4 De G. J. & S. 638; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 329; 12 L. T. 251; 13 W. R. 597.

Held, secondly, that the letter of the solicitor to the intended purchaser was no recognition of the fact that there had been a complete sale, and did not amount to an acceptance of the terms stated by the intended purchaser in his letter to the agent, but merely to either a conditional acceptance of the intended purchaser's terms, subject to a draft contract being agreed to, or an expression of unwillingness to continue the interrupted negotiation, and for that purpose to prepare a form of agreement. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that if the letter of the solicitor of the intended purchaser had had the effect which the court decided that it had not, it would not have been binding on the intended vendor, as being beyond the authority vested by her in her solicitor. Ib.

At a sale of land by auction on the 9th of May, 1872, premises were knocked down to the defendant. An agreement as to the contract was attached to the conditions of sale, and signed by the plaintiff, but not by the defendant, in consequence of his being too drunk to sign. On the 10th of May the defendant's solicitor, after seeing the defendant, wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor a letter to the following effect: "I have been instructed by Mr. Baxter (the defendant) to prepare his title to the property which he purchased last evening. My client proposes to take possession forthwith if the vendor will consider such taking possession as without prejudice to his right to object to the title. Please send me the abstract of title and copy conditions when ready":—Held, that the letter was not a sufficient memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Matthews v. Baxter, 28 L. T. 669; 21 W. R. 741.

W. entered into a verbal agreement with S. to sell him an inn called the "Lion Inn" for 950*l.* On the following day W.'s solicitor wrote to S.'s solicitor: "W. has been with us to-day, and stated that he had arranged with your client S. for the sale to the latter of the 'Lion Inn' for 950*l.* We therefore send herewith draft contract for your perusal and approval":—Held, that this letter was not such a note or memorandum of an agreement as is required by the Statute of Frauds. Smith v. Webster, 45 L. J., Ch. 528; 3 Ch. D. 49; 35 L. T. 44; 24 W. R. 894—C. A.

Essential.]—There must be a signing, either by an actual signature of the name, or something intended by the writer to be equivalent to a signature; such as a mark by a marksman. Selby v. Selby, 3 Mer. 2; 17 R. R. 1.

Position of.]—Provided the name is inserted in an instrument, in such a manner as to have the effect of authenticating it, the requisition of the act with respect to signature is complied with and it does not matter in what part of the instrument the name is found. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53; 17 R. R. 13.

The signature must be inserted in such a manner as to govern or have the effect of authenticating the whole instrument. Caton v. Caton, 36 L. J., Ch. 886; L. R. 2 H. L. 127; 16 W. R. 1.

Name in Body of Instrument.] — The secretary of a company entered into a contract with the plaintiff, on behalf of the company, to supply them with coals. The contract was made out by the secretary, approved of by the company, and transmitted to the plaintiff, and by him altered and returned; and the alterations having been assented to by the company, a fair copy of the agreement was finally made by the secretary, and sent again to the plaintiff. The agreement contained in the body of it the names of all the parties to be charged, and, at its foot, the clause "In witness whereof we have hereto set our hands," &c., but it was never signed by any one. The contract had been acted upon by both parties, until it was violated by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff could not sue upon it, as it was not signed in pursuance of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Hubert or Herbert v. Turner, 4 Scott (N.R.) 486; 3 Man. & G. 743; Car. & M. 351; 11 L. J., C. P. 78; 6 Jur. 194.

The names in the body of the document are inserted there of necessity, to make the document sensible, and cannot be used over again to satisfy the requirements of the statute, that there shall be a signature by the parties to be charged or their agents.—Per Tindal, C.J. Ib.

The mere circumstance of the name of a party being written by himself in the body of a memorandum of agreement will not of itself constitute a signature. It must be inserted in such a manner as to govern, or to have the effect of authenticating, the whole instrument. Caton v. Caton, 36 L. J., Ch. 886; L. R. 2 H. L. 127; 16 W. R. 1.

The mere circumstance of the name of the party being written by himself in the body of a memorandum of agreement for a lease will not constitute a signature within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Stokes v. Moore, 1 Cox, 219; 1 R. R. 24.

—— "I, A. B., agree."]—An agreement in the handwriting of the party, beginning "I, A. B., agree to sell," though not signed by the vendor, is good within the Statute of Frauds. Knight v. Crockford, 1 Esp. 189; 5 R. R. 729. See Hubert v. Turner, supra.

—— In Third Person.]—J. R. Bridges, having five freehold houses, but no other property, in Cable Street, Liverpool, agreed to sell them to J. Bleakley for 248*l.*, and thereupon drew up the following memorandum in his own handwriting: "July 26, 1839. John Bleakley agrees with J. R. Bridges to take the property in Cable Street for 248*l.* 10*s.*":—Held, that the agreement was sufficiently signed by the vendor. Bleakley v. Smith, 11 Sim. 150.

If the defendant himself writes the agreement for the purchase of a leasehold house, and states his own name in the third person as "Mr. A. B. has agreed," this is a good contract within the Statute of Frauds, though he does not otherwise sign the agreement. Propert v. Parker, 1 Russ. & M. 625.

Whether a note written in the third person, "Mr. T. proposes," &c. (making an offer to purchase), being accepted, amounts to a contract in writing signed within the Statute of Frauds, quære. Morison v. Turnour, 18 Ves. 175.

Initials.]—Semble, that a signature by initials to a contract or a memorandum is sufficient. Chichester v. Cobb, 14 L. T. 433.

An agreement between an author and a bookseller, by which the latter is to be paid an annuity for life, without any apparent consideration, and without any signature other than the initials of the parties, is void under the Statute of Frauds. Sweet v. Lee, 3 Man. & G. 452; 4 Scott (N.R.) 77; 5 Jur. 1134.

Illiterate Person making Mark.]—An agreement annexed to conditions of sale by auction to which D., an illiterate person, had put his mark is sufficiently signed within the statute. Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R. Ir. 590. Affirmed, 9 L. R. Ir. 520—C. A.

There must be a signing, either by an actual signature of the name, or something intended by the writer to be equivalent to a signature; as a mark by a marksman. Selby v. Selby, 3 Mer. 2; 17 R. R. 1.

"Your Affectionate Mother."]—A letter from a mother to her son, beginning "My dear Robert," and concluding "Your affectionate mother," is not signed so as to constitute a binding agreement on the part of the mother," within the intent of the Statute of Frauds.

"Approved by me, J. S."]—Quære, whether the words "approved by me, J. S.," affixed to certain memoranda, by way of approval of an arrangement in which the party is interested, is a signing within the Statute of Frauds. Parker v. Smith, 1 Coll. 608.

Alteration of Draft.]—A. alters the draft with his own hand; this is not a signing to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, though the seller afterwards executes a conveyance, and being in Middlesex it is caused to be registered. Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. W. 770.

Acting on Unsigned Agreement.]—Acting on an unsigned agreement may render it binding. Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry., 2 App. Cas. 666. S. P., Liverpool Borough Bank v. Eccles, 4 H. & N. 139; 28 L. J., Ex. 122; Barber v. Allen, 5 H. & N. 61; 29 L. J., Ex. 100; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 23; 1 L. T. 167; 8 W. R. 127.

Reference Incorporating]—A parent by his agent, on the marriage of his daughter, entered into an engagement in writing with her intended husband, in which his name was written, but not signed:—Held, that a letter written by the parent after the marriage, referring to the memorandum as stating the terms of the engagement, was either a sufficient agreement, signed by the party within the Statute of Frauds, or a sufficient recognition of the use made of his name in the memorandum. De Bert v. Thompson, 3 Beav. 471; 12 Cl. & F. 45.

Though an agreement is not signed, the party is bound by a letter containing the terms, which by the contents can be connected and identified with the agreement. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 250; 1 Smith, 233; 7 R. R. 167.

The absolute beneficial owner of land vested in a trustee wrote a letter to the mother of her infant grandson. The letter was signed with the writer's initials. Inclosed in the same envelope, but on a separate piece of paper, was another document in the handwriting of the same person, and headed "Supplement." This document was not signed in any way. It commenced thus: "I had quite omitted to tell you," but it contained no other reference to the letter, and the letter in no way referred to it. It was alleged that the "supplement" contained a declaration of trust of the land in favour of the infant:—Held, that the "supplement" was not signed so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Kronheim v. Johnson, 47 L. J., Ch. 132; 7 Ch. D. 60; 37 L. T. 751; 26 W. R. 142.

You cannot by words of reference bring up a signature, and give it a signification and effect different from that which the signature has in the original place where it is found. Caton v. Caton, 36 L. J., Ch. 886; L. R. 2 H. L. 127; 16 W. R. 1.

Where, therefore, the name of the party against whom specific performance in equity was sought to be enforced appeared in different parts of the paper, but only in such a way that, in each case, it merely referred to the particular part where it was found, and that part was in the form of reference or description, and not of a promise or an undertaking:—Held, that the paper did not constitute a contract signed within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

Contract for land within s. 4 of Statute of Frauds, by letter signed by vendor combined with his proposal by note to third person specifying price. Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 187; 13 R. R. 178.

Printed.]—A letter containing proposed terms of a contract between A. B., the sender, and the sendee, written out by the sender, upon paper bearing a printed heading, "Memorandum from A. B.," was held to be a sufficient note in writing to charge A. B. A memorandum of a contract is sufficiently signed within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds if it contains the terms of the contract and the name of the party charged, and is given by him to the other party under circumstances which show a recognition of the name as it stands for his own. Tourret v. Cripps, 48 L. J., Ch. 567; 27 W. R. 706.

Semble, that the name of the auctioneer printed on the back of the particulars and conditions of sale is sufficient to bind the vendor. Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R. Ir. 590. Affirmed, 9 L. R. Ir. 520—C. A.

Pencil—Condition.]—On the treaty for the under-lease of a house, the agent for plaintiff tendered an unconditional agreement to be signed, to which the defendant attached his name and initials in pencil, subject to the condition of there being nothing unusual in the covenants of the original lease. The defendant subsequently discovered that there was a nuisance which would prevent his occupation of the house, but which was unknown to the plaintiff, and he therefore abandoned the treaty:—Held, that under these circumstances the court would try the case strictly between the parties, and in the absence of actual evidence that the agent had direct or implied authority to accede to the pencil additions, would not bind the plaintiff, and that until the latter had assented to the alterations, the agreement was only a proposal and might be abandoned by the defendant. The bill was dismissed with costs. Lucas v. James, 7 Hare, 410; 18 L. J. Ch. 329; 13 Jur. 912.

On Telegram Form.]—A., by letter, offered to buy an estate for a given sum. B. answered by telegram, "Your offer for the L. estate is accepted." The instructions for the message were signed by B., but the telegram received by A. contained merely the names of the sender and receiver written by the company's clerk on the usual printed form:—Held, that this was a sufficient signature by B. Godwin v. Francis, 39 L. J., C. P. 121; L. R. 5 C. P. 295; 22 L. T. 338.

B. having entered into a contract with C., the brother of the defendant, for the sale of hay, brought an action against the defendant for not accepting. The judge at the trial admitted letters and telegrams signed by C. as evidence against the defendant, and the jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of the authority, and that the two telegrams, of which one was signed in C.'s name, and in the other the name of the defendant was not mentioned as buyer, together constituted a sufficient memorandum of the contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, on the ground that the defendant might be treated as the undisclosed principal of C., who appeared on the telegrams to be liable as principal. McBlain v. Cross, 25 L. T. 804.

Purpose of.]—A signature to a document which contains the terms of a contract is available for the purpose of satisfying s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, though put alio intuitu, and not in order to attest or verify the contract. Jones v. Victoria Dock Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 219; 2 Q. B. D. 314; 36 L. T. 347; 25 W. R. 501; and see Eley v. Positive Government, &c., Co., 45 L. J., Ex. 451; 1 Ex. D. 20, 88; 34 L. T. 190.

As Witness.]—Where there is a complete agreement in writing, and a person who is a party and knows the contents subscribes as a witness only, he is bound by it, for it is a signing within the Statute of Frauds. Welford v. Beazley, 3 Atk. 503.

—— By Clerk.]—A signature by an auctioneer's clerk, in the character of witness merely, to a contract for the sale of property which is signed by the purchaser alone, is not a sufficient signing of an agreement or memorandum, or note thereof, by an agent of the seller, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Gosbell v. Archer, 4 N. & M. 485; 2 A. & E. 500; 1 H. & W. 31; 4 L. J., K. B. 78.

Of one Party.]—A written proposal containing the terms of a proposed contract signed by the defendant and assented to by the plaintiff by parol is a sufficient agreement within the 4th section. Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 67; 26 L. J., C. P. 143; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 516; 5 W. R. 563. S. P., Reuss v. Picksley, 4 H. & C. 588; 35 L. J., Ex. 218; L. R. 1 Ex. 342; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 628; 15 L. T. 25; 14 W. R. 924—Ex. Ch.

A contract of purchase (of leasehold property sold by auction) written on the back of the particulars of sale (which contained the names of the owners of the property), and signed by the purchaser only, is a sufficient note or memorandum of the agreement between the parties; the vendor's signature is not essential Laythorpe v. Bryant, 3 Scott, 238; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 735; 2 Hodges, 25; 5 L. J., C. P. 217.

Semble, the signature of the party to be bound is sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds so as to enable the court to enforce specific performance. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

There is no provision in the Statute of Frauds to prevent the specific execution of an agreement signed only by one of the parties. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball & B. 370; 12 R. R. 103.

An agreement signed by one party only is sufficient to charge him within Statute of Frauds. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265; 6 R. R. 124.

Contract for the purchase of tithes not signed by the party chargeable:—Held, under the circumstances, to have been taken out of the Statute of Frauds. Blachford v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Beav. 232; 12 L. J., Ch. 108.

A. sold houses to B., and a note was made by A. of the agreement, but it was only signed by B. Decreed, that both parties were bound. Hatton v. Gray, 2 Ch. Ca. 164.

Agreement in writing for sale of estate, binding, though signed only by vendor, and followed up by direction to attorney to prepare proper agreement for both parties to sign. Fowle v. Freeman, 9 Ves. 351; 7 R. R. 219.

Agreements signed by one party only, enforced against the other. Hall v. Butler, 1 Eq. Abr. 20.

An agreement may be enforced in equity, although not binding on both parties at the time of its being signed; it is sufficient if signed only by one party and accepted and acted on by the other. Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 344; 12 L. J., Ch. 158; 7 Jur. 117.

Specific performance of a contract, not signed by the party enforcing it. Backhouse v. Mohun, 3 Swanst. 434; 19 R. R. 252.

The written undertaking of one party will be enforced, although the other party is not mutually bound by writing. Palmer v. Scott, 1 Russ. & M. 391; Taml. 488; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 127.

Quære, whether, where a contract signed by one party only, he is not at liberty to recede from it till the other party has done some act to bind himself. Martin v. Mitchell, 2 J. & W. 428; 22 R. R. 184.

Semble, a contract signed by one party only, may be enforced by the other, as the filing a bill makes it binding on that party. Ib. 426.

Semble, under contract by husband and wife for sale of wife's estate, court will not decree him to procure her to join. Ib. 425.

If a written agreement is not signed by the defendant, the plaintiff need not give it in evidence, although he has signed it, and it relates to the matter in issue between the parties. Wilson v. Bowie, 1 Car. & P. 8.

—— Variance between Memorandum and Counterpart.]—The memorandum of a contract for sale of land was signed in counterpart, one copy being signed by "V. and Son, as agents for" C. C., who was the vendor's solicitor. The other copy was duly signed on behalf of the purchaser:—Held, that the latter being a complete memorandum as against the purchaser, the defect in the former was no bar to the vendor's suing for specific performance. Butcher v. Nash, 61 L. T. 72.

Of Agent.]—Specific performance of a contract concerning land, not decreed on the signature of an agent without authority. Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 202.

An agent not being able to write, held the top of the pen while another person wrote his name to an agreement:—Held, a sufficient signature. Helshaw v. Langley, 11 L. J., Ch. 17.

A contract for the purchase of land made by an agent in his own name, vests the equitable estate in the principal, and may be established by him against the agent and persons claiming under him, although the agent is appointed merely by parol. Cave v. Mackenzie, 46 L. J., Ch. 564; 37 L. T. 218.

The plaintiffs appointed by parol W. F. M. as their agent to purchase land on their behalf. W. F. M. entered into a contract for the purchase of the land in his own name, and then assigned the benefit of the contract to J. T. M. for valuable consideration. In an action by the plaintiffs against W. F. M. and J. T. M. to establish the agency, the vendor not being a party:—Held, that the appointment of W. F. M. was an agency within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and not a trust or confidence within s. 7, and therefore was not required to be evidenced by writing. Ib.

The defendant, an estate agent, contracted to sell land to the plaintiff, who paid a deposit. The defendant signed a receipt in his own name for the deposit, and the plaintiff signed an agreement containing the terms of the purchase. The owner of the land refused to complete the purchase, and the plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for breach of the contract to sell. At the trial the jury found that the defendant sold as principal:—Held, that the defendant was personally liable, and that the agreement and receipt taken together formed a sufficient contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Long v. Millar, 48 L. J., C. P. 596; 4 C. P. D. 450; 41 L. T. 306; 27 W. R. 720—C. A.

—— Clerk.]—H., head clerk to the defendants, drew up with their authority a letter addressed to them, and containing the terms upon which the plaintiff was to serve them for three years. The plaintiff signed the letter:—Held, that the letter constituted a sufficient compliance with the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, being a memorandum of the contract signed by the agent of the defendants. Evans v. Hoare, 61 L. J., Q. B. 470; [1892] 1 Q. B. 593; 66 L. T. 345; 40 W. R. 442; 56 J. P. 664.

—— Solicitor.]—Quære, whether the signature of an attorney to a statement at the foot of a draft agreement, signifying his approval of the draft on behalf of his client, is a signature within the Statute of Frauds. Thornbury v. Bevill, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 554; 6 Jur. 407.

A person who was in treaty for taking the lease of a house, stated in a letter to the owner, that he had authorised his solicitors to settle the terms of the agreement. They subsequently sent the owner a draft agreement signed by them stating that its provisions were approved by their client, who afterwards refused to sign or acknowledge it:—Held, in a suit for specific performance, that the solicitors were agents in what they did and that a defence under the Statute of Frauds failed. Jolliffe v. Blumberg, 18 W. R. 784.

Secretary of Company.]—An agreement for the sale of leasehold houses, the property of a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862, was signed as follows:—"A., secretary for the B. Company, Limited." The Companies Act, 1867, s. 37, sub-s. 2, provides that such an agreement may be signed on behalf of the company by any person acting under the express or implied authority of the company. By the memorandum of association it appeared that one of the objects of the company was to sell houses:—Held, that as selling houses was part of the ordinary business of the company, the secretary in signing was acting under the implied authority of the company; and that, therefore, the agreement was sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Beer v. London and Paris Hotel Co., L. R. 20 Eq. 412; 32 L. T. 715.

—— Agent's Clerk.]—Vendor is bound by signature of agent's clerk, thus: "Witness E. P. for Mr. S. agent for the seller," upon evidence of assent; but clerks in general have no authority to bind the principal. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith, 233; 7 R. R. 167.

—— Auctioneer's Clerk.]—A direction by the purchaser at a sale of lands by auction to the auctioneer's clerk to fill up the memorandum annexed to the conditions of sale constitutes such clerk a person "lawfully authorised within the meaning of section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and such memorandum so filled up by the auctioneer's clerk with the name of the purchaser, although not signed by the latter, complies with the requirements of the statute." Sims v. Landray, 63 L. J., Ch. 535; [1894] 2 Ch. 318; 8 R. 582; 70 L. T. 530; 42 W. R. 621. And see Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R. Ir. 590. Affirmed, 9 L. R. Ir. 520.

f. Agreement in consideration of Marriage.

What is.]—M. had given a bond and warrant of attorney to secure the repayment of a sum of money. Judgment had been entered up, but not executed; the bond and warrant of attorney came into the possession of L., as personal representative of the original obligee. She was on terms of affectionate friendship with M., and often said that he had been unfairly treated, in being made to enter into these securities. L. had in early life received from the father of M. a conveyance of some property in India; the deed of conveyance was expressed to be for a money consideration of 10,000 rupees. In truth, the money consideration was, if any, a debt of 1,200 rupees; the rest was a purely voluntary gift, and no money whatever passed when the conveyance was executed. M. was about to marry, and when his marriage was in contemplation, discussions arose about the bond and warrant of attorney. M.'s father had told L. that he was advised, if she did not abandon the claim on the bond and warrant of attorney against his son, to execute a deed, which would put an end to the conveyance of this Indian property as a voluntary conveyance made without consideration. In his depositions he said that L. promised not to enforce the bond and warrant of attorney, if he would abstain from interfering with the conveyance. Other evidence was given of directions by her, that she had abandoned the claim, and of a promise, often repeated, that she would never trouble M. about it:—Held, that this promise, if it constituted a contract, was not a contract made in consideration of marriage, so as to bring it within the words of the Statute of Frauds. Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Cas. 185; 23 L. J., Ch. 865.

Promise to Confer Benefit by Will.]—Prior to a marriage the intended husband and wife caused a settlement of the wife's property to be prepared in accordance with a memorandum in the husband's handwriting; but before its execution the husband verbally promised the wife that if she would forego the settlement he would give her the same benefits by his will. In accordance with this promise, he, immediately after the marriage, executed a will to that effect prepared before the marriage. Upon his death, some years afterwards, that will was not forthcoming, but a later will was found disposing of the property in a different manner:—Held, that there was no contract within the Statute of Frauds binding the husband to make a will, or any fraud or part performance to take the case out of the statute. Caton v. Caton, 35 L. J., Ch. 292; L. R. 1 Ch. 137; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 171. Affirmed on appeal, 36 L. J., Ch. 886; L. R. 2 H.L. 127; 16 W. R. 1.

P. V., shortly before his marriage with the plaintiff, wrote her a letter, in which occurred the following passage: "And now, my dearest Lizzie, as life is very uncertain at my time of life, and as you are of all the world the person I love best, I hereby will and bequeath to you, after my death, the eight cottages in Peckham's Walk, occupied by Charles Warren and Edward Neath and others. You will keep this letter as a proof of my intention, in case of any sudden change occurring to me, rendering me incapable of, or not in a state of mind fit for, the performance of so important a document, and making null and void any former will and bequest I may have made previously. I am doing this, my dearest, as a temporary provision for you in case of any emergency . . . I am your future husband in its most holy sense.—P. V." Another part of the will contained a reference to the wedding-ring, of which the plaintiff then apparently had the custody. After the marriage P. V. died, leaving a will whereof the defendants were executors and trustees. By this will the eight cottages were not left to the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed a declaration that P. V. duly contracted with her to leave to or to settle upon her the eight cottages, and that by virtue of the letter the plaintiff was entitled to them in equity. The court held that the letter did not satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds with respect to a memorandum, either as to the statement of consideration or a promise:—Held, on appeal, that no contract had been intended, that the writer had mistakenly thought that he was making a gift, and that the judgment must be affirmed. Vincent v. Vincent, 56 L. T. 243—C. A.

Memoranda Sufficient.]—A written memorandum after marriage of a prior agreement is sufficient within the 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 153; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 5 W. R. 156.

Subsequent to Marriage—Evidence.]—A letter subsequent to the marriage, authorising the husband to draw for interest due on a bond which was never executed, cannot prevail as evidence of a promise, which, if subsequent to the marriage, is void as nudum pactum. Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. 67; 8 R. R. 289.

Part Performance.]—See infra.

g. Interest in Lands.

Agreement for Lease—In Consideration of Share of Crops.]—A. agreed with B. to let him land rent free on condition that A. should have a moiety of the crops: such an agreement need not be in writing. Poulter v. Killingbrick, 1 Bos. & P. 397. See Waddington v. Bristow, 2 Bos. & P. 452; (N.R.) 355.

—— Contract to Let Dock.]—A corporation, being the owner of a graving dock, issued regulations for its use, that the dock would "be let to parties requiring the same for the repair of vessels" at certain rates; that a book would be kept by the borough treasurer for the entering of the names of vessels intended for repair, and that as far as practicable priority would be given to vessels in the order of entry. A sum of three guineas was to be paid to the borough treasurer on entering each vessel, which "entrance money, and the right of turn for the use of the dock," were to be forfeited if the vessel did not take her turn at the specified time; and the corporation was to have a lien for dockage upon the vessel, with a power to detain the vessel for the same. In an action by a shipowner against the corporation for not allowing his vessel, for which the entrance fee had been paid, to enter such dock in her turn, according to these regulations:—Held, that the contract for the use of the dock did not amount to an interest in land within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and that it did not require to be under seal. Wells v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation, 44 L. J., C. P. 257; L. R. 10 C. P. 402; 32 L. T. 615; 23 W. R. 562.

—— To Let Furnished Lodgings.]—A contract to let furnished lodgings is a contract for an interest in land. Edge v. Strafford, 1 C. & J. 391; 1 Tyr. 293. S. P., Inman v. Stamp, 1 Stark. 12; 18 R. R. 740.

Secus, as to board and lodgings. Wright v. Stavert, 2 El. & El. 721; 29 L. J., Q. B. 161; 8 W. R. 413.

Contract to Procure Assignment of Lease.]—A contract to procure for a person the assignment of a lease of a house is a contract for an interest in or concerning land within the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, and must therefore be in writing, although it is made by one who has not the lease himself, or any interest under it. Horsey v. Graham, 39 L. J., C. P. 58; L. R. 5 C. P. 9; 21 L. T. 530; 18 W. R. 141.

Agreement as to Improvements.]—A landlord, who had demised premises for a term of years at 50*l.* a year, agreed with his tenant to lay out 50*l.* in making certain improvements upon them, the tenant undertaking to pay him an increased rent of 5*l.* a year during the remainder of the term (of which several years were unexpired), to commence from the quarter preceding the completion of the work :—Held, that the landlord, having done the work, might recover arrears of the 5*l.* a year against the tenant, though the agreement had not been signed by either party ; for that it was not a contract for any interest in or concerning lands within the statute ; nor was it, according to that statute, an agreement "not to be performed within one year from the making there," no time being fixed for the performance on the part of the landlord. Donellan v. Read, 3 B. & Ad. 899 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 269.

In consideration that A., who was tenant of premises under a parol agreement for a seven years' lease, would give up immediate possession to B., in order that B. might enter thereon as tenant, and also as a compensation for improvements made by A. on the premises, and for the value of articles left thereon by A., B. agreed to pay A. 100*l.* A. accordingly relinquished and gave up possession of the premises to B., who was thereupon accepted as tenant from year to year, at a different rent from that formerly paid by A., and B. afterwards in part performance of the agreement on his part paid A. 51*l.* In an action by A. to recover the balance of the 100*l.* :—Held, that the contract, in respect of which he sued, was not a contract for the sale of an interest in or concerning lands. Kelly v. Webster, 12 C. B. 283 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 163 ; 16 Jur. 838.

Agreement as to Alterations.]—The plaintiffs agreed in writing with the defendant to let him a public-house from year to year, with an option for him to call on them to grant him a lease for twenty-eight years, and a stipulation that if he sold such lease for more than 1,200*l.* he should give the plaintiffs half the difference. The plaintiffs subsequently granted him a lease differing from that agreed to be granted in the following particulars :—It was for thirty-two years instead of twenty-eight. The rent was 105*l.* instead of 100*l.* The premium was 800*l.* instead of 1,200*l.* There was no covenant as had been agreed, against assignment without the lessor's consent, nor binding the lessee to take his beer of the plaintiffs. Some other covenants burthensome on the defendant which had been agreed for were omitted. These alterations were arranged by parol only. The defendant sold the lease for 2,500*l.* The plaintiffs sued upon the agreement for half the difference between that sum and 1,200*l.* The jury found that the stipulation as to dividing the surplus remained in force or was renewed :—Held, that the effect of the alteration of the original terms agreed upon between the parties was that the old agreement was dissolved, and a new one made incorporating such parts of the old agreement as the parties did not choose to alter ; and that as such new agreement related to land, and was not in writing within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, it could not be enforced by action. Sanderson v. Graves, 44 L. J., Ex. 210 ; L. R. 10 Ex. 234 ; 33 L. T. 269 ; 23 W. R. 797.

Agreement to Repay Loan out of Rent.]—A customer, in July, borrowed 200*l.* from his bankers upon the terms of a verbal agreement that the loan should be repaid out of the rent of a farm which would become due to him at Michaelmas. The money was advanced by the bankers, and the customer then gave them a letter addressed by him to the tenant of the farm, by which he authorised and requested the tenant, when his Michaelmas rent became due, to pay 200*l.* to the bankers. The letter contained no reference to the loan, and did not show that any consideration had been given for the authority. The bankers sent the letter to the tenant. The customer was adjudicated a bankrupt upon an act of bankruptcy committed in August :—Held, that as the rent was an interest in land, the agreement was one which by virtue of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, could not be proved by parol evidence, and that, therefore, the letter could alone be looked at. And that the letter amounted only to a revocable authority to pay the rent to the bankers, and that it was revoked by the bankruptcy. Hall, Ex parte, Whiting, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 79 ; 10 Ch. D. 615 ; 40 L. T. 179 ; 27 W. R. 385—C. A.

Contract to Furnish.]—An agreement by which A., in consideration of B. hiring a house for him, agrees to furnish the same house, relates to an interest in land, and must be in writing. Mechelin v. Wallace, 2 N. & P. 224 ; 7 A. & E. 49 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 217.

—— Fixtures.]—The plaintiff agreed to let a house to the defendant, and to sell him the furniture and fixtures therein, and to make alterations and improvements in the house ; and the defendant agreed to take the house and pay for the furniture and fixtures and alterations :—Held, an agreement relating to an interest in land. Vaughan v. Hancock, 3 C. B. 766 ; 16 L. J., C. P. 1.

Tenant's fixtures of over 10*l.* in value having been sold by the tenant's trustee in bankruptcy to the plaintiff and resold by him to the defendant, who was landlord of the premises :—Held, that no memorandum of this latter sale was necessary under the Statute of Frauds, it being neither a sale of an interest in land, under s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, nor of goods and chattels under s. 17. Lee v. Gaskell, 45 L. J., Q. B. 540 ; 1 Q. B. D. 700 ; 34 L. T. 759 ; 24 W. R. 824. And see Sleddon v. Cruikshank, 10 M. & W. 71 ; 16 L. J., Ex. 61. Lanyon v Toogood, 13 M. & W. 27 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 273.

Machinery Affixed.]—Machinery affixed to a building is land within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Jarvis v. Jarvis, 63 L. J., Ch. 10 ; 8 R. 361 ; 69 L. T. 412 ; 1 Manson, 199.

Right of Shooting—Taking away Game.]—A grant of a right to shoot and take away a part of the game killed is a grant of an interest in land and within the Statute of Frauds. Webber v. Lee, 51 L. J., Q. B. 485 ; 9 Q. B. D. 315 ; 47 L. T. 215 ; 30 W. R. 866 ; 47 J. P. 4—C. A.

Agreement to Charge Hereditaments.]—An agreement to charge hereditaments with the value of property which has been lost through the wrongful act of a third person must be in writing, as being within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds ; but it may be taken out of the Statute by a deposit of title-deeds. Whitmore v. Farley, 43 L. T. 192 ; 28 W. R. 908. And see S. C., in C. A., 45 L. T. 99 ; 29 W. R. 825 ; 14 Cox, C. C. 617. See also Alderson v. Maddison, in C. A., 50 L. J., Q. B. 466 ; 7 Q. B. D. 174 ; 45 L. Advance of Money on Security.]—An agreement to advance money on the security of land is an agreement which requires to be in writing by s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Mounsey v. Rankin, 1 Cab. & E. 496.

Declaration of Trust.]—A. verbally agreed to bid for B. at an auction of a house; the house was bought and the deposit paid by A. In an action by B. against A. to have it declared that A. was his agent and trustee:—Held, that although under s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds an agency might be established by parol, s. 7 applied, by which all declarations of trusts of lands, tenements, &c., must be proved by some writing. James v Smith, [1891] 1 Ch. 384; 63 L. T. 524; 39 W. R. 396. Affirmed on other grounds, 65 L. T. 544—C. A.

Sale of Building Materials.]—A contract for the sale of building materials to be taken down and removed by the purchaser is a contract for the sale of an interest in land within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Marshall v Green (1 C. P. D. 35) discussed and distinguished on this point. Lavery v. Purssell, 57 L. J., Ch. 570; 39 Ch. D. 508; 58 L. T. 846; 37 W. R. 163.

An agreement to become partners in a colliery which was to be demised upon royalties, and the royalties to be divided in certain proportions, is an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds (21 Car. 2, c. 3), and must be in writing, signed by the parties. Caddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1185.

Partnership.]—Where a partner agrees to retire from a partnership, the assets of which include an interest in land, and it is an essential term of the agreement that the retiring partner shall assign his share in the assets, the contract is within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and must be in writing. Gray v. Smith, 59 L. J., Ch. 145; 43 Ch. D. 208; 62 L. T. 335; 38 W. R. 310—C. A.

Contract for Purchase of Debentures—"Floating Security."]—The sale of debentures in a company that create a "floating charge" on its property consisting in part of leaseholds is a contract for the sale of an interest in land within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Driver v. Broad, 63 L. J., Q. B. 12; [1893] 1 Q. B. 744; 4 R. 411; 69 L. T. 169; 41 W. R. 483—C. A.

h. Not Performable within a Year.

Where Possibility of Performance.]—That part of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, which requires agreements not to be performed within a year to be in writing and signed, does not apply to cases in which the performance may, by possibility or accident, be extended beyond that period; it is to be confined to cases where the agreement is not to be performed and cannot be carried into execution within that space of time. Ridley v. Ridley, 34 Beav. 478; 34 L. J., Ch. 462; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 475; 12 L. T. 481; 13 W. R. 763.

Therefore, when A. agreed by parol, for valuable consideration, to leave C. a certain amount by his will, and he died fourteen years after the agreement:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds did not apply Ib.

Where an agreement is to be performed on a contingency; which may happen within the year after it is made, and it does not appear on the face of the agreement that it is to be performed after the year, it does not fall within the statute; where, therefore, a debtor to the plaintiff stated to the plaintiff's solicitor, on being applied to for payment, that he, the debtor, could not pay then or during his lifetime, but that he had provided for payment by his will, and directed his executors to pay:—Held, to be binding on the executors, although there was no promise in writing by the testator to pay. Wells v. Horton, 12 Moore, 176; 4 Bing. 40; 2 Car. & P. 383; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 41; 29 R. R. 498.

—— By one Party.]—Where by the terms of a contract one party can perform his part of it within a year, a subsequent request by the other party that such performance should be postponed till after a year does not bring the case within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, although such request be acceded to. Beran v. Carr, 1 Cab. & E. 499.

An agreement whereby all that is to be done by the plaintiff, constituting one entire consideration for the defendant's promise, is capable of being performed within a year, and no part of what the plaintiff is to do constituting such consideration is intended to be postponed until after the expiration of the year, is not within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, notwithstanding the performance on the part of the defendant is or may be extended beyond that period. Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 67; 26 L. J., C. P. 143; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 516; 5 W. R. 563.

Publication of Book in Parts—Sufficient Contract.]—If it appears to have been the understanding of the parties to a contract at the time, that it was not to be completed within a year, though it might and was in fact in part performed within that time, it is within the statute; and if not in writing signed by the party to be charged, it cannot be enforced against him. And his signature in a book entitled "Shakspeare subscribers, their signatures," not referring to a printed prospectus, which contained the terms of the contract, and which was delivered at the time to the subscribers to the "Boydell Shakspeare," cannot be connected together, so as to take the case out of the statute, as such connection could only be established by parol evidence. Boydell v. Drummond, 11 East, 142; 2 Camp. 157; 10 R. R. 450.

But where a party agreed to take a work which was to be published in twenty-four numbers, at intervals of two months, and after receiving several numbers refused to take any more, though he had notice from the publisher that the others were ready for him if he would send for them; and the plaintiff, the assignee of the publisher, who had become bankrupt, sued him for the value of the whole. The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff for the price of the numbers received by the defendant, the court refused to disturb it, although it was contended that the contract was entire and void under the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, it not having been reduced into writing, or to be performed within a year. Mavor v. Pyne, 11 Moore, 2; 3 Bing. 285; 2 Car. & P. 91; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 36; 28 R. R. 625.

Hire for more than a Year—Determinable within.]—An agreement to hire a carriage for more than one year, determinable by the custom of the trade, at any time, upon payment of a year's hire, is an agreement not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, and must be signed by the party to be charged therewith. Burch v. Liverpool (Earl), 4 M. & Ry. 380; 9 B. & C. 392.

To Leave by Will]—An agreement to leave money by will need not be in writing although uncertain as to the time of performance. Fenton v. Emblers, 3 Burr. 1278; 1 W. Bl. 353. S. P., Ridley v. Ridley, 34 Beav. 478: 34 L. J., Ch. 462: 11 Jur. (N.S.) 475; 12 L. T. 481; 13 W. R. 763. And see Alderson v. Maddison, 52 L. J., Q. B. 737; 8 App. Cas. 467; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820.

Partnership.]—But an agreement to enter into partnership for ten years must. Williams v. Jones, 7 D. & R. 548; 5 B. & C. 108; 29 R. R. 181.

Contract of Service.]—A contract to serve for one year, the service to commence on the second day after that on which the contract is made, is a contract not to be performed within a year within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Cawthorne v. Cordrey (13 C. B. (N.S.) 406) distinguished. Britain v. Rossiter, 48 L. J., Ex. 362; 11 Q. B. D. 123; 40 L. T. 240; 27 W. R. 482.

A contract for a year's service to commence at a subsequent day, is a contract not to be performed within the year, and must be in writing; therefore, no action can be maintained for the breach of a verbal contract made on the 27th May, for a year's service to commence on the 30th June following. Bracegirdle v. Heald, 1 B. & Ald. 722; 19 R. R. 442.

A., on the 20th July, made proposals in writing (unsigned) to B., to enter his service as bailiff for a year; B. took the proposals and went away, and entered into A.'s service on the 24th of July:—Held that this was a contract on the 20th, not to be performed within the space of one year from the making. Snelling v. Huntingfield (Lord), 1 C. M. & R. 20: 4 Tyr. 606; 3 L. J., Ex. 232.

The plaintiff agreed on a Sunday to serve defendant for a year, the service to commence on the Monday. On the Monday the plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, commenced the service, and received 20*l.* on account:—Held, in an action for a wrongful dismissal within the year, in which an objection was taken that there was a contract for a year's service to commence on a future day, that the jury might infer a new implied contract on the Monday for a year's service from that day. Cawthorn v. Cordery, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 406: 32 L. J., C. P. 152.

By a parol agreement defendant agreed with plaintiff to serve him for a year from a future day, and that the service thenceforth should continue, subject to be determined by three months' notice. After the expiry of the year, defendant quitted plaintiff's service without notice:—Held, that plaintiff might maintain an action for this breach of their agreement, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Collis v. Botthamley, 7 W. R. 87.

But a contract for service for more than a year, but subject to determination within the year on a given event, is within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and must therefore be in writing. Dobson v. Collis, 1 H. & N. 81; 25 L. J., Ex. 267; 4 W. R. 512.

A. entered the service of B. under a written agreement as follows:—"I agree to receive you as clerk in my establishment in consideration of your paying me a premium of 300*l.*, and to pay you a salary at the following rates, viz., for the first year 70*l.*, for the second 90*l.*, for the third 110*l.*, for the fourth 130*l.*, and 150*l.* for the fifth and following years that you may remain in my employment":—Held, that the agreement was one that, by the Statute of Frauds, was required to be in writing: that there being a precise stipulation for yearly payments, evidence was not admissible to show that at or after the time the letter containing it was sent by B. to A., it was verbally agreed that the salary should be paid quarterly, and that the facts of the payments having usually been made quarterly, did not vary the rights of the parties under the agreement. Giraud v. Richmond, 2 C. B. 835; 15 L. J., C. P. 180; 10 Jur. 360.

—— Incomplete Contract.]—Six persons signed a document purporting to be the basis of a partnership to last for three years and to commence at a subsequent date. By the terms of the document the interest in the partnership was to be divided into thirty-six shares. J. R. was to hold twelve shares, and E. R., F. H., H. R., and A. S. T. were each to hold six shares, and B. T. was to receive a salary of 500*l.* per annum. H. R. objected to this arrangement, and wished that he himself should hold seven shares, and that J. R. should hold eleven. On signing the document, H. R. wrote before his signature to the document the words, "Excepting clause as to shares." A. S. T. insisted that H. R. should hold only the same number of shares in the partnership as he did. A correspondence ensued with reference to the terms of the partnership; and, ultimately, A. S. T. withdrew his objection by letter. H. R. never assented to the provision that he should hold only six shares. J. R., E. R., F. R., and H. R. having afterwards refused to take A. S. T. into partnership unless he would consent to be a salaried partner only, A. S. T. brought an action for breach of the terms of the document:—Held, that the document set forth an agreement not to be performed within a year, within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, and that as there was no complete agreement in writing, signed by the parties to be charged thereby, no action would lie for a refusal to perform the terms of the document. Tomkins v. Randell, 19 W. R. 413.

—— Reference to other Documents.]—A company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862, entered into negotiations with the plaintiffs to employ them as managers for five years. A draft agreement was prepared and submitted to them; they objected to some of its terms, and thereupon the directors of the company wrote out a paper modifying the draft agreement in some particulars, but concluding with the words "all other provisions as in draft." The plaintiffs agreed to the draft agreement as modified by this paper. The secretary of the company entered in the minute book a resolution that the plaintiffs having signified their willingness to undertake "the management of the company's works upon the terms of the draft agreement submitted to them by the board, it was resolved that the agreement be engrossed in duplicate, signed, sealed and executed." At the next meeting of the directors of the company the chairman signed the resolution pursuant to the Companies Act, 1862, s 67:—Held, that there was a valid contract within the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, by the company to employ the plaintiffs during five years: for the terms of the service were completely ascertained when they assented to the draft agreement as modified by the paper, and it was immaterial that the directors of the company intended the contract as finally arrived at to be afterwards "engrossed in duplicate, signed, sealed, and executed;" and the draft agreement and the paper modifying it might be identified by parol as the draft agreement referred to in the resolution entered in the minute book: and although the signature of the chairman was affixed to the minute book for the purpose of verifying the accuracy of the entry therein contained, pursuant to the Companies Act, 1862, s. 67, it nevertheless operated as an admission of the contract contained in the draft agreement and the paper, and was sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Jones v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 219; 2 Q. B. D. 314; 36 L. T. 347; 25 W. R. 501.

—— Appointment to Clerkship of House of Peers.]—Action for specific performance of a parol promise by defendant to procure plaintiff to be made deputy to defendant's son, as clerk of the House of Peers, or otherwise to provide for him, in consideration of plaintiff's insisting upon and soliciting in procuring a reversionary grant of that place for defendant's son, which defendant now enjoyed. Defendant pleaded the Statute of Frauds, because not in writing, and not to be performed within one year; and also the Statute of Limitations, that the promise was made above six years before the bill filed. Both pleas allowed. Reynolds v. Cowper, 5 Vin. Abr. 524, pl. 47.

—— Appointment to Curacy—Payment of Stipend.]—A declaration, after reciting the existence of a society for promoting the employment of additional curates in populous places, in order to provide a fund for contributing to the maintenance of additional clergymen in those parishes within the dioceses of England and Wales most requiring such assistance, and that the society had made annual grants in pursuance of such objects, by quarterly payments to the several incumbents, for the use of the stipendiary curates of such parishes, upon a proper application made to the society by the incumbent, through the bishop of the diocese, and by him sanctioned and forwarded to the society on behalf of the curate, approved by the bishop, and by him licensed, and that the defendant was incumbent of such parish, stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff would, in case the bishop of the diocese should approve of and license him, undertake the office of stipendiary curate of the parish and perform the duties and reside there; that the defendant duly nominated the plaintiff to the bishop as stipendiary curate, for the approval and license of the bishop, and promised the plaintiff that in case the bishop should approve of and license the plaintiff, to employ the plaintiff as curate, and so long as he should so continue, under the license of the bishop and to reside in the parish, to allow and pay the plaintiff the whole income arising from the money in the hands of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, in respect of the curacy, and to take all necessary measures for payment of the annual grant from the society, by renewing the application on behalf of the plaintiff, according to the rules and regulations of the society, through the bishop of the diocese, by forwarding the same to the bishop, to be by him sanctioned and forwarded to the society, and to receive the same as long as it should be paid for the use of the plaintiff:—Held, that the agreement was within the Statute of Frauds, as not being to be performed within a year from the making thereof. Roberts v. Tucker, 3 Ex. 632.

Held, also, that the following document, signed by the defendant, was not such a memorandum or note in writing as satisfied the statute:—"I, A. B., the perpetual curate of St. B., of C., in the E. diocese of L., nominate H. R. (the plaintiff) to the curacy of St. B., and I propose to allow him, for his stipend, 70*l.* per annum, granted by the society for promoting the employment of additional curates in populous places (so long as it continues to be paid), and the whole interest of 2,600*l.* in the hands of the governors of Queen Anne's bounty, appropriated to the augmentation of the perpetual curacy of St. B." Ib.

—— Clause in Articles of Association insufficient.]—A solicitor sued a joint stock company for breach of contract, alleging in his declaration that it was agreed between him and them that he should be employed by the company as and appointed by the company to the office of solicitor of and for the company, upon the terms that the company would, so long as he should continue to act as and hold the office of solicitor to the company, employ him to transact all the legal business of the company for the usual fees and charges, and that he should not be removed from his office unless for misconduct. In the articles of association, which were prepared by the solicitor, there was a clause that "Mr. W. E. shall be the solicitor for the company, and shall transact all the legal business of the company for the usual fees and charges, and shall not be removed from his office except for misconduct." The articles were signed by seven persons, who became directors. The solicitor held shares in the company. For some time after the incorporation of the company he was employed by them to transact all their business, and his name alone appeared in the prospectus as the solicitor to the company. Subsequently other solicitors were also employed, and their names appeared in the prospectus together with his name, although he protested against their appointment. Finally, the company ceased to employ him, which was the breach of contract declared on:—Held, that there was no evidence to support the declaration, for the contract, if any, was one not to be performed within the space of one year, and was therefore within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and there was no memorandum in writing to satisfy the terms of the section, because the articles, made alio intuitu, formed a contract only between the members of the company inter se, and not between the company and the plaintiff. Eley v. Positive Government Security Life Assurance Co., 45 L. J., Ex. 58; 1 Ex. D. 20; 33 L. T. 743; 24 W. R. 252. Affirmed, 45 L. J., Ex. 451; 1 Ex. D. 88; 34 L. T. 190; 24 W. R. 338.

—— Restraint of Trade.]—The statement of claim alleged that in 1866 the defendant entered into the plaintiff's employment as a foreman tailor for three years, on the terms that if he should leave the plaintiff he should not engage in the service of any one carrying on, or himself carry on, the business of a tailor within five miles of D.; and that on the expiration of the three years he continued in the plaintiff's employment on the like terms (except as to the period of employment) till 1877. Breach, that in 1877 the defendant left the plaintiff, and carried on business as a tailor in D. The statement of defence alleged that the contract was not in writing as required by the Statute of Frauds:—Held, on demurrer, by Hawkins, J., that the contract amounted to an agreement not to set up the trade during the joint lives of the defendant and the plaintiff; and was, therefore, prima facia not to be performed within a year, and therefore fell within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Davey v. Shannon, 48 L. J., Ex. 459: 4 Ex. D. 81; 40 L. T. 628; 27 W. R. 599.

To Maintain Persons.]—A parol agreement to maintain a child known to be about five years old until she is able to do for herself, is an agreement not to be performed within a year within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, although determinable within the year by the happening of a collateral event. Farrington v. Donohoe, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 675; 14 W. R. 922.

An agreement to keep, maintain, and clothe A. during his life, and supply him with grass for two sheep during the same period, is not within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and does not require to be in writing. O'Sullivan v. Murphy, 14 W. R. 407—Ex. Ch.

A contract for the maintenance of a child at the defendant's request, to enure "so long as the defendant shall think proper," is a contract upon a contingency, the performance of which is not necessarily to take place beyond the space of a year, and, therefore, not within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Souch v. Strawbridge, 2 C. B. 808; 15 L. J., C. P. 170; 10 Jur. 357.

A husband and wife having taken out cross-summonses against each other for assaults, entered into an oral agreement with each other to withdraw the summonses and to live apart, the husband agreeing to allow the wife a weekly sum for maintenance, and the wife agreeing to maintain herself and her children and to indemnify the husband against any debts contracted by her. An action having been brought in the county court by the wife against the husband for six weeks' arrears of maintenance under the agreement:—Held, that the agreement was not an agreement "not to be performed within one year" within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and, therefore, need not be in writing. Davey v. Shannon, (4 Ex. D. 81) not followed. McGregor v. McGregor, 57 L. J., Q. B. 591; 21 Q. B. D. 424; 37 W. R. 45; 52 J. P. 772—C. A. Affirming 58 L. T. 227.

And see Knowlman v. Bluett, infra, col. 72.

Novation.]—C. & Co., manufacturers of fuel, entered into a contract for three years, determinable within the first year, and if continued longer, at six months' notice, with P. & Co. for the supply of small coal, not less than 100 tons a day, at 3*s.* 6*d.* a ton, to be delivered at the tip of the colliery, into waggons to be provided by C. & Co.; payment to be made monthly by bills. The coal was delivered in pursuance of the contract, when a company was formed to carry on the business which had been carried on by C. & Co. After that time the coal was supplied by P. & Co. to the company, on the terms of the contract, and the bills for payment were drawn upon and accepted by the company. The contract stipulated that it might be determined on six months' notice. Afterwards the company gave notice to determine the contract at the expiration of six months. P. & Co. continued to deliver 100 tons of coal a day at the tip of the colliery; but the company not providing waggons for its removal, it was stacked by P. & Co. in an adjacent field, and notice given to the company. The company having become bankrupt, P. & Co. claimed to prove against them for the amount of the coal so stacked:—Held, that the proof must be disallowed, as the contract between P. & Co. and the company, being one that could not be performed within a year, ought to have been in writing, and as it was not, it was void. Pentreguinea Fuel Co., In re, Acraman, Ex parte, 4 De G. F. & J. 541; 31 L. J., Ch. 741; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 706; 7 L. T. 84; 10 W. R. 656.

Contractor—Share in Profits of Undertaking.]—An agreement entered into by a contractor to share in the profits of an undertaking for making a canal, although the contract is not capable of being completed within a year, is not such an agreement as by the Statute of Frauds is required to be in writing, but may be proved by parol evidence. M'Kay v. Rutherford, 6 Moore, P. C. 414; 13 Jur. 21.

Sale of Practice.]—The following memorandum was made between the plaintiff and the defendant and signed with their respective initials: "Dict. of Practice. 80*l.* per annum for five years, commencing Michaelmas, 1828; 60*l.* per annum for the rest of Mr. Lee's life, if he survives the five years, payable in either case quarterly, the first payment, Michaelmas, 1828; Mr. Lee to separate the practices, K. B. and C. P.:"—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to explain the document; but that, inasmuch as it appeared to be a memorandum of a contract that was not to be performed within a year, and no consideration was stated on the face of it, it came within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and was therefore not capable of being enforced by action. Sweet v. Lee, 3 Man. & G. 452; 4 Scott (N.R.) 77; 5 Jur. 1134.

Agreement to Lend Money—Calls.]—By an act of parliament trustees were created for building a bridge, and it provided that persons who should agree to lend money towards carrying the act into execution should pay the same to the treasurer of the trustees as they should direct. In an action against a party, who had agreed to lend 25*l.*, for non-payment of calls:—Held, that an agreement to lend the 25*l.* might be inferred from a paper signed by him, which referred to an engagement to subscribe a sum therein set against his name, coupled with proof of payment by him of an earlier call corresponding to that on the 25*l.*, and of his taking a receipt for a call on a loan of that sum; and that such agreement was not within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, though a prospectus had previously issued stating that the whole sum would not be, nor was it, called for within a year. Miles v. Bough, 3 Railw. Cas. 668; 3 G. & D. 119; 3 Q. B. 845; 12 L. J., Q. B. 74: 8 Jur. 81.

Agreement to Abandon Proceedings—Defence to Action.]—An agreement to abandon threatened proceedings which might otherwise be brought at any time within six years, is, if followed in fact by an abstention from proceedings, a contract which is performed by one of the parties within one year, and consequently is not such a contract as is required by sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds to be in writing. That section does not require that an agreement which is set up as a defence to an action should be in writing. Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 1035; 32 Ch. D. 266; 53 L. T. 219; 34 W. R. 669.

Agreement not in Writing—Evidence on quantum meruit.]—Plaintiff by the first count of his declaration alleged that by an agreement between himself and defendant, in consideration that plaintiff would serve defendant as his clerk for three years, defendant agreed to pay him 60*l.* and averred performance of all conditions, and assigned as breach the non-payment by defendant of the 60*l.* The second count was for wages payable by defendant to plaintiff for work done by plaintiff as defendant's clerk:—Held, that although the agreement not being one to be performed within a year, came within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and so, not being in writing could not be sued upon under the first count, yet it was evidence on quantum meruit of the value of plaintiff's services and might be referred to and taken into consideration by the jury as the rule or measure of damages under the second count, and as showing the estimate which defendant himself had put upon plaintiff's services. Searisbrick v. Parkinson, 20 L. T. 175; 17 W. R. 467.

i. Contract Executed or Partly Performed.

Contract not Performable within a Year.]—The services of a clerk had been continued for some years. In an action for dismissing him before the end of a current year:—Held, that the agreement need not be in writing. Beeston v. Collyer, 4 Bing. 309; 2 Car. & P. 607; 12 Moore, 552; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 180; 29 R. R. 576.

—— Sale of Patent.]—The plaintiff assigned letters patent to H. & N., who covenanted to pay him a sum by instalments extending over several years, provided that if, at the expiration of twelve months from the date of the deed, they should not approve of the patent, and should give notice of their disapprobation and of their intention to sell the patent, then the payment of the first instalment should be suspended; and if, having given such notice, they should, within six months, sell the patent, the covenant should cease. The deed was executed by N., but there was no signature of H., but only a seal for him in the usual way. H. & N. attempted to work the patent, but, being dissatisfied with it, sent the plaintiff a notice, signed by both, referring to the deed, and in the terms of the proviso:—Held, that the contract having been performed on one side within a year, the case was not within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, inasmuch as that enactment applies only to contracts not to be performed on either side within the year. Cherry v. Heming, 4 Ex. 631; 19 L. J., Ex. 64.

—— Contract to Support.]—The father of seven illegitimate children agreed with their mother verbally to pay her 300*l.* per annum, by equal quarterly instalments, for so long as she should maintain and educate them. At the time of making the promise the eldest child was about fourteen years old. For several years the mother maintained and educated the children, and the father paid the agreed sums. At Michaelmas, 1870, he discontinued his payments. The mother still continued to maintain and educate the children, and in May, 1873, brought an action for two and a-half years' arrears:—Held, that, the consideration being executed, she was entitled to recover as for "money paid at the father's request," at the rate fixed by the verbal agreement, even assuming that the agreement was one "not to be performed within a year." Knowlman v. Bluett, 43 L. J., Ex. 151; L. R. 9 Ex. 307; 32 L. T. 262; 22 W. R. 758—Ex. Ch.

Interest in Land.]—The equitable doctrine of part performance has not been confined to contracts for an acquisition of an interest in land. Probably it applies to all cases in which the court would entertain a suit for specific performance if the contract had been in writing. A verbal agreement for an easement may be enforced where there has been part performance, whether it is or is not within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. And semble it is within the section. Britain v. Rossiter (11 Q. B. D. 123) discussed. McManus v. Cooke, 56 L. J., Ch. 662; 35 Ch. D. 681; 56 L. T. 900; 35 W. R. 754; 51 J. P. 708.

The doctrine as to part performance, whereby a contract not enforceable by an action at law, owing to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, was made enforceable in equity, was confined to suits as to the sale of interests in land, and its operation has not been extended by the Judicature Act, 1873. Britain v. Rossiter, 48 L. J., Ex. 362; 11 Q. B. D. 123; 40 L. T. 240; 27 W. R. 482.

Where a contract which by reason of its relating to land, and so being within the Statute of Frauds, cannot be enforced by action, has been performed by one party, and the benefit thereof accepted by the other, the former can recover on the implied contract arising out of such performance, and it is immaterial whether the express contract has or has not been rescinded. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 434; 16 W. R. 133.

The general principle as to the circumstances under which a part performance of a parol contract relating to land will be regarded as sufficient to take it out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds is accurately stated in the judgment in Alderson v. Maddison (7 Q. B. D. at p. 178):—Held, also, by Baggallay, L.J., that the illustration which is there given of such general principle that "payment of part or even of the whole of the purchase-money is not sufficient to exclude the operation of the statute" is rightly qualified by the following words, which are there stated, "unless it is shown that the payment was made in respect of the particular land, and the particular interest in the land, which is the subject of the parol agreement," those qualifying words being used to cover such a case as Nunn v. Fabian (L. R. 1 Ch. 35). Humphreys v. Green

52 L. J., Q. B. 140 ; 10 Q. B. D. 148 ; 48 L. T. 60 : 47 J P. 244—C. A.

Semble, per Brett, L.J., that Nunn v. Fabian (L. R. 1 Ch. 35) is not an authority for those qualifying words, and that mere payment of part, or even of the whole, of the purchase-money will not be sufficient under any circumstances to exclude the operation of the statute. Ib.

The plaintiff as heir-at-law of an intestate claimed the title-deeds of the intestate's farm, of which the defendant had taken possession on his death The defendant counter-claimed for a declaration that she was entitled to a life estate in the farm, and to retain the title-deeds for her life. The jury found that the defendant was induced to serve the intestate as his housekeeper without wages for many years, and to give up other prospects of establishment in life by his promise, which was a verbal one, to make a will leaving her a life estate in his farm, if and when it became his property :—Held, that neither the continuance of the defendant in the service of the intestate, nor the fact that the latter had executed a document which he intended to operate as a will in the defendant's favour, but which failed to take effect from want of proper attestation, was any evidence of a sufficient part performance of the parol agreement between the intestate and the defendant, upon which the defendant's counter-claim was based, to exclude the operation of the Statute of Frauds, and therefore that s 4 of that statute was an answer to the counter-claim Alderson v. Maddison, 50 L. J., Q. B. 466 ; 7 Q. B. D. 174 ; 45 L. T. 334 ; 29 W. R. 556—C. A. Affirmed in H. L., 52 L. J., Q. B. 737 ; 8 App. Cas. 467 ; 49 L. T. 303 ; 31 W. R. 820 ; 47 J. P. 821.

When a person has contracted for the purchase of land by an agreement, the terms of which are partly written and partly verbal, and has obtained possession upon performance of the written terms, to attempt to retain possession and refuse to perform the verbal terms amounts to a fraud. Jervis v. Berridge, 27 L. T. 436. Affirmed, 42 L. J., Ch. 518 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 351 ; 28 L. T. 481 ; 21 W. R. 395.

A. signed a contract for the purchase of land from B., and on the same day transferred the benefit of the contract to C. by a memorandum in which some of the terms of the transfer were not expressed. C. entered into possession under the memorandum, but refused to perform the terms which were not expressed therein. A. filed a bill for cancellation of the memorandum, alleging that C.'s conduct amounted to fraud ; and C. on demurrer contended that he was not guilty of fraud, inasmuch as under the Statute of Frauds the unwritten terms of the transfer were not binding upon him :—Held, that C.'s contention could not be sustained. Ib.

Per Lord Selborne :—The observation stated in Jervis v. Berridge, that "the Statute of Frauds is a weapon of defence, not offence, and does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intention of the parties," affirmed. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 48 L. J., Ch. 846 ; 8 App. Cas. 311 ; 41 L. T. 1 ; 27 W. R. 585.

Whether a deposit of title-deeds, in pursuance of a contract to charge real estate, is a sufficient part performance to take a case out of the Statute of Frauds, quære. Whitmore v. Farley, 45 L. T. 99 ; 29 W. R. 825 ; 14 Cox, C. C. 617—C. A.

The bankrupt, being indebted to a banking company, made an oral promise to the directors to give them, when required, security for the debt. He was then entitled to a reversionary interest in one-fifth of a farm, to come into possession on the death of his mother, who was tenant for life, and who held the title-deeds. The mother afterwards died, and the title-deeds came into the possession of the respondent, who was manager of the bank, and who was also entitled to one-fifth of the property. The respondent told the bankrupt that he had possession of the deeds, and that he held his (the bankrupt's) one fifth for the bank. The bankrupt expressed his assent :—Held, that the company had not a valid equitable mortgage of the bankrupt's share in the farm, for there was no memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and the conversation which took place between the bankrupt and the respondent as to the custody of the deeds, not being followed by any act which altered the legal position of the parties, was not such a part performance of the oral promise to give security as would exclude the operation of the statute. Broderick, Ex parte, Beetham, In re, 56 L. J., Q. B. 635 ; 18 Q. B. D. 766 ; 35 W. R. 613—C. A.

In consideration of B. and C. agreeing to execute a conveyance of property, part of their father's estate, to a purchaser, A. verbally promised to leave them as much as they would get under their father's will :—Held, that the case did not come within s 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and that A.'s estate was bound to make good the promise. Ridley v Ridley, 34 Beav. 478 : 34 L. J., Ch. 462 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 475 ; 12 L. T. 481 ; 13 W. R. 763. See also Fenton v. Emblers, 3 Burr. 1278 ; 1 W. Bl. 353.

Of Verbal Agreement for Lease.]—A landlord having verbally agreed with his tenant to grant him a new lease at an increased rent, the tenant laid out money on the premises, and paid one quarter's rent at the increased rate :—Held, that the case was taken out of the statute. Nunn v. Fabian, 35 L. J., Ch. 140 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 35 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 868 ; 13 L. T. 343.

F. was tenant to C., with a promise of a lease for twenty-one years, from September, 1851, to September, 1872, at the rent of 84*l.* 16*s.* Afterwards C. entered F.'s name in his rent-book as tenant of 128 acres at 16*s.* an acre, at the yearly rent of 102*l.* 8*s.*, less 4*l.* for county cess—98*l.* 8*s.* "Tenure thirty-one years from September, 1872, at rent of 16*s.* per acre, allowed 4*l.* for county cess—98*l.* 8*s.*" To which was added the following remark :—"F.'s tenure ceased September, 1872. Mr. C. agreed to give a lease of thirty-one years at 16*s.* per acre, and to take the old rent for one year, ending September, 1873, in consequence of failure of potato-crop." F. continued in possession, and paid the increased rent from September, 1873. The entry in the rent-book was in C.'s handwriting. In an action after C.'s death by his son, as the owner of C.'s estate, against F. to enforce specific performance of an agreement to take a lease for thirty-one years :—Held, that the continuance in possession of F., and payment of the increased rent, being upon the evidence referable solely to the agreement of 1872, were acts of part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds Nunn v. Fabian (L. R. 1 Ch. 35) followed. Conner v. Fitzgerald, 11 L. R., Ir. 106.

Where a new letting at an altered rent is made to a tenant in possession, under a pre-existing tenancy, the payment by the tenant, and the acceptance by the landlord, of the altered rent, if shown to have been paid and accepted on foot of the new tenancy, is a sufficient part performance to enable either party to sustain an action for specific performance of the contract for such new tenancy. Ib.

The plaintiff, who was proposing to enter into business as a milliner, was induced by C. to abandon the project, C. promising her verbally that she should occupy a leasehold house of C.'s during her (the plaintiff's) life, the plaintiff to pay the ground rent, rates and taxes, and maintain herself by letting lodgings. The plaintiff thereupon abandoned the idea of the millinery business, and entered into possession of C.'s house, and continued there for several years until C.'s death, paying the ground rent, rates and taxes. C. bequeathed the house to P., who brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff, who thereupon filed a bill to restrain the action:—Held, that there had been a part performance of the verbal contract between the plaintiff and C. sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Coles v. Pilkington, 44 L. J., Ch. 381; L. R. 19 Eq 174; 31 L. T. 423; 23 W. R. 41.

The payment of an increased rent, draining and planting, done by the tenant in pursuance of a concluded parol agreement with his landlord for a lease, are a sufficient part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Howe v. Hall, Ir R. 4 Eq. 242.

But where the rent of neighbouring tenants had been increased at the same time as plaintiff's, the sum expended on improvements was small, and such as a tenant from year to year might have prudently expended, and the tenant had on different occasions given different versions of the agreement, the court, not being satisfied on the evidence that a concluded agreement had been proved, refused specific performance after the landlord's death. Ib.

M., a tenant of L., was offered a lease of certain lands, and a written agreement was produced for a term of thirty-one years, at 38*l.* rent, and tendered to her for signature. M. objected to 38*l.* as a mistake for 33*l.* Whereupon L.'s agent said that M. should have the farm for 33*l.*, and wrote a memorandum upon the agreement that M. said her rent was 33*l.* M. then signed the agreement. She paid the 33*l.* and continued in possession for six years, when L. commenced an action to enforce specific performance of the agreement at the rent of 33*l.*:—Held, that there was a complete agreement, partly written and partly verbal, for a lease at the rent of 33*l.*; and that the circumstance of M. being permitted to continue in possession after the expiration of her lease, and the payment of rent by her at the agreed amount, constituted part performance sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and to entitle L. to a decree for specific performance. Lanyon v. Martin, 13 L. R. Ir. 297.

The plaintiff orally agreed to let a piece of waste ground to the defendant for three successive bank holidays; the defendant was to have exclusive possession of the ground on those days, and to pay 45*l.* for the use of the ground, paying an instalment of 15*l.* for each of the three days. The defendant entered and occupied the land on the first of the three days, and after entry paid the first instalment of 15*l.*; he refused to occupy the ground on the other two days, or to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the rent. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the two remaining instalments, the defendant contended that the claim was barred by virtue of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that there having been an entry for the purpose of occupation under an agreement for a single letting (although the period of the agreed letting was not continuous) at a single rent, and a payment of rent on account of the entry, the plaintiff's right to recover the balance was not affected by the fact that the agreement was not in writing, and the Statute of Frauds afforded no defence to the claim. Smallwood v. Sheppards, 64 L. J., Q. B. 727; [1895] 2 Q. B. 627; 73 L. T. 219; 44 W. R. 44.

Possession by a lessee continued after, though taken previously to, a parol agreement for a lease exceeding three years, is a sufficient act of part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, provided the continuance in possession is unequivocally referable to the agreement. Hodson v. Heuland, 65 L. J., Ch. 754; [1896] 2 Ch. 428; 74 L. T. 811; 44 W. R. 684.

The making of alterations in premises by the intended landlord under a verbal agreement to let:—Held, not to be a part performance, taking the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Whittick v. Mozley, 1 Cab. & E. 86.

Agreement in Consideration of Marriage.]—A father, shortly before the marriage of his daughter, told her intended husband that he meant to give certain leasehold property to the couple on their marriage. After the marriage he gave up possession of the property to the husband, to whom he directed the tenants to pay the rents, and handed to the husband the title-deeds. The husband expended money upon the property:—Held, sufficient part-performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Surcome v. Pinniger, 3 De G. M. & G. 571; 22 L. J., Ch. 419; 17 Jur. 196.

A father verbally promised, in consideration of his daughter's marriage, to give her a house as a wedding present, and immediately after the marriage he put the daughter and her husband into possession. The father was then the owner of the house, which was leasehold and was subject to a charge in favour of a building society, payable by instalments. The father paid the instalments which fell due during his lifetime, and at his death there remained a balance of 110*l.*, which fell due shortly afterwards:—Held, that the verbal promise to give the house having been established, the possession took the case out of the Statute of Frauds; that the contract was to give the house free from incumbrances; and that the 110*l.* was payable out of the father's estate. Ungley v. Ungley, 46 L. J., Ch. 854; 5 Ch. D. 887; 37 L. T. 52; 25 W. R. 733—C. A.

The plaintiff on his son's marriage gave him the lease of a certain house under a parol agreement; the son lived therein for eighteen months, and paid the rent to the landlord:—Held, sufficient part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance was granted free from an incumbrance created by the plaintiff subsequently to the marriage. Ungley v. Ungley, supra, followed. Sharman v. Sharman, 4 R. 124; 67 L. T. 834—C. A.

Before the marriage of A. and B. B.'s father verbally promised to pay his daughter 300*l.* a year, and in consequence of that promise and representation, as was alleged, A. and B. married,

Upon the father's refusal to pay this sum :—Held, that as the promise was not in writing it could not be enforced, and that the marriage was not a part performance of such a parol agreement. Johnstone v. Mappin, 60 L. J., Ch. 241 ; 64 L. T. 48.

A parol agreement before marriage that money of the intended wife at the bank shall be hers for her separate use, followed by the wife's dealing with it with the husband's knowledge, and the husband not interfering :—Held, to amount to a gift to the wife for her separate use. Ruth, Ex parte, Whitehead, In re, 54 L. J., Q. B. 240 ; 14 Q. B. D. 419 ; 52 L. T. 597 ; 33 W. R. 471 ; 49 J. P. 450—C. A.

Subsequent marriage is not part performance of a parol contract in consideration of marriage. Acts of part performance by the party sought to be charged will not prevent the operation of the statute. Caton v. Caton, 35 L. J., Ch. 292 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 137 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 171. Affirmed on appeal, 36 L. J., Ch. 886 ; L. R. 2 H. L. 127 ; 16 W. R. 1.

Guarantee.]—A plaintiff having distrained for rent in arrear, goods which the tenant was at the time about to sell, agreed with the defendants to deliver up the goods, and permit them to be sold by one of the defendants for the tenant, upon the defendants joint undertaking to pay to the plaintiff all such rent as should appear due to him from the tenant ; and he thereupon delivered up the distress :—Held, that this agreement was not within the Statute of Frauds. Edwards v. Kelly, 6 M. & S. 204 ; 18 R. R. 349.

Where an agent, who received instalments of annuities for his principal, paid over instalments he had not received, and charged commission on them :—Held, that the agreement, to be responsible to his principal for the annuities need not be in writing, as the contract was executed when he paid over the money he had received. Shaw v. Woodcock, 7 B. & C. 73 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 294 ; 31 R. R. 158.

Sale and Delivery.] — A contract for the making and sale of bricks above 20*l.*, to be delivered within a year from the time when according to the defendant's evidence, the contract was completed, by a letter of his in answer to a parol proposal, is valid, there having been a part-acceptance and payment on account. Catling v. Perry, 2 F. & F. 140.

After a parol agreement for the sale of goods deliverable by successive consignments at a certain price, a memorandum in writing was drawn up omitting the price ; several consignments were accepted and paid for :—Held, in an action for non-delivery of the remainder, that there had been part performance, and that parol evidence was admissible to prove the price. Jeffcot v. North British Oil Co., Ir. R. 8 C. L. 17.

j. Other Matters.

Informal Deed.]—An instrument in terms intending to be a conveyance of lands, but which, not being by deed, cannot operate as such, is an agreement. Rex v. Ridgwell, 6 B. & C. 665 ; 9 D. & R. 678.

One Term within.]—When a special oral contract is entered into, if the part to be performed by the defendant involves several terms, one of which falls within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, the contract cannot be enforced by the plaintiff if the defendant relies on the statute. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 434 ; 16 W. R. 133.

Creation of Trust.]—The Statute of Frauds is not available as a defence to a suit to establish a trust where it would be fraud to deny the trust. Haigh v. Kaye, 41 L. J., Ch. 567 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 469 ; 25 L. T. 675 ; 20 W. R. 597. S. P., Marlborough (Duke), In re, Davis v. Whitehead, 63 L. J., Ch. 471 ; [1894] 2 Ch. 133 ; 70 L. T. 314 ; 42 W. R. 456. Lincoln v. Wright, 28 L. J., Ch. 705 ; 7 W. R. 350.

Licences.]—A contract for the sale of an interest in land, without a note in writing, may operate as a licence, so as to excuse the entry of a purchaser on the land ; but it cannot be made available in any way as a contract. Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 248 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 95 ; 1 Jur. 85.

A. agreed with B. that, for a valuable consideration, B. might dig and carry away cinders from a cinder-tip in land alleged to be the property of A. B. having been denied access to the cinders :—Held, that the fact of the instrument not being under seal was no answer to an action for the breach of the agreement. Smart v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 717 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 154 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 678 ; 10 L. T. 271 ; 12 W. R. 430.

A. verbally agreed with B. to allow him to open a quarry, and erect a limekiln, and work the same, on land of which A. was tenant, provided that B. would pay for any damage which might be done to the land by erecting and working the limekiln and quarry. An action being brought to recover such damages :—Held, that this was an agreement to pay for surface damage only, and not for an interest in land ; and, therefore, that it was not rendered void by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Griffiths v. Jenkins, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 207 ; 9 L. T. 732 ; 12 W. R. 533.

Liability of Advertiser.]—The liability of a party who advertises generally a reward for information to any one not named in the advertisement, who shall first give the information asked for, is a liability at common law, and not a contract within the Statute of Frauds. Williams v. Byrnes, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 154 ; 2 N. R. 47 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 363 ; 8 L. T. 69 ; 11 W. R. 487.

Agreement set up as Defence.]—Sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds does not require that an agreement which is set up as a defence to an action should be in writing. Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 1035 ; 32 Ch. D. 266 ; 53 L. T. 219 ; 34 W. R. 669.

B. PARTIES TO CONTRACTS.

1. CAPACITY OF.

a. Intoxication.

Contract, when Void, or Voidable.]—An agreement by a person in a state of complete intoxication is void. Pitt v. Smith, 3 Camp. 33; 13 R. R. 741.

A publican cannot recover for beer furnished to third persons, by the order of an individual who has previously become intoxicated by drinking in his house. Brandon v. Ord, 3 Car. & P. 440.

To an action by indorsee against indorser of a bill, a plea, that when he indorsed the bill he was so intoxicated, and thereby so entirely deprived of sense, understanding and the use of his reason, as to be unable to comprehend the meaning, nature or effect of the endorsement, or to contract thereby, of which the plaintiff at the time of the indorsement had notice, is a good answer. Gore v. Gibson, 13 M. & W. 623; 14 L. J., Ex. 151; 9 Jur. 140.

In an action on an alleged contract to purchase land to recover loss and expenses on a resale:—Held, that if the purchaser was, at the time he signed the contract, so drunk as not to know the nature of the acts he was doing, the contract was void, whether or not the seller knew his condition at the time, though his knowledge of it may be material in regard to damages. Hawkins v. Bone, 4 F. & F. 311.

Principles upon which the court acts in suits to set aside deeds on the ground of the intoxication of the grantor. Nagle v. Baylor, 3 Dr. & War. 60.

The contract of a man, too drunk to know what he is about, is voidable only and not void, and therefore capable of ratification by him when he becomes sober. Matthews v. Baxter, 42 L. J., Ex. 73; L. R. 8 Ex. 132; 28 L. T. 169; 21 W. R. 389.

Contract, when enforced.] — Although the court will not compel performance of a contract obtained from a person in a state of intoxication; yet where, after a contract fairly entered into with a man addicted to drinking to sell to the plaintiff leasehold premises for 735*l.*, another person, with notice of this contract, within a few days prevailed on the vendor to sell and execute an assignment thereof to him for 760*l.*, the court decreed specific performance of the first contract. Shaw v. Thackray, 1 Sm. & G. 537; 17 Jur. 1045.

Where, in a suit for specific performance of an agreement, the defence set up was, incapacity at the time of executing it, on the ground of intoxication:—Held, that it could not assist in getting rid of the agreement on the mere ground of intoxication, no fraud being alleged. Ib.

Family compromise favoured, if reasonable, and upon a doubtful right, even in the strongest case, as where one party was drunk at the time. Stockley v. Stockley, 1 Ves. & B. 30; 18 Ves. 30. See also Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 2.

The circumstances that the vendor had not the assistance of a professional adviser, and that the contract was made while he was drinking with the purchaser's solicitor, the evidence not going to show that he was intoxicated:—Held, not sufficient ground for refusing specific performance, there having been no design on the purchaser's part to keep the vendor from employing a solicitor, and the price being fair. Lightfoot v. Heron, 3 Y. & Coll. 586.

Agreement, if reasonable, and to settle family disputes, and no unfair advantage, not to be set aside because the party was drunk, or paternal authority exercised. Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. 19. See also 18 Ves. 30.

Fraud, Effect of.]—So a lease obtained by fraud and imposition from a person who was intoxicated is void. Butler v. Mulinhall, 1 Bligh, 137.

General rule that a court of equity will not assist a person who has obtained, or wishes to get rid of, an agreement, or deed, on the mere ground of intoxication. Exceptions, where any contrivance was used, or any unfair advantage made of his situation, or that extreme state of intoxication depriving a man of his reason, which at law would invalidate a deed. Cook v. Clayworth, 18 Ves. 12.

A court of equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement more favourable to the plaintiff than to the defendant, involving hardship upon the defendant, and damage to his property, if he entered into it without advice or assistance, and there is reasonable ground for doubting whether he entered into it with a knowledge and understanding of its nature and its consequences. Vivers v. Tuck, 1 Moo. P. C. (N.S.) 516; 9 L. T. 554.

A suit for specific performance of a partnership agreement, prepared and written by the plaintiff, dismissed, and the plaintiff left to his remedy (if any) at law for damages for non-performance; the defendant, an illiterate man, being at the time of the execution of the agreement considerably in liquor, without professional advice, and without knowledge of its nature and consequences, which were highly favourable to the plaintiff, and the agreement with respect to the property affected by it being moreover vague and obscure. Ib.

Lease set aside with costs; as obtained by the contrived and habitual intoxication of the lessor, immediately on his coming of age, at a very inadequate rent; and acts of confirmation held not sufficient. Say v. Barwick, 1 Ves. & B. 195.

"Although," says Coke, "he who is drunk is for the time non compos mentis, yet his drunkenness does not extenuate his act or offence, nor turn to his avail: but it is a great offence in itself, and therefore aggravates his offence, and doth not derogate from the act which he did during that time, and that as well in cases touching his life, his lands, his goods, or any other thing that concerns him." Anon., 4 Co. 125. S. P., Johnson v. Medlicott, cited in Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. W. 129, n.

Secus, if it be through the contrivance of the party obtaining the deed or advantage to be derived or suffering from the act complained of. Semble, Ib.

Surprise and Mistake.]—The plaintiff and the defendant, farmers occupying their own small farms, which adjoined each other, met at ten o'clock at night at a public-house, where the plaintiff drew out an agreement between the defendant and himself for the sale and purchase of forty-five acres of land for 2,000*l.* The agreement, which was almost illegibly written, was executed by both parties and attested by two witnesses, and a cheque for 200*l.* deposit was drawn by the plaintiff on a plain piece of paper. This was the next day exchanged for one drawn on the banker's ordinary form. No abstract was asked for for nearly four months, and three months after that the defendant asked for a copy of the contract, and he then objected that he had only thirty-five acres to sell, and was so drunk when he entered into the agreement that he did not know what he was doing, and he offered to sell for the 2,000*l.*, or give up the agreement and return the deposit. This was refused, and an abatement claimed in respect of the ten acres short, and a bill filed for specific performance:—Held, that on the evidence the defendant was incapable of contracting at the time, and the circumstances were such as to bring the case within the rule of surprise and mistake, and bill dismissed with costs. Cox v. Smith, 19 L. T. 517.

Where Contract Unreasonable.]—A contract, unreasonable in itself, entered into by an habitual drunkard when in a state of excitement, from excessive drinking, almost amounting to madness, with a person who at the time held him in a complete subjection, will be set aside in equity. It is not necessary in such a case to establish actual madness. Wiltshire v. Marshall, 14 L. T. 396; 14 W. R. 602.

b. Weak Intellect.

Condition—Direction to the Jury.]—On a question whether a deed was void in law, on the ground of unsoundness of mind in the person by whom it was executed, the judge directed the jury that the question for them to try was, whether J. S. was a person of sound mind or not; and that to constitute such an unsoundness of mind as should avoid a deed at law, the person executing such a deed must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life; that it was not necessary that he should be without any glimmering of reason, and that as one test of such incapacity, the jury was at liberty to consider whether he was capable of understanding what he did by executing the deed in question, when its general purport was fully explained to him. To this direction a bill of exceptions was taken, upon the ground that the judge refused to tell the jury that, in order to avoid the deed at law, the unsoundness of mind must amount to that which constitutes idiotcy, according to the strict legal definition of an idiot:—Held, that this direction was right, and that the case could not be argued or decided upon an objection that the direction was too general and vague, because such objection was not taken at the trial, and did not form part of the bill of exceptions. Ball v. Manner, 3 Bligh (N.S.) 1; 1 Dow & Cl. 880.

Bill Drawn by Person of Weak Intellect.]—If a person perfectly imbecile in mind is imposed upon, and induced to sign a promissory note, which is drawn in an unusual form, such note is bad even in the hands of an indorsee. Sentance v. Poole, 3 Car. & P. 1.

Contract for Necessaries.]—A lunatic may contract for necessaries suitable to his degree, and an action will lie against him, notwithstanding an inquisition of lunacy, for the amount. Bagster or Barter v. Portsmouth (Earl), 7 D. & R. 614; 5 B. & C. 170; 2 Car. & P. 178.

If it appears that he has been imposed upon, it might be otherwise. Ib.

Therefore, where a person of rank ordered carriages suitable to his condition, and the coachmaker supplied them bonâ fide and without fraud, and they were actually used by the party:—Held, that an action would lie upon the contract, notwithstanding an inquisition of lunacy finding the party to be of unsound mind at the time the carriages were ordered. Ib.

Old Law as to Pleading.]—It was formerly held that no person could, in defending an action, be allowed to stultify himself; and therefore a defendant could not, in action for work and labour, set up his own insanity as a defence, unless he had been imposed upon by the plaintiff in consequence of his mental imbecility. Brown v. Jodrell, 3 Car. & P. 30; M. & M. 105. S. P., Levy v. Baker, M. & M. 106, n.

See further, LUNATIC.

c. Fraudulent Advantage.

Medical Adviser.]—At the trial of an action by the executors of G. to recover the amount of a gift of money made by G. to her medical man, it was admitted that, when the gift was made, the relation of patient and medical man existed between G. and the defendant, and that G. had no independent advice of any kind. In answer to questions left to them by the judge, the jury found that there had been no undue influence in fact, or fraud, on the part of the defendant; and that, after the relation of patient and medical man had come to an end between G. and the defendant, and after any effect produced by it had been removed, she intentionally adhered to what she had done. The judge was not asked to leave, and did not leave, to the jury the question whether G., when she made the gift, or subsequently, knew that it was revocable, and he entered judgment for the defendant upon the findings:—Held, that as the effect of the findings was that G., after the relation and influence had ceased, deliberately determined she would not revoke the gift, whether or not it was revocable, the judgment was rightly entered. Mitchell v. Homfray, 50 L. J., Q. B. 460; 8 Q. B. D. 587; 45 L. T. 694; 29 W. R. 558—C. A.

A patient executed instruments, whereby he secured to his surgeon an annuity of 100*l.* during his life, in consideration that he would live with him, and give him the benefit of his professional assistance during his life. Four days before the execution of these instruments, the surgeon called in an eminent physician to visit the patient, who stated to the surgeon his opinion that the patient could not recover, nor live long; and, about the same time, he expressed to a witness in the cause that the patient could not live more than a month or six weeks. These instruments could not be maintained, even if the patient was of sound mind and capable of business. Popham v. Brooke, 5 Russ. 8. S. P., Gibson v. Russell, 2 Y. & C. (N.C.) 104.

An agreement obtained by a surgeon from a deceased patient was set aside, upon the ground that the court was satisfied that the patient never did agree to or intend to direct what, in the alleged agreement, he was represented as agreeing to and directing; and that his signature, if genuine, must have been obtained by fraud, or under such circumstances as rendered it the duty of a court of equity to protect the patient and his estate from being prejudiced by it. This relief stands upon a general principle, applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. Dent v. Bennett, 4 Mylne & C. 269.

A court of equity will relieve against an agreement taken by a medical adviser from an aged patient, by which the former, in consideration of his past and future services, was to be paid 25,000*l.* after the death of the latter. The court was also of opinion that the agreement was void at law, as it was an inducement to the medical adviser to accelerate his patient's death. Dent v. Bennet, 7 Sim. 539; 3 Jur. 99.

Religious Influence.]—The grant of an annuity fraudulently obtained by a person having a spiritual ascendency over a woman who was under a state of religious delusion, was set aside upon principles of public policy. Norton v. Relly, 2 Eden, 286.

A voluntary settlement by a widow upon a clergyman and his family was set aside, as being obtained by undue spiritual influence, and abuse of confidence in the situation of agent undertaking the management of the affairs of a person of weak mind. Huguein v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273.

Gift by a person of weak intellect of her whole fortune to a person who had acquired great influence over her mind, by making her and others believe that he sustained a supernatural character, held invalid. Nottidge v. Prince, 2 Giff. 246; 29 L. J., Ch. 857; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1066; 8 W. R. 742.

No person who stands in a relation of special confidence to another, so as to acquire habitual influence over his mind, can accept any gift or benefit from the person who is under the dominion of that influence, unless a sufficient protection has been imposed against the exercise of such influence. Ib.

Extent of Principle.]—It is incumbent upon persons who receive benefits from others towards whom they stand in a confidential relation, to show that they had competent and independent advice, and this general principle is not affected by the age or capacity of the persons conferring the benefits, or the nature of the benefits conferred. But this principle does not extend to interfere with mere trifling gifts, without proof, not only of influence derived from the confidential relation, but of mala fides, or of undue or unfair exercise of the influence. (Commented on in Mitchell v. Homfray, supra.) Rhodes v. Bate, 35 L. J., Ch. 267; L. R. 1 Ch. 252; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 178; 13 L. T. 778; 14 W. R. 292.

A., a widow, aged seventy-five, within nine days after first seeing B., who claimed to be a spiritual medium, was induced, from her belief that she was fulfilling the wishes of her deceased husband, conveyed to her through the medium of B., to adopt him as her son, and transfer 24,000*l.* to him; to make her will in his favour; afterwards to give him a further sum of 6,000*l.*; and also to settle upon him, subject to her life interest, the reversion of 30,000*l.* (these gifts being made without consideration, and without power of revocation):—Held, that the relation proved to have existed between them implied the exercise of dominion and influence by B. over A.'s mind; and consequently, that as B. had failed to prove that these voluntary gifts were the pure, voluntary, well-understood acts of A.'s mind, they must be set aside. Lyon v. Home, 37 L. J., Ch. 674; L. R. 6 Eq. 655; 18 L. T. 451; 16 W. R. 824.

Where an aged, illiterate, and a weak-minded man, not absolutely incapable of managing his own affairs, but in such a state of mental incapacity as to make it necessary that he should have protection and advice, executed a deed of conveyance of his property for a grossly inadequate consideration, a court of equity, on a bill by the heiress and her husband, declared that the deed must be set aside as an absolute conveyance, and stand as a security only for money advanced by the purchaser, and properly expended by him on the property. Longmate v. Ledger, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 481; 2 L. T. 256; 8 W. R. 386.

A debtor induced a lady, to whom he was engaged, to become security for a debt. After the marriage, she insisted that she had been imposed upon:—Held, that the only duty of the creditor (who was aware of the relation between the parties) towards the lady was to see that she had proper professional assistance, and that any fraud or misrepresentation of the debtor in the transaction, of which the creditor had no notice, did not affect his security. Cobbett v. Brock, 20 Beav. 524.

Monks—Nuns.]—Quære, whether an assignment of property by a nun, in pursuance of a vow made on entering the convent, is valid. Fulham v. MacCarthy, 1 H. L. Cas. 703; 12 Jur. 757.

A nun is not civiliter mortua, nor incapable of holding property. Metcalfe's Will, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 122; 33 L. J., Ch. 308; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 287; 10 L. T. 78; 12 W. R. 538; 3 N. R. 657.

Deaf and Dumb.]—Deaf and dumb persons may enter into the contract of marriage, and the presumption is in favour of the validity of such a marriage, and of the capacity of the parties to contract, and the onus of proof is upon those who would impeach the marriage. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; 18 Jur. 85; 2 W. R. 612.

Where an instrument of guarantee was signed by a man who was blind and deaf, but it was shown that the contents were fully submitted to his consideration by persons around him who could communicate with him by means of his fingers; it appearing, also, that an alteration was made in the instrument in consequence of a rational and properly expressed wish of his, and the allegation that the signature had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation having totally failed, the guarantee was upheld against his estate. Vickers v. Bell, 9 L. T. 600. S. C., 10 Jur. (N.S.) 376; 3 N. R. 624; 10 L. T. 77; 12 W. R. 589—L.JJ.

2. Personal Contracts.

What are.]—Plaintiff's intestate bought a coach of the defendant, and gave him bills for the price, and agreed that he (the defendant) "do have and hold a claim upon the coach until the debt be paid":—Held, that this agreement operated only as a personal licence from the intestate to the defendant to take the coach if the bills were not paid, but was not a bar to an action of trover by the administrator. Howes v. Ball, 7 B. & C. 481; 1 M. & R. 288; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 106; 31 R. R. 256.

A., a coachmaker, entered into an agreement to furnish B. with a carriage, for the term of five years, at twenty-five guineas a year from the time of the contract. C. was a partner with A., but this was unknown to B., the business being carried on in the name of A. only. Before the expiration of the first three years, the partnership between A. and C. was dissolved, A. having assigned all his interest in the business, and in the contract in question to C.; and the business was afterwards carried on by C. alone. B. was informed by C. that the partnership was dissolved, and that C. had become the purchaser of the carriage then in B.'s service. The latter answered that he would not continue the contract with C., and that he would return the carriage to him at the end of the then current year, and he did so return it. An action having been brought by A. and C. against B. for the two payments, which, according to the term of the contract, would become due during the last two years of its continuance:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, the contract being personal, and A. having transferred his interest to C., and having become incapable of performing his part of the agreement. Robson v. Drummond, 2 B. & Ad. 303; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 187.

Specific Performance of.]—Specific performance will not be enforced of an agreement for personal services. White v. Boby, 37 L. T. 652: 26 W. R. 133—C. A.

W. agreed with L. to sing at his theatre during a certain period of time, and not to sing elsewhere without his written authority:—Held, on a bill filed to restrain her from singing for a third party, and to grant an injunction for that purpose, that the positive and negative stipulations of the agreement formed but one contract, and that the court would not interfere to prevent the violation of the negative stipulation. Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604; 21 L. J., Ch. 898; 16 Jur. 871.

An opera singer, by an agreement dated only as to the year 1870, agreed to sing at a theatre for the whole London season and nowhere else in the kingdom of Great Britain pendant l'année 1871, without the written consent of the employer. The salary did not extend beyond the season which ended on the 5th August. On motion for an injunction to restrain him from singing elsewhere after the season was over but during 1871:—Held, that the court would not under the circumstances grant an injunction on an interlocutory application. Mapleson v. Bentham, 20 W. R. 176.

An actor who enters into a contract to perform for a certain period at a particular theatre may be restrained by injunction from performing at any other theatre during the pendency of the engagement, notwithstanding that the contract contains no negative clause restricting the actor from performing elsewhere. Montague v. Flockton, 42 L. J., Ch. 677; L. R. 16 Eq. 189; 28 L. T. 580; 21 W. R. 668. See also Bettini v. Gye, and Poussard v. Spiers, infra, col. 117.

A patentee entered into an agreement with A. to purchase exclusively from him all such quantities of a particular article as should be used according to the patent processes in the manufacture of a certain product, which product the patentee agreed to sell to A. exclusively. A., on the other hand, agreed to supply the patentee with all such quantities of the first-mentioned article as should be required, and to purchase from him all the particular product. On a bill by A. for specific performance:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to compel performance by A. of the positive part of the agreement, and that it would not therefore interfere by injunction to restrain the patentee from buying from or selling to other parties than A. Hills v. Croll, 14 L. J., Ch. 444.

Effect of Death upon.]—The retainer of an attorney is determined by the death of his client. Whitehead v. Lord, 7 Ex. 691; 21 L. J., Ex. 239.

Where a contract is for personal services, the death of the person who is to render those services determines the contract for the future, but it does not rescind it ab initio, or take away any right of action already vested or accrued. Stubbs v. Holywell Ry., 36 L. J., Ex. 166; L. R. 2 Ex. 311; 15 W. R. 869.

In contracts for personal services, it is an implied condition that the death of either party shall dissolve the contract. Farrow v. Wilson, 38 L. J., C. P. 326; L. R. 4 C. P. 744; 20 L. T. 810; 18 W. R. 43.

A. was hired by P. to serve as farm bailiff, at weekly wages, with other advantages, and a residence in a farmhouse; the service to be determinable by a six months' wages. P. died:—Held, that P.'s personal representative was not bound to continue A. in her service, or pay him six months' wages. Ib.

A. agreed with B. that he would endeavour to sell a picture belonging to B., and that if he succeeded in selling it, B. should pay him 100*l.* B. died before the picture was sold. In an action against his administratrix, upon this agreement, the count alleged that in pursuance of the agreement, A. did, before and after the death of B., endeavour to sell, and after his death he did, in consequence of such endeavours, succeed in selling the picture, which sale was confirmed by the administratrix, and that she refused to pay the money:—Held, that the count disclosed no cause of action; inasmuch as the authority from B. to A. to sell the picture was revoked by his death, and his administratrix's confirmation of the sale, in the absence of an allegation that she was aware of the existence of the contract between A. and B., was no adoption of the contract by her so as to make her liable to pay the money. Campanari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 400; 3 C. L. R. 14; 24 L. J., C. P. 13; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 17; 3 W. R 59.

Privity—Shareholder and Promoter.]—A count that the defendant and others had formed a mining company upon a principle known as a société anonyme, in Spain, the capital of which was divided into 96,000 shares of 1*l.* each, out of which 12,000 were to be appropriated to the public at 12*s.* 6*d.* per share, free from all further calls; that the defendant, being one of the original promoters and a managing director of the company, in offering the 12,000 shares to the public, had guaranteed and promised to the bearers of the 12,000 shares, at 12*s.* 6*d.* per share, a minimum annual dividend of 33*l.* per cent. payable half-yearly, on each of such shares, and that the guarantee and promise should remain in force until the 12*s.* 6*d.* per share should be repaid to bearers of the 12,000 shares; and that plaintiff afterwards became and was the purchaser and bearer of 2,500 of the 12,000 shares at 12*s.* 6*d.* each, and took the same on the faith of the guarantee and promise. Breach that the defendant had not paid to the plaintiff the half-yearly dividends, nor had repaid to the plaintiff 12*s.* 6*d.* on each of the said shares—is a bad count, as it shows no promise by the defendant to the plaintiff, nor any consideration for the promise. Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476; 1 C. L. R. 868; 22 L. J., Q. B. 364; 17 Jur. 1097; 1 W. R. 383. See also Empress Engineering Co., In re, 16 Ch. D. 125; 43 L. T. 742; 29 W. R. 342—C. Authority to bind Third Party.]—A. agreed with B. and C. to pave the streets in the parish of D.; B. and C., on behalf of themselves and the rest of the parish, agreed to pay A.: the agreement was lodged in the hands of B. A. shall have his remedy against B. and C., and they must resort to the rest of the parish. Meriel v. Wymondsold, Hardr. 205.

—— Entire or Divisible Contract.]—A principal authorised a broker at Liverpool to underwrite marine policies for him "not exceeding 100*l.* by any one vessel." The broker underwrote a policy for 150*l.* At Liverpool it was notorious that there was generally a limit fixed between the principal and the broker, though this limit was not disclosed to the public:—Held, that the agent had no authority to underwrite for 150*l.*, and that the contract being indivisible, the assured could recover nothing from the principal in respect of the policy. Baines v. Ewing, 4 H. & C. 511; 35 L. J., Ex. 194; L. R. 1 Ex. 320; 14 L. T. 733; 14 W. R. 782.

—— Ratification by Principal of Acts of Agent.]—See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

3. ASSIGNEES.

Effect of an Agreement to Assign.] — An agreement to assign a contract only places the assignee in the position of the assignor, subject to, not freed from, his obligations under the contract. Shaw v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch. 49; L. R. 5 H. L. 321; 27 L. T. 281; 20 W. R. 907.

Performance by Assignee sufficient.]—The plaintiffs, a waggon company, by agreement in writing let the defendants a number of railway waggons for a term of years at an annual rent, the agreement providing that the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should during the term keep the waggons in repair. Pending the agreement an order was made for the winding-up of the plaintiff company under the supervision of the court, in pursuance of a resolution previously passed by the company, and liquidators were appointed, who joined the company in assigning the benefit of the contract to another company, upon the terms that such company should perform the stipulations by the assignors contained in the original contract. The assignees took over the repairing stations of the plaintiffs and the staff of workmen employed by them, and were always ready and willing to execute all necessary repairs to the waggons:—Held, that the defendants had no defence to an action for rent, upon the ground that the plaintiffs had incapacitated themselves from performing their contract; for, first, the voluntary liquidation of the company was immaterial, the liquidators having power under the Companies Act, 1862, ss. 95, 131, to continue the letting of the waggons; and, secondly, the repair of the waggons by the company to whom the contract was assigned was a sufficient performance by the plaintiffs of their agreement to repair. British Waggon Co. v. Lea, 49 L. J., Q. B. 321; 5 Q. B. D. 149; 42 L. T. 437; 28 W. R. 349; 44 J. P. 440.

Where a contract to supply work and materials has been transferred, and the party entitled to the benefit of the contract has acquiesced in the transfer, and suffered the work to be completed by the transferee, such party cannot refuse payment on the ground of the informality or insufficiency of the act of transfer. Falle v. Le Sueur, 12 Moore, P. C. 501; 7 W. R. 707.

Substituted Performance.]—A. contracted with appellant for the performance of certain work at a price agreed upon, and W. became surety to appellant for performance of the contract by A. The contract contained a provision that, if the contractor should become bankrupt, the employer might require the surety to proceed with the work. A. became bankrupt before completion of the work, and the appellant gave notice to W. to proceed with the work, which W. completed:—Held, that the official assignee under the bankruptcy of A. was entitled to sue for the price of the work so completed by W., it being a substituted performance of the original contract by A. Cohen v. Sandeman, 40 L. T. 370—P. C.

Contract running with Property—Privity.]—A patentee assigned letters patent to A. and B., who covenanted with him that they, their executors, administrators, and assigns, would use their best endeavours to introduce the invention by granting licences, or working the patent, or selling it, and that the patentee should be entitled to receive 5*l.* per cent. of all net profits, whether arising from royalties, sale, or otherwise, which should be received by A. and B., or the survivor of them, or the executors, administrators of the survivor, their or his assigns, and that an account of profits should be rendered yearly to the patentee, and his share of the profits paid to him by A. and B., or the survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor, their or his assigns, with a proviso that after a sale had been made of the patent the interest of the patentee in the profits should cease, and a final account be taken. A. and B. had taken the assignment with a view of forming a company to work the patent. The company was formed and the patent made over to them. The patentee sued the company for an account of profits. The company demurred on the ground that there was no privity between them and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's right, if any, was against A. and B.:—Held, that the plaintiff could sue the company for an account of profits, for that the stipulations of the assignment to A. and B. amounted to a contract that the owners for the time being of the patent should account for and pay to the plaintiff a share of profits, unless a sale within the meaning of the deed was effected, and that no person taking the patent with notice of this contract could refuse to give effect to it. Werderman v. Société Générale d'Electricité, 19 Ch. D. 246—C. A.

4. RIGHT OF THIRD PARTY TO SUE.

No stranger to the consideration can sue, per Parke, B., in Jones v. Robinson, 1 Ex. 454, at p. 456. See also per Wightman, J., in Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393, at p. 398.

A stranger to the consideration can maintain no action. Crow v. Rogers, Strange, 592.

One who is no party to a contract cannot sue in respect of the breach of duty arising out of the contract. Alton v. Midland Ry., 19 C. B. (N.S.) 213; 34 L. J., C. P. 292; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 672; 12 L. T. 703; 13 W. R. 918.

To enable one who is not a party to a contract to claim to enforce it, he must either be named in it, or clearly designated as the person for whose benefit it is made. Peddle v. Brown, 3 Macq. H. L. 65; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 895; 5 W. R. 871.

To entitle a third person not named as party to a contract to sue either of the contracting parties, that third person must possess an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of cestui que trust under the contract. Gandy v. Gandy, 54 L. J., Ch. 1154; 30 Ch. D. 57; 53 L. T. 306; 33 W. R. 803—C. A.

A debtor of plaintiff transmitted a sum to defendant, who being afterwards informed that it was to be paid to plaintiff, said that he would so pay it. These statements were communicated to plaintiff by defendant's authority:—Held, that, on his failing to pay, plaintiff might sue him for money had and received. Lilly v. Hays, 5 A. & E. 548.

By Statute.]—A provision in an act of parliament may enable an outsider to sue. There is in such cases a statutory obligation, of which the person named can take the benefit—an action for debt on a statute being a well-known old form of action at common law; but an agreement between A. and B. that B. shall pay C. gives C. no right of action against B. I cannot see that there is in such a case any difference between equity and common law; it is a mere question of contract — per Lindley, L.J. Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co., In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 290; 25 Ch. D. 111; 50 L. T. 219; 32 W. R. 131.

Action by Members of Committee of Church Fund against others.]—An action was brought by five of the members of a church building committee on behalf of themselves and the other members of the committee, against a former member, claiming an account of all moneys received and paid by him in respect of the church building fund during the period of his membership. The fund was raised by voluntary contributions; seventeen persons having constituted themselves into a committee to receive subscriptions for the purpose of improving the parish church and to apply the moneys thus collected:—Held, that the members of the committee being mere agents of the subscribers, the action could not be maintained by some of the agents against the others. Strickland v. Weldon, 54 L. J., Ch. 452; 28 Ch. D. 426; 52 L. T. 247; 33 W. R. 545.

C. THE MATTER OF CONTRACTS.

1. CONSIDERATION.

a. Sufficiency.

i. Generally.

Detriment or Benefit.]—Any act which is a detriment to the plaintiff is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay money. Williamson v. Clements, 1 Taunt. 523.

The following agreement shows a sufficient consideration moving from the plaintiff by way of detriment to him, in giving up the security of the debtor, C., for 150*l.*, at the defendant's request:—"I undertake, on behalf of Mr. P. (the plaintiff), in consideration of Mr. D. (the defendant) having this day given me an undertaking to procure Mr. W.'s cheque or note in favour of Mr. P. for 150*l.* on account of a debt due from Mr. C. to Mr. P., that Mr. C. shall have credit for that sum in his accounts with Mr. P., and that Mr. W. shall stand in the place of Mr. P. to that amount; and I undertake that Mr. P. shall not personally dispute Mr. W.'s right to deduct that sum from the accounts owing by the colliers of the B. C. colliery to Mr. C." Peate v. Dicken, 1 C. M. & R. 422; 5 Tyr. 116.

A declaration stated that the sheriff had taken the plaintiff's goods in execution, under a writ issued on a judgment entered up on a warrant of attorney, and thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would give to the defendant two warrants of attorney, the defendant promised to cause the goods to be re-delivered:—Held, that a sufficient consideration appeared to support the promise. Radford v. Smith, 6 D. P. C. 381; 3 M. & W. 254; 1 H. & H. 44.

A declaration stated that the defendant, being in possession of some mortgage deeds, of which R. was desirous to obtain an assignment by the payment of 500*l.*, the plaintiff consented, at R.'s request, to accept bills to that amount drawn by R., upon his procuring the defendant to deliver the mortgage deeds to the plaintiff as a security; that the defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff's accepting the bills, undertook to deliver the deeds to him, upon his paying him the amount of the bills:—Held, a sufficient consideration for the promise. Tipper v. Bicknell, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 710; 4 Scott, 462; 3 Hodges, 98; 6 L. J., C. P. 194.

A declaration, that, in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had consented to allow the defendant to weigh divers boilers of the plaintiff, the defendant promised to give them up to the plaintiff in the same condition as at the time of such consent; and that by such consent the defendant weighed them, and breach, contains a good consideration for the promise. Bainbridge v. Firmstone, 1 P. & D. 2; 8 A. & E. 743; 1 W. W. & H. 600.

Semble, that a declaration, stating that the plaintiff, being about to proceed to N., paid money to the defendants in London, that they might cause it to be paid to him at N. on a certain day; that the defendants received the money for that purpose from the plaintiff, and that thereupon afterwards, in consideration of the premises, the defendants promised to cause the money to be paid to the plaintiff at N., discloses a sufficient consideration for the promise. Shillibeer v. Glyn, 2 M. & W. 143; 2 Gale, 212; 6 L. J., Ex. 21.

Any benefit to the assignee of a contract or any loss to the assignor is a valuable consideration, and therefore the sale of an alleged claim against a railway company for services rendered, which, though not admitted, was not rejected by them, is a sufficient consideration to support an action for the purchase money. McGreery v. Russell, 56 L. T. 501—P. C.

Procuring Administration.]—The statement of a consideration that A., at his own expense, would procure an administration, and furnish evidence to enable R. to receive certain dividends, will not support a promise to pay over the dividends when received. Parker v. Baylis, 2 Bos. & P. 78. See Gorsuch v. Cree, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 574; 2 L. T. 567; 8 W. R. 543.

Accession of Third Party.]—In order to facilitate the making of an agreement, for which there was sufficient consideration between the plaintiff and a third person, the defendant, who received no benefit to himself by the agreement, became a party thereto:—Held, that as the agreement was such as the plaintiff would not have made unless the defendant had acceded, there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. Bailey v. Croft, 4 Taunt. 611.

So, the defendants having received a benefit by the permission of the plaintiffs, is a good consideration. Davis v. Morgan, 6 D. & R. 42; 4 B. & C. 8; 28 R. R. 193.

A plaint alleged that by an agreement between G. of the one part, and M. and T. of the other part, reciting that G. was possessed of a farm of the value of 196*l.*, which he wished to divide between M. and T., it was agreed between the parties that, in consideration of G. handing over to T. the farm, T. undertook and promised to pay M. 98*l.*:—Held bad, as it did not appear that any consideration moved from M. His intervention in the agreement was held not sufficient to enable him to maintain an action upon it. M'Conbray v. Thomson, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 226; 16 W. R. 367.

A declaration stated that P. owed the plaintiff 13*l.*, and that in consideration thereof, and that P., at the plaintiff's request, had promised to work for him at certain wages, and also, in consideration of P. leaving the amount which might be earned by him in the defendant's hands, he, the defendant, undertook and promised to pay the plaintiff the 13*l.*, and that P. had performed his part of the agreement. Judgment was arrested, because the plaintiff was a stranger to the consideration. Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 433; 1 N. & M. 303; 2 L. J., K. B. 51.

If two parties for valuable consideration enter into a contract, of which one of the stipulations is solely for the benefit of a third person, who is a stranger to the contract, and from whom no consideration moves, it is not competent to either of the contracting parties afterwards to object to that stipulation. Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., Ch. 492; 7 Jur. 1077.

Transfer of Bargain.]—The plaintiff agreed with C. for the purchase of certain houses; the defendant agreed to give the plaintiff 40*l.* for his bargain; the houses were afterwards, at the plaintiff's request, conveyed to a nominee of the defendant:—Held, that the transfer of the bargain was a sufficient consideration for the promise of the defendant. Price v. Jeaman, 7 D. & R. 14; 4 B. & C. 525; R. & M. 195.

Indemnity—Time.]—A. having paid to B. the whole of a demand claimed by B., but part of which was due to C., B. afterwards engaged to indemnify A. against any claim by C., this promise is supported by a sufficient consideration, although it was made after the payment of the money. Suffield (Lord) v. Bruce, 2 Stark. 175; 19 R. R. 697.

Advertisement.]—A company advertised for tenders for the supply of stores for a period of twelve months. The defendant sent in a tender to supply the stores required for the period named, at certain fixed prices, "in such quantities as the company's storekeeper might order from time to time;" and the company accepted his tender:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise to supply the goods, although there was no binding contract on the part of the company to order any. G. N. Ry. v. Witham, 43 L. J., C. P. 1; L. R. 9 C. P. 16; 29 L. T. 471; 22 W. R. 48.

A. offered a reward to whoever could give such information as would lead to the conviction of a felon. A constable and police-officer of the district where the felony was committed gave such information:—Held, that his having given the information was a good consideration for a promise by A. to pay the reward. England v. Davidson, 11 A. & E. 856; 3 P. & D. 594; 4 Jur. 1032.

Agreement to enter into an Agreement with Third Party.]—A. contracts with B. that he will enter into a binding agreement with C., B.'s landlord, for a lease at a given rent for such a term and upon such conditions as the landlord shall approve; and B. agrees, upon such lease being granted, to surrender his existing lease. Upon A.'s refusal to perform his agreement, B. is entitled to recover damages against A. for breach of contract. Foster v. Wheeler, 57 L. J., Ch. 871; 38 Ch. D. 130; 59 L. T. 15; 37 W. R. 40—C. A.

Performance of Agreement with Third Party.]—The performance of an act which a person has agreed with another to perform, is a good consideration to support a contract with a third person, if the latter derives a benefit from the performance. Scotson v. Pegg, 6 H. & N. 295; 30 L. J., Ex. 225; 3 L. T. 753; 9 W. R. 280.

Relationship.]—Mere blood relationship is not a sufficient consideration in law to support an assumpsit. A stranger to the consideration cannot sue on a contract, although there is privity by blood between him and the contracting parties, and the contract was made for his benefit. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393; 30 L. J., Q. B. 265; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 332; 4 L. T. 468; 9 W. R. 781.

Moral Obligation.]—A moral obligation to pay is sufficient consideration to sustain a proof. De Grouchey, Ex parte, Butler, In re, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 27; 2 Deac. 79; 6 L. J., Bk. 3.

Deed—Substituted Contract.]—An agreement not to call for the performance of a deed, and to substitute other terms for some of the matters provided for by the deed, is a good consideration for a promise to perform such substituted contract, even although the deed is not thereby released. Nash v. Armstrong, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 259; 30 L. J., C. P. 286; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1060; 9 W. R. 782.

I O U—Previous Indenture Reciting Payment.]—A. agreed to sell and assign to B. certain judgments obtained by A. against C.; an indenture assigning the judgments was prepared, which recited that the price had been paid. The price had not in fact been paid; but shortly after the execution of the indenture, B. gave A. an I O U for the amount of the price:—Held, that the giving of the I O U might be treated as part of the transaction just as if it had been given at the very moment of executing the indenture, and that, therefore, there was a sufficient consideration for the giving of the I O U to entitle A. to recover to the amount mentioned in it from B. Berry v. Story, 2 C. L. R. 815; 2 W. R. 240.

Agreement to procure Bills to be Discounted—Application of Process.] — A declaration, stating that, in consideration that the plaintiff would consent to the defendant's retaining possession of two bills of exchange, and to which the plaintiff was entitled, and of which the defendant was holder, but not for value, the defendant promised the plaintiff that if he should succeed in procuring the bills, or either of them, to be discounted, he would apply the proceeds in a given way; and that the defendant succeeded in procuring the bills to be discounted, but that he failed to apply the proceeds as agreed, discloses a sufficient consideration for his promise. Hart v. Mills, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 371; 27 L. J., C. P. 218.

Desire of a Testator—Repairs of Leaseholds.] —In an action by the widow of a testator against the executor, on an agreement to convey a house to the plaintiff, the consideration stated was, that the plaintiff agreed to pay to the defendant 1*l.* a year towards the ground-rent payable in respect of the house and other premises adjoining, and also to keep the house in repair. By the agreement, after reciting a dying declaration by the testator, of his desire that his wife should have the house for her life, and the willingness of the executor to carry the same into effect, it was witnessed, that, in consideration of such desire, and of the premises, the plaintiff agreed, &c. Provided nevertheless, and it was agreed and declared, that the plaintiff should pay, &c., and keep the house in repair (as in the declaration stated). The testator had built several houses, in respect of which a ground-rent was due, but it did not appear what covenants he had entered into for repairs:—Held, first, that there was a legal consideration for the contract; secondly, that the motive for entering into a contract need not be stated in the declaration; and thirdly, that there was no variance between the statement and the proof of the consideration. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 G. & D. 226; 2 Q. B. 851; 11 L. J., Q. B. 104; 6 Jur. 645.

Promise by Heir to pay Portions.]—Under certain circumstances, verbal promises will bind men in equity to the performance of them, as where a son promised his father to pay his sisters' portions if he would not, by will, direct timber to be felled to raise them. Dutton v. Poole, 1 Vent. 318.

Promise by Devisee to pay Interest on Legacy.]—An undertaking contained in a letter from A., devisee of real estate, to B., a legatee, to pay interest upon her legacy, which was charged upon the estate according to the rate fixed by an order of court, provided B. would join in a sale:—Held, to be upon sufficient consideration, it appearing that several expensive suits in which A. was engaged would thereby be terminated, and the estate bettered; and such undertaking not being waived, by no notice having been taken of it in a subsequent agreement to sell, a specific performance was decreed. Griffith v. Sheffield, 1 Eden, 73.

—— To Grant Annuity.]—So where a devisee of land promised to pay an annuity, if testator would not charge it by his will. Oldham v. Lichfield, 2 Vern. 506; 2 Freem. 284.

Promise by Legatee of Chattel Real, on being let into Possession, to pay Legacy charged thereon.]—A farmer, upon the marriage of his eldest son J., assigned part of his farm, held under a yearly tenancy, and farming stock, in trust for J.; but continued until his death to reside on and manage the farm, J. and the other members of his family residing with him. By his will, which was duly admitted to probate, J.'s father bequeathed to J. the whole of the farm, charged with certain legacies, including 20*l.* to E. After the testator's death, and before the grant of probate, his executors asked J., in presence of E., if he would go into possession of the whole farm and pay the legacies, to which J. assented, and went into possession of the whole farm. In an action by E. against J. for the amount of his legacy as due on an account stated, the jury found that J. promised to pay the sum claimed in consideration of being allowed by the executors to take and keep his father's property under the will, subject to the legacies:—Held, that there was sufficient consideration for J.'s promise to pay the legacy; that a personal action lay for the amount against J.; and that E. was entitled to judgment. Barry v. Barry, 28 L. R., Ir. 45.

Votes at Charity Election.]—The plaintiff and defendant were both subscribers to a charity, the objects of which were elected by the subscribers who had votes proportioned in number to the amount they had subscribed. They expressly agreed that if the plaintiff would give twenty-eight votes for an object of the charity whom the defendant favoured, the defendant would at the next election give twenty-eight votes for such object of the charity as the plaintiff should then favour:— Held, that there was a legal consideration for the defendant's promise, and that the agreement was not void, as against public policy. Bolton v. Maddan, 43 L. J., Q. B. 35; L. R. 9 Q. B. 55; 29 L. T. 505; 22 W. R. 207.

Manager of Mutual Insurance Society.]—The manager of a mutual insurance association, having no parliamentary power to sue on behalf of the members, claimed to sue upon a contract with him personally, the declaration being to the effect that the defendant was a member of the association, and caused himself to be insured by a policy therein, and the plaintiff, in consideration of the defendant agreeing to comply with the rules annexed to the policy, subscribed the policy on behalf of the members of the association. Averments that, by the rules (in certain events which happened), additional percentages on the premium were to become payable by the defendant, to be drawn for as the committee might determine; that manager's drafts for percentages should be accepted by members and punctually paid when due, and that upon the percentages becoming payable the committee directed the manager to draw upon the defendant for the percentages, and that the plaintiff was the manager and did so draw, and all conditions were fulfilled. Breach, that the defendant had not accepted the drafts nor paid the percentages:—Held, that the declaration was bad in substance as disclosing no consideration on the part of the plaintiff. Evans v. Hooper, 45 L. J., Q. B. 206; 1 Q. B. D. 45; 33 L. T. 374, 24 W. R. 226—C. A.

Married Woman.]—A widow during her husband's lifetime lent to the defendant 20*l.*, derived from funds belonging to her in her own right. Two days after her husband's death, the defendant gave her an I O U for that amount, and subsequently promised that if she would let the matter remain over, he would pay the debt and interest; she did not inform the defendant that his offer was accepted, but waited more than three years, and then brought an action for the debt and interest:—Held, that she was entitled to succeed; for though it might be doubtful whether in point of law the money lent was hers or her husband's, yet the giving of the I O U after his death by the defendant was evidence that she was entitled to sue in her own right, and that the forbearance to prosecute a doubtful claim was a good consideration for a promise, and that by not suing for more than three years she had, in effect, communicated to the defendant her acceptance of his offer. Wilby v. Elgee, 44 L. J., C. P. 254; L. R. 10 C. P. 497; 32 L. T. 310.

Agreement to Procure Charter.] — A shipbroker agreed with a shipowner to procure him a charter of a vessel, in consideration of the shipowner chartering the same.—Held, in an action by shipowner against shipbroker for breach of contract, that there was a good consideration for the shipbroker's promise. Gliddon v. Brodersen, 1 Cab. & E. 197.

Ship's Captain—Interest in Loading.]—A declaration that the defendant was possessed of a ship, and the plaintiff was a master mariner having interest in N. for loading a vessel; and it having been proposed that the defendant should give the plaintiff the command of the ship, for a voyage to the West Indies and back, it was agreed, that in consideration of the plaintiff having interest in N. for loading a vessel, the defendant would give the plaintiff the command of the ship, with the understanding that the plaintiff would use all possible exertions for the benefit of the ship and owners; and that for such services the defendant would pay the plaintiff 8*l.* per month during the command by the plaintiff, and other sums during the voyage, with outward and homeward primage. That the defendant gave the plaintiff the command of the ship, and that he set out on the voyage, and carried and delivered an outward cargo; that the plaintiff arrived at N., and finding that a homeward cargo could not be obtained without disadvantage, he proceeded to R., and then took in a homeward cargo, and delivered the same at London, and there resigned the command to the defendant, who accepted the same; that, from the time when the command was given to him till he so resigned it, the plaintiff used all possible exertions for the benefit of the ship and owners. Breach, non-payment by the defendant of the moneys due to the plaintiff:—Held, that the declaration imported a sufficient consideration and that the plaintiff, having taken the command of the ship, might maintain the action. Mills v. Blackall, 11 Q. B. 358; 17 L. J., Q. B. 31; 12 Jur. 93.

Resignation of Post—Agreement to reappoint.]—Where the defendant, having purchased certain shares of an East Indiaman, commanded by the plaintiff, and chartered by the East India Company for four voyages, proposed to the plaintiff that he should resign the command in favour of the defendant's nephew, upon receiving in exchange the command of another ship, then chartered for one voyage, and to which the plaintiff assented, and the company acceded to the exchange: and it was agreed that, in case the defendant's nephew died or resigned before the expiration of the four voyages, the plaintiff should succeed him; and, as a further inducement to the plaintiff to resign the command of the ship chartered for the four voyages, the defendant undertook to procure a beneficial alteration in the destination of the other, chartered for one voyage only; and the person who negotiated the affair on the part of the plaintiff undertook, without the plaintiff's knowledge, to pay the defendant a certain sum, if the plaintiff should refuse to resign; and the exchange was ultimately approved of by the company, and the destination of the latter vessel altered; and the plaintiff and defendant's nephew sailed on their respective voyages, and the former became bankrupt on his return from his voyage, and the nephew died in the course of his second voyage; and the defendant, having refused to appoint the plaintiff to succeed him, was sued for a breach of the agreement:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's agreement, whereon to found such an action. Richardson v. Mellish, 9 Moore, 435; 2 Bing. 229; 1 C. & P. 241; R. & M. 66; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 265; 27 R. R. 603.

Implied Undertaking to keep Document.]—A. was a judgment creditor of C.; B. wrote to A. a letter in the following terms (so far as is material):—"If C. leaves in your hands the order of Messrs. F., drawn upon Messrs. R., for 250 eight per cent. preference shares, &c., I will obtain, within one month from this date, with the sanction of C., a loan for him of 1,000*l.* upon said order, and pay that sum to you against the delivery of said order." C. left the order in A.'s hands, and sanctioned the proposal contained in the letter. A. then wrote to B. as follows:—"C. brought me your letter on the 27th, and he has given me his written sanction to your obtaining the loan of 1,000*l.* for him referred to in that letter, and we shall be glad to hear that everything is in order":—Held, that, assuming A.'s letter to B. to be a final acceptance of the offer contained in B.'s letter to A., there was consideration moving from A. to support B.'s promise, such consideration being the implied undertaking on the part of A. when he received the order to keep it till required for the purpose of being handed over to the person who would advance the 1,000*l.* on its security. But held also, that A.'s letter to B. was not an acceptance of the offer contained in B.'s letter to A., and that the two letters did not therefore constitute a contract. Harston v. Harvey, 1 C. & E. 404.

Sale of Goodwill by Bankrupt and Trustee.]—If a bankrupt join with his trustee in selling the goodwill and business previously carried on by the bankrupt, and agrees with the purchaser not to carry on a similar business within a prescribed district, such agreement is binding on him, for there is good consideration for the defendant's promise in the payment, on the faith of that promise, by the purchasers to the trustee, and he can be restrained from so doing. Burton and High Peak Co. v. Mitchell, 1 Cab. & E. 527.

Acceptance of Smaller Amount than Sum due in Discharge.]—See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION and sub-tit. (c.) Forbearance to sue, &c., infra.

Admissibility of Evidence to add to Consideration Expressed.]—By an agreement in writing G. agreed that Y. should receive all the money that was then due, and which should become due to G. upon the winding-up of the Barnstaple Second Annuitant Society, Y. paying to G. out of such money the sum of 100*l.* The consideration was stated to be "In consideration of a sum of money this day paid," &c.:—Held, that evidence was admissible to show that in addition to the consideration expressed there was another consideration, namely, that Y. should vote for the winding-up of the society. Barnstaple Second Annuitant Society, In re, 30 L. T. 424.

Agreement to make Satisfaction for Neglect of Duty.]—A scrivener who was employed to examine into a title fails in his duty, by neglecting to make a thorough inquiry, &c., whereby his client is a sufferer; afterwards the scrivener agrees to make him satisfaction another way. This agreement decreed in specie, though urged that there was no consideration. King v Withers, Pre. Ch. 19.

ii. Nuda Pacta.

Principles.] — As to promises within the doctrine of nudum pactum, see Rann v. Hughes, 7 Term Rep. 350, n.; 4 Bro. P. C. 27.

A mere accord not being a ground of action is not a sufficient consideration to support assumpsit. Lynn v. Bruce, 2 H. Bl. 317; 3 R. R. 381. See Reeves v. Hearne, 2 Gale, 4; 1 M. & W. 323; 5 L. J., Ex. 156.

An express promise can only revive a precedent good consideration, which might have been enforced at law through the medium of an implied promise had it not been suspended by some positive rule of law; but can give no original right of action, if the obligation on which it is founded could never have been enforced at law, though not barred by any legal maxim or statute provision Wennall v. Adney, 3 Bos. & P. 247; 6 R. R. 780.

A pecuniary benefit, voluntarily conferred by one person upon, and accepted by, another, is not such a consideration as will support an action on an express promise by the latter to support the former. Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 A. & E. 438; 3 P. & D. 276; 9 L. J., Q. B. 409; 4 Jur. 1081.

No relief in chancery on nudum pactum. Anon., Cary, 5.

Relationship.]—Blood relationship is no consideration. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393; 30 L. J., Q. B. 265; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 332; 4 L. T. 468; 9 W. R. 781.

Acceptance — Implied Promise.]—A declaration by the plaintiffs, K. and M., alleged that the defendant agreed to accept four bills of exchange for the payment of 450*l.* each, the price of shares sold by the plaintiffs to him, and that the defendant promised to pay the sums of money for which such bills were to be given at the times when the bills should become due, and that in pursuance thereof the defendant accepted a bill drawn by J. upon him, for payment to the order of K. and M. of 450*l.* on a day mentioned, and that the bill was so drawn and made payable at the request of the plaintiffs, and without any consideration in respect of K. and M. being the payees, and was afterwards endorsed by the payees to J., to hold as the agent of the plaintiffs, and on their account, and whilst it was so held, the bill was wrongfully destroyed by the defendant. The declaration then alleged that although the time when the bill was due had elapsed, and the defendant had notice of the premises, he had not paid the bill:—Held, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, there being no other promise by the defendant than the promise to pay the party entitled to the bill. Jungbluth v. Way, 1 H. & N. 71; 25 L. J., Ex. 257.

Transfer of Valueless Shares.]—An agreement to accept a transfer of railway shares on which nothing has been paid is not nudum pactum, but a contract which may be specifically enforced in equity. Cheale v. Kenward, 3 De G. & J. 27; 27 L. J., Ch. 784; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 984; 6 W. R. 810.

The purchase of a share in mines, which proved to be a bubble, or money paid for effecting illegal insurances, are not such considerations as will support a bill of exchange in equity. Brown v. Marsh, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 154. S. P., Mather, Ex parte, 3 Ves. 373.

Disclosure of Interest in Property.]—Where property is in the hands of trustees for the parties entitled to it, and there is no adverse claim after the death of the parties in possession, a communication to one of the cestuisque trustent in remainder of his interest in the property is not a consideration upon which a conveyance of a portion of the property can be sustained as the sale of a secret; for in such a case the disclosure is a nullity. Reynell v. Sprye, 8 Hare, 222; 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

Note given by Trustee of Lost Fund.]—Where the testator, in the well-founded belief that he was liable to make good a fund acknowledged to be held by him in trust for the payee, and lent to a party without security, and who died insolvent, gave a note for the amount, expressed to be "for value received":—Held, not a nudum pactum, or mere gift; and all evidence of actual consideration failing, from the death of parties, the court allowed the claim in proof against the testator's estate. Burkitt v. Ransom, 2 Coll. 395; 15 L. J., Ch. 174; 10 Jur. 193.

Note in Trust for Unborn Child.]—A mother gives a promissory note to a trustee for the benefit of a child of which she is enceinte; this not sufficiently nudum pactum for the court to allow a demurrer to a bill by the child and the trustee, to have it carried into execution. Seton v. Seton, 2 Bro. C. C. 610.

Agreement between Surety and Creditor—Subsequent Loan.]—By an agreement between bankers, a customer and a surety, the surety guaranteed the balance due or to become due from the customer, subject to a limit and to a proviso empowering the surety at any time to determine by notice his liability as to subsequent dealings. The customer afterwards obtained a loan from the bank beyond the limit of the guarantee on a warrant of attorney, and simultaneously with it a second agreement was entered into between the bankers, the customer and surety, that the warrant of attorney should not prejudice or affect the former agreement, and that the bank would, at any time when requested by the surety, enter up judgment and issue execution. The bank omitted to file the warrant of attorney, and the customer became bankrupt:—Held, that the agreement to issue execution was not nudum pactum. Watson v. Allcock, 4 De G. M. & G. 242; 22 L. J., Ch. 858; 17 Jur. 568; 1 W. R. 399.

Agreement with Promoters—Mere Present.]—The plaintiff, being a person of influence with a foreign government, agreed with the defendant to exert himself to obtain from that government the concession of making a railway in the foreign country to the defendant and M. Two other persons having, however, also applied for a concession of the same line, it was agreed that the competing parties should amalgamate, and articles of agreement were executed by which all the parties should take on themselves the construction of the line, and that 35,600*l.* should be attribué to the plaintiff, in free shares of the société anonyme which was to be formed, for the care and trouble which he had had up to the date of the agreement, and which he might yet have to take, up to the complete organisation of the society. The company was never formed, and no shares ever issued:—Held, that this was only an arrangement of the amount which the promoters of the scheme were willing to award to the plaintiff as a present; that there was no consideration for a binding promise on their part to give him the shares either for his past services, which were not rendered on any stipulation of payment or allotment of shares in the events which had happened, or in the anticipated services which were not contracted for to be rendered by the plaintiff. Pourtales Georgia (Count) v. Morris, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 588; 29 L. J., C. P. 208; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 705; 2 L. T. 284.

Promise to give Sum to Charity.]—A. promised to give 20,000*l.* to a fund of the Congregational Union, and paid certain instalments of the amount, but died leaving 8,000*l.* unpaid and unprovided for. The union claimed that sum from A.'s executors, alleging that they had been led by A.'s promise to contribute larger sums to churches than they would otherwise have done, that money had been given and promised by other persons in consideration of A.'s promise, and that the committee of the union had incurred liabilities in consequence of A.'s promise:—Held, that, the promise was without consideration. Hudson, In re, Creed v. Henderson, 54 L. J., Ch. 811; 33 W. R. 819.

Promise to pay Administrators Equitable Assets.]—C., in consideration of a loan of 400*l.*, mortgaged lands in fee to W. & Co. in trust to sell the same, and, after repaying themselves the money advanced, to pay over the surplus to his executors or administrators: before any sale was effected, C. died, having devised all his real and personal estates to trustees, whom he also appointed his executors, to sell the same and pay debts and discharge incumbrances: in the lifetime of these trustees, W. & Co., the original mortgagees, sold the estate, and paid over the surplus into the hands of the attorney or agent of the testator's trustees and executors: before the money was disposed of, the trustees and executors, and also their attorney, died, the latter leaving the defendant his executor. The plaintiffs took out administration de bonis non, with the will of C. annexed, and sued the attorney's executor for money had and received:—Held, that an express promise by the defendant to pay the plaintiffs the money in question was a nudum pactum, they having no title to it in a court of law; and that the action was not maintainable, as the money in the defendant's hands was equitable and not legal assets. Clay v. Willis, 2 D. & R. 539; 1 B. & C. 364; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 144.

Re-indorsement of Bill for Negotiation only.]—Where A., after drawing a bill of exchange on B., who accepted it, indorsed it to C., who reindorsed it to A., in pursuance of an agreement (without consideration) that he should do so as a security for the payment of it by the acceptor, and for the purpose of rendering the bill more negotiable:—Held, that the agreement to indorse was void, for want of a consideration. Britten v. Webb, 3 D. & R. 650: 2 B. & C. 483; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 118.

Bailment.] — Bailment, sans consideration, countermandable. Anon., Cary, 9.

Relinquishment by affidavit of right to Chattel.]—If G. and B. claim a chattel, and G. says if B. will make an affidavit that the property is his he will relinquish all his right thereto, and B. makes an affidavit to that effects. Semble, that it is not conclusive against G.'s right of property. Gornet v. Ball, 3 Stark. 160.

To Collect Debts and Guarantee.]—So, where A. agreed in writing, that, in consideration that B. would appoint him to receive a sum of money for a lace machine (agreed for between B. and C.), he would take the machine and pay the balance, should there be any default on the part of C.; and C. did make default:—Held, that this agreement or promise was void for want of a consideration. Bates v. Cort, 3 D. & R. 676; 2 B. & C. 474.

In Fraud of Bankruptcy Laws.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant was indebted to T. in 200*l.*, and that a commission of bankruptcy had issued against the defendant, and that in consideration of T.'s proving for this 200*l.* against the estate of the defendant, the defendant promised to pay him the 200*l.* after the delay of a few months. Judgment was arrested on the ground that the promise was void for want of a consideration. Brealey v. Andrew, 2 N. & P. 114; 7 A. & E. 108; W. W. & D. 305; 6 L. J., K. B. 199; 1 Jur. 526.

The bankrupt entered into a deed of composition with his creditors, by which they released him from his debts:—Held, that a promissory note subsequently given to a creditor for the remainder of the debt was a nudum pactum. Hall, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 171; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 513.

A promise to conduct proceedings in bankruptcy so as to injure as little as possible the debtor's credit, is not a good consideration to support a contract. Bracewell v. Williams, L. R. 2 C. P. 196; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 1004; 15 L. T. 215; 15 W. R. 130.

b. Past or Executed.

Revival of Express Promise.]—A mere moral consideration will not support an express promise. An express promise can only revive a precedent good consideration, which might have been enforced at law, through the medium of an implied promise, had it not been suspended by some positive rule of law, but can give no original cause of action if the obligation on which it is founded never could have been enforced at law, though not barred by any legal maxim or statute. Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 A. & E. 438; 3 P. & D. 276; 9 L. J., Q. B. 409; 4 Jur. 1081.

—— Promise to Pay at Future Day.]—An executed consideration, whereon the law implies a promise to pay on request (as upon an account stated), is not sufficient to support a promise to pay at a future day. Hopkins v. Logan, 5 M. & W. 241; 7 D. P. C. 360; 8 L. J., Ex. 218.

—— Moved by Request of Promisor.]—A past consideration, for which the law will not imply a promise, will support a subsequent express promise, in itself unobjectionable, if such consideration is moved by the previous request of the party promising. Bradford v. Roulston, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 468.

The execution by A., at B.'s request, of a bill of sale of a vessel, to C., is a sufficient consideration to support a subsequent express promise by B. to pay, on C.'s default. Ib.

—— Exhausted before Promise.]—A declaration stated, that, in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had bought of the defendant a horse, at a certain price, the defendant promised the plaintiff that the horse was sound and free from vice, but that it was vicious:—Held, in arrest of judgment, that the promise appeared to have been made in respect of a precedent executed consideration; that it must be taken to have been an express promise, but that no express promise on such a consideration, though executed at request, could extend beyond the promise which the law would imply while the consideration was executory; that at the time of the sale, the only implied promise was to deliver the horse, and that after the sale, therefore, there was no consideration for the subsequent express promise of warranty. Roscorla v. Thomas, 2 G. & D. 508; 3 Q. B. 234; 11 L. J., Q. B. 214; 6 Jur. 929.

A plaintiff declared on an agreement by the defendant, which recited that an estate had been mortgaged by W., since deceased; that the plaintiff had joined in a bond as a collateral security for the mortgage-money, and had afterwards been compelled to pay off a portion of it; that the defendant had taken upon himself the management of W.'s affairs, had repaid the plaintiff part of the money which he had paid, and had agreed to pay him the residue out of the proceeds of the mortgage property when sold, and in the meantime to appropriate the rents of the premises to the payment of the same sum as that for which the plaintiff had a lien on the premises; that the defendant requested the plaintiff to release and convey his interest to A. and H., and that he had done so, reserving to himself a lien on the property. The declaration stated that, in consideration of the plaintiff having paid the money, and having released and conveyed all his interest to A. and H., reserving to himself the lien, the defendant agreed to pay him the remainder of the sum so paid by him:—Held, that the declaration was bad, as it disclosed no consideration for the defendant's promise. Kay v. Dutton, 2 D. & L. 291; 8 Scott (N.R.) 495; 7 Man. & G. 493; 13 L. J., C. P. 183; 8 Jur. 910.

—— Promise Equivalent to Warranty.]—A declaration, that, in consideration that the plaintiff did, through placing confidence in the defendants that they were acting fairly by the plaintiff in recommending the plaintiff to purchase of the defendants, on their recommendation, 211 pockets of hops at 63*s.* the cwt., purchase of the defendants the hops at that price, the defendants promised the plaintiff that they were not abusing the confidence of the plaintiff in recommending the purchase of the hops at that price; and that the plaintiff, relying on the promise, did, through placing confidence in the defendants, purchase of the defendants, on their recommendation, the hops at the price; whereas the defendants did abuse, in this, that the hops were not worth the price:—Held, in arrest of judgment, that the declaration disclosed both a good consideration and a good promise; for that it sufficiently appeared that the purchase was contemporaneous with the promise; and it must be taken, after verdict, that the promise was express, and not one sought to be implied from the mere fact of there being a contract of purchase and sale between the plaintiff and defendants. West v. Jackson, 16 Q. B. 280; 20 L. J., Q. B. 240; 15 Jur. 990.

c. Forbearance to Sue, and Compromise of Claims.

Whether nudum pactum.]—Where a creditor demands, and a debtor promises, security for an existing debt, the forbearance to sue implied on the part of the creditor is a sufficient consideration to prevent the transaction from being nudum pactum. Alliance Bank v. Broom, 2 Drew. & Sm. 289; 5 N. R. 69; 34 L. J., Ch. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1121; 11 L. T. 332; 13 W. R. 127.

A promise by a defendant to pay a judgment debt obtained against him, in consideration that the plaintiff would stay execution thereon, is no ground to raise an assumpsit. Otherwise, if the promise is by a third person. Anon., Cowp. 129.

Where a plaintiff declared that A., since deceased, was indebted to him so much, and that after his death, in consideration that he, at the instance of the defendant, would forbear and give day of payment of the debt (not stating to whom he was to forbear), the defendant promised:—Held, to be no consideration for the promise; for a promise can only be sustained on a consideration of benefit to the defendant, or of detriment to the plaintiff; and unless there was some person whom the plaintiff could have sued for his debt, his forbearance was no detriment to him. Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 455; 1 Smith, 188.

A letter written by the agent of a bond creditor to the principal obligor, giving him eighteen months further time to pay the bond, upon consideration of his paying off at once the interest in arrear, and keeping down the interest to accrue in future, is a mere promise without consideration, and not binding. Tucker v. Laing, 2 K. & J. 745.

A declaration stated that K. was indebted to a firm; that the plaintiff had been appointed by the court of chancery receiver of the debts of the firm, whereby K. became liable to pay the plaintiff when requested; that, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff, as such receiver, would give K. two months' time to pay, the defendant promised to pay, in case K. omitted to do so within that time. Breach, that K. omitted, and that the defendant never paid:—Held, that a sufficient authority appeared for the plaintiff to contract and sue, and a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. Willatts v. Kennedy, 8 Bing. 5; 1 M. & Scott, 35.

What amounts to Agreement to forbear.]—A banker required security from his customer for an overdrawn account. The customer, by letter, promised to hypothecate certain goods, but upon being asked for the delivery warrants, he refused to carry out his promise. Upon a bill to enforce the promise:—Held, that, from the nature of the transaction, some forbearance to sue on the part of the creditor must be assumed to have taken place, and that this was sufficient to prevent the promise to hypothecate from being nudum pactum. Alliance Bank v. Broom, 2 Drew. & Sm. 289; 34 L. J., Ch. 256; 5 N. R. 69; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1121; 11 L. T. 332; 13 W. R. 127.

A count stated that, at the time of writing the letter and making the contract therein, the claims of the plaintiff in the first, third and fourth counts, which were for not returning railway shares, and for converting and detaining certificates of shares, had accrued in manner and form as therein expressed, and the defendant ought to have paid or satisfied the plaintiff for and in respect of those claims; that the defendant had from time to time requested the plaintiff to give him time and to forbear and grant him indulgence for the payment or satisfaction of those claims, which the plaintiff had done; and that the defendant, being insolvent and unable to pay or satisfy those claims and to obtain further time, wrote to the defendant as follows:—"That I have wronged you in not having (because incapable) repaid or returned that which you lent me [meaning and referring to loans, the certificates mentioned in the first count] it was useless for me to deny; but how I wronged you in feeling, seeing that I have ever, as I do now, entertain for you the sincerest gratitude and regard, I know not, beset as I am by difficulties on every side not resulting from extravagance but from bad fortune. I know how worthless are promises of reparation; how wholly disregarded are entreaties for indulgence, yet will I say that the most anxious endeavour of every future day shall be to prove my regard and gratitude in the only way which the world esteems the proof by restoring to you all I owe":—Held, that the letter showed no request for forbearance, nor any consideration for a fresh promise to pay by the defendant what he was already liable to pay, and if it did amount to a fresh promise to pay it was a promise without consideration. Deacon v. Gridley, 15 C. B. 295; 3 C. L. R. 129; 24 L. J., C. P. 17; 3 W. R. 27.

Forbearance to sue, on the part of an assignee of a bond, is a good consideration for a parol promise by the obligor to pay by instalments, and to give a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment for the whole in case of any default in payment of any instalment. Martin v. Burn 2 N. & P. 297; 7 A. & E. 19; W., W. & D. 508.

Executed or Executory.]—In consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, would consent to suspend proceedings against another person, the defendant promised to pay the debt on a certain day; averment, that the plaintiff did suspend the proceedings. The agreement was as follows:—"The plaintiff having, at my request, consented to suspend proceedings, &c.":—Held, that as the request must have preceded the consent to suspend proceedings, the contract was properly declared on as an executory contract; secondly, that the consideration for the promise was good, as it must be taken as a consent to suspend proceedings, at least until the day the defendant was to pay the debt; and thirdly, that, after verdict, the averment that the plaintiff had suspended proceedings was sufficient, without specifying for what period. Payne v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 423; 1 M. & Ry. 708; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 197.

Contract to take less than Sum due.]—An agreement between judgment debtor and creditor that in consideration of the debtor paying down part of the judgment debt and costs, and on condition of his paying to the creditor or his nominee the residue by instalments, the creditor will not take any proceedings on the judgment is nudum pactum, being without consideration, and does not prevent the creditor after payment of the whole debt and costs from proceeding to enforce payment of the interest upon the judgment. Pinnel's Case (5 Rep. 117 a), and Cumber v. Wane (1 Str. 426), followed. Foakes v. Beer, 54 L. J., Q. B. 130; 9 App. Cas. 605; 51 L. T. 833; 33 W. R. 233—H. L. (E.)

An agreement to take, in lieu of arrears of income, in respect of a life interest, recoverable in equity, a certain sum, less than the estimated amount of such arrears, recoverable at law, is, in equity, void for want of consideration, and will not be supported. Lovett v. Hankins, 13 L. T. 521; 14 W. R. 216.

See also cases sub tit., ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

—— Withdrawal of Plea.]—The withdrawal by a defendant of a plea of infancy, whether true or false, is a sufficient consideration for an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to accept a smaller in satisfaction of a greater sum. Cooper v. Parker, 15 C. B. 822; 3 C. L. R. 710; 24 L. J., C. P. 68; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 281.

Payment of smaller Sum than Amount due in Satisfaction.]—A. being indebted to B. in 125*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* for goods sold and delivered, gave B. a cheque for 100*l.*, payable on demand, which B. accepted in satisfaction:—Held, a good accord and satisfaction. Goddard v. O'Brien, 9 Q. B. D. 37.

Joint and Separate Debts.]—A parol agreement is sufficient to convert a separate into a joint debt, such an agreement not being a promise to answer the debt of another within the Statute of Frauds, but the creation of a new debt in consideration of the former being extinguished. Lane, Ex parte, De Gex, 300; 16 L. J., Bk. 4.

The acceptance by a creditor of the sole and separate liability of one of two or more joint debtors, is a good consideration for an agreement to discharge all the other debtors from liability. Lyth v. Ault, 7 Ex. 669 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 217.

Agreement not to sue for Nullity of Marriage.]—In a petition by husband against wife praying that the marriage celebrated between them might be declared null and void on the ground of her incapacity, the respondent pleaded that she and the petitioner after a year's cohabitation had agreed to live apart, and had bound themselves not to make any claim against each other either in a court of law or equity : and that if either party should break the agreement the other should be entitled to an injunction to restrain such breach. That it was further agreed that if the respondent committed a breach of the agreement the petitioner should be entitled to proceed in this court for a declaration of nullity. Averment that there had been no breach of the agreement on the part of the respondent :—Held, that the respondent's agreement not to sue was a sufficient consideration for the husband's engagement to do the like, and that such an agreement although not by deed was therefore a bar to a petition for declaration of nullity. Aldridge v. Aldridge, or A. v. M., 58 L. J., P. 8 ; 13 P. D. 210 ; 59 L. T. 896 ; 37 W. R. 240.

Agreement to avoid wrongful Arrest.]—A declaration stated that an action was depending at the plaintiff's suit against D. ; that D. was arrested and in the sheriff's custody by virtue of a capias, indorsed for bail for a debt ; that costs had been incurred by the plaintiff in the prosecution of the action ; and that thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would discharge D. out of custody, the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff the debt, interest, and costs in the action against D. ; and that the plaintiff discharged D. Breach, non-payment. Plea, that there was not any claim or demand, or cause of action, against D. in respect of which the plaintiff could, or was entitled to recover in the action ; that he, by discharging D., did not give up or part with any available remedy, as he well knew ; that the arrest and proceedings were colourable only, and were not commenced for the purpose of trying any doubtful or contested question of fact :—Held, that the declaration disclosed a sufficient consideration ; and that the plea was no answer, as it did not show that the arrest was fraudulent or illegal. Smith v. Monteith, 2 D. & L. 358 ; 13 M. & W. 427 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 22 ; 9 Jur. 310.

Payment, Postponement of—Undertaking not Enforceable.]—The defendant entered into an undertaking to pay 200*l.* which was supposed to be, though not in fact, enforceable. He subsequently gave a promissory note to postpone payment of this sum :—Held, that the note was given for good consideration. Kingsford v. Oxenden, 55 J. P. 789—C. A.

Compromise of Unfounded Claim.]—The compromise of a disputed claim made bonâ fide is a good consideration for a promise, even although it should ultimately appear that the claim was wholly unfounded. Callisher v. Bischoffsheim, 39 L. J., Q. B. 181 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 449 ; 18 W. R. 1127.

Forbearance to prosecute a bonâ fide claim is a valid consideration for a contract although the claim is, in fact, unfounded. Ockford v. Barelli, 25 L. T. 504 ; 20 W. R. 116.

A niece went through the ceremony of marriage with her uncle ; at that time, unknown to her, his wife was living, but she soon afterwards died, and the niece, from the time of her marriage, lived with her uncle as his wife until he died intestate ; she then claimed rights as his widow, believing herself entitled thereto, and in consideration of her forbearing to prosecute those rights, the sons of the former marriage promised to make over to her one-third part of the property of the deceased :—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for their promise. Ib. And see Wilby v. Elgee, 44 L. J., C. P. 254 ; L. R. 10 C. P. 497 ; 32 L. T. 310.

Trustees under a local act called on defendant, who was agent of the owner of certain houses, to pay certain expenses chargeable under the act on the owner. The defendant told the trustees that he was not owner, but that B. was, and that it was B. who was liable. The trustees bonâ fide, believing the defendant to be personally liable, threatened to take proceedings against him to enforce payment ; on which he, notwithstanding he knew that he was not really liable, the trustees consenting to take a less amount than their claim by instalments, gave them notes to meet the instalments. The trustees having sued the defendant on the notes :—Held, that there was good consideration for them, and that the trustees were entitled to recover. Cook v. Wright, 1 B. & S. 559 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 321 ; 4 L. T. 704.

Forbearance to sue is a good consideration only when the forbearing party has a right to sue in his own name either at law or in equity. Graham v. Johnson, 38 L. J., Ch. 374 ; L. R. 8 Eq. 36 ; 21 L. T. 77 ; 17 W. R. 810.

A defence to an action of assumpsit alleging that the plaintiff never had any cause of action against the defendant at the time of the commencement of the action which had been compromised, and thence and until and at the time of the promise, as he well knew, is sufficient. Wade v. Simeon, 2 C. B. 548 ; 3 D. & L. 587 ; 15 L. J., C. P. 114 ; 10 Jur. 412.

Compromise of Intended Action.]—A bonâ fide compromise of a real claim is a good consideration, whether the claim would have been successful or not. Cook v. Wright (supra) ; Callisher v. Bischoffsheim (supra) ; and Ockford v. Barelli (supra), approved, and the observations in Banner, Ex parte (17 Ch. D. 480, 490), by Lord Esher, M.R., on the authority of these cases, dissented from by the court. Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 55 L. J., Ch. 801 ; 32 Ch. D. 266 ; 54 L. T. 582 ; 34 W. R. 669—C. A.

A shareholder in a company made an equitable mortgage of his shares in favour of the plaintiff as security for an advance, and the plaintiff gave the company notice of his charge ; after the date of the notice the shareholder gave a written guarantee to the company. The guarantor was not only a shareholder, but he was also a director of and the vendor to, the company. The guarantee was given at a general meeting of the shareholders, after an angry discussion had taken place, but it did not appear that any resolution was passed at such meeting with reference to it. It was, that a minimum dividend should be paid to the shareholders yearly during ninety years: and that the guarantor should pay sums sufficient to make up that minimum in every year in which the company had not earned it. There was no consideration for the giving of the guarantee upon the face of the instrument, but it was found by the court that it was, in fact, given in consideration of an agreement come to at the general meeting of the shareholders, to abandon proceedings in contemplation against the guarantor. But it was held, upon appeal (Bowen, L.J., dissentiente), that there was no sufficient evidence of any intended claim by the company or the shareholders against the guarantor, or any contract binding the company to abandon such claim, and accordingly that there was no consideration to support the guarantee:—Held, by Bowen, L.J., that upon the evidence proceedings had, in fact, been threatened, and were dropped in consequence of the guarantee; and that this was sufficient consideration to support it. Ib.

Forbearance to Sue Third Party.]—For the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to give time to the defendant's father for payment of a debt, the defendant signed a promissory note whereby the defendant's father and the defendant jointly and severally promised to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the debt with interest half-yearly at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum until the amount was paid. The plaintiff having forborne to sue for several years:—Held, that, the plaintiff having forborne from suing the defendant's father at the defendant's request, there was a good consideration for the defendant's liability on the note although there was no contract by the plaintiff to forbear from suing. Crears v. Hunter or Burnyeat, 56 L. J., Q. B. 518; 19 Q. B. D. 341; 57 L. T. 554; 35 W. R. 821—C. A.

Forbearance by the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, to enforce a fi. fa. against the goods of a third person for 60*l.* is a valid consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the plaintiff 107*l.* in seven days. Smith v. Algar, 1 B. & Ad. 603; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 79. S. P., Pullen v. Stokes, 2 H. Bl. 312.

Staying Proceedings.]—A declaration stated that two actions had been commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant, and were then depending, and that it was agreed between them that the actions should be settled, and all proceedings therein stayed, and that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff 40*l.* in respect of costs, and 236*l.* damages. That the plaintiff did wholly cease to prosecute the actions, and had thence continually hitherto stayed all proceedings therein. Breach, non-payment of these sums:—Held, that the staying of the actions was a sufficient consideration for the promise of the defendant; and that there was a sufficient averment of performance of the agreement by the plaintiff, inasmuch as the court would interfere if any further step was taken by him in the actions. Crowther v. Farrer, 15 Q. B. 677; 20 L. J., Q. B. 298; 15 Jur. 535.

Settlement of Action no Bar.]—When an agreement has been entered into between the plaintiff and defendant in a cause, that the cause shall be settled by the payment of a sum of money to the plaintiff by the defendant, and the defendant afterwards refuses to perform his part of such agreement, the pendency of the original action is no bar to a new action on the agreement to settle. King v. Pinsonneault, 41 L. J., P. C. 42; L. R. 6 P. C. 245; 32 L. T. 174; 23 W. R. 576.

—— Where Doubt as to Legal Rights.]—Abandoning a suit, instituted to try a question in respect of which the law is doubtful, is a good consideration for a promise to pay a stipulated sum: therefore, where a ship, having on board a pilot required by law, ran foul of another vessel, and proceedings were instituted by the owners of the latter to compel the owners of the former to make good the damages; and the former vessel was detained until bail was given; and, pending such proceedings, the agents of the owners of the vessel detained agreed, on the owners of the damaged vessel renouncing all claims on the other vessel, and on their proving the amount of the damages sustained, to indemnify them, and to pay a stipulated sum by way of damages:—Held, that there being contradictory decisions as to the point, whether shipowners were liable for an injury done while their ship was under the control of a pilot required by law, there was a sufficient consideration to sustain the promise of the agents of the owners of the detained vessel to pay the stipulated damages. Longridge v. Dorville, 5 B. & Ald. 117.

—— After a Reference.]—A declaration alleged that while certain differences were pending between the plaintiff and the defendant respecting some claims of the plaintiff to a deduction from 29,700*l.* to which the defendant was entitled, it was agreed between them by deed that that sum should be paid to trustees for the benefit of the defendant, and the matters in difference referred, the costs to abide the event. That the parties afterwards, with the consent of the arbitrator, agreed that on the immediate payment of 200*l.* by the defendant to the plaintiff, in satisfaction of his claims, the reference should cease, and each party pay his own costs. Breach, non-payment by the defendant of this sum:—Held, that the action was maintainable, as there was a sufficient consideration for the new promise. Smyth v. Holmes, 10 Jur. 862.

—— Where Claims Unliquidated.]—A declaration stated that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiffs in divers unliquidated debts, viz. for so much as they deserved to have of the defendant for work done by them as attorneys for him; that they alleged that the debts amounted to 171*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, the defendant to 147*l.*; that it was agreed that the dispute between them should be put an end to, and the amount of the debts fixed at 150*l.*; that the plaintiffs should relinquish their claim to the residue, and that the debts should be satisfied upon the terms of the defendant agreeing to pay 150*l.*: that the disputes were ended: that the debts were agreed to and fixed at 150*l.*; that the plaintiffs had not made any further claim, and that the debts were satisfied upon these terms. Breach, non-payment of 150*l.*:—Held, that the declaration was bad in not disclosing a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the 150*l.* Bridgman v. Dean, 7 Ex. 199; 21 L. J., Ex. 90.

A declaration that disputes and controversies were pending between the plaintiff and defendant as to whether or not the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in, to wit, the sum of 173*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, for money paid for the defendant by the plaintiff and thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would promise the defendant not to sue the defendant at any time for the recovery of the sum so in dispute between them, and would accept from the defendant 100*l.* in satisfaction and discharge, the defendant promised to pay him 100*l.*:—Held, that the mere existence of disputes and controversies was not a consideration for the defendant's promise to pay, no debt being alleged to be due and no action having been commenced. Edwards v. Bough, 11 M. & W. 641; 1 D. & L. 304; 12 L. J., Ex. 426; 7 Jur. 607.

A declaration alleging that there were accounts between plaintiff and the defendant which were open and unsettled, and that there were disputes concerning such accounts, and mutual claims by each party; and that it was agreed that they should give up their respective claims upon each other; and thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would relinquish and forbear to prosecute all claims which he had against the defendant, he promised the plaintiff an annuity, discloses a sufficient consideration for the promise. Llewellyn v. Llewellyn, 3 D. & L. 318; 15 L. J., Q. B. 4; 9 Jur. 991.

Where an action has been commenced for an unliquidated demand, payment by the defendant of an agreed sum in discharge of such demand is a good consideration for a promise by the plaintiff to stay proceedings, and pay his own costs. Wilkinson v. Byers, 1 A. & E. 106; 3 N. & M. 853; 3 L. J., K. B. 144. S. P., Haywood v. Mower, 7 L. T. 562; 11 W. R. 169.

Taking Collateral Security.]—A debtor being unable to meet the demands of his creditors, they signed an agreement (which was assented to by the debtor) to defer payment on his covenanting to pay two-thirds of his annual income to a trustee of their nomination, and giving a warrant of attorney as a collateral security. The creditors never nominated a trustee, and the agreement was never acted upon; but one of the creditors brought an action against the debtor for his demand: the debtor never signed the agreement but appeared to have been willing to perform his part of the engagement:—Held, that the agreement, though not properly an accord and satisfaction, was still a good defence, as it constituted a valid new contract between the creditors and the debtor, capable of being immediately enforced, the consideration for which to each creditor was the forbearance of the rest, and as there appeared no failure of performance on the part of the debtor. Good v. Cheeseman, 2 B. & Ad. 328; 4 Car. & P. 513; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 234. See Lewis v. Jones, 6 D. & R. 567; 4 B. & C. 506; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 270; 28 R. R. 360.

An assignment of property for the purpose of securing debts due, and to be due, with a power of sale upon giving six months' notice, is only a collateral security; and, without a special clause to that effect, does not suspend the remedy by action against the debtor. Emes v. Widdowson, 4 Car. & P. 151.

Where creditors, in consideration of a debtor assigning all his stock in trade and book debts to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, agreed to execute releases as soon as the property should realise 238*l.*:—Held, that by this agreement the creditors had still a right of action, though they had taken a security from a purchaser of the stock to the amount of 223*l.* Wiglesworth v. White, 1 Stark. 218.

A creditor demanding security for a debt, the debtor agreed by letter to hypothecate certain bales of goods in the docks, but subsequently, under advice, refused to deliver the warrants. The creditor filed a bill in equity for a declaration that there was a lien on the goods, for delivery of the goods:—Held, that the effect of the agreement to hypothecate was a forbearance on the part of the creditor. Alliance Bank v. Broom, 2 Drew. & Sm. 289; 5 N. R. 69; 34 L. J., Ch. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1121; 11 L. T. 332; 13 W. R. 127.

To an action against maker of a note, payable three months after date, he pleaded that the note was delivered by him to the plaintiff for and on account of a judgment debt recovered by the plaintiff against him; and that, except as aforesaid, there never was any consideration or value for making or delivering the note to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as it shewed there was an existing debt, on account of which the note was made, and the giving of the note was evidence of an agreement by the plaintiff to suspend his remedy upon the judgment, which was a sufficient consideration for the note. Baker v. Walker, 14 M. & W. 465; 3 D. & L. 46; 14 L. J., Ex. 371.

Withdrawal of Petition to Wind up Company.]—A. having presented a petition for winding-up a company, V. & Co. signed the following guarantee:—"In consideration of your withdrawing the petition you have presented for winding up the company called John King & Co., Limited, we agree to pay you all the costs you have incurred of and in relation to such petition, and to indemnify you against all costs (if any) you may be liable to pay to the company, or to any other parties appearing for or in reference to the petition. We further agree to guarantee the payment to you, within eighteen months from this date, by the company or the liquidator, of the principal of your debt of 722*l.*" In an action on the second branch of the guarantee:—Held, that the consideration applied to both promises; that the consideration was the withdrawal of the then pending petition, and not the forbearing for eighteen months to proceed with any petition to wind up the company; and that such a consideration was sufficient to support the promise. Harris, v. Venables, 41 L. J., Ex. 180; L. R. 7 Ex. 235; 26 L. T. 437; 20 W. R. 974.

Covenant not to Sue.]—See DEED AND BOND (RELEASE).

Compromise of Criminal Proceedings.]—See infra, col. 180.

d. Of Marriage.

Agreement by Parents.]—Parents of the contracting parties to a marriage mutually agreed in writing, after the marriage, as a mode of giving effect to the verbal promises made before, to provide a marriage portion, and the father of the woman promised to pay 200*l.* to his son-in-law, and the father of the man to pay 100*l.*:—Held, that the son-in-law being a stranger to the consideration could not sue his father-in-law, upon the promise; and that the relation of parent and child did not create any exception to the rule. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393; 30 L. J., Q. B. 265; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 332; 4 L. T. 468; 9 W. R. 781.

A. verbally promised to give his daughter 200*l.*, on her marriage with B., if B.'s father would give the like amount. B. told A. that his father would do so. A. then paid the 200*l.*, after which the marriage was solemnised. B.'s father paid 50*l.* of his 200*l.*, and died leaving B. his executor. B. claimed a right to retain 150*l.* out of his father's assets. The judge of the county court decided in his favour; and an appeal from that decision was dismissed with costs. Williams v. Williams, 37 L. J., Ch. 854; 18 L. T. 783.

Parol Promise by Relative.]—The fact that a parol promise had been made by a relative of a young lady to her then intended husband that he would "make a suitable provision for her" does not supply a valuable consideration for a bond for 200*l.* passed by him to the husband subsequently to the marriage. M'Askie v. M'Caj, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 447; 16 W. R. 1187.

Sufficiency.]—A declaration alleging that C. and W. agreed to marry, and in consideration thereof the defendant wrote and sent to W. a letter (setting it out verbatim), "So soon as all pecuniary and necessary arrangements are made to constitute a legal marriage, as proposed, I will be prepared to pay over for your behoof 300*l.*," the letter signed with his initials only, "E. C.;" shows an absolute promise by the defendant, and a good consideration for it. Chichester v. Cobb, 14 L. T. 433.

A., being about to marry B., the uncle of A. addressed him by letter thus:—"I am glad to hear of your intended marriage with B., and as I promised to assist you at starting, I am happy to tell you that I will pay to you 150*l.* yearly during my life, and until your annual income, derived from your profession of a chancery barrister, shall amount to 600 guineas, of which your own admission will be the only evidence that I shall receive or require".—Held, that the letter contained a good consideration to support an action against the executors of the uncle for arrears of the annuity. Shadwell v. Shadwell, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 159; 30 L. J., C. P. 145; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 311; 3 L. T. 628; 9 W. R. 163.

An unattested paper signed by A. and by him handed to B. stated that as a mark of his esteem and great friendship he agreed to allow B. 500*l.* a year, and that after his (A.'s) death he had in lieu thereof bequeathed to him 10,000*l.* B. took this document to C., who thereupon consented to the marriage of her daughter with B., such consent having hitherto been withheld on the ground of B.'s want of means. The marriage took place, but no settlement was made by B. on his wife. A. died about six months after signing the paper, having paid B. the first quarter of the allowance of 500*l.* a year. His will contained no provision whatever in favour of B.:—Held, that assuming the consent of C. to her daughter's marriage with B. to have been given on the faith of the engagement contained in the paper, there was no such connection between A.'s promise or representation and the consent given by C. as to sustain a claim against A.'s estate. Dashwood v. Jermyn, 12 Ch. D. 776; 27 W. R. 868.

Release of Promise.]—A contract to grant an annuity, in consideration of the discontinuance of cohabitation, and of the release of an alleged promise of marriage, can be enforced in equity. Keenan v. Handley, 2 De G. J. & S. 283; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 906; 10 L. T. 800; 12 W. R. 1021.

Marriage on Faith of Representations—Specific Performance.]—Previously to the marriage of the plaintiff and his wife, C. W., negotiations for a settlement of her property had been going on, and on the 14th January, 1878, M., a connection of C. and trustee of her property, wrote to the plaintiff: "I trust to you that all will be done as we should desire, and if from any cause you are tempted to marry before the settlements are signed, you will before the wedding write a letter to our solicitors contracting to settle on C. all her fortune coming to her eventually." On the 16th January the plaintiff accordingly wrote to the solicitor: "In the event of my marriage with Miss W. taking place before the settlements are ready, I agree to Miss W.'s fortune being settled on herself." The marriage took place next day without any settlement or any further agreement or articles having been signed:—Held, that the marriage must be presumed to have taken place in reliance by C. W. upon the plaintiff's letter, and that there was a contract to settle C. W.'s property signed by the parties to be charged. Reference accordingly to chambers to settle a proper settlement. Viret v. Viret, 50 L. J., Ch. 69; 17 Ch. D. 365, n.; 43 L. T. 493

Promise by Letter to Settle superseded by subsequent Settlement.]—The father of a lady wrote to her intended husband that he and his wife had determined to settle on their daughter 2,000*l.*, and that in addition she would have 2,000*l.* on her mother's death, and at least as much on her father's death. Eleven months afterwards the marriage took place; and on that occasion a formal agreement for a settlement of 2,000*l.* was executed, the letter not being in any way referred to. The mother died sixteen years and the father died twenty-five years after the marriage. The husband then claimed from the father's estate 4,000*l.* under the promises contained in the letter:—Held, that the letter had, under the circumstances, been superseded by the agreement for a settlement, and claim disallowed. Badrock, In re, Kingdon v. Tugert, 17 Ch. D. 361; 43 L. T. 688; 29 W. R. 278.

2. Warranty.

Implied from Intention of Parties.]—An implied warranty, or, as it is called, a covenant in law, as distinguished from an express contract or express warranty, really is in all cases founded on the presumed intention of the parties, and upon reason. The implication which the law draws from what must obviously have been the intention of the parties, the law draws with the object of giving efficacy to the transaction, and preventing such a failure of consideration as cannot have been within the contemplation of either side; and I believe if one were to take all the cases of implied warranties or covenants in law, it will be found that in all of them the law is raising an implication from the presumed intention of the parties with the object of giving to the transaction such efficacy as both parties must have intended that at all events it should have—Per Bowen, L.J. The Mooreock, 58 L. J., P. 73; 14 P. D. 64; 60 L. T. 654; 37 W. R. 439; 6 Asp. M. C. 373.

As to Fitness of Articles supplied to perform Services.]—The plaintiff, a master mariner, contracted with the defendants for a lump sum to be paid him by the defendants, to take a certain specified steam-tug of the defendants, towing six sailing barges, from Hull to the Brazils, the plaintiff paying the crew and providing provisions for all on board for seventy days. The engines of the steam-tug were damaged and out of repair at the time of the contract, but neither the plaintiff nor defendants were then aware of this. The consequence, however, of the engines being so defective was that the time occupied in the voyage was increased, and the plaintiff's gain in performing his contract was much less than it would otherwise have been:—Held, by Brett and Cotton, L.JJ., that as the contract related to a specified vessel, there was no implied undertaking by the defendants that it should be reasonably efficient for the purposes of the voyage, and that therefore the defective state of the engines gave the plaintiff no cause of action, it not appearing that the engines were in a worse state when the plaintiff took possession of the vessel than they were at the time of the contract. Robertson v. Amazon Tug and Lighterage Co., 51 L. J., Q. B. 68; 7 Q. B. D. 598; 46 L. T. 146; 30 W. R. 308; 4 Asp. M. C. 496—C. A.

Held, contra, by Bramwell, L.J., that the defective state of the engines gave the plaintiff a cause of action, as there was an implied undertaking by the defendants that the engines were not so defective. Ib.

Of Fitness of Goods for Shipment.]—When the owner of a vessel has the opportunity of examining goods shipped on board of her, no warranty on the part of the owner of the goods can be implied that they are fit to be carried on the voyage. Acatos v. Burns, 47 L. J., Ex. 566; 3 Ex. D. 282; 26 W. R. 624—C. A.

Of Seaworthiness of Ship for Voyage.]—A shipowner warrants the fitness of his ship when she starts, and not merely that he will honestly and bonâ fide endeavour to make her fit. This rule is not limited to cases in which the shipowner holds himself out as a common carrier. Kopitoff v. Wilson, 45 L. J., Q. B. 436; 1 Q. B. D. 377; 34 L. T. 677; 24 W. R. 706.

Of Power to issue Debentures.]—The directors of a railway company which had fully exercised the borrowing powers conferred upon it by its special act, in August, 1864, advertised that they were prepared to receive proposals for loans on mortgage debentures, to replace loans falling due. W. offered a loan of 500*l.*; and his offer being accepted, he in the same month sent his cheque for 500*l.* to the directors, for which he requested that a debenture should be issued to him. In pursuance of a resolution of the directors to that effect, the cheque was handed to the contractor for the works, who had been (but had then ceased to be) the holder of seven debenture bonds for 500*l.* each; and he was requested to transfer one of them to W.: and it was by the same resolution directed "that such bond be on the 1st of October exchanged for a new one." The contractor kept the cheque (which was duly honoured), but was unable to transfer the debenture; and in pursuance of a resolution of the directors of the 5th of October, a new debenture bond for 500*l.* was sealed and sent to the executor of W. A director of the company was a party to each of the above transactions. By a decree of the Court of Chancery of the 14th of February, 1868, the debenture was declared void, as being for a sum in excess of the borrowing powers of the company:—Held, that the director was liable as for a breach of warranty; that the directors had power under the circumstances to issue a debenture, which would be valid and binding upon the company; and that the executor was entitled to recover as against him the 500*l.*, together with interest by way of damages. Weeks v. Propert, 42 L. J., C. P. 129; L. R. 8 C. P. 427; 21 W. R. 676.

A promoter and managing director of a silver lead ore company issued a prospectus of the company, stating that the promoters did not hesitate to guarantee to the bearers and holders of shares in the company a minimum annual dividend of 33 per cent.:—Held, that he was liable to be sued for fraud by a person who was induced, by the statement, to become a holder of shares in the company, the representation being false, to the knowledge of the defendant, and it having caused damage and loss to the plaintiff. Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476; 1 C. Building Society—Power to Borrow.]—A person lent money to a building society, established under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, and received the following certificate:—"I. P. Benefit Building Society. This is to certify, that R. has this day deposited 70*l.* with the I. P. Benefit Building Society, for a period of three months certain, upon which interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum will be allowed." This certificate was signed by the directors. The lender afterwards discovered that the rules of the society did not empower it to borrow money, and sued the directors who had signed the instrument:—Held, that they were personally liable, as the certificate amounted to a warranty on their part that the society had power to borrow money. Richardson v. Williamson, 40 L. J., Q. B. 145; L. R. 6 Q. B. 276.

On Letting Land.]—There is no implied warranty on the part of a lessor who lets land for agricultural purposes, that no noxious plants are growing on the demised premises. Erskine v. Adeane, 42 L. J., Ch. 835; L. R. 8 Ch. 756; 29 L. T. 234; 21 W. R. 802.

Demise of Land and Premises.]—There is no implied warranty attached by law to a demise of land or premises, that they are fit for any particular purpose. Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68; 13 L. And there is no implied duty in an owner of a house, which is in a ruinous and unsafe condition, to inform a proposed tenant that it is unfit for habitation; and no action will lie against him for an omission to do so, in the absence of an express warranty or active deceit. Keats v. Cadogan (Earl), 10 C. B. 591.

—— Of Furnished House.]—In an agreement for the hire of a furnished house, to be occupied from a certain date during a definite period, there is an implied condition or a warranty on the part of the landlord that the premises are reasonably fit for habitation. If they are unfit at the commencement of the term, the tenant does not obtain that for which he contracted, and is therefore entitled to rescind the agreement. Wilson

Building according to Plans.]—The plaintiff having inspected certain plans and specifications which had been prepared by an engineer for the defendants, contracted with the latter to build a bridge according thereto. The work was begun, but the mode of erection prescribed by the plans and specifications proved defective, and an alteration was necessarily made under the direction of the engineer, which occasioned great delay in the execution of the work, in consequence of which the plaintiff sustained considerable damage. In an action against the defendants for damages as for a breach of warranty:—Held, that there was no implied warranty on their part that the work could be done in the mode prescribed by the plans and specifications, and that the plaintiff was not therefore entitled to recover. Thorn v. London Corporation, 45 L. Stand at Races.]—A man, who causes a building to be erected for viewing a public exhibition and admits persons on payment of money to a seat in the building, impliedly undertakes that due care has been exercised in the erection, and that the building is reasonably fit for the purpose; and it is immaterial whether the money is to be appropriated to his own use or not. Francis v. Cockrell, 10 B. & S. 850; 39 L. Stability of Stable.]—A livery stable keeper had contracted with a builder to erect a building, of which the lower part was to be a shed intended for the reception of carriages, and the upper part to be used for other purposes. Two carriages and horses were placed under the shed when the lower part of the building had been completed, but while the contractor's workmen were still on the upper floor. The building was blown down by a high wind, and the carriages were injured. It was not disputed that the builder was one whom a careful and prudent person might trust, and that the livery stable keeper had no notice of any negligence on the contractor's part; but it was proposed to prove that, owing to the neglect of the contractor and his workmen, the building was, in fact, unskilfully built and unsafe. The judge ruled that the liability of the livery stable keeper was that of an ordinary bailee for hire, and that all he was bound to do was to use ordinary care in the keeping of the carriages; and that if, in causing the shed to be built, he did all that a careful man would do, he would be exempt from liability for an event which was caused by the careless or improper conduct of the builder, of which the livery stable keeper had no notice:—Held, that the direction was right, for it could not reasonably be inferred that he had warranted that the shed was reasonably fit for the purpose to which it was applied, inasmuch as this would charge him with a trust beyond what the nature of the thing put it in his power to perform, and although it was reasonable to require him to use due care to ascertain whether the building was secure, and by himself and his servants to take due care to maintain it in a proper state, it would be unreasonable to go further. Searle v. Laverick, 43 L. J., Q. B. 43; L. R. 9 Q. B. 43; 30 L. T. 89; 22 W. R. 367.

Day of Sailing of Ships.]—C., who resided in Ireland, having applied to emigration agents in London, respecting a passage for himself and family on board their ships to Australia, received in answer a letter in which they agreed to convey him and his family for 65*l*. This letter was written on the fly-sheet of a printed circular headed "Emigration to Australia," and which stated, that ships "will be despatched on the appointed days (wind and weather permitting), for which written guarantees will be given." Then followed a list of ships, in which the "Asiatic" was named as to sail from London on the 15th of August, and from Plymouth on the 25th. In another part of the circular it was stated: "Passengers from Ireland can readily join at Plymouth. A deposit of one-half the passage-money to be paid at the time the berths are engaged, the balance to be paid prior to granting the embarkation order." C. engaged a berth on board the ship "Asiatic," and paid the agents a deposit, but no written guarantee was given. The "Asiatic" did not arrive at Plymouth until the 3rd of September, although not prevented by wind or weather. C.'s berth was kept vacant from London to Plymouth:—Held, that the statement in the circular was not a mere representation, but a warranty that the "Asiatic" would sail on the days appointed, and that, as she did not, C. was justified in taking a passage on board another vessel, and was entitled to recover from the agents the amount of the deposit and the expenses he had been put to by the delay at Plymouth. Cranston v. Marshall, 5 Ex. 395; 19 L. 3. CONDITION PRECEDENT.

a. Generally.

Construction.]—What is or is not a condition precedent, depends not on merely technical words, but on the plain intention of the parties, to be deduced from the whole instrument. Roberts v. Brett, 11 H. L. Cas. 337; 34 L. J., C. P. 241; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 377; 12 L. T. 286; 13 W. R. 587.

Going to root of Contract.]—An agreement was entered into by which the defendant engaged the plaintiff to sing and play the principal part in a new opera, "commencing on or about November 14th, at a weekly salary of 11*l.*, and to continue on at that sum for a period of three months, providing the opera shall run for that period. The engagement to be subject to the ordinary rules and regulations of the theatre." The piece was announced for the 28th of November. The plaintiff attended rehearsals till November 23rd, when she was taken ill. On the 25th, finding that she would probably be unable to appear on the 28th, the defendant engaged L. on the terms that she should be ready, and, if the plaintiff could not, should sing on the opening night, and thenceforward till December 25th, at 15*l.* per week. The plaintiff's illness continued, and L. entered upon and fulfilled her engagement. On December 4th, the plaintiff having recovered, offered to take her place, but was refused, and sued the defendant for a breach of contract. The jury found that the non-attendance of the plaintiff on the opening night was not of such material consequence to the defendant as to entitle him to rescind the contract, but that it was of such consequence as to render it reasonable for him to employ another artiste, and that the employment of L. as made was reasonable:—Held, that the latter finding was to the effect that no substitute capable of performing the part adequately could be obtained except on the terms that she should be permanently engaged at higher pay than the plaintiff: and that being so, it followed as a matter of law that the failure on the plaintiff's part to appear on the opening night, went to the very root of the contract, and discharged the defendant. Poussard v. Spiers, 45 L. J., Q. B. 621; 1 Q. B. D. 410; 34 L. T. 572; 24 W. R. 819.

An agreement between G., director of an opera, and B., a dramatic singer, contained clauses to the following effect. The engagement was to begin on the 30th of March, 1875, and end on the 13th of July. B. was not to sing out of the theatre in the United Kingdom from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, 1875, without the written permission of G. B. agreed to be in London without fail at least six days before the commencement of the engagement for the purpose of rehearsals. B. performed the condition relating to not singing in the United Kingdom after the 1st of January, 1875, but, owing to temporary illness, failed to arrive in England until the 28th of March. G. thereupon refused to employ him, and put an end to the agreement. In an action by B. against G. for refusing to employ him:—Held, that G. was not justified in so refusing, as under all the circumstances of the agreement, the clause binding B. to be in London six days before the 30th of March, was not a condition precedent going to the root of the contract, but only an independent agreement the breach of which might be compensated for by damages. Bettini v. Gye, 45 L. J., Q. B. 209; 1 Q. B. D. 183; 34 L. T. 246; 24 W. R. 551.

Dependent Conditions.]—Where an agreement specified that advertisements should be inserted to the value of 90*l.* in part payment of goods to be purchased to the amount of 360*l.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in respect of the 90*l.* worth of advertisements without taking the 360*l.* worth of goods. Minshull v. Brinsmead, 1 Cab. & E. 97.

The terms of a contract being as follows: "1st April, 1826, sold W. P. one bale of sponge at 10*s.* a pound, and bought of them yellow ochre at 5*l.* a ton, to be delivered on or before 24th inst." :—Held, that the delivery of the ochre by the 24th to the extent of the price of the sponge, was a condition precedent to the delivery of the sponge. Parker v. Rawlings, 4 Bing. 280; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 174.

The defendant having applied to the plaintiff to sell him some fleeces, and agreed at the same time to supply the plaintiff with coarse woollen cloths, called "noils," the following bought note was delivered: "Bought of W. F. A. (the plaintiff) thirty packs of Cheviot fleeces, and agreed (i.e. the plaintiff agreed) to take the under-mentioned noils; also agreed to draw for 250*l.* on account, at three months. Sixteen packs, No. 5. noils, &c." :—Held, that the stipulations in the contract were dependent: and that the plaintiff, who had not delivered the whole of the fleeces, could not maintain an action against the defendant for not delivering the noils, without averring in the declaration, and proving at the trial, that he had delivered, or offered to deliver, the fleeces to the defendant. Atkenson v. Smith, 14 M. & W. 695; 15 L. J., Ex. 59.

Demurrer to a bill by a contractor against a company, praying relief in the nature of specific performance, allowed, with costs, on the ground that the plaintiff had omitted to perform a material stipulation which was a condition precedent to the performance of the contract by the company. Douglas v. Sidmouth Railway and Harbour Co., 13 L. T. 788: 14 W. R. 361.

Independent Promises—Intention.]—A. was the holder of certain bills of exchange accepted by O., and, whilst they were running, A. wrote to B. as follows:—"In consideration of your guaranteeing me that the bills will be paid and retired by O. when due, I engage and bind myself to guarantee unto you 300*l.* towards the payment of Scotch whiskies ordered by F. from you;" and B. wrote to A. acknowledging the receipt of the former letter, and saying, "I guarantee that O. will retire the two acceptances referred to therein, when at maturity, in consideration of your having guaranteed F. to the extent of 300*l.*" :—Held, that these were independent promises, and that it was the intention of the parties that B. should be at liberty to sue A. on the contract, without proving the performance of his (B.'s) part of the contract as a condition precedent. Christie v. Borelly, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 561; 29 L. J., C. P. 153; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 324; 8 W. R. 542.

Where an action was compromised on terms, one of which was that the defendant should pay the plaintiff 150*l.*, and another that the plaintiff should pay a third party's claim against the defendant:—Held, that the payment of the third party's claim by the plaintiff was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue for the 150*l.* Lockhart v. Webster, 1 Cab. & E. 71.

A contract was entered into between A. and B. whereby A. agreed to pay B. 80*l.* on a day certain, and B. promised to give up certain deeds:—Held, that B. was entitled to recover the 80*l.* after the specified day, although he had not given up the deeds. Cook v. Halsell, 4 W. R. 252.

Subject to Approval—By Solicitor—Prevented by Party.]—The plaintiff's claim was for commission on the sale of a piece of land by A. to the defendant, one term of the plaintiff's contract being that A.'s title should be approved by the defendant's solicitor. The defendant broke off the sale of his own accord, so that A.'s title was never submitted to the defendant's solicitor:—Held, that the plaintiff could not succeed without proving that the defendant's solicitor had approved A.'s title, or else that such a title was submitted to him as it was unreasonable for him to disapprove. Clack v. Wood, 9 Q. B. D. 276; 47 L. T. 144; 30 W. R. 931—C. A.

—— Surveyor's Certificate of Houses in accordance with Contract.]—The respondent advanced money to the appellant on a guarantee to be repaid "on the completion of six houses in accordance with a contract between myself and T." One of the terms of the contract was that the houses were to be built to the satisfaction of a surveyor, and payment was to be made upon his certificate. No such certificate had been given. In an action on the guarantee, brought by the respondent against the appellant, the jury found that as a matter of fact the houses had been completed:—Held, that the respondent was entitled to recover notwithstanding the absence of the certificate. Lewis v. Hoare, 44 L. T. 66; 29 W. R. 357—H. L. (E.)

By a contract the plaintiffs agreed that they would, during a certain term, supply to the defendants, and that they would take from them, all the coke the defendants' company should require, according to the capacity of certain ovens, provided the coke should be of the best quality, the plaintiffs on their part engaging that the same should be large and of the best quality, and equal to that made from the best coal, and be to the satisfaction of the company's inspecting officer for the time being, and agreeing that the company should have power to refuse to accept coke of inferior quality, or small in its pieces, and to purchase what they might require elsewhere if the plaintiffs did not supply coke of the best quality and equal to that above described, and to the satisfaction of the company's officer, and to charge the plaintiffs with the excess of price beyond the contract price:—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the right of the plaintiffs to insist upon the defendants' acceptance of the coke, that it should be to the satisfaction of their inspecting officer. Grafton v. Eastern Counties Ry., 8 Ex. 699.

—— By Metropolitan Board of Works—Inchoate Agreement—Building Agreement.]—The Metropolitan Board of Works the owners in fee of two adjoining pieces of land, agreed with X. to grant him a lease of one plot on his erecting on the land a building according to certain plans to be approved by the board. The board entered into a similar agreement with W. as to the other plot. X. then agreed with W. for a sublease of the first plot on similar terms. W. subsequently entered into two agreements with a company (formed for the purpose of erecting an hotel) by each of which he contracted to grant them a sublease of one of the two plots on the completion of a building according to the terms of the agreement. Each agreement provided that the company "shall before the 30th October, 1884, cover the ground . . . with a substantial building or part of a substantial building of such class, size, form, elevation, &c., and general character as shall be approved by the board or their superintending architect on their behalf, before the erection of such building is commenced." Another clause provided that the company should forthwith submit for the approval of the board plans of the building to be built by the company, and submit to any modifications required by the board. Another clause provided that "no building shall be commenced before the said plans, &c., shall have been approved by the board as aforesaid." The plans were duly submitted to the board, which was satisfied with them, but declined to grant separate leases of the two plots if one entire building was erected over both, and required that the title to both leases should be vested in one and the same person. W. endeavoured to arrange this, but failed. The company having gone into liquidation, the building not being completed, W. claimed to be admitted as a creditor of the company in respect of damages for the alleged breach of the agreement:—Held, that the approval of the board was a condition precedent to the agreement to build, that the performance of the conditions had not been waived, and that the company were not liable:—Held, on appeal, that there was no condition precedent, but an agreement to erect such particular kind of building as the board should have approved, and that, the board not having approved of any particular kind of building, there was nothing capable of performance, and therefore the company had committed no breach of the agreement. Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co., In re, Fox's claim, 56 L. T. 833—C. A.

—— By Third Party—Evidence of Approval.]—By an agreement, on the completion of work, a certificate of approval was to be produced, signed by a third person; it appeared on the trial of an action on such agreement, that the bill of charges had been referred to such third person, who signed the following memorandum: "On examining the annexed bill, and considering the circumstances, I am of opinion that a reduction should be made of 12*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* A. B." A. B. being called as a witness, stated that he disapproved of the work, and would not have signed any certificate of approval. The jury found for the plaintiff, and the court would not disturb the verdict. De Ville v. Arnold, 10 Price, 21.

Agreement to grant Lease to Nominee of Plaintiff—Statute of Frauds.]—A lessee wrote to his lessor offering to surrender his lease and to take a fresh lease for twenty-one years to a nominee, or to a company which he intended to form, at an increased rent, but otherwise on the same terms as the existing lease; and by a subsequent letter offered to instruct his solicitor to prepare a draft lease. The lessor telegraphed to him in reply to get the lease prepared. Afterwards correspondence took place between the solicitors as to the form of the lease, and the lessee's solicitor prepared a formal agreement. Differences having arisen, the lessor refused to grant the lease, and the lessee brought an action for specific performance of the agreement to grant a lease and for damages. No company had been formed and no nominee appointed by the plaintiff before the trial of the action:—Held, that assuming that there was a binding agreement for a lease, the formation of a company or appointment of a nominee was a condition precedent, and that the plaintiff could not maintain an action for specific performance of the contract, as he had not performed the condition. Williams v. Brisco, 22 Ch. D. 441; 48 L. T. 198; 31 W. R. 907—C. A.

But held, also, on the construction of the correspondence, that there was no binding agreement between the parties, and therefore the action entirely failed. Ib.

Insurance Policy—Delivery of Particulars.]—By a condition indorsed on a policy of insurance, it was stipulated that, in case of fire, the assured should, within three months, deliver to the secretary of the company full particulars of the loss sustained:—Held, that the delivery of particulars was a condition precedent to the right of the assured to recover for the loss. Mason v. Harvey, 8 Ex. 819; 22 L. J., Ex. 336.

—— Prosecution of Servant for Embezzlement.]—By an agreement and a policy of insurance the defendants agreed to reimburse the plaintiff any pecuniary loss, to the amount of 1,000*l.*, which he might sustain by reason of any such fraud or dishonesty of A. in connection with his employment by the plaintiff as should amount to embezzlement, and should be committed and discovered during the continuance of the policy. The policy provided (among other things) "that the employer shall, if and when required by the company, if a conviction be obtained, use all diligence in prosecuting the employed to conviction for any fraud or dishonesty as aforesaid, which he shall have committed, and in consequence of which a claim shall have been made under the policy, and shall, at the company's expense, give all information and assistance to enable the company to sue for and obtain re-imbursement by the employed or his estate of any money which the company shall have become liable to pay":—Held, by Lords Blackburn and Watson (Lord Selborne, C., diss.), that the prosecution for embezzlement of A. was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action upon the policy. London Guarantee and Accident Co. v. Fearnley, 5 App. Cas. 911; 43 L. T. 390; 28 W. R. 893; 45 J. P. 4—H. L. (Ir.)

As to Nature of Employment.]—In an action against a defendant for the breach of a contract to go as a surgeon on board of an Australian emigrant vessel, the contract being contained in a series of letters, it appeared that, in the course of the correspondence, the plaintiff represented that the ship was A 1, and of the burden of 490 tons; that the duties of surgeon would be light, as the vessel would not take, of emigrant labourers, over forty, and that the plaintiff would find drugs:—Held, that none of these were conditions precedent that need be noticed in the declaration. Richards v. Hayward, 2 Scott (N.R.) 670; 2 Man. & G. 574; 10 L. J., C. P. 108.

The defendant was informed during the progress of the agreement, that any appointment the plaintiff might make must be subject to the approval of the South Australian Emigrant Commissioners:—Held, that the approval of the commissioners was not a condition precedent, but, at the most, a condition subsequent, or rather in the nature of a defeasance. Ib.

Removal of Staging.]—The Wallasey Local Board, a local board of health under the Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), and an urban sanitary authority under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), were authorised by the Wallasey Improvement Acts, 1858 and 1861, to acquire and work certain ferries between Liverpool and the Cheshire side of the Mersey, amongst others Seacombe Ferry. In May, 1878, they entered into a contract under their seal with the plaintiff for the removal by dredging of a large quantity of soil from the bed of the river at Seacombe Ferry for 5,000*l.*, the work to be executed under the direction and to the satisfaction of the engineer of the board by a given day, subject to an extension of time (as the engineer might think reasonable) in case the staging on the site to be dredged (which belonged to another contractor) should not be removed in time to enable the plaintiff to complete the work by the day named. The general superintendence of the works connected with their ferries was entrusted by the board to the engineer, subject to the control of a "ferry works committee," appointed under s. 200 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and acting under the powers conferred by that act. The contract between the board and the plaintiff contained a clause that, "if any difference shall arise between the local board and the contractor concerning the work hereby contracted for, or any part thereof, or concerning anything in connection with this contract, such difference shall be referred to the engineer, and his decision thereon shall be final and binding on the local board and the contractor." In answer to a complaint by the plaintiff on the 15th of January, 1879, that his progress was obstructed by the non-removal of the staging, the engineer wrote, "I note that you are put to extra expense consequent on this delay, and I am prepared to compensate you for it on settlement." This was reported by the engineer to the ferry works committee, with an intimation that, "inasmuch that the plaintiff was not able to complete his contract until the piles had been removed, the board would be liable for the rent of the dredgers until the plaintiff could recommence." The committee thereupon, by a minute which was subsequently confirmed by the board, ordered the engineer to use all speed in the removal of the piles. The staging referred to was not in fact removed until September, 1879, and the plaintiff was put to considerable expense in consequence of this delay, by the detention of his plant and for the hire of dredgers and machinery, &c. The works were completed on the 11th of November. After some correspondence between the plaintiff and the engineer as to the amount due to the former on account of the contract and for delay, the latter gave the plaintiff the following certificate:—"I certify that Mr. George Lawson has completed to my satisfaction the work which he contracted to execute at Seacombe Ferry for the Wallasey Local Board, and that he is therefore entitled to the sum of 500*l.*, being the balance of the sum of 5,000*l.* mentioned in his contract after deducting 4,500*l.* already paid him on account; and I further certify that Mr. George Lawson is entitled to the further sum of 565*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* for extra work executed by him at Seacombe Ferry in connection with the said contract, being the balance of 1,324*l.* 10*s.*, after deducting 758*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, paid by the Wallasey Local Board at his request for the hire of dredger, tug, hoppers, and insurance; and that such several balances of 500*l.* and 565*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* are to be received by Mr. George Lawson in full satisfaction of all his claims on the Wallasey Local Board for work executed by him at Seacombe pursuant to the contract and in connection with it." The plaintiff declined to accept those sums in satisfaction but claimed a balance of 2,489*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* It was admitted that none of the forms prescribed by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 174, were complied with, that there was no consideration for any contract entered into or action taken by the defendant board except as appeared in the case, and that no document other than the original contract was under the seal of the board:—Held, first, that looking at the terms of the contract, which provided for a definite amount of dredging to be done by a certain time, with power to the engineer to extend that time as he should think reasonable in case of the non-removal of staging, there was an implied contract on the part of the board that the removal of the staging should not be unreasonably delayed; and that for this breach, if proved, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover damages from the defendants—the proper measure of such damages being the loss which the plaintiff had unavoidably sustained in consequence of such unreasonable delay; secondly, that this was not a difference "concerning a matter in connection with the contract," as to which the decision of the engineer was to be conclusive. Lawson v. Wallasey Local Board, 11 Q. B. D. 229. Affirmed, 52 L. J., Q. B. 309, n.; 48 L. T. 507; 47 J. P. 437—C. A.

Payment—Completion of Work.]—A man must complete the thing required of him before he can charge for it; therefore, if he executes it in such a manner as that no benefit results to his employer, he is not entitled to any compensation. Hammond v. Holiday, 1 Car. & P. 384.

—— Of Solicitors—Reasonable Exertions.]—By an agreement between the plaintiffs, described as the engineers and solicitors of an intended company to be incorporated by act of parliament, of the one part, and the defendants, as contractors, of the other, it was agreed that, provided the act was obtained, the defendants should carry out the works at a certain price, and that in the event of the act not being obtained, the defendants should pay a sum not exceeding 300*l.* towards the expenses in endeavouring to obtain the act. The plaintiffs expended 300*l.* in endeavouring to obtain the act, but then abandoned the prosecution of the bill on the ground that no one would supply them with funds. The defendants thereupon employed other solicitors, and expended above 300*l.* in trying to get the act passed, but ultimately failed. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the 300*l.*:—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the plaintiffs' right to recover, that they should have used every reasonable exertion to obtain the act; and that having stopped merely from want of funds, they had no claim on the defendants. Leakey v. Lucas, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 491; 32 L. J., C. P. 289; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 127; 11 W. R. 839—Ex. Ch. S P., Fishmongers' Co. v. Robertson, 6 Scott (N.R.) 56; 5 Man. & G. 131; 12 L. J., C. P. 185.

—— Of Contractor—Whether subject to Decision of Surveyor—Construction—Rectification.]—A contractor made a tender for the execution of certain works, upon the understanding that he should not be bound by the decision of the surveyor as to any addition to or deduction from the amount of his tender, and entered into an agreement with the clerk of the peace acting on behalf of the magistrates for performance of the contract. This agreement provided that in case of any difference the decision of the surveyor was to be final. The bill sent in by the contractor exceeded the amount allowed by the surveyor in his certificate by a large sum. The contractor filed his bill praying payment of the sum due to him, and a declaration that he was not bound by the surveyor's certificate, or, if he was not entitled to such relief, that the agreement might be rectified so as to enable him to recover at law without being concluded by the certificate:—Demurrer to the bill overruled, the court holding that a person executing an agreement on a particular understanding was entitled to have it rectified in equity, if as executed by him it precluded him from proceeding at law. Simpson v. Metcalfe, 3 W. R. 88.

—— For Transfer of Interest in Company—Completion of Work by Third Parties.]—The plaintiff, an engineer, had been professionally concerned in promoting a scheme for converting the Chard Canal into a railway, and three successive acts were obtained for carrying it into effect, but were allowed to expire. The defendant, also an engineer, being desirous of constructing a railway over the same line of country, entered into a negotiation with the plaintiff, the result of which was reduced into writing and signed by the defendant as follows:—"Chard Canal and Railway Company. In consideration of your transferring all the interest you may have in this company, and handing me all the plans, papers, and documents in your possession, I undertake to pay you 600*l.* provided my friends succeed in carrying out the undertaking. The amount, 600*l.*, is to be paid as follows: 300*l.* on the first portion of the land required for the railway being acquired by the company, and the balance out of the three first payments received by me on the foot of the construction account." On the following day the defendant wrote upon the document (signing it), at the plaintiff's suggestion, the following:—"It is understood that the 600*l.* herein is to become payable on the obtaining of the act; one moiety in six months, and the residue in three annual instalments":—Held, that the condition of the friends' success in carrying out the contract ought not to be read as part of the agreement finally arrived at. Bruff v. Conybeare, 17 L. T. 664—Ex. Ch. Reversing S. C., 13 C. B. (N.S.) 263; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 78.

Completion of Period—Entering into Covenant not to Trade.]—In a tender sent in by the defendants in answer to an advertisement offering a business for sale under the decree of the Court of Chancery, they offered to purchase the stock at a certain price, if the offer should be accepted by the court before a certain day; and if P., one of the partners in the business, would enter into a covenant not to trade, and would perform certain services, in consideration of which they agreed to pay him 100*l.* for the first year. The offer was accepted and P. died within a year of the agreement, having to the time of his death rendered the services, but not having entered into the covenant, no such covenant having been tendered to him for execution:—Held, that neither the performance of the services for the entire year, nor the execution of the covenant, was a condition precedent to the payment of 100*l*. Parsons v. Evans, 12 W. R. 743.

Mutual Stipulations for Partnership.]—The plaintiff declared upon articles of partnership entered into between him and the defendant, by which the latter undertook to pay to the credit of the concern 5,000*l*.; the plaintiff undertook to pay 2,000*l*. or thereabouts, and to make arrangements with regard to the premises in which the business was to be carried on: the agreement provided that, if the plaintiff brought in less than 2,000*l*., the residue of that amount should be made up from the profits accruing due to him out of the business; that, after the 2,000*l*. had been so paid, a further sum of 3,000*l*. should be paid by the plaintiff either in money or by the deduction of one-third of his profits; that a licence should be obtained by the plaintiff at his own expense; that a banker's account should be obtained by the plaintiff at his own expense; and that the banker's account should be under the control of the defendant, as well as the employment of the clerks and servants, and the regulation of the general business accounts. The declaration alleged that the defendant had not paid the 5,000*l*. into the concern in pursuance of the agreement. A plea that the plaintiff had not procured the licence, and had not paid the 2,000*l*. into the concern, is bad, the procurement of the licence and the payment of the 2,000*l*. not being conditions precedent to the payment by the defendant of the 5,000*l*. Kemble v. Mills, 2 Scott (N.R.) 121; 1 Man. & G. 757; 9 D. P. C. 446.

Assignment of Patent—Payment of Fees.]—By an agreement between A. and B., it was agreed that A. should do all acts necessary, except the advance of money, for the purpose of procuring and perfecting certain letters patent, and should, immediately after the same were procured, execute an assignment of one-third share therein to B., and B. agreed to pay all fees and disbursements that might be necessary for procuring the letters patent, enrolling the specification, and otherwise in perfecting the same. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 5, s. 2, all letters patent shall be made subject to the condition that the same shall be void, and the privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine at the end of three and seven years respectively, unless there be paid before the expiration of the three and seven years respectively two several sums of 50*l*. and 100*l*., as therein mentioned:—Held, that the execution of an assignment by A. was the whole consideration for the undertaking of B. to pay the sums mentioned in that section, and consequently a condition precedent to his right to sue B. for the non-payment thereof. Hill v. Mount, 18 C. B. 72; 25 L. J., C. P. 190; 4 W. R. 563. See also Hall v. Bainbridge, post, col. 133.

Assignment of Shares in a Society—Vesting.]—In an agreement between the plaintiff and W., of the one part, and the defendant of the other, in consideration of a sum of money, to be paid in five portions—one to the plaintiff for shares held by him in a society; one to the plaintiff for shares held in the society by T., a stranger to the agreement; one to W., for shares held by him in the society; and one to G., a stranger to the agreement, for shares held by him in the society—the plaintiff and W. agreed that the entire property in the society should vest in the defendant. The plaintiff sued on this agreement, and the defendant pleaded that the shares of G. and T. had not vested in him, and that they had repudiated the contract; that the shares mentioned in the agreement constituted all the shares in the society; and that the substantial part of the agreement was, that all shares of the society should vest in the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not precluded from recovering the proportion of the money for the shares actually delivered by him, and received by the defendant. White v. Beeton, 7 H. & N. 42; 30 L. J., Ex. 373; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 735; 4 L. T. 474; 9 W. R. 751.

Successive Deliveries—Non-payment for one Delivery.]—The respondents bought from the appellant company 5,000 tons of steel of the company's make, to be delivered 1,000 tons monthly, commencing January, 1881, payment within three days after receipt of shipping documents. In January the company delivered part only of that month's instalments, and in the beginning of February made a further delivery. On the 2nd of February, shortly before payment for these deliveries became due, a petition was presented to wind up the company. The respondents, bonâ fide, under the erroneous advice of their solicitor that they could not, without leave of the court, safely pay pending the petition, objected to make the payments then due unless the company obtained the sanction of the court, which they asked the company to obtain. On the 10th February the company informed the respondents that they should consider the refusal to pay as a breach of contract, releasing the company from any further obligations. On the 15th February an order was made to wind up the company by the court. A correspondence ensued between the respondents and the liquidator, in which the respondents claimed damages for failure to deliver the January instalment, and a right to deduct those damages from any payments then due; and said that they always had been and still were ready to accept such deliveries and make such payments as ought to be accepted and made under the contract, subject to the right of set-off. The liquidator made no further deliveries, and brought an action in the name of the company for the price of the steel delivered. The respondents counter-claimed for damages for breaches of contract for non-delivery:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the contract, payment for a previous delivery was not a condition precedent to the right to claim the next delivery; that the respondents had not, by postponing payment under erroneous advice, acted so as to show an intention to repudiate the contract, or so as to release the company from further performance. Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, 53 L. J., Q. B. 497; 9 App. Cas. 434; 51 L. T. 637; 32 W. R. 989—H. L. (E.)

Declaration, that it was agreed that plaintiff should purchase of defendant 30,000 tons of coal, and that defendant should ship the same on board certain vessels for six months from 1st August, and should load each vessel within twenty-four hours after notice that she was ready to be loaded at T. docks. Averment, that defendant broke the agreement in this, that he did not load a certain screw steamer as agreed within twenty-four hours after she was ready; and afterwards further broke the agreement, and absolutely refused to perform it, or to ship any more goods for plaintiff as agreed. Plea to the second breach, that before defendant absolutely refused as alleged, plaintiff absolutely refused to pay, according to the agreement, for certain coals that had theretofore been shipped for and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, although requested by defendant to pay for the same according to the agreement, wherefore defendant refused to load until such payment was made:—Held, a bad plea. Clarke v. Burn, 14 L. T. 439.

Sum Payable on Sale of Works and Assignment of Patent.]—A., having an estate for sale which he conceived might be more advantageously disposed of in connection with a patent right possessed by B., a negotiation took place between them which resulted in the following proposal from B.:—"I give A. full liberty to make use of my patent-right for the jug in his advertisement for the sale of the Arley works, upon the recognised condition, that if the works are sold I am to receive 1,000*l*." This proposal was assented to by A., and the patent was tendered to him; but he required an assignment, and B. not being willing to make an assignment, the negotiation went off. The estate, without the patent right, was afterwards conveyed to a company, which A. was instrumental in forming, and in which he became a shareholder:—Held, that the event upon the happening of which B. was to be entitled to the 1,000*l*. had never happened. Pelly v. Sidney, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 679; 28 L. J., C. P. 182; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 793.

Execution of Bond to Perform Agreement]—A. covenanted forthwith to procure a vessel and stow a cable on board at a certain wharf, and to have her ready for sea before the 15th of July, 1855, and B. covenanted to provide the cable, and to pay A. 5,000*l*. by instalments: the first instalment of 1,000*l*. to be paid seven days after the arrival of the vessel at the wharf, and the other instalments at other times, with other covenants; and it was mutually agreed that each party should, within ten days after the execution of the agreement, give and execute to the other a bond, with two sureties in 5,000*l*., for the due performance of the covenants on his part. In an action on this agreement, the breach assigned being the non-providing of the cable by B.:—Held, that the giving of the bond was a condition precedent to A.'s right to sue upon the contract. Roberts v. Brett, 11 H. L. Cas. 337; 34 L. J., C. P. 241; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 377; 12 L. T. 286; 13 W. R. 587.

Covenant against Distress by Superior Landlord.]—To a declaration upon an absolute contract by the defendant to indemnify the plaintiff, his tenant, against the consequences of the non-payment of his rent to the superior landlord, alleging for breach, that, the rent being in arrear, the goods of the plaintiff were seized by the superior landlord, the defendant pleaded, that, at the time of the distress, more was due from the plaintiff to the defendant for rent than the amount distrained for:—Held, no answer, the payment of the rent by the plaintiff not being a condition precedent. Briant v. Pilcher, 16 C. B. 354; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1020; 3 W. R. 483.

Renewal of Lease—Covenant for.]—A lease for twenty-one years, granted in pursuance of covenants for renewal, contained a covenant by the lessors that they would "from time to time before the expiration of the term thereby granted, whenever thereunto required by the lessees, and upon receiving from them" a fine of 1,000*l*., grant to the lessees a new lease, the lessees executing a counterpart, and paying the expenses of the lease and counterpart, and paying to the lessors "on the execution thereof respectively" a fine of 1,000*l*.; and every such new lease was to contain a covenant for renewal, "it being the intention of the parties that the lease should be renewable for ever at the option of the lessees, in pursuance of the covenant in the lease." The lease also contained a covenant by the lessees that if they should not "before the expiration of the term avail themselves of the option of requiring a new lease, and on the execution of the new lease pay the fine of 1,000*l*.," then the lessees would, previous to the expiration of the term, perform certain works upon the demised premises, so as at the expiration of the term to render up a good dwelling-house:—Held, that the payment of the fine and the execution of the new lease before the expiration of the existing term were not conditions precedent to the lessees' right to a renewal, but that a requisition by the lessees within the term was a condition precedent, and that a letter from the secretary of a company and of trustees of a guarantee fund, such company and trustees being the persons interested in the lease, written to one of several trustees of one moiety of the freehold being also tenant for life of the other moiety, was a sufficient compliance with this condition to entitle the lessees to renewal. Lennon v. Napper (2 Sch. & Lef. 682) considered, and not followed. Nicholson v. Smith, 52 L. J., Ch. 191; 22 Ch. D. 640; 47 L. T. 650; 31 W. R. 471.

Neglect to Grant Lease.]—Agreement that on payment by A. to B. of a certain sum by instalments on certain days, with interest on each instalment, B. will grant a lease of land. A. agreed to accept the lease, but failed to pay any of the instalments or interest:—Held, that the granting of the lease by B. was not a condition precedent to the payments by A. Baggallay v. Pettit, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 637; 28 L. J., C. P. 169; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 868.

Advance Note.]—A captain of a vessel signed a sailor's advance note, by which he promised that he would, ten days after the vessel had sailed from the port of L., pay 6*l*. to any person who should advance 6*l*. to H., provided he should sail in the vessel from the port. The plaintiff advanced H., on this note, 3*l*. 5*s*. in cash and 2*l*. 15*s*. worth of wearing apparel; but if he had advanced the whole amount in cash, he would have charged a discount of 1*s*. 6*d*. in the pound. H. sailed in the vessel from the port:—Held, that the condition of advancing 6*l*. on the note had been fulfilled, and that therefore after the ten days had expired the holder of the document was entitled to recover the 6*l*. from the captain. M'Kune v. Joynson, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 218; 28 L. J., C. P. 133; 6 W. R. 658.

Position of Ship.]—By a memorandum of charter-party, dated London it was agreed between A., therein described as "owner of the good ship or vessel called the M., of 420 tons or thereabouts, now in the port of Amsterdam," and B., that the ship being tight, staunch, strong, and every way fitted and ready for the voyage, should, with all possible despatch, proceed direct to N. In an action by the shipowner against the charterer, for not loading the agreed cargo:—Held, that the words, "now in the port of Amsterdam," amounted to a condition that the ship was there at the time of making the memorandum of charter-party. Behn v. Burness, 1 B. & S. 877; 31 L. J., Q. B. 73. Reversed on appeal, 3 B. & S. 751; 32 L. J., Q. B. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 620; 8 L. T. 207; 11 W. R. 496—Ex. Ch.

Naming Vessels.]—By a written agreement the plaintiff contracted to sell to the defendant from 300 to 350 bales of whitewashed Donskoy fleece wool, laid down at certain ports in England, "deliverable at Odessa during August then next, to be shipped with all despatch, warranted fair average quality; but should they prove otherwise, to be taken with fair allowance, subject to the safe arrival of the wool in good condition at any of the ports stated, and the names of the vessels to be declared as soon as the wools were shipped." To an action for a breach of this contract, by not accepting the wools, the defendant pleaded that the wools were bought, with the knowledge of both parties, for the purpose of reselling in the course of the defendant's business; that wool is an article of fluctuating value, and not saleable, until the names of the vessels in which it was shipped should have been declared, according to the contract; and that the plaintiff had neglected to declare the names of the vessels in which the wools were shipped until after an unreasonable time after they had been shipped:—Held, that the provision in the contract, that the names of the vessels in which the wools were shipped should be declared as soon as they had been shipped, was a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept and pay for them, and, consequently, that the plea was good. Graves v. Legg, 9 Ex. 709; 2 C. L. R. 1266; 23 L. J., Ex. 228.

Loading and Despatching Vessels.]—A debtor gave to his creditors the following order, addressed to the defendant:—"Please to pay H. & P. (on the 'Royal Oak' being loaded and sailed), out of the advance, 73*l.*; and the defendant signed it. The ship, having loaded, crossed the bar of Sunderland harbour, when the captain left her, and went ashore to get the ship's papers and sign the bills of lading; the ship in the meantime stood off and on, under easy sail, waiting for the captain's return:—Held, first, that the loading and sailing of the ship were conditions precedent to the payment of the money. Hudson v. Bilton, 6 El. & Bl. 565; 26 L. J., Q. B. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

Held, secondly, that the ship had not sailed. Ib.

The plaintiffs, who owned an unfinished steamer at Newcastle, chartered her to the defendants (who knew her state) by a charter-party, which provided "that the ship, being tight, &c., should, with all convenient speed (on being ready), having liberty to take an outward cargo for owner's benefit direct on the way, proceed to Alexandria," and there take a cargo for England. When the time for a trial trip came, the builders objected to her returning to Newcastle on account of the dangerous bar; the plaintiffs therefore put on board ballast and a cargo for London, where she was to be completed, and all defects were to be put right, instead of in Newcastle. The ship arrived in London, was put right, and no delay occurred by these proceedings. She then, on her voyage out, took a cargo to Constantinople, which caused her to arrive at Alexandria a few days later than she otherwise would have done. The defendants refused to furnish a cargo, whereupon the plaintiffs brought an action:—Held, that there had been no breach of any condition precedent by the plaintiffs; that they were entitled to succeed in their action; and that the defendants had their remedy by cross action for any damage that had accrued to them. M'Andrew v. Chapple, 35 L. J., C. P. 281; L. R. 1 C. P. 643; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 14 L. T. 556; 14 W. R. 891.

Goods to be taken "Ex Quay."]—The terms of a bought note were:—"500 bales of cotton . . . guaranteed October shipment, to arrive from Calcutta to Liverpool, . . . guaranteed fair Bengal. . . . The cotton to be taken ex quay; customary allowances of tare and draft; and the invoice to be dated from date of delivery." The vendors transferred the cotton after its arrival from the quay to a warehouse before they had granted a delivery order to the vendors, and then the vendees refused to accept it. In an action against the vendors for non-delivery:—Held, that the stipulation that the cotton should be taken ex quay was not a condition precedent to the vendees' liability to accept. Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 435. Affirmed on appeal, 1 H. & R. 832; 35 L. J., C. P. 304; L. R. 1 C. P. 684; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 761; 14 L. T. 670; 14 W. R. 844—Ex. Ch.

Readiness to Receive.]—A declaration on an agreement "to give yearly free to the plaintiff during three years twenty tons of coals to be put free on board ship at Cardiff for the use of the plaintiff," and a breach, that the defendant did not give the plaintiff yearly, or at any time during the three years, twenty tons of coals, or any coals, free on board ship at Cardiff or elsewhere, is bad, for want of an averment that the plaintiff was ready and willing to receive the coals, and that he had named a ship on which the defendant was to deliver them. Armitage v. Insole, 14 Q. B. 728; 19 L. J., Q. B. 202; 14 Jur. 619. S. P., Sutherland v. Allhusen, 14 L. T. 666.

By a contract made between the Eastern Counties Railway Company and the defendant, the defendant was to supply, and the company was to purchase, subject to the terms and to the extent thereinafter mentioned, all the coke that should be required by the company for working their railways between London and Cambridge and London and Colchester. The company engaged to take from the defendant 550 tons and 100 tons of coke weekly during the period of seventeen years: and that if they should require more than those quantities for the working of their railways they would take the same from the defendant, with a proviso, that if they should require less than the stipulated quantities, the supply should be reduced accordingly, upon their giving three months' notice. And the company engaged that so long as the defendant should punctually and duly supply the said coke, and so long as the same should be of the best quality, they would abstain from buying coke for their railways from any other persons:—Held, that the readiness and willingness of the company to take from the defendant all the coke they required for the purpose of their railways was not a condition precedent to their right to insist upon being supplied with the quantities expressly stipulated for, and consequently, that the fact of the company having bought coke from other persons afforded no answer to an action by them against the defendant for a failure to deliver the quantities contracted for. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Philipson, 16 C. B. 2; 24 L. J., C. P. 140.

Agreement to forward Goods — Delay in Supplying.]—A railway company agreed with the plaintiff to carry for him, at the rate of 170 tons a day, 30,000 tons of coal from a colliery to London, and to find waggons at the colliery and haul them from York to London, another railway company undertaking to haul the waggons from the colliery to York; and it was further agreed, that the contract was founded on the basis that there should be no unreasonable detention of the waggons by the latter company.—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to carry the coal, that there should be no unreasonable delay by the latter company in hauling the waggons. Johnassohn v. G. N. Ry., 10 Ex. 434; 3 C. L. R. 192; 24 L. J., Ex. 31; 3 W. R. 62.

To an action for not delivering iron sold by the defendant to the plaintiff, under a contract "to be delivered as required," a plea that the plaintiff did not, within a reasonable time, request the defendant to deliver the iron, is bad, since the defendant was bound to inquire of the plaintiff whether he would have the iron, before he could rescind the contract on the ground that he was not within a reasonable time required to deliver it. Jones v. Gibbons, 8 Ex. 920; 22 L. J., Ex. 347; 8 W. R. 438.

Failure of Purpose of Contract.]—Projectors of a railway company entered into a treaty with A. (a landowner), whereby the latter agreed not to oppose their bill in parliament, and an agreement was executed by them (as the executive directors of the company), by which the company, upon its incorporation, was to pay to A. 1,000*l.* for land of which he was the freeholder, and which was required for the purpose of making the railway, and 4,000*l.* for residential damage. A stipulation was also made that the company was to make a tunnel through part of his property, and a station was to be erected on another part. The company was incorporated, but not being able to raise sufficient funds no attempt was made to make the railway, and the money subscribed was returned to the shareholders:—Held, that the contract was conditional upon the making of the railway, and therefore that A. was not entitled to the moneys payable thereunder. Preston v. Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction Ry., 5 H. L. Cas. 605; 25 L. J., Ch. 421; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 4 W. R. 383.

A railway company contracted to purchase premises of P. for making a branch railway for a sum of money payable at the first term of Martinmas or Whitsunday after the company, on obtaining their act, should have begun to make the railway under the powers of such act. The company obtained their act, under which they were empowered to enter upon the premises of P. and to make the line, but they never availed themselves of such power, nor did they commence making the railway:—Held, on proceedings being taken by P. to enforce the agreement, that it was conditional upon the company obtaining the act and beginning to make the railway. Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Ry. v. Philip, 2 Macq. H. L. 514; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 249; 5 W. R. 377.

After Part Performance of Executory Contract.]—By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant of the 7th of September, 1867, after a statement of the weekly expenditure and profits of the plaintiff's business as a printer and publisher of a newspaper, it was agreed that, in the event of the business being proved by the books kept by the plaintiff to realise a clear profit of 7*l.* per week, as shown by the above statement, the defendant should pay the plaintiff 50*l.* on the 24th of December, 1867, 50*l.* on the 24th of June, 100*l.* at Christmas, 1868, and 200*l.* within four years from the 25th of December, 1867. In consideration of the premises, the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant all the plant and furniture on the premises, and the goodwill of the business, with all the earnings subsequent to the 30th of September, 1867, and the house and premises then occupied by the plaintiff. The defendant, on the 30th of September, 1867, entered into possession of the house, with the plant and furniture, and of the business, which he thenceforward carried on until he afterwards sold it. After the lapse of the four years, the plaintiff brought an action for the instalments, and the defendants sought to set up as a defence that the business was not proved to be worth 7*l.* clear profit per week:—Held, that, assuming that this, if the contract had remained executory, would have been a condition precedent, yet the defendant, having had a substantial part of the consideration, could not now set up the non-performance as a defence. Carter v. Scargill, L. R. 10 Q. B. 564; 32 L. T. 694.

Contract as to Crown Lands—Warrant from Treasury.]—Under the statutes 57 Geo. 3, c. 97, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, the issuing of a special warrant from the Treasury to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests is not a condition precedent to the making of any contract between the commissioners and the purchasers of Crown lands; it is sufficient if a special warrant be obtained before certificates of sale are granted to the purchaser. Att.-Gen. v. Sitwell, 1 Y. & Coll. 559; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 86.

Warrant is granted for nominating two lives to an estate held under the Crown as part of the duchy of Cornwall, but subject to these conditions, viz. provided the estate be perfected in six months after the date of the warrant; that the fine be first paid into the hands of their receiver-general or his deputy, and a certificate of such payment obtained under one of their hands and seals. These conditions not being complied with according to the strict letter of the warrant, it was declared void, and ordered to be vacated. Moore v. Crosse, 2 Bro. P. C. 241.

b. Time.

Reasonable Diligence.]—Whenever a party to a contract undertakes to do some particular act the performance of which depends entirely on himself, so that he may choose his own mode of fulfilling his undertaking, and the contract is silent as to time, the law implies a contract to do it within a reasonable time. Ford v. Cotesworth, 9 B. & S. 559 ; 38 L. J., Q. B. 52 ; L. R. 4 Q. B. 127; 19 L. T. 634 ; 17 W. R. 282. Affirmed, 10 B. & S. 991 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 188 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 544 ; 23 L. T. 165 ; 18 W. R. 1169—Ex. Ch.

Where the act to be done is one in which both parties to the contract are to concur, and both bind themselves to the performance of it, the law implies that each contracts that he shall use reasonable diligence in performing his part. Ib.

User of Patent—When Royalty Payable.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff had obtained a patent for steam-engines ; that the defendant was about to build a steam ship ; that the plaintiff agreed to allow him the use of his patent in the construction of a pair of steam-engines about to be made for the ship, and also to use his patent in engines for any other ships thereafter ; the defendant to pay 2,000*l.*, viz. 1,000*l.* on the 1st August, 1837, and the remainder on the 1st July, 1838 ; and also 5*l.* per horse power for every engine "which should at any time thereafter be made or manufactured, and used on board any other ship of the defendant, in which the principle of the plaintiff's patent should be used or adopted, the same to be paid on the entering into a contract with an engine-maker for the manufacturing of such engine" :—Held, that the 5*l.* per horse power was payable as soon as the defendant entered into a contract with the engine-maker, and that it was payable although the contract with the engine-maker was afterwards rescinded, and no engine on the plaintiff's principle was either used or manufactured ; for the consideration for the promise was the licence to use, and not the user. Hall v. Bainbridge, D. & M. 333 ; 5 Q. B. 233 ; 13 L. J., Q. B. 5 ; 8 Jur. 171.

—— When Royalties suspended on Infringement—Notice.]—Plaintiff being possessed of a patent, granted to defendants the exclusive licence to work it in a certain district, by a deed by which the latter covenanted to pay certain royalties, and to give every information the better to enable the patentee to support the letters patent ; and the patentee covenanted for quiet enjoyment of the patent by the defendants, and that, "in case any person should work the patented processes, the patentee would, at his own cost, commence and carry on all such actions, &c., as should be necessary to establish the validity of the patent and to put a stop to the working of the patented processes by such person ; and that in case the patentee should fail or neglect so to establish or maintain the validity of the patent and to put a stop to the working of the patented processes by such other person, he (the patentee) would not call upon the defendants, nor should the defendants be liable thenceforth to pay any royalty until the patentee should, by authority of law or otherwise, have restrained such person from working under the letters patent" :—Held, that the condition for suspension of payment of the royalties did not come into operation until the patentee had notice of an infringement, and until after the lapse of a reasonable time to allow him an opportunity of instituting proceedings to restrain it. Henderson v. Mostyn Copper Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 202.

Agreement with Trustees—Sanction of Court within certain Time.]—By an agreement between the trustees of a marriage settlement, and three of the committee of management of a projected railway company, reciting that a bill for the formation of the railway was pending in the House of Commons, and that the railway was intended to pass through a park which was subject to the settlement ; it was agreed that, if the bill should pass into law in the then present or the next session, the company should, within six calendar months after the passing of the bill, and before commencing the railway on any part of the park and hereditaments, pay the trustees 11,700*l.*, and that in consideration of that sum, the company should have conveyed to them nineteen acres of the land ; the whole of the agreement to be null and void, unless sanctioned by the Court of Chancery in a cause of Lawrence v. Porcher, and so much of that agreement as the court should require to be inserted in the act :—Held, that the trustees obtaining the sanction of the court to the agreement within six months after the passing of the bill was a condition precedent to their right to sue for the money. Porcher v. Gardner, 8 C. B. 461 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 63 ; 14 Jur. 43.

Taking Leaseholds — Due Completion of Alterations]—A. agreed to make alterations in a house, and to complete the whole work necessary by the 14th of June ; B., in consideration of these conditions being fulfilled, agreed to take the house on the 24th of June for three years, with the option of a lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years :—Held, that the completion of the whole work by the 14th of June was a condition precedent to B.'s liability to take the house on the 24th. Tidey v. Mollett, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 298 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 235 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 800 ; 10 L. T. 380 ; 12 W. R. 802.

Forbearance to Sue up to Certain Date.]—The defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff forbearing to take any proceedings against A., guaranteed to the plaintiff the payment of a certain sum on the 13th December then next :—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover on the guarantee that he did forbear suing A. until the 13th December. Rolt v. Cozens, 18 C. B. 673 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 254 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1073.

Date of Sailing—Act of God.]—A merchant at Liverpool entered into a charterparty on the following terms :—"It is mutually agreed between the owner of the ship "Zwaan," now at Amsterdam, and to sail thence for Liverpool on or before the 15th of March next, and the charterer, that the ship being tight, staunch, and strong, shall with all convenient speed be made ready, &c." The exception was as follows :—"Restrictions of princes and rulers, the dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation, the act of God, fire, pirates, and enemies throughout this charterparty." The ship did not sail from Amsterdam, in consequence of what was admitted to be the act of God :—Held, that notwithstanding the words throughout this charterparty, the sailing of the ship from Amsterdam on the 15th of March was a condition precedent to the obligation of the charterer to take and load the ship. Crookewit v. Fletcher, 1 H. & N. 893 ; 26 L. J., Ex. 153 ; 5 W. R. 348.

Purchase of Stock.]—In bargains for the purchase of stock, time is of the essence of the contract. Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & S. 590; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 125; 24 R. R. 243.

Purchase of Timber.]—In a contract for the purchase of timber time is of the essence of the contract; and if by difficulties improperly raised by the vendor, the timber is prevented from being felled and carried away at the time limited by the agreement, the court will not afterwards enforce the performance of the contract. Arkwright v. Stoveld, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 49.

Due Payment of Interest—Further Credit.]—The plaintiff agreed to supply the defendant with a quantity of bricks, upon the following terms:—"Terms of payment, four months' account; and at the end of four months a settlement shall be made, and eight months longer will be given on your paying interest on the amount at the rate of five per cent.: and if a further three months is required, it will be given on your paying the current rate of interest on the amount".—Held, that the payment of interest was not a condition precedent to the defendant's having the eight months' and three months' further credit. Dodd v. Ponsford, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 324.

Payment of Purchase Money—Sale.]—Decree (upon the answer admitting a contract, and a letter offering to sell at a valuation) for a conveyance on payment of the purchase money into the bank by the plaintiff on a certain day, in default of payment, the bill to be dismissed with costs. No binding contract until payment; the estate, therefore, did not pass by a previous devise, but descended to the heir. Gaskarth v. Lowther, 12 Ves. 107; 8 R. R. 310.

On Sales of Goods.]—See SALE OF GOODS.

On Sales of Land.]—See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

c. Arbitration.

Where Arbitration a Condition Precedent.]—A clause which stipulates that all matters in difference which should arise touching the agreement should be submitted to arbitration, and prohibits any action being brought in respect of the matters actually submitted to arbitration, is a collateral and independent agreement, and an award thereunder is not a condition precedent to such action, except as regards such sums as under the agreement are not payable until the amount thereof has been ascertained by such award. Collins v. Locke, 48 L. J., P. C. 68; 4 App. Cas. 674; 41 L. T. 292; 28 W. R. 189—P. C.

Fixing Price.]—According to the Roman and English law, as administered both in courts of law and equity, a fixed price is an essential ingredient in a contract of sale; a contract, therefore, which does not settle the price, is valid and complete only when and if the party to whom it is referred fixes it, and is otherwise totally inoperative. Milnes v. Grey, 14 Ves. 408; 9 R. R. 307.

Ousting Jurisdiction of Courts.]—When a contract has provided that the certificate of the engineer or of an arbitrator shall be a condition precedent to payment, the court does not obtain jurisdiction because of the power to refer to arbitration. Sharpe v. San Paulo Ry., L. R. 8 Ch. 597; 29 L. T. 9.

When under an agreement, legislatively confirmed, the parties were bound to settle by arbitration all differences that might arise between them as to the meaning and effect of the agreement, or as to the mode of carrying it out:—Held, that the jurisdiction of the courts was, by this agreement, excluded, and that all disputes arising under it must be settled by arbitration. Caledonian Ry. v. Greenock and Wemyss Bay Ry., L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 347.

The plaintiff bought of the defendant jute of a particular mark, to arrive from Calcutta, the defendant guaranteeing the jute to be of the average quality of that mark as hitherto imported, and promising that if found to be inferior a fair allowance should be made to the plaintiff. The quality, as alleged by the plaintiff, was found to be inferior, and damages were claimed accordingly. The defendant stated in defence that the purchase was subject to a term that in the event of any dispute arising out of the contract, it was to be referred to jute brokers for arbitration, and that any reference to arbitration was to be demanded within fourteen days of final landing of the jute. The defendant alleged that this was a dispute arising out of the contract, and no reference was demanded within the stipulated time:—Held, that this was a good defence to the action. Pompe v. Fuchs, 34 L. T. 800.

All contracts purporting to oust the courts of their jurisdiction altogether are void, but the determination by arbitration of the amount of damages to be recovered or money to be paid may lawfully be made a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action. Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 843; 25 L. J., Ex. 308; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 4 W. R. 746.

A building contract contained a clause that, in case of difference between the contractor and his employer, the award in writing of the architect in all matters connected with the works, or their execution, or the value of extra work, or reductions, or the meaning of the plans or specifications, should be final and conclusive, so far as the law permitted, and such award should be a condition precedent to any proceeding whatever at law or in equity in respect of any matter or thing which could or might be the subject of such award:—Held, that the architect's award was not a condition precedent to an action by the employer against the contractor for not completing the buildings, and for leaving them unfinished. Mansfield v. Doolin, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 17.

Rules of Mutual Insurance Society.]—A policy in a mutual insurance society was subject to the following rules:—(1) That the directors should have full power to adjust, settle and decide all claims and determine all disputes between the society and its members, and that their decision should be final, and that no member should be allowed to bring any action for any claim on the society "except as is provided by these presents;" and (2) that in all cases of loss of any vessel the directors should examine into the circumstances and make such decision and regulations thereon as in their judgment the case might require, and that the owner should not prosecute any action without their consent; and (3) that if any member should be dissatisfied with the decision of the directors he should take certain specified steps to obtain a revision thereof, in the first instance by a board of directors or ultimately by a special general meeting, the decision of which last was to be final:—Held, that an action could be maintained on a policy for a total loss though no final decision by a special general meeting had been obtained in accordance with these rules. Edwards v. Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society, 1 Q. B. D. 563; 34 L. T. 457. Reversing 44 L. J., Q. B. 67; 23 W. R. 304.

The rules of a marine insurance association provided that disputes should be referred to arbitration:—Held, that the assurer was not bound to submit a legal point to the decision of arbitration before suing in equity. Alexander v. Campbell, 41 L. J., Ch. 478; 27 L. T. 25.

Lessor and Lessee—Compensation for Excessive Amount of Game.]—A lessee covenanted with the lessor that he would keep such a number only of hares and rabbits as would do no injury to the crops, and that in case he kept such a number as should injure the crops he would pay a fair and reasonable compensation, the amount of such compensation, in case of difference, to be referred to two arbitrators, or an umpire. The lessor having brought an action for breach of covenant, alleging that the lessee had not kept such a number only of hares and rabbits as would do no injury, but had kept such a number as did injury, and had neglected to pay any compensation:—Held, that upon the true construction of the lease the covenant to refer the amount of compensation was a collateral and distinct covenant, and that the action was maintainable, although there had been no arbitration. Dawson v. Fitzgerald (Lord Otho), 45 L. J., Ex. 893; 1 Ex. D. 257: 35 L. T. 220; 24 W. R. 773—C. A.

Delay by Appraiser—Estoppel.]—A. agreed to sell to B. his interest in a public-house, and his furniture at an appraisement, to be made by two appraisers, the same to be paid for on B.'s taking possession, which was to be on or before the 25th of March next; and the sum of 30*l.* was paid by B. as a deposit; and he agreed that if he should not complete his part of the agreement, the sum so paid should be forfeited. The buyer and seller appointed appraisers. On the 25th of March the two appraisers met, and the seller's appraiser was informed that the appraiser of the buyer could not conveniently on that day complete the valuation, but would finish the business the next day; no objection was made to the proposed delay. The appraiser of the buyer went to the seller's premises the following day to make the valuation, but the seller refused to allow him so to do, and said he would not complete the contract:—Held, that it was incumbent on the seller, if he intended to insist that the contract should be completed on the day mentioned in the agreement, to have notified such intention to the buyer, and not having so done, that the latter was entitled to recover back the deposit. Carpenter v. Blandford, 8 B. & C. 575; 3 Man. & Ry. 93; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 58.

Award of One of Two Arbitrators.]—Where the rules of certain races provided that all disputes should be settled by the stewards, and two stewards had been named, one of whom, on a dispute arising as to which horse was entitled to the stakes of a race, gave his opinion, in writing, that the plaintiff was entitled to them:—Held, that he could not recover the stakes on the award of that steward alone, although it appeared that the other steward had stated that he would acquiesce in whatever his colleague did. To make the sole award of the latter available, it must be clearly shown that both the disputing parties, and the stakeholder also, submitted to his sole authority. Marryatt v. Broderick, 2 M. & W. 369; M. & H. 96; 6 L. J., Ex. 113; 1 Jur. 242.

A declaration for the price of goods bought, subject to the valuation of A. and B., stated that A. refused to value, but did not state that the defendant prevented him from valuing. It then averred that a valuation was made by B. alone:—Held, that the defendant was not liable for the price of the goods at the valuation of B. alone. Thurnell v. Balbirnie, 2 M. & W. 786; M. & H. 235; 6 L. J., Ex 255; 1 Jur. 847.

Award by Arbitrator's Deputy.]—In an action on an agreement for the sale of goods at a valuation to be made by A., the issue was, whether a valuation was made by A. The goods were in fact valued by B., A.'s clerk:—Held, that the defendant was not bound by it, unless it was shown that it was agreed between the parties that B.'s valuation should be taken as A.'s; and that the fact of the defendant's seeing B. valuing, and making no objection until B. told him the amount, was not evidence of such agreement. Ess v. Truscott, 2 M. & W. 385; M. & H. 75; 6 L. J., Ex. 144; 1 Jur. 358.

Duty as to Valuer.]—An agreement to settle disputes between two parties as to the amount to be paid by one of them in respect of the value of the goods belonging to or work done by the other of them, by a reference to two valuers, one to be appointed by each party, does not import any undertaking by the former that the valuer whom he may appoint shall act in the valuation, nor any liability for his not acting. Cooper v. Shuttleworth, 25 L. J., Ex 114.

The party is only bound to appoint a valuer on his part, and if the person appointed does not act, the other party is remitted to his original cause of action, and may revoke his submission, or he may possibly, if the valuer has undertaken to act and failed in his duty, have a right of action against him, but has no right of action against the party who appointed him. Ib.

Evidence as to Fact of Valuation.]—It was agreed between A. and B., that B. should buy of A. certain plant, materials, and tools, at a valuation to be made by A. and a person to be appointed by B., and that B. should pay for the same by a bill for 150*l.* at two months from the valuation, and by another bill for the balance of the valuation at three months after date. Under this agreement B. was let into possession, and A. and one C. (who represented B.), met and proceeded to value, having a list of the articles to be valued, as to all of which, except certain timber, the prices were finally agreed upon; but, as to the timber, the price per foot and the superficial measurement only were ageeed upon, the calculating the cubical contents and the carrying out the amount being left to be filled in by B.'s foreman. A. and C. never met again, and did not agree upon the sum total, but B. (after action brought for it) paid the 150*l.*:—Held, sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that a valuation had been made by A. and C. Gordon v. Whitehouse, 18 C. B. 747; 25 L. J., C. P. 300.

Failure of Arbitration.]—The defendant, as incoming tenant, agreed in writing with the plaintiff, as outgoing tenant, to purchase straw upon the farm at a valuation to be made by two persons, or their umpire. Valuers were appointed by the parties, who did not agree upon the valuation or appoint an umpire, and in the meanwhile the defendant consumed the straw:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the straw as upon a quantum meruit, the arbitration agreed to by the parties having become impracticable. Clarke v. Westrope, 18 C. B. 765; 25 L. J., C. P. 287.

Appointment and Notice thereof.]—Agreement for the sale of crops, the price to be paid on the 5th June, the valuation to be made by two persons, one named by each party, and, if they disagreed, by a third person, to be named by them before entering upon the valuation; the valuation to be made by the 3rd June, and each party to appoint a referee by the 31st May; and in case either party neglected or refused to nominate a referee within the time appointed, the referee of the other party alone to make a final decision:—Held, that the nomination of a referee included notice of it to the other party; and therefore, that a nomination on the 31st May, and notice of it to the other party on the 1st June, did not satisfy the agreement. Tew v. Harris, 11 Q. B. 7; 17 L. J., Q. B. 1; 11 Jur. 947.

Neglect to Appoint.]—Declaration on a written agreement, by the plaintiff, to let land to the defendant, with the right of sporting, the defendant to make satisfaction to the plaintiff's tenants for damage done by game on their farms; the amount to be ascertained by a valuer, to be chosen by each party, and an umpire; that the defendant entered, and preserved the game, which did damage to the tenants; that he was requested by the plaintiff to appoint a valuer. Breach, that, although, within a reasonable time, a valuer was appointed by the plaintiff, and notice given to the defendant, and the plaintiff requested him to give the name of a referee on his part, and fix a time for meeting, to ascertain the damage, in default of which the plaintiff's valuer would alone ascertain the damage done; yet the defendant did not give notice to the plaintiff of any valuer chosen by him, nor has he ever made satisfaction:—Held, that after verdict it must be taken that the declaration alleged a refusal by the defendant to appoint a valuer. Thomas v. Fredericks, 10 Q. B. 775; 16 L. J., Q. B. 393; 11 Jur. 942.

Partial Valuation.] — A declaration stated, that the defendant covenanted to pay the plaintiff 400*l.* in moieties on the 11th November and 11th May; and that the drugs, stock in trade, utensils, and shop fixtures in certain premises, should be valued by a person to be named by the plaintiff and the defendant, and a moiety paid immediately upon such valuation, and the residue at the expiration of a year. That the drugs, &c., were valued by L., named by the plaintiff and the defendant, at 190*l.* Breach, that the defendant refused to pay the second moiety of the 400*l.* on the 11th May, and the residue of the 190*l.* at the expiration of the year. Plea, that the drugs, &c., were not valued by a person named by the plaintiff and the defendant. It appeared that L. was agreed upon by the plaintiff and the defendant to value the drugs, stock in trade, utensils, and shop-fixtures, and that, after the valuation was complete, except as to the drugs, the sum of 70*l.* was agreed on by the parties as the value of the drugs, and 50*l.* as the value of a horse and gig belonging to the plaintiff, which sum, with the rest of the valuation, amounted to 190*l.*:—Held, that the jury was rightly directed, that if the horse and gig were part of the stock in trade, or were treated as such by the parties, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Rawlinson v. Clarke, 15 L. J., Ex. 171—Ex. Ch.

What included in Agricultural Valuation.]—B. sold a farm to R., and by agreement between them, E. was to estimate and certify the sum to be paid to B. for the labour of ploughing and sowing parts of the farm. E. certified that a sum was to be allowed for three ploughings of the same land, and a further sum for working and burning stroyle:—Held, that all expenses incidental to the preparation of the land for sowing were included in the terms of the agreement. Branscombe v. Rowcliffe, 6 C. B. 525; 18 L. J., C. P. 38.

Accord without Valuation.]—A., being possessed of plant and other materials for the construction of a canal and other engineering works in Holland, agreed by parol to sell the same to B., and two persons were sent to the spot to value them. An inventory was accordingly made, and on the 31st of March, A. and B. signed the following memorandum at the foot thereof; "Agreed between B and myself, 4,509*l.* 12*s.*" On the 8th of May, a written contract for the sale of the plant and materials was executed by A. and B., by which it was agreed that A. should sell and B. should purchase all such parts of the plant, materials, and things then on or about the works of the canal which belonged to A., and that the price to be paid for the same should be the fair amount of the value thereof, such amount to be settled, in case the parties should differ as to the same, by arbitration, "in manner therein provided." And that B. should pay to A. the amount of such price or value within two calendar months after such price or value should have been fixed and determined. B. was let into possession immediately after the 31st of March, and remained in possession. No arbitration was ever demanded, and no dissatisfaction expressed by B. at the price fixed by the valuers:—Held, that the event upon which the arbitration clause of the contract of the 8th of May was to take effect, viz. the parties to differ as to the value, never having arisen, A. was entitled, at the expiration of two months from that date, to recover the value agreed on by the memorandum of the 31st March, on a count for goods sold and delivered. Cannan v. Fowler, 14 C. B. 181: 2 C. L. R. 43; 23 L. J., C. P. 48; 2 W. R. 101.

d. Waiver.

Contract to Erect Buildings—Owner taking Possession.]—Where a building is to be erected, or repairs done upon, or alterations made to, a building on a man's own land, under a special contract containing a condition precedent, which is unperformed by the contractor, the mere fact of the owner taking possession does not raise any inference of waiver of the condition precedent or of the entering into a new contract, and therefore an action will not lie either upon the special contract, or upon an implied contract to pay for the work done according to its value. Munro v. Butt, 8 El. & Bl. 738 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1231. And see Mackay v. Dick, 6 App. Cas. 251—H. L. (Sc.), post, col. 147.

Contract to Purchase Mail-coach Business—Consent of Postmaster.]—A party agreed in writing to purchase the mail-coach concern between Derby and Leicester, provided the postmaster consented. The party afterwards took possession of it with the risk of obtaining that consent :—Held, that the proviso had been waived. Mansfield v. Chaslyn, 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 85.

Contract of Exchange—Repudiation of Agreement to Finance.]—Where a company contracted with a bank that the bank should, within certain limits of time, pay to the company sterling money or an equivalent in exchange for the company's silver at a specified rate, and that the company should finance goods with the bank :—Held, that compliance with their agreement to finance was a condition precedent of the company's right to demand fulfilment of the exchange contracts, but that as both parties were under an obligation to settle reasonable terms of financing, and as the conduct of the bank amounted to a complete repudiation of the contracts, the company were absolved from making further offers to settle terms of finance in order to preserve their claim for damages for breach of the contracts of exchange. Bank of China, Japan, and the Straits v. American Trading Co., 63 L. J., P. C. 92 ; [1894] A. C. 266 ; 6 R. 494 ; 70 L. T. 849—P. C.

Conditional Acceptance by Government Board—Waiver by Committee.]—The captain of an Indiaman, on arriving at Madras, reported his arrival to the government board there, and was directed by them to place himself under the orders of the commercial committee at that place. After which he made an offer to the government board, through the commercial committee, to purchase some cotton belonging to the India Company at a certain price. The government board accepted the offer conditionally, and wrote a letter to that effect to the commercial committee. The plaintiff, on being shown the letter, objected to the condition, in consequence of which the commercial committee took upon themselves to dispense with it :—Held, that the India Company could not enforce the condition against the plaintiff. Smith v. East India Co., 16 Sim. 76 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 178 ; 12 Jur. 367.

4. Impossible Contracts.

a. Generally.

Necessity of Performance.]—Where there is a positive contract to do a thing, not in itself unlawful, the contractor must perform it or pay damages for not doing it, although in consequence of unforeseen accidents, the performance of his contract has become unexpectedly burthensome or even impossible ; but this rule is only applicable when the contract is positive and absolute, and not subject to any condition, either express or implied. Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826 ; 32 L. J., Q. B. 164 ; 8 L. T. 356 ; 11 W. R. 726.

Where, from the nature of the contract, it appears that the parties must from the beginning have known that it could not have been fulfilled unless, when the time for the fulfilment of the contract arrived, some particular specified thing continued to exist, so that, when entering into the contract, they must have contemplated such continuing existence as the foundation of what was to be done ; there, in the absence of any express or implied warranty that the thing shall exist, the contract is not to be construed as a positive contract, but as subject to an implied condition that the parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible from the perishing of the thing, without default of the contractor. A. agreed with B. to give him the use of a music hall on certain specified days, for the purpose of holding concerts, with no express stipulation for the event of the destruction of the music hall by fire :—Held, that both parties were excused from performance of the contract. Ib.

Where the law casts a duty on a man which, without fault on his part, he is unable to perform, the law will excuse him for non-performance. Clark v. Glasgow Assurance Co., 1 Macq. H. L. 668.

But where a man by his own contract binds himself to do a thing, he is bound to do it, if he can, notwithstanding any accident, because he ought to have guarded by his contract against it. Ib.

On the question of executing an agreement, hardship cannot be regarded, unless it amounts to a degree of inconvenience and absurdity so great as to afford judicial proof that such could not be the meaning of the parties. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swanst. 329.

—— Corn becoming Heated.]—A contract for the sale of a cargo of corn, by a factor, on a del credere commission, described the corn as of average quality when shipped, and was made for a certain price "free on board and including freight and insurance to a safe port in the United Kingdom." &c. In fact the corn had, a short time before the date of the contract, been sold at Tunis in consequence of getting so heated in the early part of the voyage as to render its being brought to England impossible. The contract in England was entered into in ignorance of this fact. When the English purchaser discovered it, he repudiated the contract, and it was held that the contract contemplated that there was an existing something to be sold and bought, and capable of transfer, which was not the case at the time of the sale, and that the factor was not liable. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Cas. 673 ; 25 L. J., Ex. 253 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1241.

—— Contract to Erect Engines—Premises Burnt.]—The plaintiffs contracted to erect machinery on the defendant's premises at specific prices for particular portions, and to keep it in repair for two years, the price to be paid upon the completion of the whole. After some portions of the work had been finished, and others were in the course of completion, the premises with all the machinery and materials were destroyed by fire :—Held, that both parties were excused from the further performance of the contract; but that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in respect of those portions of the work which had been completed, whether the materials used had become the property of the defendant or not. Appleby v. Meyers, 36 L. J., C. P. 331; L. R. 2 C. P. 651; 16 L. T. 669—Ex. Ch. Reversing, 14 W. R. 835.

Performance Prevented by Strikes.]—The plaintiffs on the 13th September, 1873, contracted in writing with the defendant to sell 4,000 parcels of Kibbles coal at 15*s.* 6*d.* per parcel of 2,240 lbs., loaded into the defendant's trucks at the average rate of two trucks per day, a truck consisting of eight tons: in the event of a colliers' strike or accident the vendors not binding themselves to keep up the daily supply. Coal was delivered under this contract up to the 28th March, 1874, but on that day, in consequence of the plaintiffs' men refusing to accept a lower rate of wages proposed by the plaintiffs, in pursuance of a combination entered into by the plaintiffs with other masters in the district, the pits were closed by the plaintiffs, and remained closed until the 28th July, other pits in the neighbourhood being also closed by their owners for a like reason. During that time no coal was in consequence delivered; but at the end of the strike the plaintiffs called upon the defendant to take the amount of coal which still remained undelivered under the contract. In an action for not accepting this coal:—Held, that the strike was equally a strike within the meaning of the contract, though brought about by the plaintiffs lowering the wages of their men; that the effect of the strike was merely to postpone the daily deliveries, and that the defendant was bound to accept the coal remaining undelivered. King v. Parker, 34 L. T. 887.

Held, also, that under the circumstances the delay was not of such a nature as to entitle the defendant to consider the contract at an end in a commercial sense, and so repudiate the performance of it. Ib.

Inability to Supply Goods.]—A. contracted to sell B. 100 hogsheads of Gingelly oil, "expected to arrive by the ship 'Resolute,' from Madras." The ship arrived with 100 hogsheads of the oil on board, but it turned out that thirty-four hogsheads only were consigned to or under the power or control of A. Semble, that this did not excuse A. for the non-performance of his contract, and that it would not be performed by a delivery or tender of the thirty-four casks over which he had control. Fischel v. Scott, 15 C. B. 69.

Natural Obstructions.]—Under the terms of a charterparty, the defendant's ship was to proceed to Galatz, or as near thereto as she might safely get, and there load a cargo from the factors of the freighters; the danger and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation during the voyage always excepted. On the 5th November, the ship arrived off the entrance of the Danube. From that time until the 7th January following the water was so low on the bar at the mouth of the river that she could not cross. On the 11th December she sailed for Odessa, and took in a cargo and sailed for England. On and after the 7th of January there was sufficient water on the bar to have enabled the ship to enter the river, and to take in a cargo at Galatz. In an action for breach of the charterparty:—Held, that there was no excuse for non-performance, nor a dissolution of the contract by any of the excepted clauses. Schilizzi v. Derry, 4 El. & Bl. 873; 24 L. J., Q. B. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 795; 3 W. R. 374.

If performance of a contract becomes, from unforeseen circumstances, perilous to the party entitled to demand performance, the party upon whom lies the burden of performance may be justified in pausing for a reasonable time, in order to consider the danger, and, if possible, communicate with the other party. Pole v. Cetcovich, 2 F. & F. 104; 9 C. B. (N.S.) 430; 30 L. J., C. P. 102; 3 L. T. 438; 9 W. R. 279.

State Interference—Hiring.]—A declaration alleged that, by agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, in consideration of 7,800*l.*, the plaintiff sold and transferred all title and interest in and to the services and labour of 153 apprenticed labourers, formerly slaves, belonging to him, for the term of their apprenticeship, to the defendant, with a warranty of the quiet possession of their services according to law; and the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff the money in six instalments of 1,300*l.*, at annual periods, and in case of failure in the payment of any instalment, the plaintiff should be entitled to reclaim the services of such labourers during the remaining term of apprenticeship, and the services should revert to the plaintiff, the defendant remaining liable for such sums as should be then due for the value or hire of the labour, during such period as the defendant should have received the services, at the rate of 1,300*l.* per annum. Plea, that the agreement was made at Berbice, in British Guiana, between British subjects, and was made for the purpose of transferring, and purported to transfer, the services of the 153 labourers, during their term of apprenticeship, according to the statute. That the defendant had the services till the 1st of August, 1838; that in July, 1838, the governor and council of Berbice, according to the statute and the usages of the colony, made an ordinance that all persons who, on the 1st of August, 1838, were apprenticed labourers should from that day be discharged from such apprenticeship, and that, before the breach of the agreement, the labourers were discharged, and the parties to the agreement were prohibited by authority from performing the same:—Held, that the agreement was not a contract of hiring and letting, but an absolute contract for a sale and transfer of the plaintiff's right to the services for a gross sum of money, due in præsenti, though payable by instalments; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the last two instalments, though the legislature had determined the apprenticeship before they became due. Mitelholzer v. Fullarton, 6 Q. B. 989; 9 Jur. 334.

A. signed ship's articles for a voyage from Liverpool to ports in America. The ship sailed on the 5th November, 1853. During the voyage the captain shot one of the crew, and the ship was taken into Monte Video, and on the 5th of May, 1854, the British consul there, in pursuance of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, ss. 59, 60, sent the captain to England for trial, with the witnesses, A. being one. In an action for his wages:—Held, that he having been separated from the ship at a foreign port by authority of the British legislature, and sent to England without any reasonable possibility of his ever being able to rejoin the ship during the voyage, the contract must be considered as dissolved by the supreme authority of the state, which was binding on both parties. Melville v. De Wolf, 4 El. & Bl. 844; 3 C. L. R. 960; 24 L. J., Q. B. 200; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 758; 3 W. R. 401.

Charterparty.]—In an action by a shipper on a contract of affreightment, the declaration stated that he shipped on board the defendant's ship, then in the Bay of Gibraltar, and bound for London, calling at Cadiz, goods, to be safely conveyed to London, and there delivered in good order, the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation, of whatever nature or kind soever, save risk of boats, excepted, the shipper paying freight. Promise by the defendant so to convey and deliver the cargo, saving the above exceptions. Breach, that he failed to do so. Plea, that the ship, in the course of her voyage, called at Cadiz, and was within the jurisdiction of the officers of the customs there, and of a certain court of Spain; that while the ship was there the goods were, according to the law of Spain, lawfully taken out of the ship by the officers, against the will and without the default of the defendant, on a charge of suspicion of being contraband according to the law of Spain, and were confiscated, by a decree of the court, upon this charge:—Held, that the plea alleged no excuse within the express exceptions in the contract; that the decree of confiscation was in itself no answer, and that it did not appear by the plea to have been incurred through any fault of the shipper. Spence v. Chodwick, 10 Q. B. 517; 16 L. J., Q. B. 313; 11 Jur. 872.

By a charterparty the owners agreed that a vessel, being tight, staunch, and strong, and well conditioned for the voyage, should sail from Callao, and load a cargo of guano at the Chincha Islands, calling on her way at Pisco to obtain the necessary pass to load, to be given to the captain by the charterers' agents free of expense, within twenty-four hours of his application. To an action against the charterers for loading an insufficient quantity of guano, they pleaded, that by the laws of the republic of Peru, every vessel proceeding from Callao to the Chincha Islands for guano was obliged to procure from the government a written pass or permit, and that, on inspection of the vessel, the government refused to give a pass or permit, but on the owners repairing the vessel a permit was granted to load a limited quantity of guano, which was accordingly loaded, and that if a greater quantity had been loaded, the vessel and cargo would have been liable to seizure:—Held, that the plea was no answer, for the charterers undertook to procure the pass, and were not prevented from so doing by any act of the owners, there being no allegation that, in point of fact, the vessel was in an improper condition to load a greater quantity. Kirk v. Gibbs, 1 H. & N. 810; 26 L. J., Ex. 209.

Necessity of Repairing Ship.]—A declaration on a charterparty stated that it was agreed between the shipowner and a charterer, that the ship should proceed to S., and there take on board from the agents of the freighter a full and complete cargo of coals, and therewith proceed to L., and deliver the same at a wharf to the order of the freighter (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation, of whatever nature or kind, during the voyage, always excepted), that the charter should be in force for six successive voyages, and that they should be made not later than the last day of February, 1853. Breaches, that the ship did not make six successive voyages, and that the shipowner would not permit the ship to make more than three voyages. A plea, that during the three voyages the ship sustained great damage by dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation, which damage was necessary to be repaired before she could commence her fourth voyage; that the shipowner forthwith, on the completion of the three voyages, proceeded to repair, and did repair, the damage; but it could not be repaired, nor could the ship be made fit to commence the fourth voyage until after the last day of February, 1853, had elapsed,—is bad, inasmuch as the inability to perform the voyages within the time specified did not discharge the contract, nor afford any excuse for not commencing the fourth voyage. Pope v. Bavidge, 10 Ex. 33.

Performance prevented by Illness.]—The plaintiff contracted with a wife as her husband's agent that she should play the piano at a concert to be given by the plaintiff on a specified day. She was on that day unable to perform through illness. The contract contained no express term as to what was to be done in case of her being too ill to perform. In an action against the husband for breach of this contract:—Held, that his wife's illness and consequent incapacity excused him, inasmuch as the contract was in its nature not absolute, but conditional upon her being well enough to perform. Robinson v. Davison, 40 L. J., Ex. 172; L. R. 6 Ex. 269; 24 L. T. 755; 19 W. R. 1036.

—— Covenant to Insure Life.]—A., on his marriage in August, 1873, covenanted with the trustees of his marriage settlement that he would, on or before the 2nd of July, 1875, insure his life for the sum of 10,000*l*., which when received was to be held by them on trusts for the benefit of his wife and children. At the time of his marriage and until shortly before July, 1875, A. was and continued to be in good health, but after that he fell ill and consequently was unable to effect an insurance. He remained in ill-health thenceforward until his death. In an action for the administration of his estate:—Held, that the contingency of A.'s health failing was in the contemplation of the parties, and, consequently, that the covenant was absolute. Arthur's Estate, In re, Arthur v. Wynne, 49 L. J., Ch. 556; 14 Ch. D. 603; 43 L. T. 46; 28 W. R. 972.

—— Lunacy—Surety's Liability.]—In an action against the sureties of a barony cess-collection, on a bond for the due performance of the duties of the office, the defendants pleaded that immediately after the delivery to the collector of the warrant in respect of which the alleged liability on the bond arose, and before he could collect any of the moneys sued for in the action, he became, and continued, a lunatic, and wholly incapacitated from acting under the warrant, and was not able to collect, and did not, in fact, collect any of the moneys sued for, and that the defendants were thereby discharged from liability on the bond:—Held, that the defence was good. Grove v. Johnston, 24 L. R. Ir. 352—C. A.

And see also SHIPPING (Charterparty).

b. Impossibility of Performance by Act of Party.

Sale upon Condition—Seller prevented from fulfilling by Buyer.]—If in the case of a contract of sale and delivery, which makes acceptance of the thing sold, and payment of the price conditional on a certain thing being done by the seller, the buyer prevents the possibility of the seller fulfilling the condition, the contract is to be taken as satisfied. Mackay v. Dick, 6 App. Cas. 251; 29 W. R. 541—H. L. (Sc.)

The defendant in October, 1879, sold to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff bought of the defendant, 2,000 tons of pig iron at 42*s.* a ton, to be delivered to the plaintiff free on board at the maker's wharf at Middlesborough, "in November, 1879, or equally over November, December and January next at 6*d.* per ton extra." The plaintiff failed to take delivery of any of the iron in November, but claimed to have delivery of one-third of the iron in December and one-third in January. The defendant refused to deliver these two-thirds, and gave notice that he considered that the contract was cancelled by the plaintiff's breach to take any iron in November:—Held, by Bramwell and Baggallay, L.JJ. in C. A., following Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N. 19), Brett, L.J., diss., that the plaintiff's failure to take the one-third in November justified the defendant in refusing to deliver the other two-thirds afterwards. Honck v. Muller, 50 L. J., Q. B. 529; 7 Q. B. D. 92; 45 L. T. 202; 29 W. R. 830—C. A.

And see SALE OF GOODS.

Substituting Agreement—Waiver.]—To an action for work and labour, the defendant pleaded that the work was done under an agreement in writing whereby the plaintiff agreed to build for him six houses, and completely finish and give up the premises to him on or before a specified day, under a penalty of 1*l.* for each house for each and every week the works should remain incomplete and possession withheld from the defendant after that date, the amount of the penalty to be paid out of the moneys which might become due to the plaintiff under the agreement, that the houses remained incomplete, and possession was withheld from the defendant for twelve weeks after and beyond the day stipulated, wherefore the defendant claimed to deduct a certain sum of money. The plaintiff replied that before any of the penalties had been incurred, it was mutually agreed that the plaintiff should perform other work in and upon the houses in addition to the work in the first agreement, such additional work to be done within a reasonable time; that the work under the second agreement was so mixed up with the work in the first agreement, being part and parcel thereof, that it became impossible to complete the work in the first agreement until the work under the second agreement was also completed, as the defendant, at the time of making that agreement, well knew; and that the plaintiff had performed all the work under both agreements within a reasonable time:—Held, a good legal answer to the claim for penalties, on the ground of waiver. Thornhill v. Neats, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 831; 2 L. T. 539.

Semble, per Byles, J., that the replication afforded a good equitable answer, on the ground that the performance of the original agreement had become impossible by the act of the defendant. Ib.

Breach by One Party of Agreement preventing Performance.]—A. was retained by a resolution of the directors of a company, as broker, to dispose of the shares therein, upon the terms that he was to receive 100*l.* down, and 400*l.* more when all the shares were allotted. By the act of the directors, without any default on A.'s part, the company was wound up before the whole of the shares had been disposed of:—Held, that A. was entitled to recover, as damages for the breach of the contract, such a sum as a jury should think reasonable. Inchbald v. Western Neilgherry Coffee Plantation Co., 17 C. B. (N.S.) 733; 34 L. J., C. P. 15; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1129; 11 L. T. 345; 13 W. R. 95.

The plaintiff sold his interest in a patent to the defendant, and it was agreed that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff for such interest 2,600*l.*, "in such manner as shall be ultimately agreed upon":—Held, that after a reasonable time had elapsed, and after the defendant had refused to enter into any agreement as to the manner of payment, and had refused to pay, the plaintiff might sue him for the amount; and that it was no answer to allege that no agreement had been made as to the manner of payment, for the defendant, by refusing to enter into any agreement, had rendered the performance impossible. Hall v. Conder, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 53; 26 L. J., C. P. 288; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 963; 5 W. R. 742—Ex. Ch.

A declaration stated that the defendant, as executor of J., was accustomed and liable to pay over to A., under her will, rents and moneys received by him under the will to the use of A., and that, in consideration that the plaintiff would advance moneys to A., the defendant promised to repay her any such sums as she might so advance, from and out of the first moneys which he (the defendant) should receive on account of A., to wit, out of the first moneys to be by him thereafter received on account of the rents and moneys, as and when he should receive the same. Averment, that the plaintiff afterwards advanced to A. moneys amounting to 58*l.* 8*s.*, and A. thereupon gave her an authority to receive the amount from the defendant; that the defendant afterwards received 20*l.* on account of the rents and moneys, and paid the same to the plaintiff, but afterwards, and before he received any more, purchased A.'s interest in the rents and moneys, and took an assignment thereof, and thereby disabled himself from performing his contract with the plaintiff, and had ever since received the rents and moneys in his own right. A plea, that at the time of the purchase of A.'s interest, the defendant had no notice or knowledge that the plaintiff had advanced A. more than the 20*l.* so paid by him to the plaintiff, or that A. had given the plaintiff an authority to receive any further sum, is a sufficient answer to the action; for the defendant's promise did not attach until the authority was given, and A., by parting with his interest, deprived himself of the power to give such authority. Howlor v.

Carpenter, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 56; 26 L. J., C. P. 136; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 494; 5 W. R. 486.

Where one of two contracting parties so conducts himself as to hinder the performance of the contract by the other, or to subject the latter to an action at the suit of some third person, if he duly performs the contract, no action will lie for the non-performance. European and Australian Royal Mail Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 30 L. J., C. P. 247; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 136.

The plaintiff, tenant from year to year of premises, sold the goodwill of a business carried on there to the defendants under an agreement, which was to be void unless free and undisturbed possession should be guaranteed to them. Subsequently they promised to pay the plaintiff 100*l.* if he procured them to be accepted as tenants by the landlord. While the plaintiff was negotiating with the landlord, defendants transferred their contract of sale of the goodwill to W., who entered into possession and was accepted by the landlord. Upon action to recover the 100*l.*:—Held, that the defendants having, by the voluntary act of their sale to W., disabled themselves from receiving the benefit for which they had agreed to pay, were liable to pay the 100*l.* to the plaintiff, unless they could prove that he could not have succeeded in getting them accepted as tenants, if they had entered into possession as contemplated in the agreement. Bradley v. Benjamin, 46 L. J., Q. B. 590.

—— Dispensing with Request for Performance.]—A party who, by his own act, incapacitates himself from performing his contract, makes himself thereby at once liable for a breach of it, and dispenses with the necessity of any request that he will perform it by the party with whom the contract is made. Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371; 15 L. J., Q. B. 146; 10 Jur. 246. S. P., Short v. Stone, 3 D. & L. 580; 15 L. J., Q. B. 143; 10 Jur. 245; Caines v. Smith, 3 D. & L. 462; 15 M. & W. 189; 15 L. J., Ex. 106.

Assignment of Contract—Performance by Assignee.]—The plaintiffs, a waggon company, by agreement in writing let the defendants a number of railway waggons for a term of years at an annual rent, the agreement providing that the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should during the term keep the waggons in repair. Pending the agreement an order was made for the winding-up of the plaintiff company under the supervision of the court, in pursuance of a resolution previously passed by the company, and liquidators were appointed, who joined the company in assigning the benefit of the contract to another company, upon the terms that such company should perform the stipulations by the assignors contained in the original contract. The assignees took over the repairing stations of the plaintiffs and the staff of workmen employed by them, and were always ready and willing to execute all necessary repairs to the waggons:—Held, that the defendants had no defence to an action for rent, upon the ground that the plaintiffs had incapacitated themselves from performing their contract; for, first, the voluntary liquidation of the company was immaterial, the liquidators having power under the Companies Act, 1862, ss. 95, 131, to continue the letting of the waggons; and, secondly, the repair of the waggons by the company to whom the contract was assigned was a sufficient performance by the plaintiffs of their agreement to repair. British Waggon Co. v. Lea, 49 L. J., Q. B. 321; 5 Q. B. D. 149; 42 L. T. 437; 28 W. R. 349; 44 J. P. 440.

Rescinding.] — See Sheffield, &c., Co. v. Unwin, 2 Q. B. D. 214, infra, sub-tit. DISCHARGE (Rescission).

5. ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

a. General Rules.

The principles relating to public policy discussed. Westmeath (Marquis) v. Westmeath (Marchioness), 1 Dow (N.S.) 519.

Contracts are illegal from their tendency to promote unlawful acts, without regard to any circumstances which go to affect the probability of the unlawful act being done. Everton v. Brownlow (Earl), 4 H. L. Cas. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 348; 18 Jur. 71.

Whatever is prohibited by law to be done directly, cannot legally be effected by an indirect and circuitous contrivance. Booth v. Bank of England, 7 Cl. & F. 509; West, 298; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 415.

Whether Forbidden by Statute or not.]—Contracts not prohibited by positive laws nor adjudged illegal by precedent may nevertheless be void as against principle. Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 39.

Where a contract which a party seeks to enforce, be it express or implied, is expressly or by implication forbidden by common or statute law, no court will lend its assistance to give it effect. Cope v. Rowland, 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale, 231; 6 L. J., Ex. 63. See Swan v. Bank of Scotland, 1 Deac. 752.

So, it is equally a rule that a contract is void, if prohibited by a statute, though the statute inflicts a penalty only, because such a penalty implies a prohibition. Ib.

If the contract is rendered illegal, it can make no difference in point of law, whether the statute which makes it so has in view the protection of the revenue, or any other object. Ib.

In Whole or Part.]—To an action on a deed for payment of money. Plea, that it was unlawfully agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should sell and the defendant should purchase land for a certain sum of money, to the intent and for the purpose, as the plaintiff at the time of making the agreement well knew, that the land should be sold by way of lottery; and that afterwards, in pursuance of the illegal agreement, the land was sold to the defendant, and a part of the purchase-money being unpaid, the defendant, to secure its payment to the plaintiff, executed the deed:—Held, first, that the plea was to be construed as affecting the plaintiff with a participation in the intent and purpose of selling the land by lottery. Fisher v. Bridges, 3 El. & Bl. 642; 2 C. L. R. 929; 23 L. J., Q. B. 276; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 157; 2 W. R. 706—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, semble also, that if necessary to make the plea good it might be taken to mean that the deed was given in pursuance of the illegal agreement, and in that case it would be an answer to the action. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, if it was not so understood, it showed a good defence, because the law would not allow the plaintiff to enforce a security for the purchase-money, which by the original bargain was tainted with illegality. Ib.

A party cannot enforce a contract where the consideration is illegal, either wholly or in part. Waite v. Jones, 1 Scott, 730; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 656; 1 Hodges, 166; 4 L. J., C. P. 184.

—— Severance of Good Part from the Bad.]—Where you cannot sever the illegal from the legal part of a covenant, the contract is altogether void; but where you can sever them, whether the illegality be created by statute or by common law, you may reject the bad part and retain the good. Byrne, Ex parte, Burdett, In re, 57 L. J., Q. B. 263; 20 Q. B. D. 314; 58 L. T. 708; 36 W. R. 345; 5 Morrell, 32—C. A.

The principle of construction which guides the court in severing the valid and rejecting the invalid portions of covenants considered. Baker v. Hedgecock, 57 L. J., Ch. 889; 39 Ch. D. 520; 59 L. T. 361; 36 W. R. 840.

If an instrument contains distinct engagements, by which a party binds himself to do certain acts, some of which are legal and some illegal at common law, the performance of those which are legal may be enforced, though those which are illegal cannot. Bank of Australasia v. Breillat, 6 Moore, P. C. 152; 12 Jur. 189.

Where an equal agreement cannot, by reason of a subsequent act of parliament, or some other lawful impediment, be performed in the whole; yet the same shall be specifically executed in such part of it as remains lawful. Betteworth v. St. Paul's (Dean), 1 Bro. P. C. 240.

Semble, where in consideration of a lawful and an unlawful contract, a payment is covenanted to be made, the covenantee cannot split the consideration when subsequent events have determined the illegal contract. Walrond v. Walrond, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1099.

Intention.]—It is not sufficient to invalidate a contract for the sale of goods, that the vendor knew they were to be applied to an illegal purpose, unless he has a share in the unlawful transaction. Hodgson v. Temple, 1 Marsh. 5; 5 Taunt. 181; 14 R. R. 738.

A person who sells goods, knowing that the purchaser intends to apply them in an illegal trade, is nevertheless entitled to recover the price, if he yields no other aid to the illegal transaction than selling the goods and obtaining permits for their delivery to the agent of the purchaser. Ib.

The presumption of law is always in favour of the legality of a contract, and therefore if it be reasonably susceptible of two meanings, one legal and the other not, that interpretation shall be put upon it which will support and give it operation. Mittelholzer v. Fullarton, 6 Q. B. 989. S. C. (in error), ib. 1022; and see Lewis v. Davidson, 4 M. & W. 654, 657; 8 L. J., Ex. 78.

When a contract is to do a thing which cannot be performed without a violation of the law, it is void, whether the parties know the law or not; but in order to avoid a contract which can be legally performed, on the ground that there was an intention to enforce it in an illegal manner, it is necessary to show the existence of a wicked intention to break the law. Waugh v. Morris, 42 L. J., Q. B. 57; L. R. 8 Q. B. 202; 28 L. T. 265; 21 W. R. 438.

Money advanced solely for the purpose of obtaining security for a pre-existing debt, though the person advancing it was aware that it would be applied to an illegal purpose, is not money paid upon an illegal consideration. Bagot v. Arnott, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 1; 15 W. R. 812.

Where a contract to sell, which is tainted with illegality, is followed by a delivery of the thing sold, a third party cannot rely on the illegality to defeat the title of the purchaser. Ib.

Rule at Common Law.]—A court of law will not lend its aid to enforce the performance of a contract between parties, which appears, upon the face of the record, to have been entered into by both the contracting parties for the express purpose of carrying into effect that which is prohibited by the law of the land. Gaslight and Coke Co. v. Turner, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 666; 7 Scott, 779; 9 L. J., C. P. 75. S. C., affirmed, 6 Bing. (N.C.) 324; 8 Scott, 609; 9 L. J., Ex. 336.

The test, whether a demand connected with an illegal transaction is capable of being enforced at law, is, whether the plaintiff requires any aid from the illegal transaction to establish his case. A. bet an illegal wager of twenty-five guineas with B. on a horse-race, of which C., at his own request, staked ten. A. won, and paid C. ten guineas, in the expectation of receiving the whole amount of the bet from B. B., however, died, and A. never received it:—Held, that A. could not recover back the ten guineas which he had paid to C., because he could not establish his claim without going into proof of the illegal transaction, in which both were equally engaged. Simpson v. Bloss, 2 Marsh. 542; 7 Taunt. 246; 17 R. R. 509.

An illegal contract, if rescinded as to part, must be rescinded in toto. Therefore, where goods were delivered under an agreement to take a specific parcel of copper money in payment, a delivery of such copper, though in fact counterfeit money, will be a bar to an action. Alexander v. Owen, 1 Term Rep. 225.

Rule in Equity.]—A contract or an instrument which fails in a court of law by reason of its illegality will not be enforced in equity because money has been paid and received in respect of it. Equitable terms can be imposed on a plaintiff seeking to set aside an illegal contract as the price of the relief he asks; but as to any claim sought to be actively enforced, the defence of illegality is as available in a court of equity as it is in a court of law. Cork and Youghal Ry., In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 277; L. R. 4 Ch. 748; 21 L. T. 735; 18 W. R. 26.

No equity can be enforced on illegal contracts, or contracts against public policy. Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Ves. 470; 6 R. R. 151.

Equity will not look minutely into the circumstances of a transaction impeached on the grounds of public policy. Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 338.

—— Jurisdiction to order Delivery up of Instruments.]—There is no jurisdiction in equity to order a legal instrument to be delivered up on the ground of illegality which appears upon the face of the instrument itself. Simpson v. Howden (Lord), 3 Myl. & C. 97; 1 Jur. 703. Reversing, 1 Keen, 583; 6 L. J., Ch. 315.

Equity has jurisdiction to order an instrument to be delivered up, though void at law, as if against policy. St. John (Lord) v. St. John (Lady), 11 Ves. 535.

On a bill for account of illegal contract, though subsequently become legal, as a set-off against a separate demand, and for which the defendant had brought an action against the plaintiff, an injunction which had been obtained on the filing of the bill was dissolved, on the ground of it being an illegal contract, and although defendant had not relied on the illegality of the contract as a ground of defence, the court itself setting up the objection. Evans v. Richardson, 3 Mer. 469.

A promissory note suspicious in itself, under the circumstances, and the admitted object of it being an improper one, even if the note were actually genuine, decreed, at the instance of the person alleged to have given it, to be deposited with the registrar of the court, in the first instance, with a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to be relieved against it without preventing the defendant from bringing an action on it within a reasonable time; and if delay in doing so, then to be delivered up. Winchester (Bishop) v. Fournier, 2 Ves. 445.

Whether either Party entitled to Relief.]—Parties to a contract which is against public policy or illegal are not always regarded as being in pari delicto, but public policy is sometimes considered as advanced by allowing either or the more excusable of the parties to sue for relief against the transaction. Reynell v. Sprye. 8 Hare, 275. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 660; 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

The rule in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis, preventing suit is not universal, admitting degrees of guilt by concurring in the same criminal act. Osborne v. Williams, 18 Ves. 379; 11 R. R. 218.

The court will entertain a bill for a discovery, and to perpetuate evidence, in aid of a defence to an action at law on a contract, although the discovery and evidence are to establish that the contract was void, as corrupt, illegal, and unconstitutional, and that both parties were in pari delicto. Longfield v. Aubrey, 1 Hog. 300. And see Benyon v. Nettlefold, 17 Sim. 51; 18 L. J., Ch. 445; 13 Jur. 798. Reversed, 3 Mac. & G. 94; 20 L. J., Ch. 186; 15 Jur. 209.

Fraud on Third Party.] — An agreement made with the purpose of doing something which is calculated to defraud or injure a third party is illegal and void as between the parties to it; and it makes no difference that no damage has in fact been sustained by such third party. Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 47 L. J., Q. B. 594; 3 Q. B. D. 549; 39 L. T. 120; 26 W. R. 740.

Where a bargain is made between one who is in the employ of another and a third party who has contracted with the employer, which bargain is calculated to bias the mind of the employed and to cause him to act to the prejudice of the employer, such bargain is corrupt, even though it does not actually bias the mind of the employed, and though no damage results to the employer. Ib.

—— Agreement to make a Market for Shares —Criminal Conspiracy.]—An agreement between two or more persons to induce would-be buyers of shares in a company, contrary to the fact, to believe that there was a market for the shares, and that the shares were of greater value than they really were, is an illegal transaction, and can be made the subject of an indictment for conspiracy. Scott v. Brown, 61 L. J., Q. B. 738; [1892] 2 Q. B. 724; 4 R. 42; 67 L. T. 782; 41 W. R. 116; 57 J. P. 213—C. A.

b. Contrary to Public Policy.

Affecting Third Persons.] — By agreement between A. and B., reciting that A. was expecting to become seised in fee of premises on the death of S., widow, as the devisee under her will (which premises were then in the occupation of lessees under a lease, of which A. was assignee), and that A. had contracted to sell all the possibility and expectancy of an estate and interest in the premises to B., for all A.'s estate and interest therein expectant, for 2,000*l.*, which B. agreed to pay to him, A. agreed with B. that he would, within three months from the decease of S., in case A. became devisee, convey the premises to B., his heirs and assigns, and make him a good title, and that B. should in that event become entitled to the rents and profits from the day of S.'s decease; and that in case A. should not become the devisee or should not make a good title within six months from the decease of S., A should, within the latter period, repay the 2,000*l.* (without interest) to B., and that A. should execute a deed, assigning a policy on his life as a security for such repayment, B. to re-assign if the conveyance should be perfected according to the agreement. The deed was executed accordingly:—Held, that the agreement was not illegal as contravening public policy by creating an interest in S.'s death, or in the exercise of an undue influence over her mind as to the making of her will. Cook v. Field, 19 Q. B. 460; 14 L. J., Q. B. 441; 14 Jur. 951.

By Public Officer.]—A. obtained a judgment against B., who was possessed of lands for a term of years, subject to a mortgage, and issued and lodged with the sheriff a writ of fi. fa.; and while the writ was in the sheriff's hands, A.'s solicitor entered into an agreement with the mortgagees that, in consideration of their consenting to a sale of the leasehold interest through the sheriff, under the writ of fi. fa., he (A.'s solicitor) would take care to have the same sold subject to and guarded by proper conditions of sale so that the mortgage debt should, in the first instance, be paid out of the proceeds of sale. In an action by the mortgagees against A.'s solicitor for breach of contract in not carrying out the said agreement:—Held, that the agreement was an undertaking to procure the performance by the sheriff of an act which would be a violation of his duty; first, in selling under the writ an interest not thereby authorised to be sold; and, secondly, in the payment of the proceeds of sale to a person other than the execution creditor; that, therefore, the agreement was void as against public policy, and one for breach of which an action would not lie. Moher v. O'Grady, 4 L. R., Ir. 54.

Not to Tender.]—Tenders for the supply of stone having been invited by a corporation, it was agreed between A., B., C. and D., quarry owners, that B. should not tender, that C. and D. should tender above A.'s price, that A. should purchase certain quantities of stone from B., C. and D. at a fixed price, and that B., C. and D. should not supply the corporation with stone during 1875. The stone was purchased, as agreed, by A., but B., in breach of the agreement, sent in a tender, which was accepted:—Held, that the agreement was not void, and that a bill would lie by A. to restrain B. from supplying the corporation directly or indirectly during 1875 with stone, without making the corporation parties. Jones v. North, 44 L. J., Ch. 388; L. R. 19 Eq. 426; 32 L. T. 149; 23 W. R. 468.

Not to expose Misconduct.]—To a declaration in an action on a bond against an executor, he pleaded, for an equitable defence, that before the making of the bond the plaintiff had seduced and committed adultery with the wife of the testator, and that, after the making of the bond and before action, it was agreed between the testator and the plaintiff, that, in consideration that the testator would not expose and make public the conduct of the plaintiff with regard to the seduction and adultery, the plaintiff would not enforce payment of or sue on the bond:—Held, that such an agreement was against public policy, and furnished no valid consideration for the promise of the plaintiff, and therefore the plea was bad. Brown v. Brine, 45 L. J., Ex. 129; 1 Ex. D. 5; 33 L. T. 703; 24 W. R. 177.

Votes at Charity Election.]—The plaintiff and defendant were both subscribers to a charity, the objects of which were elected by the subscribers who had votes proportioned in number to the amount they had subscribed. They expressly agreed that if the plaintiff would give twenty-eight votes for an object of the charity whom the defendant favoured, the defendant would at the next election give twenty-eight votes for such object of the charity as the plaintiff should then favour:—Held, that there was a legal consideration for the defendant's promise, and that the agreement was not void as against public policy. Bolton v. Maddan, 43 L. J., Q. B. 35; L. R. 9 Q. B. 55; 29 L. T. 505; 22 W. R. 207.

Agreement originating in Communications by Commissioners and Witnesses as to Evidence.]—Bill for specific performance of agreement, originating in communications by commissioners, who took the depositions in a cause, and by witnesses, to defendant as to nature and effect of evidence; though plaintiff was not implicated in the transaction, bill was dismissed on grounds of public policy. Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 12. See 10 R. R. 190.

Payment of "Differences" as between Broker and Principal—"Time Bargains."]—The plaintiff, a broker, was employed by the defendant to speculate for him upon the Stock Exchange; to the knowledge of the plaintiff the defendant did not intend to accept the stock bought for him, or to deliver the stock sold for him, but expected that the plaintiff would so arrange matters that nothing but differences should be payable by him; the plaintiff knew that unless he could arrange matters for the defendant as the latter expected, the defendant would be unable to meet the engagements which the plaintiff might enter into for him. The plaintiff accordingly entered into contracts on behalf of the defendant, upon which the plaintiff became personally liable; and he sued the plaintiff for indemnity against the liability incurred by him and for commission as broker:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; for the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant was not against public policy, and was not illegal at common law, and, further, was not in the nature of a gaming and wagering contract against the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Thacker v. Hardy, 48 L. J., Q. B. 289; 4 Q. B. D. 685; 39 L. T. 595; 27 W. R. 158—C. A.

Validity of Agreement to pay Purchase-money for Land and Buy off Opposition.]—A railway company, proposing to apply to parliament for an Extension Act, which a landowner, over whose estate the proposed railway was to pass, threatened to oppose, made an unconditional agreement with him under the seal of the company, by which, after reciting that he agreed to withdraw his opposition, the company agreed to make the line, and to pay 2,000*l.* for his land therein specified, required for the railway, and by clause 3 that they should pay him 2,000*l.* within three months from the passing of the act, as and for a personal compensation to him for the annoyance, inconvenience, loss, &c., which he had sustained, or might sustain, in respect of the sporting and game upon his estate, in consequence of the construction of the intended works, and of the surveys and other works incidental thereto. The landowner agreed not to oppose the passing of the bill. The bill passed and three months afterwards he brought an action to recover the money:—Held, that the contract was not ultra vires of the directors, in the sense of being prohibited by the legislature, and was therefore a legal contract binding upon the company. Taylor v. Chichester and Midhurst Ry., 39 L. J., Ex. 217; L. R. 4 H. L. 628; 23 L. T. 657. Reversing 16 W. R. 147—Ex. Ch.

Securities given to persons who would be prejudiced by the passing of a private bill in parliament, in consideration of their withdrawing their opposition to it, are illegal on the ground of public policy. Vauxhall Bridge Co. v. Spencer (Earl), Jacob, 64; 2 Madd. 357.

An agreement not to oppose a railway bill in parliament is not illegal. The projectors of a railway, pending a bill in parliament for incorporating them, made an agreement on behalf of the proposed corporation, in consequence of which a threatened opposition to the bill was withdrawn:—Held, that the corporation, having received the benefit of the agreement, was bound by it. Edwards v. Grand Junction Ry., 7 Sim. 337. Affirmed on appeal, 1 Mylne & C. 650. Disapproved, Caledonian Ry. v. Helensburgh, 2 Macq. H. L. 391; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 695; 4 W. R. 671.

—— With Member of Parliament.]—A private agreement between a peer of parliament and the promoters of a particular railway, that the former should accept a sum of money by way of compensation, in respect of the damage that may be done to his lands, and should not oppose the passing of the bill to establish the railway, is valid. Simpson v. Howden (Lord), 9 Cl. & F. 61; 3 Railw. Cas. 294.

It is not illegal for the promoters of a railway to agree personally with a landowner, even (so long as there is no proof of corrupt influence on his vote) though he is a member of either house of parliament, to pay him a sum of money for withdrawing his opposition to their bill, or giving his countenance and support to their scheme; but such a payment is not an "expense incurred in obtaining the special act, or incident thereto," within s. 5 of the Companies Clauses Act, and cannot so be upheld as a liability of the

Arbitrator—Award not to be Impeached for Fraud.]—A clause in a building contract providing that the valuations, certificates, orders, and awards of the arbitrator appointed thereunder should be final and binding, and should not be set aside for any pretence, charge, suggestion, or insinuation of fraud, collusion, or confederacy:—Held, not obnoxious to public policy, for, in the absence of fraud on the part of the parties to the contract, it was competent to them to agree not to raise any question of fraud in the arbitrator. Tullis v. Jacson, 61 L. J., Ch. 655; [1892] 3 Ch. 441; 67 L. T. 340; 41 W. R. 11.

Grant of Annuity until Grantee is in Possession of a Living.]—Bond by a father to secure an annuity to his son until he should be in possession of a living of a certain value, and an agreement of the same date reciting the bond, declaring that the son would forthwith enter into holy orders, and accept such living. The Lord Chancellor expressed a strong opinion that upon grounds of public policy, by the effect of the agreement, the transaction was illegal; but the decision was, upon the ground that the son had not complied with the condition, having received the annuity nine years, and being still only in deacon's orders, that the annuity was determinable by the father or his representatives. Kircudbright (Lord) v. Kircudbright (Lady), 8 Ves. 51; 6 R. R. 216.

Where Suspicion of Undue Influence.]—Contracts contrary to the policy of the law, as a deed of gift by a client to an attorney, by an heir to guardian, the purchase of a reversion from a young heir, the trustee selling to himself, set aside without evidence of fraud. Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 371; 8 R. R. 338.

Instrument giving Separate Rights to Different Persons.]—It is no legal objection to a written contract that it gives separate rights of action to different persons. Best v. Saunders, 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 50; 3 M. R. 4.

Unnatural Agreements.]—One differing with his mother, settles his mansion-house on his brother, but first takes a bond from him in his sister's name, that the brother should not permit his mother to come into the house. Bond set aside in equity, as unnatural. Traiton v. Traiton, 1 Vern. 413.

Where parent had objected to daughter's marriage with an individual, and she entered into a secret bond to forfeit 500*l.* if she did not marry him in thirteen months after parent's death: on her application for relief against bond, decreed that it should be cancelled, such a transaction being encouragement to disobedience and fraud on parents. Woodhouse v. Shepley, 2 Atk. 535.

A contract by a wife with her husband to bring up an infant child is void as against public policy. Walrond v. Walrond, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1099.

Agreement to Divide Benefits to be received under a Will or by Descent.]—Contracts made during the lifetime of a testator, and fairly obtained by persons living in expectation of receiving benefits under his will, to divide among them any such benefits after his death, if amounting to agreements to use undue influence upon the testator, are bad; but they are good if amounting to agreements to disinterestedly abstain from interfering with the testator, and will be upheld where there is mutuality of consideration. Higgins v. Hill, 56 L. T. 426.

An agreement between two sons to divide equally whatever property they may receive from their father in his lifetime, or become entitled to under his will, or by descent or otherwise from him, is not contrary to public policy, but will be enforced in equity. Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183; 29 R. R. 77. S. P., Harwood v. Tooke, 2 Sim. 192; 29 R. R. 81.

According to all law, and upon principle, where there is fairly a doubt as to the rights of parties, and an agreement without fraud, it is binding. In a case of doubt as to legitimacy, an agreement between claimants to divide the property is valid. Hotchkis v. Dickson, 2 Bligh, 348; 21 R. R. 89.

The case is different where there is a question whether the parties dealt with equal knowledge of the subject. So where there is a suppression of a material fact by one of the parties, e.g. the private marriage of the father, which the defendant knows and calls a mere ceremony. The fact, whatever its character may have been, should be communicated at the time of the agreement. Such communication is essential to the fairness and validity of the transaction between brothers on a question of rights depending upon legitimacy. Ib.

Illegal Race—Action for Reward.]—If A. employs B. to run an illegal race, B. cannot sue A. for the stipulated reward. Coates v. Hatton, 3 Stark. 61.

Removal of Corpses.]—An agreement to build houses on a disused, unconsecrated burial ground, necessitating the removal of some thousands of corpses, which removal would of necessity involve an outrage on public decency, and amount to an indictable offence, is illegal. Gibbons v. Chambers, 1 Cab. & E. 577.

Recovery of Money Paid.]—A person who has authorised the application of his money to an illegal purpose can recover it before it has been paid over or applied to such purpose. Bone v. Ekless, 5 H. & N. 925; 29 L. J., Ex. 438.

The defendant employed the plaintiff to sell a ship to a foreign government, authorising him to employ a part of the proceeds in bribing its officials. The plaintiff sold the ship to the government, and informed the defendant that he had sold it for a certain sum net; that the difference was to be applied in bribing the officials as agreed. This the defendant ratified, and the whole of the purchase-money having been paid to the plaintiff, as the defendant's agent, the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum mentioned between them as net; paid a part of the difference to the officials, and retained the rest:—Held, that the defendant had a right to set off this latter sum in an action brought against him by the plaintiff, as the defendant, in claiming it, was not setting up or relying on the illegal arrangement, and he would have a right to recover it as received to his use. Ib.

Question, how Raised and Determined.]—The question whether a contract is void, as contrary to public policy, is for the court when the circumstances raising the question are conceded; and semble, that a plaintiff in his declaration or a defendant in his plea may introduce averments of circumstances for the purpose of maintaining either side of that proposition. Tallis v. Tallis, 1 El. & Bl. 391; 22 L. J., Q. B. 185; 17 Jur. 1149; 1 W. R. 114.

Pleas.]—Plea by a railway company, that a certain contract was, under the provisions of an act of parliament, illegal, and could not be enforced. It appeared the contract was, in fact, illegal on general equitable principles:—Held, that the plea sufficiently raised the general question of illegality. Aberdeen Ry. v. Blaikie, 2 Eq. Rep. 1281.

The defence that the transaction under which the plaintiff claims was illegal must be pleaded in distinct terms. Haigh v Kaye, 41 L. J, Ch. 567; L. R. 7 Ch. 469; 26 L. T. 675; 20 W. R. 597.

Evidence — Presumption of Legality.] — A party who contends that the contract upon which he is sued is illegal, must prove it to be so, although the proof be of a negative, because primâ facie it will be presumed to be legal. Sissons v. Dixon, 5 B. & C. 758; 8 D. & R. 526: 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 299.

c. Contrary to Statute.

i. Generally.

Extent.]—A contract declared by a statute to be illegal, is not made good by a subsequent repeal of the statute. Jaques v. Withy, 1 H. Bl. 65.

An agreement entered into for the purpose of enabling one of the parties to it to contravene a statute passed for the protection of public morals cannot be enforced in a court of law. Ritchie v. Smith, 6 C. B. 462; 18 L. J., C. P. 9; 13 Jur. 63.

Explosives Act.]—The defendant let the basement of a store to the plaintiff, and covenanted to keep the premises in proper repair and condition, so that the same might be available for storing cartridges, and for quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff. Other parts of the store were let to other persons for the storage of gunpowder. Soon afterwards the Explosives Act, 1875, was passed, making it illegal to store cartridges and gunpowder in the same store without a licence, under pain of forfeiture. On the act coming into operation the defendant removed the cartridges which the defendant had deposited in the store, and gave notice that he would inform the authorities if the plaintiff stored any more:—Held, that there had been a trespass but no eviction by the defendant, and that there had been no breach of covenant by the defendant, the covenant to keep the demised premises in proper condition for storing cartridges only referring to physical condition, and there being no obligation on the defendant to procure a licence to make the storage legal notwithstanding the act. Newby v. Sharpe, 47 L. J., Ch. 617; 8 Ch. D. 39; 38 L. T. 583; 26 W. R. 685—C. A.

Sale of Joint-Stock Bank Shares—Name of Shareholder not given.] — The defendant, a stockbroker, who had undertaken to sell shares of a joint-stock bank for the plaintiff, a shareholder, sold them to a jobber on the Stock Exchange, and sent an advice note of such sale to the plaintiff, but in accordance with the custom of the Stock Exchange, the bought and sold notes between the defendant and the jobber omitted to state the name of the registered proprietor of the shares, as required by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, by reason of which the contract for sale was void, and the bank having stopped, and an order for its winding up having been made before the day on which the jobber was entitled to name the person willing to be the purchaser, the contract for sale was repudiated, and the plaintiff remained the holder of the shares:—Held, that the defendant had committed a breach of duty in not making a valid contract of sale, notwithstanding the custom of the Stock Exchange to disregard the said statute, as such custom was both unreasonable and illegal, and that for such breach of duty the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant, by way of damages, the price at which the shares had been sold. Neilson v. James, 51 L. J., Q. B. 369; 9 Q. B. D. 546: 46 L. T. 791—C. A.

Sale of Drugs.]—Where a druggist, after 42 Geo. 3, c. 38, but before 51 Geo. 3, c. 87, sold and delivered to a brewer drugs, knowing that they were to be used in the brewery:—Held, that he could not recover the price of them. Langton v. Hughes, 1 M. & S. 593; 14 R. R. 531.

Contagious Diseases (Animals).]—A statute cannot make an act done in connection with a private contract an actionable wrong if it was not actionable independently of the statute. Ward v. Hobbs, 48 L. J., Q. B. 281; 4 App. Cas. 13; 40 L. T. 73; 27 W. R. 114.

Where a statute prohibited persons from sending animals affected with a contagious disease to market and inflicted penalties on any person so sending them, the act of sending them, if known to be so infected, was a public offence, but did not amount by implication to a representation that they were sound, and did not of itself raise, as between the vendor of the animals and the purchaser of them, any right on the part of the purchaser to claim damages in respect of an injury he had suffered in consequence of their purchase. Ib.

Serving Unqualified Medical Practitioner as Assistant.]—The act 55 Geo. 3, c. 194, prohibiting medical practice by unqualified persons, is not repealed by implication by the Medical Act, 1858. The defendant, a duly qualified medical practitioner, agreed with the plaintiff, a medical practitioner not duly qualified, but who was described in the agreement as "medical practitioner," to serve the plaintiff as assistant in his profession as a medical practitioner, and not to practise at R. within five years after the close of the engagement. The plaintiff applied for an injunction to prevent the defendant from practising at R. in breach of this agreement:—Held, that his doing so was made illegal by the act 55 Geo. 3, c. 194, s. 14, that the agreement therefore was to assist the plaintiff in carrying on a business which he could not lawfully carry on, and that the agreement was illegal and could not be enforced. Davies v. Makuna, 54 L. J., Ch. 1148; 29 Ch. D. 596; 53 L. T. 314; 33 W. R. 668; 50 J. P. 5—C. A.

Semble, if the plaintiff had carried on his business by means of duly qualified assistants, without personally acting as a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, the agreement might have been legal. Ib.

Taking Unlicensed Broker into Partnership.]—By an agreement between A. and B., who was a London colonial broker, made in January, 1865, it was agreed for certain considerations that on 1st January, 1866, B. should take A. into partnership for fourteen years. This agreement B. refused to fulfil, upon the ground that A. had not become a colonial broker, and that by 6 Anne, c. 16, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 60 (local and personal), it would have been a breach of the law to have allowed A. to act as a broker, not being admitted and licensed. Upon demurrer to a plea setting up these facts in answer to a declaration for not taking A. into partnership:—Held, that the plea was an answer to the action. Hunter v. Wykes, 15 L. T. 210; 15 W. R. 125.

Director Contracting with Company.]—A contract entered into by a director with a railway company, after his election, is not rendered void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, ss. 85 and 86, but the office only of director is vacated. Foster v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 13 C. B. 200; 22 L. J., C. P. 99; 17 Jur. 167.

Officer of Local Authority interested in Contract.]—A contract by a local board of health made with two persons, one of whom is the surveyor of the board at a yearly salary, and who, as an officer appointed by the local authority, is required by s. 193 of the Public Health Act, 1875, not to be interested in any contract made with the authority, is illegal. Mellis v. Shirley Local Board, 55 L. J., Q. B. 143; 16 Q. B. D. 446; 53 L. T. 810; 34 W. R. 187; 50 J. P. 214—C. A.

Policy on Advances on Ship—"Full interest admitted."]—A policy insuring cash advances on a ship is within 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1. Such a policy containing the term "full interest admitted" is avoided by that statute. Smith v. Reynolds (1 H. & N. 221), and De Mattos v. North (L. R. 3 Eq. 185) followed. Berridge v. Man On Insurance Co., 56 L. J., Q. B. 223; 18 Q. B. D. 346; 53 L. T. 375; 35 W. R. 343; 6 Asp. M. C. 104—C. A.

Company, the Formation of which is Prohibited.]—Persons to a number exceeding twenty had formed themselves into a society, called the "Ipswich Mechanics' Mutual Benefit Society." From the rules of the society it appeared that there were 400 shares in the society of 10*l.* each, and that no member could hold more than twenty shares. The object of the society was to raise, by monthly subscriptions and payments payable by the members in respect of their shares, a fund for the purpose of making advances to members. From time to time, as soon as the fund in hand amounted to a certain sum, it was put up for sale by auction amongst the members, the highest bidder receiving the amount on loan from the society at interest. No member could receive on loan more than the nominal amount of the share or shares held by him; but ultimately every member who did not withdraw his share under the rule providing for such withdrawal, was to have advanced or allotted to him out of the funds accruing to the society the sum of 10*l.* for every share held by him. The society was not registered under the Companies Act, 1862:—Held, that the society was illegal by reason of the provisions of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 4, which prohibits the formation of any company, association, or partnership consisting of more than twenty persons for the purpose of carrying on any business (other than banking) that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, unless registered as a company under the act:—Held, also, that a promissory note given by a member to the trustee of the society to secure a sum of money advanced to such member under the rules of the society was invalid, and no action could be maintained thereon. Jennings v. Hammond, 51 L. J., Q. B. 493; 9 Q. B. D. 225; 31 W. R. 40.

T. was the president of a loan society. The objects of the society were to form a fund, from which money might be advanced to enable shareholders to build or purchase a dwelling-house or other buildings, or to lend money to each other on approved personal security; five per cent. interest was to be charged on all moneys advanced by the society. The society consisted of more than twenty members, and was not registered under any statute. The society advanced a sum of money to the defendants, who signed promissory notes by way of security for the loan; and when T. went out of office, he indorsed the promissory notes to the plaintiff, who succeeded him. The plaintiff having sued upon the notes for the benefit of the society:—Held, that the society not having been registered, was rendered illegal by the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 4, it being an association having "for its object the acquisition of gain," within the meaning of that enactment; that the plaintiff could not be in a better position than the society, and therefore could not recover upon the promissory notes. Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association, In re (20 Ch. D. 137) followed. Jennings v. Hammond (supra) approved. Shaw v. Benson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 575; 11 Q. B. D. 563—C. A. S. P., Crowther v. Thorley, 45 L. T. 644; 31 W. R. 564. Reversed in C. Pawnbrokers.]—Where a statute enjoins certain things to be done as preliminaries or accompaniments of a certain contract, and they are not complied with, such a contract is illegal and void, although a penalty may be imposed by the act for the non-compliance with its injunctions. Fergusson v. Norman, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 76; 6 Scott, 794; 1 Arn. 418; 8 L. J., C. P. 3; 3 Jur. 10.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 6, every pawnbroker advancing money upon goods pawned shall, before he advances any money upon such pawn, make entries in his books of certain facts into which he is required to inquire before any money shall be lent; by s. 26, a penalty is imposed for every neglect to make such entries:—Held, that such inquiries and entries are a condition precedent to the validity of a contract upon a pledge of goods with a pawnbroker, and, therefore, that in the case of non-compliance with the requisitions of this act, a pawnbroker could not set up a lien upon goods pawned with him. Ib.

To carry on the business of pawnbrokers without disclosing the partners, is a contravention of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99. Frazer v. Hill, 1 Macq. H. L. 392 ; 1 C. L. R. 7.

A pawnbrokers' contract stipulating to conceal the name of any partner cannot be valid. Ib.

But if the contract was legal in its inception, the mode of carrying it on would not render it illegal. Ib.

An agreement for a secret partnership is a contravention of the laws made for regulating the business of a pawnbroker, and no legal partnership is thereby constituted. Armstrong v. Armstrong, Lewis v. Armstrong, 3 Myl. & K. 45 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 101.

Unauthorised Printing Press—Pleading.]—By 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, s. 23, any person having any printing press is to cause notice thereof to be given to the clerk of the peace acting for the county, stewarty, riding, division, city, borough, town, or place where the same shall be intended to be used . . . . under a penalty of 20*l.* for keeping or using such press. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71, s. 11, the quarter sessions for the city of Westminster are abolished, and all the duties of the officers thereof are transferred to the county of Middlesex. To an action for work or labour (printing) brought by a printer carrying on business in Westminster, the defendant pleaded that the printing was done after the passing of the above acts, and that plaintiff had not delivered any notice to the clerk of the peace for Middlesex ; and that the printing was done after the passing of 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, and that plaintiff had not delivered any notice to the clerk of the peace for the city of Westminster :—Held, upon demurrer, that the pleas were bad, as each plea should have negatived that notice was given neither to the clerk of the peace for Westminster, nor to the clerk of the peace for Middlesex. Day v. Hemings, 4 L. T. 443 ; 9 W. R. 703.

Agreement to Dance at Unlicensed Theatre.]—No action can be maintained for the breach of an agreement "to dance at the King's Theatre in the Hay Market, or at such other place as the plaintiff should appoint" if it appear that no license for that theatre was granted by the Lord Chamberlain as required by 10 Geo. 2, c. 28, and that plaintiff did not request defendant to dance at any other place which was licensed. Gallini v. Laborie, 5 Term Rep. 242.

Agreement inconsistent with Act of Parliament.]—By an agreement between the N. Local Board and the C. Local Board, it was agreed that the N. board should make a sewer and allow the sewers of the C. district to drain into it, but the sewage of any other districts or places was not to be permitted by the C. board to pass into their sewers so as to discharge into the sewer to be made by the N. board. Under acts of parliament then in existence the owner of premises beyond the limits of a district had power to make a sewer to communicate with the sewers of the district, and by an act subsequently passed similar powers were given :—Held, that the provisions of the agreement were overruled by the subsequent act, and that the N. board could not restrain the C. board and the owners of premises beyond their district from making sewers which would discharge into the sewer of the N. district :—Held, also, that the agreement must be taken to have been made subject to the provisions of the law then existing, under which the owners of premises beyond the C. district had similar powers. Newington Local Board v. Cottingham Local Board, 48 L. J., Ch. 226 ; 12 Ch. D. 725 ; 40 L. T. 58.

An innkeeper, being indebted to several persons, by deed conveyed all his estate to trustees, upon trust, amongst other things, to carry on the trade, if they should think fit. At the time the deed was executed, the trader had omitted to renew his expired annual wine, beer and spirit licenses, but at the next first opportunity they were renewed by the trustees :—Held, that this circumstance formed no objection to the deed, on the ground that it was an assignment to persons to carry on an illegal trade. Owen v. Body, 2 H. & W. 31 ; 6 N. & M. 448 ; 5 A. & E. 28 ; 5 L. J., K. B. 191.

The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, does not render illegal a contract made during the game season, whereby a party licensed to deal in game undertakes to deliver to another live game at a period out of the season. Perrett v. Baker, 10 Ex. 759 ; 3 C. L. R. 432 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 336.

Contrary to Private Acts.]—A company was incorporated by an act of parliament for making and maintaining a particular railway, and it was empowered to raise money for that purpose, and which was to be expended towards making and maintaining such railway, and otherwise carrying the act into execution :—Held, that such company had no power to covenant with another railway company to lease their railway, and to pay the costs of soliciting bills in parliament for purposes of such last-mentioned company, as it was beyond the authority given to them by the act incorporating them, and that a covenant to that effect was, on that account, illegal and void. East Anglian Ry. v. Eastern Counties Ry. 11 C. B. 775 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 23 ; 16 Jur. 249.

The South-Eastern Railway Company was incorporated for the purpose of making and maintaining that railway, with power to raise moneys for the purpose of the act. The projectors of an intended Dover and Deal railway contemplated bringing a bill before parliament for the establishment of such railway, but were in doubt as to proceeding. M., a person interested and having influence in the South-Eastern Company, undertook that, if the projectors of the Dover and Deal railway would proceed in endeavouring to obtain their act, and, if successful, would hand over their scheme to the South-Eastern Company, that company, if the bill were rejected, would insure them against loss by such rejection, and would pay their parliamentary expenses. No clause in the company's act empowered them so to apply their funds. The bill was proceeded with, and rejected by parliament. In an action against M. on the contract, the declaration alleging that the South-Eastern Company did not insure the company against loss, and did not pay the parliamentary expenses :—Held, that the stipulation by M. was a promise that the company should do an act which was illegal, and contravened public policy and a public statute, and that an action did not lie against M. upon such promise. Macgregor v. Dover and Deal Ry., 18 Q. B. 618 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 227 ; 22 L. J., Q. B. 69 ; 17 Jur. 21—Ex. Ch.

Aid Refused in Equity.]—Bill, by banker, for an account of shares held in trust for him in a mercantile establishment, dismissed, the trust being in contravention of the statute 29 Geo. 2, c. 16, which prohibits bankers from being traders. Ottley v. Browne, 1 Ball & B. 360.

Profits of partnership in underwriting illegal by 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 12, and could not be subject of aid in equity, but that part of the statute is repealed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 114. Watts v. Brooks, 3 Ves. 612. S. P., Knowles v. Haughton, 11 Ves. 168.

ii. As to Sale of Public Offices.

Contrary to 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, ss. 1. 2, 3, 4. and 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, ss. 1, 3, 8, 9.

What Offices within the Statutes.]—The office of clerk to the deputy registrar in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury was not an office connected with the administration of justice, within 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, so as to prevent its being aliened or charged. Nor is an alienation of or charge on the profits of the office, contrary to the policy of the law restricting the alienation of the income of a public office. Aston v. Gwinnell, 3 Y. & J. 136.

The office of private secretary does not fall within the 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16. Harrington v. Kloprogge, 6 Moore, 38, n.; 2 Br. & B. 678, n.; 2 Chit. 475; 4 Doug. 5; 23 R. R. 539, n.

An assignment, by a puisne judge of the Supreme Court at Madras, of the sum equal to the amount of six months' salary, directed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 85, to be paid to his legal personal representatives, in case he should die, in and after six months' possession of office, is a valid assignment, being a vested contingent interest in such judge; and, not being payable during the lifetime of the judge, is not an assignment of salary within 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, and 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, and, therefore, not contrary to public policy. Arbuthnot v. Norton, 5 Moore, P. C. 219; 3 Moore, Ind. App. 435; 10 Jur. 145.

An agreement, after reciting that A. had carried on the business of a law stationer at G., and had been sub-distributor of stamps, and collector of assessed taxes there, and that he had agreed with B. for the sale of the business, and of his goodwill and interest therein, to him for 300*l.*, A., in consideration of 300*l.*, agreed to sell, and B. agreed to purchase, the business of a law stationer; and that A. should not at any time carry on the business of a law stationer, or within ten miles thereof, or collect any of the assessed taxes, but would use his utmost endeavours to introduce B. to the business and offices, is illegal and void, as being a contract for the sale of an office within 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, and also within 49 Geo. 3, c. 126. Hopkins v. Prescott, 4 C. B. 578; 16 L. J., C. P., 259; 11 Jur. 562.

A., an attorney, holding the office of clerk of the peace, clerk to the magistrates, clerk to the commissioners of land and assessed taxes, clerk to the commissioners of sewers, clerk to the deputy lieutenants, steward of certain manors, coroner for a liberty, secretary to a conservative association, and secretary to a polling district association, entered into articles of partnership with B., which recited that A. carried on the business of an attorney, and held many offices, clerkships, and stewardships of manors, and that it had been agreed that B. should enter into partnership with A. in the business and in the emoluments of the offices, clerkships, and stewardships for twenty years, and that all the profit and emoluments arising from the offices, clerkships, and stewardships held by A., as also all such offices, clerkships, and stewardships as should be held by either of them, A. and B., during the partnership, should be considered as partnership property, and be distributable accordingly. The articles contained a provision that if A. should die during the term, then if and during such period or periods as it should happen that no son of A. should be a partner in the business, B. should be interested in one moiety of the partnership business, and the executors or administrators of A. should be entitled to the profits of the remaining moiety, to be applied by them as part of his personal estate:—Held, that the contract was not void as being a contract for the sale of an office, either within 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, or within 49 Geo. 3, c. 126. Sterry v. Clifton, 9 C. B. 110; 19 L. J., C. P. 237; 14 Jur. 312.

The 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, s. 3, applied to the sale of an East India director's nomination to a cadetship. Reg. v. Charrette, 13 Q. B. 447.

An agreement for a pecuniary consideration for the resignation of a commission in the East India Company's service, is the sale of an office within 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, and is therefore illegal and void. Graeme v. Wroughton, 11 Ex. 146; 24 L. J., Ex. 265; 3 W. R. 509.

A declaration under 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, s. 6, alleged that the defendant advertised a proposal for a promise to give 150 guineas to any one who would procure A. a place under government: the words "for a promise" are surplusage: and the words "under government" are sufficient, though the words of the statute are "an office in the gift of the crown." Clarke v. Harvey, 1 Stark. 92.

Illegal Procurement.] — It seems doubtful whether a person paying money for procuring an office under government, can recover it back. Pickard v. Bonner, Peake, 289.

An action will not lie upon a promise to pay the plaintiff 2*l.* per cent. to procure a purchaser of the plaintiff's place of surveyor of the baggage of the port of London; being contrary to the statute. Stackpole v. Earle, 2 Wils. 131.

A bond given for the purchase of an office to which the groom of the stole has the power of recommendation, is invalid. Hanington v. Duchatel, 1 Bro. C. C. 124.

A condition to assign all offices is a valid condition, and will be taken to apply to such offices as are by law assignable. Harrington v. Kloprogge, 4 Dougl. 5; 6 Moore, 38, n.; 2 Br. & B. 678, n.; 2 Chit. 475; 23 R. R. 539, n.

A sale of a commission in the army is not bad of itself, but a sale of a public office or any obligation to be made good out of that is so. Hartwell v. Hartwell, 4 Ves. 815.

Sharing Profits.]—An agreement by which a deputy officer, appointed by his principal, is to receive all the fees, and pay the principal a fixed sum per annum, is void under 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16. Alter, where a certain sum is reserved payable out of the fees; for in that case the deputy is not to pay unless the fees amount to so much. Godolphin v. Tudor, 1 Bro. P. C. 135.

Where, after the recital of the appointment of A. to be deputy to B. in the execution of an office within the purview of 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, or 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, A. paying thereout to B. an annual sum, the condition of the bond is stated to be for the payment by A. to B. of such annual sum generally, it is a good plea in bar to say that the bond was given in pursuance of an agreement to pay such sum absolutely at all events. Greville v. Atkins, 4 Man. & Ry. 372 ; 9 B. & C. 462.

A., by the interest and on the application of B , is appointed custom-house officer of a port ; having previously signed an agreement declaring that his name was used in the application in trust for B , that he would appoint such deputies as B. should nominate, and would empower B. to receive the profits of the office to his own use. On the failure of A. to comply with the agreement, no action upon it will lie against him. Garforth v. Fearon, 1 H. Bl. 327, n. ; 2 R. R. 778

If a covenant is entered into, that, if the plaintiff will procure the defendant to be appointed to an office, he will pay the plaintiff a share of the emoluments, and this is without the knowledge of the person who has the right of appointing to the office ; it is such a fraud on him as will avoid the covenant, whether the office is lawfully saleable or not. Waldo v. Martin, 6 D. & R. 364 ; 4 B. & C. 319 ; 2 Car. & P. 1 ; 28 R. R. 289.

An agreement to allow a certain share of the profits of an office in a dockyard, in order to induce the possessor to procure himself to be superannuated, is void. Parsons v. Thompson, 1 H. Bl. 322 ; 2 R. R. 773.

An attorney, town clerk, and clerk of the peace for a borough, upon the dissolution of partnership which had existed between him and two other persons, entered into an agreement to pay to one of them a certain sum of money, and use his endeavours to procure for him one-fourth of the prosecutions arising in the town clerk's office. In an action by him on this agreement, it appeared that the magistrates of the borough committed some offenders to be tried at the borough sessions, others at the county sessions, and others at the county assizes.—Held, that the defendant, as clerk of the peace of the borough, could not legally enter into such an agreement. Hughes v. Statham, 6 D. & R. 219 ; 4 B. & C. 187 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 179.

An assignment to trustees of all the emoluments and profits which during the life of S. and his continuing to hold the office of clerk of the peace for Westminster should arise or become due to him as such clerk of the peace, or in respect of his office, after deducting the salary of his deputy for the time being, upon trust to pay the interest arising on certain debts due from S., and from time to time render the residue, after satisfying the trusts, to S., is invalid in law. Palmer v. Bate, 6 Moore, 28 ; 2 Br. & B. 673 ; 23 R. R. 525.

iii. As to Bail.

Contract to indemnify Bail.]—A contract to indemnify bail against the consequences of the non-appearance of an accused person is contrary to public policy and therefore illegal. The defendant became bail in 100*l.* for the appearance of M. upon a charge of embezzlement. M. paid 100*l.* to the defendant to indemnify him for becoming bail, and then absconded :—Held, that the plaintiff, the trustee in bankruptcy of M., was entitled to recover that sum from the defendant ; for although the contract to indemnify the defendant was against public policy, yet it remained executory, in the absence of any evidence to show that the liability of the defendant, as bail, had been discharged. Wilson v. Strugnell, 50 L. J., M. C. 145 ; 7 Q. B. D. 548 ; 45 L. T. 218 ; 14 Cox, C. C. 624 ; 45 J. P. 831.

A. entered into a recognizance of bail for B. on the removal by certiorari of an indictment for conspiracy from the Central Criminal Court to the Queen's Bench. B. was convicted, and the recognizance was estreated for non-payment of the prosecutor's costs :—Held, that A. might maintain an action against B. as upon an implied indemnity. Jones v. Orchard, 16 C. B. 614 : 24 L. J., C. P. 229 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 936 ; 3 W. R. 554.

A defendant requested the plaintiff to become bail for the appearance of a person to take her trial at the Central Criminal Court, upon an indictment to be there preferred ; and in consideration thereof, verbally agreed to indemnify the plaintiff against all liability in respect thereof. The person bailed not appearing, the recognizances were estreated, and the plaintiff incurred other expenses incidental thereto :—Held, that the Statute of Frauds did not apply, this being a mere promise to indemnify, and not a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, within s. 4 of the 29 Car. 2, c. 3. Cripps v. Hartnoll, 32 L. J., Q. B. 381 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 200 ; 8 L. T. 768 ; 11 W. R. 953—Ex. Ch.

A contract is illegal, whereby a defendant in a criminal case, who has been ordered to find bail for his good behaviour during a specified period, deposits money with his surety upon the terms that the money is to be retained by the surety during the specified period for his own protection against the defendant's default, and at the expiration of that period is to be returned ; and no action by the defendant in the criminal case will lie to recover back the money deposited with the surety either before or after the expiration of the specified period, although the defendant in the criminal case has not committed any default, and although the surety has not been compelled to pay the amount for which he has become bound. Wilson v. Strugnell (supra), as to this point overruled. Herman v. Jeuchner, or Zeuchner, 54 L. J., Q. B. 340 ; 15 Q. B. D. 561 ; 53 L. T. 94 ; 33 W. R. 606 ; 49 J. P. 502—C. A. Reversing 1 Cab. & E. 364.

On Mesne Process.]—The bailiff of a county court, being about to arrest B. under a warrant of contempt for non-payment of a judgment debt, the defendant, in consideration that he would forbear to execute the warrant, promised to pay the bailiff 17*l.* on a given day, or surrender B. :—Held, not an agreement by the defendant to be answerable for the debt or default of B., but an original promise by the defendant to pay the money or surrender B., for which a note in writing was not required by the Statute of Frauds. Reader v. Kingham, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 344 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 108 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 797 ; 7 L. T. 789 ; 11 W. R. 366.

M. being in custody under an execution, pursuant to a warrant of attorney, by which he agreed that execution should issue from time to time for certain instalments of a mortgage debt, the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff would discharge M. out of custody, undertook that he should, if necessary, be forthcoming for a second execution :—Held, that the defendant's was a valid contract. Atkinson v. Baynton, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 444 ; 1 Scott, 404 ; 4 L. J., C. P. 127.

A declaration alleged that an action had been brought by the plaintiff against D., who, being about to leave the country, had been arrested under a capias; that, in consideration that the plaintiff would discharge him out of custody, the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff the debt and costs in that action: alleging, as a breach, non-payment; to which the defendant pleaded, that, during the continuance of that action, and while D. was in custody, and at the time of making the promise, the plaintiff had no claim, demand, or cause of action in respect whereof he could have recovered against him; and that, by discharging him out of custody, he did not give up any available remedy against him, as the plaintiff, at the time of the arrest and promise, did, but the defendant did not, know; and that the former suit and arrest were only colourable on the part of the plaintiff, and were not prosecuted for the purpose of trying any doubtful or contested question of law or fact:—Held, that the declaration was good, and the plea bad, as it did not show that the arrest was fraudulent or illegal. Smith v. Monteith, 13 M. & W. 427; 2 D. & L. 358; 14 L. J., Ex. 22; 9 Jur. 310.

Under 23 Henry 6.]—An undertaking of an attorney to give a bail-bond in due time, is contrary to 23 Hen. 6, c. 10, and void. Sidgworth v. Spicer, 4 East, 568; 2 Smith, 305.

Nor can an attorney, by that statute, give an undertaking to a sheriff's officer to appear and put in bail, even before the arrest is made, and it is not in the power of the officer to execute the writ. Parker v. England, 2 Smith, 52. And see Rex v. Southerton, 6 East, 143; 8 R. R. 428; and King v. Price, 1 Price, 341.

So, an agreement in writing to put in bail, at the return of the writ, or surrender the body, or pay debt and costs, made by a third person with the bailiff of the sheriff, in consideration of his discharging the party arrested, is void by 23 Hen. 6, c. 10. Rogers v. Reeves, 1 Term Rep. 418.

But an undertaking of an attorney, given to the plaintiff in order to procure the discharge of the defendant, to put in bail or pay the debt, is not within the statute, because it is not given to the sheriff. Ib.

A promise of a bribe to a bailiff to take bail is illegal, and an action will not lie upon the promise. Smith v. Stotesbury, 1 W. Bl. 204; 2 Burr. 924.

d. Contrary to Orders in Council.

Intention.]—A charterparty was made in France, by which it was stipulated that the ship should proceed to Trouville, a port in France, and should there load a cargo of hay, and proceed therewith direct to London; all cargo to be brought and taken from the ship alongside. The agent of the charterer told the master that the consignors would require the hay to be delivered at a particular wharf in Deptford Creek, and that he should proceed there on his arrival in London, which he promised to do. On arriving in the Thames, he was informed that by an order in council made under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869, it was illegal to land in Great Britain hay brought from France. The order in council was in existence when the charterparty was entered into, but neither of the parties knew of it, nor did the shipowner contemplate any violation of the law. The charterer after a time exported the hay, and the shipowner brought an action against him to recover damages in respect of the detention of the ship:—Held, that under these circumstances the charterer could not set up as a defence that the voyage was illegal. Waugh v. Morris, 42 L. J., Q. B. 57; L. R. 8 Q. B. 202; 28 L. T. 265; 21 W. R. 438.

A. commissioned B. to get a charterparty effected on his ship, Russian built and British owned. She was accordingly chartered to go to America, and take in there a cargo of permitted goods, rice and cotton being specified, and to sail therewith to Cadiz, Lisbon, or Gottenburg, as directed. By a previous agreement it appeared to have been in the contemplation of the parties to carry the goods to some port in the United Kingdom, and that the ship should carry no licence:—Held, that this was not an illegal contract, so as to deprive B. of his right to his commission, for procuring the charterparty to be effected. Haines v. Busk, 1 Marsh. 191; 5 Taunt. 521.

Where A. agreed to sell to B. one-third share of a ship, which was to be employed on a joint adventure, in the exportation of military stores to South America, contrary to an order in council then in force:—Held, that (the agreement being entire, and containing on the face of it an illegal stipulation) it lay on the party seeking to enforce the same, to show that means had been used to obtain a licence, or that the illegal purpose had been abandoned; and that in failure thereof, A. could not recover for the share of the ship. Holland v. Hall, 1 B. & Ald. 53; 18 R. R. 428.

To an action on a bond, a plea that the bond was given to secure payment of the price of goods, agreed to be sold and delivered in London, by the plaintiff to the defendant, to be by the latter shipped to Ostend, and thence re-shipped for the East Indies, and there trafficked with clandestinely, is a sufficient bar to the action; the case being within 7 Geo. 1, c. 21, which avoided all contracts for supplying cargoes to foreign ships in such a trade. Lightfoot v. Tenant, 1 Bos. & P. 551; 4 R. R. 735.

After Declaration of War.]—A declaration on a charterparty, by which the charterer engaged to load at Odessa, by his factors, a cargo of wheat, thirty-five running days to be allowed; alleged as breaches, that he did not load the cargo, and, though he detained the ship on demurrage at Odessa, had not paid the demurrage. A plea stated, that the charterer was a British subject, and that after making the charterparty, and before the arrival of the ship at Odessa, and before he provided a cargo, war was declared by England against Russia; that Odessa was a hostile port; that it became impossible for him to fulfil the charterparty without dealing or trading with the Queen's enemies, of which the shipowner had notice before the expiration of the running days. The replication set out an order in council of the same date as the declaration of war, by which the Queen waived her right of seizing enemies' property on board of neutral ships, and another order in council made before the expiration of the running days, and while there was time to load the vessel within them, allowing neutral vessels to export into the Queen's dominions merchandise to whomsoever they might belong, and permitting British subjects to trade with all places not blockaded. It was alleged that the ship and the shipowner were neutral, and that Odessa was not in blockade :—Held, that the plea was good, as the contract was rescinded by the declaration of war ; and that the replication was bad as the orders in council could not revive it when once dissolved. Esposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl. 763 : 27 L. J., Q. B. 17 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1209 ; 5 W. R. 732—Ex. Ch.

Authority.]—An ordinance passed in pursuance of an order in council, and not altered or disapproved of by the Queen in council, though seemingly more extensive than contemplated by the order, is not void for the excess, but will be considered as duly authorised by the order, and taken in conjunction with it. Inglis v. De Barnard, 3 Moore, P. C. 425.

A. undertook to convey B.'s goods from Liverpool, and to land them at Canton. On arriving there the British superintendent of trade, acting under the orders of the government in England, prohibited A. from landing the goods, and a loss ensued. In an action for breach of contract he pleaded only that he was prevented from performance by the officers of the Queen, duly authorised in that behalf, and exercising the powers of the governor. The officers were appointed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 93, s. 5, and acted under the orders of the Queen in council. The plea was bad, because it did not set out the orders under which the superintendent of British trade at Canton acted, nor did it set out that the performance of the contract had been prevented by any acknowledged prerogative of the Crown Evans v. Hutton, 4 Man. & G. 954 ; 2 D. (N.S.) 600 ; 5 Scott (N.R.) 670 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 17 ; 6 Jur. 1042.

e. Contrary to International Law

Effect of Declaration of War]—The effect of a declaration of war is to dissolve contracts of affreightment made before but which remain to be executed at the time. Esposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl. 763 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 17 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1209 ; 5 W. R. 732—Ex. Ch.

The shipping of a cargo from an enemy's port, even in a neutral vessel, is an act of dealing and trading with the Queen's enemies, and is therefore illegal. Ib.

A neutral, while a war is imminent, or even after it has commenced, is at liberty to purchase either goods or ships (not being ships of war) from either belligerent, and the purchase is valid whether the subject of it is lying in a neutral or an enemy's port. Sorensen v. Reg., 11 Moore, P. C. 141.

A Russian vessel was sold, bonâ fide and absolutely, by an enemy to a neutral when the war between Russia and Great Britain was imminent. The vessel was at the time of the sale in the prosecution of a voyage from an enemy's port to a neutral port, where she arrived, and was taken possession of by the purchaser :—Held, that the sale, though in transitu, was valid, as the transitus had ceased when the vessel had come into possession of the purchaser, which took place before the seizure Ib.

A declaration of war by this country against a foreign power, imports a prohibition of commercial intercourse with the subjects of that power. Barrick v. Buba, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 563 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 280 ; 5 W. R. 665.

A mere intimation by the agent of the charterer to the master, before the time for loading had expired, that "he had ceded the charterparty, with all its rights and obligations," to a third person, and that he must address himself to such third person for a cargo, does not amount to a renunciation of the charterparty, so as to entitle the owner to sue as for a breach at that time. Ib.

Position of Neutral.]—The national character of a trader is to be decided for the purposes of the trade, by the national character of the place in which it is carried on. If a war breaks out, a foreign merchant carrying on trade in a belligerent country has a reasonable time allowed him for transferring himself and his property to another country. If he does not avail himself of the opportunity, he is to be treated, for the purposes of trade, as a subject of the power under whose dominion he carries it on, and as an enemy of those with whom that power is at war. The Gerasimo, 11 Moore, P. C. 88 ; 5 W. R. 450.

A temporary occupation of a territory by an enemy's force does not, of itself, necessarily convert the territory so occupied into hostile territory, or its inhabitants into enemies. Ib.

The purpose of the blockade was declared to be for preventing the import of provisions to the enemy in possession of a neutral's country. Semble, that the fact of a neutral ship bringing out a cargo of corn is not a breach of such blockade. Ib.

The sale of a ship absolutely and bonâ fide by an enemy to a neutral imminente bello, or even flagrante bello, is not illegal. Sorensen v. Reg, 11 Moore, P. C. 119.

—— Running Blockade.]—It is not an offence against the law of nations, or the law of this country, for the subject of a neutral state to supply contraband of war to a belligerent power ; and the right of the other belligerent to seize such contraband of war in transitu is merely a co-existent conflicting right which exposes the neutral merchant to the risk of confiscation, but does not render illegal a contract between him and another neutral subject for a joint adventure for the supply of such contraband goods. Chavasse, Ex parte, Grazebrook, In re, 34 L. J., Bk. 17 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 400 ; 12 L. T. 249 ; 13 W. R. 627.

Nor is such a contract rendered void by the Foreign Enlistment Act, or 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, or the Royal Proclamation of the 13th of May, 1861. Ib.

Goods which are contraband of war, in the course of transport from a neutral port to a neutral port, in a neutral ship, are not by the law of nations liable to seizure by the cruisers of a belligerent state, even though the shipper may know or intend that they shall ultimately reach a port belonging to the enemies of the captors. To render goods contraband of war liable to seizure, they must be taken in delicto, that is, in the actual prosecution of a voyage to an enemy's port. Hobbs v. Henning, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 791 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 117 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 222 ; 12 L. T. 205 ; 13 W. R. 431.

Nor does the mere fact that the ship carries simulated papers per se operate as a forfeiture of either ship or goods, though it may afford evidence from which a prize-court may infer that the ship was or the goods were enemy's property, or that her destination was to a blockaded port or to an enemy's port with contraband of war. Ib.

A breach of blockade by neutrals is not an offence against the municipal law of this country and therefore an agreement contemplating a breach of blockade is not illegal. The Helen, 35 L. J., Adm. 2; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 13 L. T. 305.

And see SHIPPING.

Foreign Loans.]—It is illegal for a person residing in this country to raise money by way of loan, to assist subjects of a foreign state, so as to enable them to prosecute a war against a government in amity with our own. De Wutz v. Hendricks, 9 Moore, 586; 2 Bing. 314; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 3; 27 R. R. 660.

A foreigner has no right to negotiate in England a loan for the use of a state which has separated itself from and is at war with one of England's allies (such state not being at the time recognised by England), without the permission of the English government. Yrisarri v. Clement, 3 Bing. 432; 11 Moore, 308; 2 Car. & P. 223.

If several persons are jointly engaged in a bubble, to raise money for a non-existing state or government, one cannot maintain an action against another for the money so raised. MacGregor v. Lowe, 1 Car. & P. 200; R. & M. 57.

Nor, where the original contract was made with a government not acknowledged by Great Britain, can a court of equity give relief. Thompson v. Powles, 2 Sim. 194.

It is illegal to purchase obligations or securities purporting to be granted by the government of a foreign country which government has not been recognised by the King of England. Thompson v. Barclay, 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 93.

Illegal Abroad.]—A written contract made in Jamaica, which, by the laws of that island, is void for want of a stamp, cannot be recovered upon here. Alves v. Hodgson, 7 Term Rep. 241; 2 Esp. 528; 4 R. R. 433.

A document will not be rejected as evidence on the ground that it has not been stamped in the manner required by the law of a foreign country; but where the law of a foreign country renders a contract invalid unless stamped in a particular way, a contract not so stamped cannot be enforced here. Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Ex. 275; 19 L. J., Ex. 289; 14 Jur. 674.

Forging Foreign Notes.]—The value of paper made for the purpose of forging assignats upon, to be exported to France, may be recovered in our courts, although the plaintiff knew for what purposes the paper was to be applied. Smith v. Marconnay, Peake, Ad. C. 81.

Where the consideration of a promissory note was the engraving of plates upon which assignats were to be forged:—Held, that if the party did not know that they were made with a fraudulent intention, and supposed them to be issued with the authority of government, he might recover on the note. Strongitharm v. Lukyn, 1 Esp. 389.

f. Contrary to Morality.

Cohabitation as Consideration.]—Agreements entered into with a view to future cohabitation and prostitution are illegal and void, as being against public morality. Walker v. Perkins, 3 Burr. 1568; 1 W. Bl. 517.

A bond for cohabitation with a woman seduced by the obligor, and for maintenance, after his death, is void. Ib.

B., a married woman living separate from her husband, entered the service of C. as his housekeeper, and formed an illicit connection with him, during which period C. struck her a violent blow, which compelled her to have medical advice. On her threatening legal proceedings, C. promised compensation, and an agreement was drawn up by which, after reciting that they had lived together, but agreed thenceforth to separate, C. agreed to pay certain sums to B. for her separate use, and it was mutually agreed that each should live separate and apart from, and in no manner molest or annoy, the other. The illicit connection thereupon ceased. B. filed her bill for specific performance of this agreement:—Held, on demurrer, that there was no sufficient consideration in the agreement to entitle B. to recover upon it. Lancaster v. Carter, 2 W. R. 437.

A bill to be relieved from a security, first, on the ground that it was given for an immoral consideration; and, secondly, because it was not drawn in conformity with the agreement between the parties, cannot be sustained. This court has authority to relieve against an instrument, which, though legal upon the face of it, was, in fact, executed for an illegal and immoral purpose. Batty v. Chester, 5 Beav. 103.

Where a party filed a bill to be relieved from a deed, made in consideration of future cohabitation, and in pursuance of an alleged contract to provide for the woman only during the connection, and the bill was so framed as to make it the gist of the complaint, that the immoral contract had not been performed on the part of the woman, the bill was dismissed. Ib.

In an action on an annuity bond given by a man to a woman with whom he has cohabited, the question for the consideration of the jury is, whether at the time it was given there was or was not an intention and agreement to continue the connection for the future; for if there was such intention, and the bond was given in furtherance of such arrangement, the plaintiff cannot recover. Friend v. Harrison, 2 Car. & P. 584; 31 R. R. 698.

Voluntary bond, during cohabitation to a woman previously of a very loose life; soon afterwards another bond expressly securing a continuance of the connection by an annuity in case of separation. Bill by the executor to have the bonds delivered up was dismissed with costs, the former being considered unimpeached; the latter void at law as pro turpi causâ. Gray v. Mathias, 5 Ves. 286; 5 R. R. 48.

S., living in unlawful cohabitation with M., granted an annuity to a trustee for her, and agreed to charge it on any real estate he might become possessed of, the first payment to be made upon his death or marriage, or cessation of cohabitation. He also gave a bond and warrant of attorney to secure the annuity. The cohabitation ceased, and an action was brought on a judgment which had been entered up on the warrant of attorney. S. filed a bill to restrain the action, and for cancelling the grant of the annuity:—Held, that the grant was totally void at law. Smyth v. Griffin, 14 L. J., Ch. 28; 8 Jur. 1131.

Bill for payment of a sum of money and an annuity secured by a deed poll to a young woman, who had been seduced by a married man in whose family she lived as companion to his wife, and who by continuing to live with him occasioned a separation, dismissed; but without costs, on account of her previous good character. Priest v. Parrot, 2 Ves. 160.

Where a married man living with his wife cohabited with a single woman, who knew that he was married, and at the termination of the illicit intercourse, gave her a bond to secure the payment of an annuity for the support of herself and two young children, the offspring of their cohabitation :—Held, that the bond was void. Nye v. Moseley, 9 D. & R. 165 ; 6 B. & C. 133 ; 30 R. R. 266.

A declaration stating that the plaintiff had cohabited with the defendant as his mistress, and that it was agreed that no further immoral connection should take place between them, and that the defendant should allow her an annuity as long as she should continue of good and virtuous life and demeanour : and that thereupon, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff would give up the annuity, the defendant promised to give her as much as the annuity was worth, is bad. Binnington v. Wallis, 4 B. & Ald. 650.

Past seduction and cohabitation are not a good consideration to support a grant of an annuity. Beaumont v. Reeve, 8 Q. B. 483 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 141 ; 18 Jur. 284.

A., having a wife who lived separate from him, afterwards purported to marry another woman who knew nothing of the wife being alive ; but it being discovered, A., in order to prevail with the other woman to stay with him, some years afterwards gave a bond to her trustee to leave her 1,000*l.* at his death, and died not leaving assets to pay his simple contract debts. If this bond had been given immediately on the discovery, and they had parted, it had been good ; but as it was, it was decreed to be delayed to all other creditors. Coa's Case, 3 P. W. 339.

Bill to be relieved against a bond to pay 400' to a woman the plaintiff kept as a mistress : relief denied ; but otherwise, if the obligee was a common strumpet, but then it must be so charged in the bill, and put in issue, for otherwise, if it is so proved, the depositions cannot be read Whaley v. Norton, 1 Vern. 483.

Not presumed unless proved. Lightbone v. Weeden, 1 Eq. Abr. 24.

Where testator gave a bond ex turpi causâ, and made an equal provision for obligee by will, it was held void as against creditors, and the legacy was left for the obligee and executor to contest. Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 251.

Voluntary bond given by a person to a common woman after he had kept her two years not relieved against upon a bill by the executor of the obligor. Hill v. Spencer, Ambl. 641.

Bill by executor to avoid bonds given by testator, on suggestion that they were gained by threats and undue means ; defendant by answer says they were entered into for money lent and debts due. It appeared, defendant was a common harlot, and the plaintiff's father had unlawful conversation with her :—Held, though this not set forth in the bill, yet the defendant's answer, saying the bonds were given for money lent, sufficiently puts it on issue, though not laid in the bill. Where the party himself is culpable, and comes for relief against the said bonds, court may refuse ; otherwise where his executor comes. Matthews v. Hanbury, 2 Vern. 187.

A daughter joined her father in covenanting to surrender a copyhold, by way of mortgage, to A. for a sum of money lent by him to the father. Part of the consideration was the permission of the father to allow A. to continue his visits to the daughter, whom he was seducing, or had seduced. Upon a bill to enforce the deed and a cross bill to cancel it, the court at first considered that it could not interfere for either party, but ultimately ordered the deed to be cancelled, and that A. should pay the costs of both suits, except those of the father. W—— v. B——, B—— v. W——, 32 Beav. 574.

Note given ex turpi causâ set aside. Robinson v. Cox, 9 Mod. 263.

Demurrer allowed to bill, after verdict at law on bond, praying discovery, if consideration was not an illicit connection, and if defendant was not guilty of general incontinence. Franco v. Bolton, 3 Ves. 368. See 6 R. R. 71, n.

—— When Security Valid — Past Cohabitation.] — The plaintiff sought to be relieved from a deed by which he had covenanted to pay an annuity to the defendant, a female, on the ground that the consideration for it was a promise made to him by the defendant to live with him as his mistress. The defendant demurred for want of equity ; but the demurrer was overruled, because it did not appear that the plaintiff had availed himself of the promise. Sidney v. Ley, 17 Sim. 1 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 350 ; 13 Jur. 480.

To an action for arrears of an annuity, it is no answer that it was granted in consideration of cohabitation with the plaintiff, unless she knew of the arrangement. Daniel v. Landen. 1 F. & F. 289.

Bond by an obligor to secure the payment of an annuity to his kept mistress after his death. The consideration did not appear upon the face of the bond ; but at the time of executing it the obligor stated it to be for past cohabitation, and because the obligee was the mother of children by him. The bond was retained by the obligor in the custody of his solicitor, so that the obligee did not become aware of its existence till after his death .—Held, that it was a valid operative instrument, although the obligor when he executed it declared it to be his intention not to break off the connection with the obligee, and did in fact maintain her and her children till his death. Hall v. Palmer, 3 Hare, 532 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 352 ; 8 Jur. 459.

The testator six months before his death gave a bond to a lady with whom he had cohabited for more than thirty years, conditioned for the payment to her at the expiration of two years of a sum of money and interest ; and he continued to cohabit with her until his death. There was nothing on the face of the bond with reference to the cohabitation, and there was no evidence that it was in fact given to secure the continuance of the cohabitation :—Held, that the mere continuance of the cohabitation was not enough to raise the presumption that the bond was given in consideration of future cohabitation, and accordingly that the bond was good. Gray v. Mathias (5 Ves. 286 ; 5 R. R. 48) observed on. Vallance, In re, Vallance v. Blagden, 26 Ch. D. 353 ; 50 L. T. 574 ; 32 W. R. 918 ; 48 J. P. 398.

A., having seduced B., and she being enceinte by him, and living with him, he executed to her a deed whereby, in consideration of the release of a debt due by him to her uncle, he granted to her an annuity payable out of lands. The cohabitation continued for fourteen years, when they separated, and A. by testamentary papers alleged, (as the fact was) that the consideration stated in the deed was fictitious, and endeavoured to deprive her of her annuity. B. swore that no agreement or stipulation for any future cohabitation was entered into or promised at the date of the deed, which was prepared solely by the solicitor of A., and without her knowledge or solicitation, and without her being aware of the intention of A.:—Held, that the onus was on those impeaching the instrument, which was primâ facie valid, to show that it was given ex turpi causâ; and the case being one in which B. would clearly be entitled to a premium pudicitiæ, the deed was allowed to prevail over volunteers claiming under the will. Howell v. Price, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 494.

It has been held that a bond in consideration of past cohabitation is good. Turner v. Vaughan, 2 Wils. 339. And see Gray v. Mathias, and Friend v. Harrison, supra. col. 174

A bond for securing a provision to a woman who had been seduced by the obligor, and for her children, given after cohabitation determined, held good, notwithstanding the obligor was married when the connection commenced. Knye v. Moore, or Moseley, 2 Sim. & S. 260; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 136.

A contract to grant an annuity, in consideration of the discontinuance of cohabitation and of the release of an alleged promise of marriage, is enforceable in equity. Rennan v. Handley, 2 De G. J. & S. 283; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 906; 10 L. T. 800; 12 W. R. 1021.

A bond given to kept mistress for her maintenance, and provision for child she had by deceased, shall not be set aside in favour of his legitimate children or heir, if not obtained by fraud; but shall not be paid out of personal estate until after simple contracts, but shall be paid out of the real estate, if there be one, in case personal estate falls short. Cray v. Rooke, Cases t. Talb. 153.

A. executes a deed, whereby he agrees that his executors, &c., shall, after his death, pay B. 2,000*l*., in order to purchase an annuity for the life of herself and a bastard child begotten on her by A. Equity will compel a specific performance of this agreement. Annandale (Marchioness) v. Harris, 1 Bro. P. C. 250; 2 P. W. 432.

A. grants an annuity to a woman whom he had seduced, out of his manor of D., in which A. had no estate. Equity will make him secure the annuity out of other lands. Ib.

Plaintiff had seduced his wife's sister, and had several children by her, and gave her some bonds for payment of money, as a provision for her and her children, and these bonds being sued, he brought a bill suggesting that the bonds were given for no valuable consideration, but it was dismissed with costs. Spicer v. Hayward, Pre. Ch. 114.

And that an agreement by the defendant to allow the plaintiff, with whom he cohabited, in case they should separate, an annuity for life, provided she should continue single, is valid. Gibson v. Dickie, 3 M. & S. 463; 16 R. R. 333.

A person bound himself to pay an annuity to an unmarried woman, by whom he had had several children, on condition that she should not require their custody or management:—Held, that there was a sufficiently valuable consideration to support the bond as a specialty debt. Plaskett, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 606; 4 L. T. 544; 9 W. R. 628.

Clause in a deed of assignment of stock, from a married man to a married woman, that she shall live where he resides, though suspicious, is not sufficient ground to hold it pro turpi causâ. Colman v. Sarrell, 1 Ves. J. 51; 1 R. R. 53.

In a separation deed a covenant, by which the husband undertakes to pay his wife an annuity without restricting his liability to such time as she shall be chaste, is good, and is not against public policy, and the covenant remains in force and the annuity continues payable, although the wife afterwards commits adultery. But, semble, per Cotton, L.J., on the authority of Evans v. Carrington (2 De G. F. & J. 481), that if the covenant had been inserted in the separation deed with the intent that the wife might be at liberty to commit adultery, the deed would have been void. Fearon v. Aylesford (Earl), 54 L. J., Q. B. 33; 14 Q. B. D. 792; 52 L. T. 954; 33 W. R. 331; 49 J. P. 596—C. A.

—— Plea of—Discovery in Aid.]—A. covenanted with trustees to pay an annuity for the benefit of a woman. The trustees sued A. on the covenant, the deed being good on the face of it. A. pleaded that the consideration for the covenant was future illicit cohabitation between himself and the woman, and he then filed a bill against the trustees for discovery in aid of the plea. Upon demurrer to the bill by the trustees:—Held, reversing the order below, that A. was entitled to the discovery, notwithstanding he was particeps criminis. Benyon v. Nettlefold, 3 M. & G. 94; 20 L. J., Ch. 186; 15 Jur. 209. Reversing 17 Sim. 51.

Prostitution.]—If a party lets lodgings to an immodest woman, to enable her to consort with the other sex, he cannot recover in an action for the rent of the lodgings; but if the woman merely lodges there, and receives her visitors elsewhere, he may. Appleton v. Campbell, 2 Car. & P. 347.

—— Knowledge of Purpose.]—So, although he did not know, at the time of letting the lodgings, of her habits, if he afterwards became acquainted with the fact, and permitted her to remain as a tenant. Jennings v. Throgmorton, R. & M. 251. S. P., Girardy v. Richardson, 1 Bos. & P. 340; 1 Esp. 13.

But an agreement to pay for the washing and getting up of expensive articles of dress for a prostitute has been held valid, although it was known to the party by whom the work was done that the dresses were to enable her to appear at public places in the exercise of her vocation. Lloyd v. Johnson, 1 Bos. & P. 340; 4 R. R. 822.

And so held, in nearly a similar case at nisi prius, unless proved that the plaintiff had furnished them with an express view to enable the defendant to carry on her prostitution, and expected to be paid from the profits of it. Bowry v. Bennet, 1 Camp. 348; 10 R. R. 697.

It is a good defence to an action for the hire of a brougham that the defendant was a prostitute, and that the plaintiff at the time of the hiring knew it, and that the brougham was for the purpose of meretricious display; and it is not necessary to prove that the brougham was supplied in the expectation that the defendant would pay for it out of her earnings as a prostitute. Pearce v. Brookes, 35 L. J., Ex. 134; L. R. 1 Ex. 213; 12 Jur. (N.S.), 342; 14 L. T. 288; 14 W. R. 614.

A lessee of a house which had been notoriously used for many years as a brothel, assigned his term to a purchaser, knowing that the rent and a premium would be paid out of the profits of the immoral trade carried on there. Among the covenants contained in the original lease was a covenant to deliver up the premises in good repair at the expiration of the term, and also not to permit the same to be used as a brothel. At the termination of the lease, the lessor compelled the lessee to pay a large sum for dilapidations and certain arrears of rent. The lessee submitted to the payment and claimed over against the estate of his assignee under a covenant in the assignment for indemnity in respect of all the lessee's covenants:—Held, that the assignor was not entitled to recover, the whole transaction and every obligation arising out of it being tainted with immorality. Smith v. White, 35 L. J., Ch. 454; L. R. 1 Eq. 626; 14 L. T. 350; 14 W. R. 510.

To a declaration containing two counts, the first for the breach of a contract to re-deliver a bank-note to the plaintiff, and the second for detaining the note, the defendant pleaded that it was deposited by way of pledge to secure the repayment of money advanced to the plaintiff. Replication, that the money was knowingly advanced for immoral purposes. Upon the trial the facts were proved as stated in the pleadings:—Held, that upon the whole record the defendant was entitled to judgment, as it was impossible that the plaintiff could recover, except through the medium and by the aid of an immoral transaction to which he was himself a party, so that the maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" was applicable. Taylor v. Chester, 10 B. & S. 237; 38 L. J., Q. B. 225; L. R. 4 Q. B. 309; 21 L. T. 359.

Other Immorality.]—The defendant contracted to let rooms to the plaintiff. Afterwards discovering that they were intended to be used for the delivery of lectures maintaining that the character of Christ is defective and His teaching misleading, and that the Bible is no more inspired than any other book, he refused to allow the use of them, but did not assign this as a reason for his refusal. In an action for breach of the contract:—Held, first, that the publication of such doctrines was blasphemy, and that therefore the purpose for which the plaintiff intended to use the rooms was illegal, and the contract one which could not be enforced by law. Cowan v. Milbourn, 36 L. J., Ex. 124; L. R. 2 Ex. 230; 16 L. T. 290; 15 W. R. 750.

Held, secondly, that the defendant was entitled to justify his refusal on this ground, notwithstanding his having assigned a different reason. Ib.

The printer of an immoral and libellous work cannot maintain an action for his bill against the publisher who employed him. Poplett v. Stockdale, R. & M. 337; 2 Car. & P. 198; 31 R. R. 662.

An author, by a verbal agreement, employed a printer to print a work, and placed the manuscript in his hands, with an intimation that it would be accompanied by a dedication. The work was printed by him, and the dedication having been sent, a proof of it was struck off at his premises by his servants. Before the copies of the dedication were worked off, his attention was for the first time directed to its contents, and, finding them libellous, he refused to print the dedication:—Held, first, that he might recover against the author for printing the work without the dedication. Clay v. Yates, 1 H. & N. 73; 25 L. J., Ex. 237; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 4 W. R. 557.

Held, secondly, that the action for this purpose was rightly brought for work, labour, and materials; and that this was not a contract for the sale of goods within the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17. Ib.

A. agreed to supply B. with a manuscript of a work, to be printed by the latter, the profits of which were to be equally divided between them:—Held, that B. might maintain an action against A. for refusing to supply manuscript after part of the work had been printed; but it would be a good defence of such action, to show that the intended publication was of an illegal nature; but this is not to be presumed, the work itself not having been produced at the trial. Gale v. Leckie, 2 Stark. 107; 19 R. R. 692.

An action will not lie for the price of libellous, obscene, or immoral prints. Fores v. Johnes, 4 Esp. 97; 6 R. R. 840.

Nor for pirating a work of a libellous or of an immoral tendency—as the "Amours of a Courtezan." Stockdale v. Onwhyn, 7 D. & R. 625; 5 B. & C. 178; 2 Car. & P. 163; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 122; 29 R. R. 207.

Without a plea of immorality, a defendant will not be allowed to give that fact in evidence as avoiding a contract, but may do so to impeach the plaintiff's credibility. Macnab v. Johnson, 2 F. & F. 293.

Possible Immorality—Existence of Contract, how affected by.]—Where a party has agreed to print and publish a certain specified quantity, as a sheet or a page, or a certain number of pages, of printed matter, at a certain time, and at a certain rate per page or sheet, there is a complete contract, and he cannot disclaim or deny the contract merely because, at the time he made it, he had not seen the matter to be printed, and that it might contain indecent, immoral, or libellous matter; for if it did so, though that would be a legal excuse for declining to print and publish it, it would be no ground for denying the existence of the contract, and would be no evidence under non assumpsit, but must be specially pleaded by way of excuse. Lara v. General Apothecaries Co., 26 L. J., Ex. 225.

g. Compromise of Criminal Proceedings.

Agreement not to Prosecute.]—A sum was provided by A. under an agreement, by which it was to be applied in paying the liabilities of B. to a company, with the object on the part of A. of saving B. from a criminal prosecution. The company intended to prosecute, but pending negotiations for the contract counsel advised them that no crime had been committed:—Held, that the agreement was void on three grounds: first, that the company had not disclosed the fact that they had abandoned their intention; secondly, that it was against public policy, as being an agreement to stifle a public prosecution; and thirdly, that it was made under pressure. Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 511; 8 Ch. D. 469; 38 L. T. 478; 26 W. R. 794.

Held, also, that the illegality was not such that (the fund being in medio) the court would refuse to interfere in favour of A. Ib.

—— Specific Performance.]—A court of equity will not enforce an agreement against a party who was induced to enter into it in order to save his sons from a threatened prosecution for felony. Dewar v. Elliott, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 178.

A bill in equity lies not to compel a specific performance of an agreement to pay money in consideration of having stifled prosecution for felony. Secus, if to stop a prosecution at law for a fraud. Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. W. 279.

Withdrawal from Prosecution.]—An agreement by a wife to waive the further prosecution of an indictment against her husband for an assault, in consideration of his allowing her an annuity by way of separate maintenance, is an illegal contract, though entered into with the sanction of the court in which the indictment is tried. Garth v. Earnshaw, 3 Y. & C. 584.

A petition having been presented to the House of Commons against the return of a member, on the ground of bribery, the petitioner entered into an agreement, in consideration of a sum of money, and upon other terms, to proceed no further with the petition:—Held, that this agreement was illegal. Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361; 8 L. J., Ex. 9

—— In Consideration of Money Paid.]—A banking company commenced a prosecution against a customer for having obtained credit from them under false pretences, which is by s. 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869, made a misdemeanour. At this time the bank had notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the customer. On the day on which the summons was to be heard by the magistrate, H. signed an undertaking that, if the magistrate would allow the summons to be withdrawn, he would pay the bank the sum which the customer had obtained by false pretences. An application was made to the magistrate, by the customer's solicitor to allow the summons to be withdrawn. The application was assented to by the bank's solicitor, and granted by the magistrate. H. then paid the money to the bank. The bank manager believed that H. was paying the money out of his own pocket. The customer was soon after adjudicated a bankrupt, upon the act of bankruptcy of which the bank had notice. The trustee in the bankruptcy discovered that the money which H. had paid to the bank had been previously handed to him by the bankrupt's wife, she having, with the bankrupt's knowledge, taken it for the purpose of paying the bank out of a bag of money belonging to the bankrupt:—Held, that the consideration for the payment to the bank being the stifling of a prosecution, there was no legal consideration, and that, though H., being in pari delicto, could not have recovered the money from the bank, the trustee, to whom by virtue of the relation back of his title to the act of bankruptcy, the money really belonged, could recover it. Caldecott, Ex parte (4 Ch. D. 150), distinguished. Wolverhampton Banking Co., Ex parte, Campbell, In re, 14 Q. B. D. 32.

—— In Consideration of Deposit of Deeds.]—A. having been arrested at the instance of B. on the charge of having committed the offence of larceny by a bailee, was brought up before a magistrate and remanded. A.'s wife then induced B. to withdraw from the prosecution on A.'s wife agreeing to charge her separate real estate with the amount taken. The title deeds of the property were deposited at a bank in the joint names of the solicitors of the parties. A. being again brought before the magistrates, the latter, having been informed of the terms, allowed the prosecution to be withdrawn. A.'s wife afterwards refused to perform her agreement. B. brought an action to enforce the charge, and A.'s wife counter-claimed for a declaration that she was entitled to have the deeds delivered up to her:—Held, that the agreement to charge the separate property was illegal and could not be enforced, and that the defendant was entitled to the declaration for delivery of the deeds. Larceny by a bailee is a felony, but, if it had been a misdemeanour, the agreement to charge in consideration of the withdrawal of the prosecution would have been void. Whitmore v. Farley, 45 L. T. 99; 29 W. R. 825; 14 Cox. C. C. 617—C. A.

—— In Consideration of Staying Civil Action.]—An agreement to withdraw from a prosecution for felony, provided the person accused will promise to bring no action for trespass and false imprisonment or for malicious prosecution, is void, and cannot be enforced; and if the person accused subsequently sues the prosecutor, the action will not be stayed upon the ground that it is brought against good faith. Rawlings v. Coal Consumers' Association, 43 L. J., M. C. 111; 30 L. T. 469; 22 W. R. 704.

In an action against magistrates for trespass and false imprisonment, they pleaded a charge preferred before them for an offence against 1 Will. & M. c. 18, s. 18, in disturbing a dissenting congregation, and a commitment for want of sureties under it to the next sessions; and that before the next sessions, it was agreed between the prosecutor and the plaintiff, with the consent of the magistrates, that the prosecution should be dropped, and the plaintiff be discharged at the sessions for want of prosecution; and that the plaintiff was accordingly then and there so discharged, in full satisfaction and discharge of the assault and imprisonment:—Held, that this was no legal satisfaction; for either the agreement was illegal, as stifling a prosecution for a public misdemeanour, and thereby impeding the course of justice, or the satisfaction, if any, was moving from the prosecutor only, and not from the justices; their authority over the prosecution being at an end after the commitment of the plaintiff, and their consent afterwards to the prosecutor dropping the prosecution being a mere nullity, and no satisfaction for a prior injury, if any, received by the plaintiff from their act. Edgecombe v. Rodd, 5 East, 294; 1 Smith, 515; 7 R. R. 700.

Inference as to Consideration.]—Where the treasurer of a friendly society had embezzled the funds, and the trustees agreed to take a bond and a sum of money to forego a criminal prosecution against him, the bond was declared illegal in an action thereon. Cannon v. Rands, 23 L. T. 817; 11 Cox, C. C. 631.

An agreement to abstain from instituting a threatened prosecution for a criminal offence is not illegal, unless there are reasonable grounds for believing that the alleged offence has been actually committed, or unless each party entered into the agreement on that assumption. Ib.

B. and his son had each separate banking accounts with W., and dealt with each other. The son being in difficulties, paid into his account numerous bills and notes purporting to bear his father's signature. B., being informed of this, went with his son to the bank, when the son admitted he had forged his father's signature. The banker then hinted that if it could be arranged he would not exercise pressure. Thereupon B., to save his son from being prosecuted, and not being in any way civilly liable on the bills, agreed to give securities over his own estate for the amount of those bills, and gave them accordingly to the banker:—Held, that the reasonable inference being that the basis of the agreement was the stifling of a prosecution, B. was entitled to a decree ordering the securities to be given up to be cancelled. Williams v. Bayley, 35 L. J., Ch. 717; L. R. 1 H. L. 200; 12 Jur. (N S.) 875; 14 L. T. 802.

Such an agreement would not have been legal even if the banker had proposed it. Ib.

A court of equity will set aside any agreement having for its object the stifling of a criminal prosecution. Ib.

The court will not set aside a warrant of attorney given to secure a debt, on the ground that it was obtained by a threat of prosecution for felony, unless it distinctly appears that there was an agreement, either express or necessarily implied, to abstain from prosecuting upon the security being given. Ward v. Lloyd, 6 Man. & G. 785; 7 Scott (N.R.) 449; 13 L. J., C. P. 5.

In order to render illegal the receipt of securities by a creditor from his debtor, where the debt has been contracted under circumstances which might render the debtor liable to criminal proceedings, it is not enough to show that the creditor was thereby induced to abstain from prosecuting. Following Ward v. Lloyd, supra. Flower v. Sadler, 9 Q. B. D. 83; 46 J. P. 503 Affirmed, 10 Q. B. D. 572—C. A.

A clerk having robbed his employers of money, gave them, upon the discovery of his frauds and before his prosecution, an equitable security on policies and lands for the amount. He was afterward prosecuted and convicted:—Held, that the debt was a good consideration for the securities, and that they were valid. Chowne v. Baylis, 31 Beav. 351.

Semble, that where the consideration for a contract is an agreement not to prosecute, it does not follow as a necessary inference of fact that there is such pressure or undue influence on the party to whom the consideration moves as to entitle him to equitable relief. Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society, 61 L. J., Ch. 138; [1892] 1 Ch. 173; 65 L. T. 685; 40 W. R. 273; 17 Cox, C. C. 389. Cp McClatchie v. Haslam, 65 L. T. 691; 17 Cox, C. C. 402.

Misdemeanour.]—It is not illegal to compromise indictments for misdemeanours. Elworthy v. Bird, 9 Moore, 430; 2 Bing. 258; 13 Price, 222; 2 Sim. & S. 372; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 260.

Secus, as to indictments for felony. Ib. See Whitmore v. Farley, supra.

A party who has been defrauded of goods by the apprentice of another may legally agree not to proceed against the master who has received the goods at an under price. Drage v. Ibberson, 2 Esp. 643.

Where Offence subject of Civil Action.]—The law permits the compromise of offences (although made the subject of criminal prosecution), for which the injured party might sue and recover damages in an action; but no agreement can be valid which is founded upon the consideration of stifling an offence of a public nature. Keir v. Leeman, 6 Q. B. 308; 13 L. J., Q. B. 259; 8 Jur. 824. S. C., affirmed in error, 9 Q. B. 371; 15 L. J., Q. B. 359; 10 Jur. 742—Ex. Ch.

At the trial of the defendants on the prosecution of the plaintiffs for obstructing a highway, an agreement was entered into between the parties, with the approval of the court, that the defendants should restore the highway, and that in the meantime the indictment should lie in the office, and that on the fulfilment of the agreement the plaintiffs should consent to an acquittal. In pursuance of this agreement the defendants covenanted to restore the highway:—Held, that the covenant was founded on an illegal consideration, and was void. Keir v. Leeman, supra, followed and approved. Dictum of James, L.J., in Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., infra, not followed. Windhill Local Board v. Vint, 59 L. J., Ch. 608; 45 Ch. D. 351; 63 L. T. 366; 38 W. R. 738—C. A Affirming, 17 Cox, C. C. 41.

When an offence is of such a nature that the person injured may obtain either a civil or a criminal remedy, there is nothing unlawful in a compromise of criminal proceedings taken against the offender. Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 500; L. R. 10 Ch. 297; 32 L. T. 628; 23 W. R. 460.

Action for malicious prosecution, obstruction of a right of way, and stopping a public footpath, whereby the public was forced to pass over the plaintiff's lands. Plea, that after the grievances a consent was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant that all actions and suits pending at the suit of the defendant or of the Queen, against the plaintiff, should be stopped and abandoned by the defendant, and that no rule should be made on a motion for a certiorari then pending, and that the defendant should pay all costs; and that the plaintiff agreed to accept such consent and the signing thereof in full satisfaction of the causes of action to which the plea was pleaded, and that the consent was duly made and signed by the defendant, and so accepted by the plaintiff. Replication, that one of the actions and suits in the consent mentioned was an indictment preferred at the suit of the Queen by the defendant against the plaintiff, and duly found a true bill by the grand jury for obstructing a public footway, and that at the time of making the consent the bill was still pending, and the plaintiff was not discharged for the same, and that by reason thereof the consent was illegal and void. Rejoinder, that the consent was made a rule of court:—Held, that there was no fact shown on the pleadings which rendered this consent void as an agreement to stifle a public prosecution. Crooke v. Powerscourt (Lord), 16 W. R. 969.

A bond conditioned (on the obligee's agreeing not to prosecute) to remove certain public nuisances, and not erect any others of the same kind, is good. Fallowes v. Taylor, 7 Term Rep. 475; Peake Ad. C. 155.

Claim arising out of Felony—Whether Debt provable in Bankruptcy.]—Bankers allowed a customer to overdraw his current account on his depositing with them as security for the overdraft some bills of exchange drawn by him upon, and purporting to be accepted by, a third person. After the customer had overdrawn his account the bankers discovered that the acceptances were forgeries. They then communicated with the customer, and ultimately gave up the forged acceptances to him, receiving from him in exchange joint and several promissory notes of himself and his father. The customer was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt. The notes were not paid at maturity:—Held, that, though the bankers had not prosecuted the bankrupt for the felony, and whether they had or had not agreed not to prosecute him, they were entitled to prove in the bankruptcy for the balance due to them upon the bankrupt's current account. Leslie, Ex parte, Guerrier, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 689; 20 Ch. D. 131; 46 L. T. 548; 30 W. R. 314—C. A.

Consent of Judge.]—Where an offence was not confined to a personal injury, but was accompanied with riot, and the obstruction of a public officer in the execution of his duty; an agreement by the prosecutor to compromise the matter, and forego the prosecution, is invalid, even though made with the knowledge and consent of the judge. Keir v. Leeman, supra, col. 183.

A promissory note given by a defendant in prison after conviction for a misdemeanour, and before sentence, in pursuance of a recommendation of the court to compromise, is valid; although the court is not apprised of the terms of the compromise, and although the costs of the prosecution are included in the note. Kirk v. Strickwood, 1 N. & M. 275; 4 B. & Ad. 421; 2 L. J., M. C. 43.

See Windhill Local Board v. Vint, supra, col. 184.

Securities for—Bond.]—A bond given by way of indemnity, to one who had given his note to a prosecutor on an indictment for perjury, to induce him to withhold his evidence, is void ab initio. Collins v. Blantern, 2 Wils. 341, 347.

Any contract having a tendency, however slight, to affect the administration of justice is illegal and void. The consideration of a bond was expressed to be that the obligor was to be free from any legal proceedings or other consequences for having introduced the obligee to C., through whom the obligee had lost money:—Held, on the evidence, that the consideration included promises that no criminal proceedings should be commenced against the obligor, and that certain criminal proceedings then pending against C. should be so conducted that the name of the obligor should not be mentioned, or should be mentioned in such a way as not to damage him; that the consideration was partly illegal as tending to affect the course of justice; and that there was no good consideration for the bond. Lound v. Grimwade, 57 L. J., Ch. 725; 39 Ch. D. 605; 59 L. T. 168.

Warrant of Attorney.]—A warrant of attorney, given by an attorney to induce a party to stay proceedings against him on a rule, is illegal and void, and the court will direct it to be taken off the file of the court and cancelled. Kirwan v. Goodman, 9 D. P. C. 330; 5 Jur. 293. S. P., Pool v. Bousfield, 1 Camp. 55; 10 R. R. 633.

A. preferred a charge of embezzlement against B., the investigation of which was several times adjourned, the magistrate on each occasion expressing a strong opinion that the prosecution could not be sustained, as the evidence seemed to establish the existence of a partnership between the prosecutor and B. Previously to the final adjudication of the matter by the magistrate, a warrant of attorney was given to the prosecutor, to secure the payment to him of the sum due from B.; and at the next meeting before the magistrate, upon the prosecutor, by his attorney, stating that he was advised by counsel that he could not substantiate the charge, B. was forthwith dismissed:—Held, that the warrant of attorney was void, as having been given on an illegal consideration. Critchley, Ex parte, 1 B. C. Rep. 7; 3 D. & L. 527, 15 L. J., Q. B. 124; 10 Jur. 112.

In an application to set aside a warrant of attorney given by a collector who had received moneys and failed to account for them, evidence was given that when the defalcations were first discovered, the collector's principal threatened to prosecute him for unlawfully making use of his money, and the collector thereupon gave the security in question, and no prosecution followed:—Held, that the warrant of attorney was not given for an illegal consideration. Ward v. Lloyd, 6 Man. & G. 785; 7 Scott (N.R.) 449.

Promissory Note.] — Promissory notes, delivered by one person to another, to induce the latter to forego prosecuting him for cheating at cards, will be decreed to be delivered up, because it would be extremely dangerous to allow a party to be a judge in his own cause, and to determine in his own favour what amount of penalty ought to be paid for a breach of the law committed by another person, notwithstanding he may have suffered by it. Osbaldiston v. Simpson, 13 Sim. 513; 7 Jur. 736.

The respondents gave a written undertaking to the appellant society to make good part of a debt arising from the criminal default of the secretary of the society, the consideration expressed being that the society should not sue the secretary to recover that part of the debt. The society had threatened to prosecute the secretary, and, though the question of their doing so was not mentioned in the negotiations which led to the undertaking, the respondents had heard of the threat, and in giving the undertaking were, as was well known to the directors of the society, actuated by a desire to prevent a prosecution:—Held, that it was a term of the true agreement between the parties that there should be no prosecution; that the consideration for such agreement was illegal; and that certain promissory notes given in pursuance of the undertaking could not be enforced by the society. Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society, 61 L. J., Ch. 138; [1892] 1 Ch. 173; 65 L. T. 685; 40 W. R. 273; 17 Cox, C. C. 389—C. A.

Bill of Exchange.]—An agreement to forego a criminal prosecution is illegal, but the plaintiff may recover on a bill of exchange given by the defendant for the costs of a civil proceeding against a third person, and the amount of a composition with him, although the plaintiff has instituted a prosecution against such third person, which he afterwards abandoned, unless the abandonment of the prosecution formed part of the consideration of the bill. Harding v. Cooper, 1 Stark. 467.

In an action on a bill of exchange by the drawer against the acceptor, the defendant pleaded, in substance, that the only consideration for the bill, was the discontinuance by the drawer of certain proceedings by civil bill, and his forbearing to commence a prosecution for an alleged forgery against a third person which he had threatened to institute:—Held, on demurrer, that the agreement to abstain from instituting the prosecution, though in itself an insufficient consideration for the bill, was not shown by the defence to be an illegal agreement, and therefore did not avoid the contract of the acceptor, for which the abandonment of the civil bill proceedings would otherwise afford an admittedly valid consideration. Rourke v. Mealy, 4 L. R., Ir. 166.

—— Forged Indorsement, Ratification of.]—The defendant's name was forged, by one Jones, to a joint and several note for 20*l*., dated the 7th of November, 1869, and purporting to be made in favour of the plaintiff, by the defendant and Jones. While the note was current the defendant signed the following memorandum, in order to prevent the prosecution of the forger, at the same time denying that the signature to the note was his or written by his authority:—"I hold myself responsible for a bill dated the 7th of November, 1869, for 20*l*., bearing my signature and Richard Jones', in favour of Mr. Brook." At the trial of an action against the defendant on the note, the judge ruled that this memorandum was a ratification, and directed the jury that the only question for them was whether the defendant signed it. It being admitted that he did, a verdict was entered for the plaintiff:—Held (per Kelly, C.B., Channell and Pigott, BB., Martin, B., dissentiente), a misdirection:— Per Kelly, C.B., Channell and Pigott, BB., that the memorandum could not be construed as a ratification, inasmuch as the act it professed to ratify was illegal and void and incapable of ratification, but that it was, in fact, an agreement by the defendant to treat the note as his own in consideration that the plaintiff would forbear to prosecute Jones, and was therefore void as founded on an illegal consideration. Brook v. Hook, 40 L. J., Ex. 50; L. R. 6 Ex. 89; 24 L. T. 34; 19 W. R. 508. Compare M'Kenzie v. British Linen Co., 6 App. Cas. 82; 44 L. T. 431; 29 W. R. 477—H. L. (Sc.)

—— For Expenses of Prosecution.]—A security for the fair expenses of the prosecution, agreed to be given, at the recommendation of the court of quarter sessions, by a party who stood convicted before them of a misdemeanour, in ill-treating his parish apprentice, for which the parish officers had been bound over by recognisance to prosecute him under 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, and the giving of which security was considered by the court in abatement of the period of imprisonment to which he would otherwise have been sentenced, is legal. Beeley v. Wingfield, 11 East, 46; 10 R. R. 431.

Postponement of Trial.]—There is no objection to the legality of an agreement to pay money in consideration of putting off the trial of an indictment. Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17.

Recovery back of Money paid.]—A person who has voluntarily offered to pay a sum of money for the use of the poor of the parish, in order to avoid a prosecution by a magistrate, upon a charge of having instigated an escape, which offer was consented to by the magistrate, and the money accordingly paid by the party to the master of the workhouse for the use of the poor, may, at any rate, countermand the application of the money before it is so applied, and recover it back. Taylor v. Lenday, 9 East, 49.

Action for Damages.]—One of two parties to an agreement to suppress a prosecution for a felony cannot maintain an action against the other for an injury arising out of the transaction, in which they have both been illegally engaged. Fivaz v. Nicholls, 2 C. B. 501; 15 L. J., C. P. 125; 10 Jur. 50.

Guardians of a poor-law union indicted a party for disobeying an order of sessions for maintenance of a bastard. Before trial, he offered a compromise; and the clerk to the guardians, on their behalf, agreed with him for a sum on account of costs and maintenance, which he paid; and the indictment was dropped. Afterwards, he discovered that the order of sessions was defective and void, and he brought an action for money had and received against the clerk:—Held, that the clerk was not liable, having done nothing in the prosecution beyond preferring the indictment. Goodall v. Lowndes, 6 Q. B. 464; 9 Jur. 177.

If the compromise was illegal, the party, being in pari delicto with the other parties offending, could not sue them for money which he had paid. Ib.

Discovery.]—Transfer of stock under an agreement to satisfy the deficiency in the amount of a banker's clerk, though he is not a party, amounts to a composition of felony, to prevent a prosecution. Defendant, therefore, may protect himself by plea from discovering, not only the broad leading fact, but any fact, the answers to which may form a step in the prosecution. Claridge v. Hoare, 14 Ves. 59.

h. Brokerage.

An agreement to procure a situation for a medical man, by the assignment of patients by a third person, to whom a premium was to be paid, is not illegal. Edgar v. Blick, 1 Stark. 464; 18 R. R. 809.

So an action lies for brokerage in procuring a medical partnership. Ib.

But an agreement to allow poundage to a person upon the amount of the bills of all customers recommended by such person, is illegal, as a fraud upon the customers. Wyburd v. Stanton, 4 Esp. 179.

If A. agrees to give B. a certain sum for goods, in advancement of C., any secret agreement between B. and C., that the latter shall pay a further sum, is void as a fraud on A., although the bill of sale is made to A.; and B. cannot recover such further sum against C. Jackson v Duchaire, 3 Term Rep. 551.

Government having contracted to furnish forage for a certain number of horses to be kept by a suttler, and the contractor for forage having agreed not to commute the forage for money; an agreement between the suttler and the contractor, that the latter should allow the former a sum of money for each ration of forage allowed for the whole number of horses, and should retain the forage, is void. Willis v. Baldwin, 2 Dougl. 450.

A demurrer was allowed in equity to a bill of discovery in support of an action to recover the expenses of entertainments, given by the plaintiff under an agreement with the defendant to introduce him to a woman of fortune, with a view to marriage. King v. Burr, 3 Mer. 693.

An action will not lie to recover back money deposited for the purpose of being paid to a person for his interest in soliciting a pardon for a person under sentence of death. Norman v. Cole, 3 Esp. 253.

Default in Sending Contract Note—Right to Commission.]—Section 17 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, which imposes a penalty on a broker who fails to send a contract note to his principal does not render the contract between broker and principal illegal so as to preclude the broker from recovering commission or brokerage. Learoyd v. Bracken, 63 L. J., Q. B. 96; [1894] 1 Q. B. 114; 9 R. 92; 69 L. T. 668; 42 W. R. 196—C. A.

i. In Restraint of Trade.

i. General Principles.

Changes in Doctrine.]—The changes in the doctrine of public policy and the authorities discussed. Davies v. Davies, 56 L. J., Ch. 962; 36 Ch. D. 359; 58 L. T. 209; 36 W. R. 86—C. A.

The old rule that the law does not allow an absolute covenant in restraint of trade is still binding. Ib. per Cotton, L. J.

Construction.]—The court will construe agreements in restraint of trade in accordance with the intention of the parties, without leaning to one side or the other. Mills v. Dunham, 60 L. J., Ch. 362; [1891] 1 Ch. 576; 64 L. T. 712; 39 W. R. 289—C. A.

ii. What is.

Not to Ship Goods in other than a particular Dock.]—The Taff Vale Railway Company covenanted with the Bute Dock trustees, first, that the company would, as far as they were able, cause all goods carried along the Taff Vale Railway, or any branch thereof to be shipped or unshipped in the Bute Dock; and, second, that, for all goods carried over the Taff Vale Railway, or any branch thereof, which should be shipped or unshipped in "any dock, canal, or cut whatsoever other than" the Bute Dock, the company would pay the trustees the wharfage and dockage dues to which they would have been entitled if the goods had been shipped or unshipped in the Bute Dock. The Taff Vale Company subsequently took a lease of the Penarth Harbour and Dock Railway, and used this harbour and dock for the shipment and unshipment of goods which passed along the Penarth Railway and along the Taff Vale Railway:—Held, that the above covenants were not in restraint of trade. Taff Vale Ry. v. Macnabb, 42 L. J., Q. B. 153; L. R. 6 H. L. 169; 22 W. R. 65.

Rule of Society not to employ Servants of other Members.]—A society established for the protection of a particular trade contained a rule that no member should employ any traveller, carman, or outdoor employé who had left the service of another member without the consent in writing of his late employer till after the expiration of two years:—Held, that the rule was unreasonable, in restraint of trade, and void. But, semble, a rule protecting the members against information gained by servants being improperly communicated to other members, if reasonably framed, would have been good. Mineral Water Bottle Exchange Society v. Booth, 36 Ch. D. 465; 57 L. T. 573; 36 W. R. 274—C. A.

Not to Solicit Customers of Plaintiffs or their Successors.]—By an agreement in writing the plaintiffs engaged the defendant as their traveller and assistant in their business of antiseptic manufacturers. The defendant agreed "to call upon and solicit orders from" customers for the said business, and to report to the plaintiffs "all calls made by or upon him"; and he further agreed that he would not after the termination of the agreement, "for or on account of any employer, or on his own account, at any time, either by himself or in partnership with any person or persons or firm, call upon, or directly or indirectly solicit orders from, or in any way deal or transact business with any person or firm who during the continuance of this agreement shall be customers of" the plaintiffs, "or any future successors of" the plaintiffs, "or any of the successors in business of such customers":—Held, that, notwithstanding the generality of the language, the true intent of the parties was to bind the defendant not to engage in any competing business; that the agreement was not in restraint of trade; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from soliciting orders for a rival firm. Mills v. Dunham, 60 L. J., Ch. 362; [1891] 1 Ch. 576: 64 L. T. 712; 39 W. R. 289—C. A.

To disclose Inventions and Improvements.]—An agreement by a managing director with his company that the company should be entitled to the full and exclusive benefit of all new inventions or improvements that might be made or discovered by the director after the date of the agreement, in connection with certain named subjects, and that he would communicate to the company particulars of any such new invention or improvement, and would execute such documents as might be requisite to enable the company to obtain patents for such inventions and improvements, is not void either as being in restraint of trade, or as contrary to public policy, or as being too vague to be enforced. Maxim-Nordenfeldt Co. v. Nordenfeldt, 67 L. T. 469.

Sale of Goodwill.]—The sale of a trade with a goodwill does not prevent the vendor setting up again a similar trade, unless there is an express covenant or fraud, by representing it as a continuation of the old trade, or conduct encouraging others to involve themselves in the confidence that he would not trade again. Crutwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. 335; 11 R. R. 98. See Thomas, Ex parte, 2 Mont. D & D. 294.

The saleable quality of goodwill in trade deserves protection. Elves v. Croft, 10 C. B. 241; 19 L. J., C. P. 385; 14 Jur. 855.

A covenant, by which a butcher on assigning premises for the residue of a term, and also his goodwill in trade to another butcher, covenanted not to carry on the trade of a butcher within five miles of the premises assigned, is good in law, and it continues binding on the covenantor after the expiration of the term, and during the life of the covenantee, although he may have ceased to carry on the trade. Ib.

A widow carried on the business of a licensed victualler on premises held by her from year to year. Prior to her second marriage she assigned her household goods, furniture, stock-in-trade, brewing utensils, and all other effects, upon trusts, excluding her husband. She married:—Held, that the goodwill of the trade, which was afterwards sold, passed by the deed as incident to the stock and licence, and not to the husband with the premises. England v. Downs, 6 Beav. 269.

And see In respect of Time, infra, viii.

iii. Reasonableness.

General Rule.]—The true test of the validity of a covenant which is in restraint of trade—whether the restraint be general or partial—is whether it is or is not reasonable. Nordenfeldt v. Maxim-Nordenfeldt Guns and Ammunition Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 908; [1894] A. C. 535; 11 R. 1; 71 L. T. 489—H. L. (E.)

Where a covenant in restraint of trade is general—that is, without qualification—it is bad, as being unreasonable and contrary to public policy; where it is partial—that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or space—then the question is whether it is reasonable, and, if reasonable, it is good in law. Badische Anilin Fabrik v. Schott, 61 L. J., Ch. 698; [1892] 3 Ch. 447; 67 L. T. 281.

In considering the question of reasonableness, the points to which the attention of the court is specially directed are the limits of time and of space, and the protection required for the trade of the covenantee, this latter point involving the examination of the nature and extent of the trade. The reasonableness depends on all the circumstances, which must be duly weighed in each case. If the restraint is greater than can be possibly required for the protection of the covenantee, the covenant is unreasonable; but if the restraint is not greater than can possibly be required for the protection of the covenantee, it is not unreasonable; and where the covenant is qualified as to time, the burden lies on the covenantor of showing that the restraint is unreasonable. Ib.

Restraint Unlimited.] — Although public policy requires that every man shall be at liberty to work for himself, and shall not deprive himself or the state of his labour, skill, or talent, it is equally a principle of public policy that a man shall be enabled to sell to the best advantage anything that he has acquired by his labour, skill, or talent, and when that advantage requires him to enter into stipulations he may do so, provided such stipulations, however restrictive upon himself, are not unreasonable, having regard to the subject-matter of the contract. Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorsont, 39 L. J., Ch. 86; L. R. 9 Eq. 345; 21 L. T. 661; 18 W. R. 572.

Upon the formation of a company for the purchase and working of a process of manufacture introduced into this country from America, the agreement for the purchase contained a provision that the vendors "will not directly or indirectly carry on, nor will they, to the best of their power, allow to be carried on by others, in any part of Europe, any company or manufactory having for its object the manufacture or sale of productions now manufactured in the business or manufactory of the vendors, and will not communicate to any person or persons the means or processes of such manufacture, so as in any way to interfere with the exclusive enjoyment by the purchasing company of the benefits hereby agreed to be purchased."—Held, that the restriction contained in this clause was no greater, having regard to the subject-matter of the contract, than was necessary for the protection of the purchasers, and was capable of being enforced against the vendors. Ib.

A covenant in restraint of trade, although it is unrestricted in respect of space, is reasonable and therefore good in law, if it relates to the use of a trade secret. Hogg v. Darley, 47 L. J., Ch. 567; 38 L. T. 312.

The purchaser of the business of certain manufacturers and sellers of well-known disinfectants, by his statement of claim alleged that the mode by which those disinfectants were manufactured was a secret; that the vendors of the business (of whom the defendant was one) had at the time of the sale entered into a several covenant not to carry on the business of manufacturers or sellers of such disinfectants, or other articles of a similar kind, within fourteen years from that date, and that the defendant had infringed this covenant. A demurrer to so much of the statement of claim as related to this covenant, on the ground that the covenant was too general, and therefore bad in law, was overruled. Ib.

There is no absolute rule that a covenant in restraint of trade is void if it is unlimited in regard to space. The question in each case is whether the restraint extends further than is necessary for the reasonable protection of the covenantee. If it does not do that, the performance of the covenant will be enforced, even though the restriction be unlimited as to space. Allsopp v. Wheatcroft (L. R. 15 Eq. 59) disapproved; Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorsont (supra) followed. Rousillon v. Rousillon, 49 L. J., Ch. 338; 14 Ch. D. 351; 42 L. T. 679; 28 W. R. 623; 44 J. P. 663.

A covenant in restraint of trade may be unlimited in point of space, provided that it is not more than is reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenantee, and is in no way injurious to the interests of the public. Nordenfeldt v. Maxim-Nordenfeldt Guns and Ammunition Co., supra, col. 191.

A trader may sell a secret in his trade, and restrain himself generally from the use of it. Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & S. 74; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 42.

Divisibility of Stipulations.]—P. covenanted with G. not to carry on the trade of a perfumer within the cities of London and Westminster, or within 600 miles from the same, and bound himself in 5,000*l.* by way of liquidated damages for the observance of the covenant. The executor of G. brought an action for a breach of the covenant by the defendant in carrying on the business in the city of London. Plea, that the deed was void, because the covenant extended to all England:—Held, that the covenant was divisible, and that, although void as regards the distance of 600 miles from London and Westminster, it was good as regards the cities of London and Westminster themselves. Price v. Green, 16 M. & W. 346; 16 L. J., Ex. 108; 9 Jur. 880—Ex. Ch.

In an agreement for employment as a milk carrier, the servant undertook not to serve or interfere with any customer served or belonging at any time to the master, his successors or assigns:—Held, that, if on the construction of the undertaking it was not limited to interference with persons who were customers during the employment of the servant, the undertaking was severable, and capable of enforcement in respect of persons who were customers during the employment. Baines v. Geary, 56 L. J., Ch. 935;

The defendant entered into an agreement to serve the plaintiff in his business of dairyman as a milk-carrier. By the agreement the defendant agreed that he would not during the continuance of the service nor at any time thereafter serve, for his own benefit or for the benefit of any other person, or solicit or in any way interfere with any of the customers who should at any time be served by the plaintiff in his business:—Held, that the clause was severable, and that an injunction could properly be granted restraining the defendant from serving persons who were customers of the plaintiff during the employment of the defendant by the plaintiff. Dubowski v. Goldstein, 65 L. J., Q. B. 397; [1896] 1 Q. B. 478; 74 L. T. 180; 44 W. R. 436—C. A.

Held, also, by Lord Esher, M.R., and Rigby, L.J. (Lopes, L.J., dissenting), that, without any severance, the restrictive clause was valid, as it did not go beyond what was reasonably necessary for the protection of the plaintiff's business. Ib.

In an action for the breach of an agreement, a clause contained therein (although illegal, as being in restraint of trade), if it forms no part of the consideration, need not be set out in the declaration. M'Allen v. Churchill, 11 Moore, 483; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 183; 28 R. R. 680.

What held to be unnecessary Restrictions.]—All contracts of trade, whereby a party is restricted generally, and without reference to place, from exercising his trade for a special time, are void by the general policy of the law. Ward v. Byrne, 5 M. & W. 548; 9 L. J., Ex. 14; 3 Jur. 1175.

A covenant by a clerk and traveller with a firm of brewers that he would not, during his service or within two years afterwards, either directly or indirectly, sell, procure orders for, or recommend, or be in anywise concerned or engaged in the sale or recommendation, either on his own account or for any other person, public company or corporation, of any Burton ale or porter brewed at Burton, or offered for sale as such, other than the ale, beer, or porter brewed by the firm, is void, as unnecessarily extensive. Allsopp v. Wheatcroft, 42 L. J., Ch. 12; L. R. 15 Eq. 59; 27 L. T. 372; 21 W. R. 102.

A covenant by the lessor of a brewery, that he will not "during the continuance of the demise, carry on the business of a brewer or merchant, or agent for the sale of ale in S., or elsewhere, or in any other manner howsoever, be concerned in the business," is void, as being a general restraint of trade. Hinde v. Gray, 1 Man. & G. 195; 1 Scott (N.R.) 123; 9 L. J., C. P. 253; 4 Jur. 392.

All restraints of trade, which are larger than are necessary for the protection of the party with whom the contract is made, are unreasonable, and void as against public policy. Mallan v. May, 11 M. & W. 853; 12 L. J., Ex. 376; 7 Jur. 536.

Whether a contract in restraint of trade is reasonable or not, is a question of law to be determined by the judge, and not a matter of fact to be left to the consideration of a jury. Ib.

An agreement between a foreman cutter and general superintendent of a tailor's business and his master, contained a covenant that the former would not after quitting his master's service enter "into any engagement or be concerned in carrying on any business whatsoever" within a given period of time and limit of distance:—Held, that the covenant could not be construed as merely a covenant not to carry on the business of a tailor, but was void as being in general restraint of trade. Baines v. Geary (35 Ch. D. 155), discussed. Baker v. Hedgecock, 57 L. J., Ch. 889; 39 Ch. D. 520; 59 L. T. 361; 36 W. R. 840.

By an agreement in writing the plaintiff engaged the defendant as clerk and bookkeeper, and the defendant agreed "not to accept another situation as clerk or agent, nor to establish himself" within a certain district, without the written permission of the plaintiff, for three years after leaving his service. There was a proviso that such permission should not be withheld if it could be proved to the satisfaction of the plaintiff that the situation was not with a firm dealing in the same class of goods as the plaintiff, or that the defendant, after establishing himself, would deal in goods other than those of the plaintiff, for three years:—Held, that the agreement was in restraint of trade, and void. Perls v. Saalfeld, 61 L. J., Ch. 409; [1892] 2 Ch. 149; 66 L. T. 666; 40 W. R. 548—C. A.

On a dissolution of partnership the retiring partner, who received a large sum of money, covenanted to retire from the partnership; and, so far as the law allows, from the business, and not to trade, act, or deal in any way so as directly or indirectly to affect the continuing partners." The business had been carried on at Wolverhampton and in London. In an action by the survivor of the continuing partners and his assignees to restrain the retiring partner from carrying on a similar business in Middlesex:—Held, that the covenant to retire from the business so far as the law allows was too vague for the court to enforce. Davies v. Davies, 56 L. J., Ch. 962; 36 Ch. D. 359; 58 L. T. 209; 36 W. R. 86.

What held to be Reasonable.]—Upon the sale of the business of a general merchant in a country place, the vendor agreed to give a bond for 1,600*l.* as liquidated damages, if he should be thereafter concerned in any trading establishment within a neighbouring district, comprising a considerable section of the county of Cornwall:—Held, that this was not too general a restraint of trade, and specific performance of the agreement was decreed at the suit of the vendor. Avery v. Langford, 1 Kay, 663; 23 L. J., Ch. 837; 18 Jur. 905; 2 W. R. 615.

In construing the condition of such a bond, a court of law would take into consideration the surrounding circumstances at the time of executing the bond, and would consider the words "trading establishment" to mean an establishment for any trade likely to interfere with the goodwill, which was the subject of the sale. Ib.

A covenant by a licensee for the residue of a term of fourteen years, of patented improvements in machinery for slubbing fibrous substances, not to make or sell any slubbing frames whatever without the invention applied to them, is not void as a covenant in restraint of trade. Jones v. Lees, 1 H. & N. 189; 26 L. J., Ex. 9; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 645.

The plaintiff, a brewer, sold a piece of land to the trustees of a freehold land society, who covenanted with him that he, his heirs and assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying beer to any public-house erected on the land but the plaintiff did not enter into any covenant to supply it. The defendant, a member of the society, who was also a brewer, acquired a portion of the land with notice of the covenant, and erected on it a public-house which he supplied with his own beer. The plaintiff filed a bill in equity to restrain the defendant from supplying beer, alleging that the plaintiff had always been ready to furnish a sufficient supply of good beer at a fair price:—Held, that the covenant was not void either for uncertainty or want of mutuality, or as being an unreasonable restraint of trade, or because it purported to be perpetual, and that though it was in terms positive, it was in substance negative, and that the court could interfere by injunction to restrain the defendant from acting in contravention of it. Catt v. Tourle, 38 L. J., Ch. 665; L. R. 4 Ch. 654; 21 L T. 188.

An agreement between the plaintiff, a brewer, whose business consisted exclusively in supplying beer in casks of 4½ gallons and upwards, and the defendant, provided that the defendant would serve the plaintiff as his traveller, and would procure from "wholesale purchasing agents only" orders for beer and other malt liquors, and also, if required, aërated waters, &c., and the defendant agreed that in the event of the determination of the service from any cause whatever, he would not for a period of two years after such determination directly or indirectly engage or be concerned or interested in selling beer or other malt liquors, aërated waters, &c., within 100 miles of Cardiff, whether on his own behalf, or as a partner with, or agent, traveller, clerk, or servant of any other person, firm or company:—Held, that the covenant, so far as it applied to the sale of beer and other malt liquors, included selling by retail as well as wholesale, and that the covenant, so extended, was not wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of the plaintiff, and was therefore valid:—Held, also, that that part of the covenant as to the sale of aërated water, &c., was severable from the covenant as to the sale of beer and other malt liquors. Rogers v. Maddocks, 62 L. J., Ch. 219; [1892] 3 Ch. 346; 2 R. 53; 67 L. T. 329—C. A.

Sufficiency.]—A legal consideration of any value is sufficient to support a contract in partial restraint of trade; and the court will not inquire as to its adequacy. Gravely v. Barnard, 43 L. J., Ch. 659; L. R. 18 Eq. 518; 30 L. T. 863.

The plaintiff, a surgeon, engaged the defendant (who was not qualified to practise, but was studying with a view to pass the necessary examination) to assist him in his practice, the engagement being terminable at the will of either party. Subsequently the defendant, previously to going up to pass his examination, executed, at the request of the plaintiff, a bond which was conditioned to be void if the defendant should not practise within certain limits, but which contained no express agreement on the part of the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment. The defendant remained in the employment for about three months afterwards, and was then dismissed. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, and a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held, that an agreement by the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment on the old terms could be inferred; that there was consideration to support the bond; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Ib.

Held, also, that the point was one that ought to be decided on motion without waiting for the hearing. Ib.

In determining whether a contract is a hard bargain, the court will not (if there be valuable consideration) consider whether the consideration is sufficient, but whether one party has taken an unfair advantage of the position of the other party. In consideration of A. employing B. at a weekly salary of 21*s.* to go about London and sell oil for him, B. agreed that he would not for twelve calendar months after the determination of the agreement, which was determinable on a week's notice on either side, sell oil within a radius of eight miles from the General Post Office. After a year's employment B. determined the agreement, and then commenced selling oil on his own account within the prohibited area:—Held, that the agreement not being a hard bargain, and being for valuable consideration, A. was entitled to an injunction. Middleton v. Brown, 47 L. J., Ch. 411; 38 L. T. 334—C. A.

Contracts by bond or otherwise, entered into between two persons, to restrain one of them from setting up, or exercising a particular trade, within a certain limited district, and for a valuable consideration, are valid. Chesman v. Nainby, 1 Bro. P. C. 234. S. P., Morris v. Coleman, 18 Ves. 438; 11 R. R. 230.

An agreement in partial restraint of trade is not void, because the party is thereby restricted from exercising his business in a particular place for his life, notwithstanding the death of the other party. Hitchcock v. Coker, 1 N. & P. 796; 6 A. & E. 438; 2 H. & W. 464; 6 L. J., Ex. 266—Ex. Ch.

A court of law will not consider the adequacy of a consideration, given for an agreement in partial restraint of trade; it is sufficient that there is a legal consideration, and of some value. Ib.

Where a party has agreed to forego a business for a consideration the court cannot enter into the reasonableness of the restraint as compared with the consideration; and therefore, although the restriction may be unlimited as to time, the covenant cannot be pronounced void as operating in undue restraint of trade. Archer v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 959; 2 N. & P. 562; W. W. & D. 641; 6 L. J., K. B. 244.

A covenant to restrain a person from exercising a trade is not illegal, if it is not to the general prejudice of the public, and the consideration is reasonable. Horner v. Ashford, 11 Moore, 91; 3 Bing. 322; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 62.

An agreement in partial restraint of trade can only be supported by an adequate consideration. Thus an agreement by which a brass-founder was to work exclusively for certain factors for his and their lives, they not undertaking to find him full employment, but on the contrary reserving liberty to employ others to execute their orders in his trade, if they should think fit, and to put an end to the agreement at three months' notice, is bad, though London and six miles round were left open to the party to take orders from. Young v. Timmins, 1 Tyr. 226; 1 C. & J. 331; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ex. 68.

A promissory note given by a party for damages arising by his working for others, contrary to an agreement which is in restraint of trade, and therefore void, is bad for want of a consideration. Ib.

The plaintiff and defendant agreed to become partners in the business of stage-coach proprietors, for the purpose of running a coach daily, at certain hours, between London and Croydon. The agreement contained various stipulations as to the conduct of the business, and a provision that it should be lawful for either party to determine the partnership by giving four weeks' notice in writing. It contained also the following article: —12th, that, in the event of such dissolution of partnership, and so long as the plaintiff should continue to carry on the trade of a coach proprietor at Croydon, the defendant should not, either on his own account, or that of any other person or persons or jointly with any other, run, or use for hire, any stage-coach, omnibus, or other carriage, or otherwise ply for hire, on any part of the road over which the coach was appointed to run at any time within one hour before or after certain specified hours of the day, under a penalty of 40*l.*, to be recovered as liquidated damages. The last article also provided that, without prejudice to the right of the parties under the preceding article, they bound themselves for the true and faithful performance of the agreement in every respect, under the penalty of 100*l.*, to be recovered as aforesaid:—Held, first, that the agreement of the plaintiff to enter into the partnership was, of itself, a sufficient consideration for the partial restraint of trade imposed on the defendant by the 12th article, and therefore that an action was maintainable for a breach of it, in running an omnibus on the road within the prohibited hours, after a dissolution of partnership by notice from the plaintiff; secondly, that the 40*l.* must be construed as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. Leighton v. Wales, 3 M. & W. 545; 7 L. J., Ex. 145.

—— Agreement with Assignees of a Bankrupt.]—A., a trader, became bankrupt, whereupon B. agreed to purchase the business from the assignees, and to enter into partnership with A.'s son, if A. would enter into a bond not to carry on the same business within twenty miles. A. gave the bond:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the bond to entitle B. to an injunction to restrain A. from carrying on the business within the limits prescribed. Clarkson v. Edge, 33 Beav. 227; 33 L. J., Ch. 443; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 871; 12 W. R. 518.

—— With a Father for his Son, an Infant.]—Articles under which A. served his clerkship to an attorney, contained a proviso that A. should not practice within a certain distance; and also a covenant, on the part of his father, that A. should, within a month after he came of age, execute a bond, in a specified penalty, to insure his fulfilment of the proviso; A., who was an infant at the time of the execution of the articles, served under them for three years after he attained full age, but was never called on to execute any bond, and with a knowledge of the purport of the articles, completed his clerkship, and afterwards began to practice as an attorney within the district from which the articles purported to exclude him. A motion for an injunction to restrain him from practising within that district was refused with costs. Capes v. Hutton, 2 Russ. 357; 26 R. R. 102.

—— Reasonableness of Restraint.]—Agreements in restraint of trade are against public policy and void, unless the restraint they impose is partial only, and reasonable in relation to the objects of the contract; and also unless they are made upon a real and bonâ fide consideration. Collins v. Locke, 48 L. J., P. C. 68; 4 App. Cas. 674; 41 L. T. 292; 28 W. R. 189.

Where the object of an agreement is to parcel out the stevedoring business of a particular port amongst the parties to it, and so to prevent competition at least amongst themselves, and also, it may be, to keep up the price to be paid for the work:—Held, that such agreement is not invalid if carried into effect by provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose, though the effect of them might be to create a partial restraint upon the power of the parties to exercise their trade. Ib.

A provision that if a particular merchant named in the agreement should refuse to allow the stevedoring of any ship to be done by the party entitled to it under the agreement, and should require one of the other parties to do it, such party so required should give an equivalent to the party who lost the stevedoring, is not unreasonable either as regards the party entitled or as regards the merchant. Ib.

But a provision that in the case of ships passing out of the hands of merchants named in the contract into the hands of other merchants, who should not choose to employ the party entitled under the agreement, all the parties thereto are deprived of the work, cannot be justified. It is obviously detrimental to the public, is entirely beyond anything the legitimate interests of the parties required, and is utterly unprofitable and unnecessary, at least for any purpose which can be avowed. Ib.

A clause which stipulates that all matters in difference which should arise touching the agreement should be submitted to arbitration, and prohibits any action being brought in respect of the matters actually submitted to arbitration, is a collateral and independent agreement, and an award thereunder is not a condition precedent to such action, except as regards such sums as under the agreement are not payable until the amount thereof has been ascertained by such award. Ib.

Contract partly Oral partly Written—Parol Evidence.]—In contracts in restraint of trade which are partly verbal and partly in writing, parol evidence is admissible to show what was the consideration therefor. Cooper v. Southgate, 63 L. J., Q. B. 670; 10 R. 552.

v. Dealing with Particular Persons.

Covenants to buy all Beer from Brewers.]—A covenant by the tenant of a public-house to purchase of his landlord all beer to be sold or consumed in or upon the premises is not broken by the tenant buying through an agent, without the knowledge of the landlord, beer made by the landlord. Semble, that where such a covenant is entered into by a tenant there is, in the absence of express stipulation, an implied obligation to supply the tenant with such kinds of beer as he requires, and if this obligation is not fulfilled, the tenant is at liberty to buy the beer which he requires elsewhere. Edwick v. Hawkes, or Edridge v. Hawker, 50 L. J., Ch. 577; 18 Ch. D. 199; 45 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 914.

An agreement in a lease, that in case the lessee ceased to purchase beer of the lessor, his rent should be advanced, is extremely injurious to the public interest and welfare and is not to be favoured by the courts Cooper v Twibill 3 Camp 286 n , 13 R R 803 n

A plea in bar to an avowry for such advanced rent, stating the beer delivered to be bad nauseous and unwholesome was considered to be a good defence Ib

Where such an agreement was in the alternative, either that the publican should take all his beer of the brewer or pay an advanced rent — Held, that it could not be enforced unless good beer was supplied Holcombe v Hewson 2 Camp 391 11 R R 746

Contracts by which brewers bind publicans to deal with them, are not to be favoured in law because they tend to prejudice the health of the subject Thornett v Sherratt 8 Taunt 529 20 R R 543

A condition in a deed of composition that a publican should continue to deal for twelve years with his creditors in the articles of their respective trades may be valid but it is qualified by the implied condition that such articles should be good, and of a marketable quality Ib

Where in the conditions of sale of a public house it was described as a free public house and the lease contained a covenant of this nature —Held, that the purchaser was not bound to complete his purchase and might recover back his deposit, even although the lease was read over by the auctioneer at the time of sale Jones v Edney, 3 Camp 285, 13 R R 803

Where the lessee of a public house covenanted for himself, his executors, and assigns with his lessors (brewers) to take all his beer of them or their successors in their trade and then lessors sold their trade and the public house with other premises, to third persons, who moved the plant &c, to a distance of two miles, and there carried on the business of brewers —Held that the trade of the lessors was thereby determined, and that their assignee could not take advantage of the covenant, on the assignee of the lessee purchasing beer from another brewer Doe d Calvert v Reed, 10 B & C 849, 8 L J (o s) K B 328

The plaintiff demised a public house to the defendant, the defendant to take all his malt of the plaintiff, the plaintiff upon every reasonable request to deliver good malt, and if he did not the defendant to be at liberty to buy it of any other, breach that the defendant used a quantity of malt not bought of the plaintiff, and without requiring the plaintiff to deliver such Plea that the plaintiff delivered bad malt to the defendant, who thereupon bought malt of others, is bad, for as one failure by the plaintiff would not operate as a total suspension of the covenant, the defendant should have alleged a request to send him good malt, and that he had purchased the malt of others on the plaintiff's failure to do so Weaver v Sessions, 1 Marsh 505, 6 Taunt 154

Between Partners]—By a deed between A, B., and C., dissolving their partnership as rope makers, A and B covenanted to allow C, during his life, 2*s.* on every cwt of cordage which they should make on the recommendation of C for any of his friends and connections, and whose debts should turn out to be good and that A and B should stand the risk of such debts incurred, but should not be compelled to furnish goods to any of C's connexions whom they should be disinclined to trust And C covenanted not to carry on the business of a rope maker during his life (except on government contracts) and that all debts contracted or to be contracted in his or their names pursuant to the deed, should be the exclusive property of A and B , and that C should during his life exclusively employ A and B and no other person to make all the cordage ordered of him by or for his friends and connexions and should not employ any other person to make any cordage on any pretence whatsoever — Held that the covenant by C to employ A and B exclusively to make cordage for his friends and not to employ any other (A and B not being obliged to work for any other than such as they chose to trust) was not illegal and void as being in restraint of trade without adequate consideration for the whole deed must be construed together according to the apparent reasonable intent of the parties and the general object being only to appropriate to A and B so much of C's private trade as they chose to give his friends credit for, so much only was covenanted to be transferred, and C was still at liberty to work for any of his friends who were refused to be trusted by A and B by which construction the restraint on C was only coextensive, as in reason it could only be intended to be, with the benefit to A and B and therefore the restraint on C could be no prejudice to public trade Gale v Reed, 8 East, 80, 9 R R 376

Exclusive Right to Sell Goods.]—A entered into a contract with B by which B agreed to sell to him the whole of the get of coal of a specified seam in a colliery belonging to B during a period of five years at a certain price On a bill by A to restrain B from selling the coal to other parties —Held, that he was not entitled to any relief in equity Rothergill v Rowland, 13 L J Ch 252, L R 17 Eq 132, 29 L T 414, 22 W R 42

A corporation advertised for tenders for the supply of stone to the borough during 1875 A, C, D, and E, quarry owners entered into an arrangement by which it was agreed that A should send in the lowest tender, so that if possible it should be accepted, that C should not send in any tender at all, and that D and E should send in tenders higher than A's it was also arranged that A should purchase from C, D, and E certain quantities of stone to be supplied by him under his anticipated contract to the corporation, so that, by this means, A, C, D, and E would each have some share in the profits to arise from A's contract with the corporation Notwithstanding this arrangement C sent in a tender which was accepted —Held, that a bill for an injunction would lie against C to restrain him from supplying any stone to the corporation under his contract with them during 1875 Jones v. North, 44 L J, Ch 388, L R 19 Eq 426, 32 L T. 149, 23 W R 468

Held, also, that the corporation was not a necessary party to the suit Ib

When the owners of a public building have contracted with the plaintiff, that he, renting a stall from them, shall have the exclusive right to exhibit and sell certain specified classes of goods, an injunction will lie against them for permitting the exhibition and sale by other renters of stalls within the building of goods so specified Altman v Royal Aquarium Society, 3 Ch D 228

Contract to Play at Theatre]—An opera singer by an agreement dated only as to the year 1870, agreed to sing at a theatre for the whole London season, and nowhere else in the kingdom of Great Britain pendant l'année 1871, without the written consent of the employer The salary did not extend beyond the season, which ended on the 5th August On motion for an injunction to restrain him singing elsewhere after the season was over during 1871 — Held, that the court would not under the circumstances grant an injunction on an interlocutory application Mapleson v Bentham, 20 W R 176 Affirmed, Ib 177 n, L JJ

An actor who enters into a contract to perform for a certain period at a particular theatre may be restrained by injunction from performing at any other theatre during the pendency of his engagement, notwithstanding that the contract contains no negative clause restricting the actor from performing elsewhere Montague v Flockton, 42 L J, Ch 677 L R 16 Eq 189, 28 L T 580, 21 W R 668 And see Lumley v Wagner, 1 De G M & G 604, 21 L J, Ch 898, 16 Jur 871

To Write for]—A contract with the proprietors of a theatre not to write dramatical pieces for any other, is legal, not resembling a covenant restraining trade generally Morris v Colman, 18 Ves 437, 11 R R 230

So would be a similar restraint of a performer Ib

Medical Men, &c]—Where a surgeon took an assistant, who entered into a bond not to practise on his own account for fourteen years, within ten miles of the place where the surgeon lived, the bond is good in law Davis v Mason, 5 Term Rep 118, 2 R R 562

A agreed, by articles under seal, to enter the service of B, as assistant to him in his business of a surgeon dentist, for a period of four years, and the agreement contained a covenant, that, after the expiration of that term, A would not, without the consent in writing of the other, carry on the business of a surgeon-dentist in London, or any of the towns or places in England or Scotland where B, or A on his account, might have been practising before the expiration of the above service —Held, first, that this covenant so far as it related to London, was not, but as to its other provisions it was, void as imposing an unreasonable restraint of trade, and secondly, that the covenant was divisible, so that the illegality of the second branch did not vitiate the whole Mallan v May, 11 M & W 853, 12 L J, Ex 376, 7 Jur 536

Semble that, in estimating the reasonableness of a contract not to exercise a trade or profession within a particular district, the populousness of the district is not to be taken into account Ib

An agreement that a moderately skilful dentist would abstain from practising over a district 200 miles in diameter, in consideration of receiving instructions and a salary from the plaintiff, determinable at three months notice is unreasonable and void, being a restraint of trade not founded on an adequate consideration Horner v Graves, 7 Bing 735, 5 M & P 768, 9 L J (o s) C P 192

Solicitors]—An agreement by an attorney first to relinquish his business, and recommend his clients to two other attorneys for a valuable consideration secondly, not to practise in such business within certain limits and thirdly, to permit the purchasers to make use of his name in their firm for a certain time, without any interference on his part, is valid Bunn v Guy, 4 East, 190 1 Smith, 1, 7 R R 560 But see Hughes v Statham, 6 D & R 219, 4 B & C 187 3 L J (o s) K B 179

The defendant bound himself to a London solicitor by articles for a term, and covenanted that he would not at the expiration of the term, or at any time thereafter either solely, or jointly with, or as agent for, any other person or persons, directly or indirectly practise the business of an attorney or solicitor within the city of London, or the counties of Middlesex or Essex, nor directly or indirectly act as such attorney or solicitor for any client or clients of the plaintiff, or any partner or partners of the plaintiff, or for any person or persons who should have been a client or clients of the plaintiff, or any partner or partners of the plaintiff at any time during the term At the expiration of the term the defendant having commenced business on his own account in Southwark —Held, that the restriction was not unreasonable, and that the defendants acting for the petitioner in the London Court of Bankruptcy was a breach of the covenant May v O Neill, 44 L J, Ch 660

An agreement by a solicitor, for valuable consideration, not to practise as a solicitor in any part of Great Britain for twenty years, is valid Whittaker v Howe, 3 Beav 383

By agreement between the plaintiff, a solicitor, and the defendant, after reciting that the plaintiff, being manager of certain estates at Torquay, and finding it expedient to establish an office there for the transaction of law and other business, had proposed to appoint the defendant as resident clerk there, it was agreed that the defendant should reside at Torquay, and that in consideration of his services, the plaintiff should pay him a certain salary, and that either party might determine the agreement by a certain notice, and that the defendant would not, for the space of twenty-one years, notwithstanding the death of the plaintiff, reside in the parish of Torquay, or within twenty-one miles thereof, or carry on therein, the distance aforesaid, during the period of twenty-one years, any business of the description of that carried on under the agreement:—Held, per Pollock, C.B., Alderson, B., and Platt, B., that the restriction was not unreasonable, and was good in law; per Martin, B., that the agreement was valid, for if the restriction as to residence was void, that as to not carrying on business was good. Dendy v. Henderson, 11 Ex. 194; 24 L. J., Ex. 324.

A declaration on this agreement alleged as a breach, that, after its determination, the defendant resided in the parish of Torquay, and during the period of twenty-one years carried on the business in that parish of the description of that carried on under the agreement. Plea to the first breach, that although the defendant resided in the parish of Torquay, yet he did not reside for the purpose or with the intention of carrying on business of the description of that carried on under the agreement:—Held, that whether the allegation in the declaration was to be read as one breach or two distinct breaches, the plea was bad. Ib.

Publisher.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff and the defendant carried on in partnership the business of publishers in various places in Great Britain and Ireland, at a greater distance than 150 miles from the General Post Office, London, of which a branch was known as the canvassing trade, consisting of publishing, in parts, works in some of which the copyright had ceased, and of employing canvassers to go from house to house to solicit purchasers for such publications, and that upon the dissolution of the partnership, the defendant covenanted that he would not at any time thereafter carry on that part of the trade of a publisher known as the canvassing trade within the distance of 150 miles from the General Post Office, London. Breach, that the defendant carried on the canvassing trade in London, and within 150 miles of the General Post Office:—Held, that the restraint was not unreasonable. Tallis v. Tallis, 1 El. & Bl. 391; 22 L. J., Q. B. 185; 17 Jur. 1149; 1 W. R. 114.

Semble, also, that that part of the covenant which restrained the defendant from carrying on the canvassing trade in Edinburgh or Dublin, or within 150 miles of either of them, or in any place in Great Baitain or Ireland where the plaintiff or his successors in the business might by themselves or their agents at such time carry on the trade, or might have carried it on within six months preceding, was not unreasonable. Ib.

Such a covenant is valid, unless it plainly appears that a restriction is imposed by it beyond what the interest of the plaintiff requires. Ib.

Manufacturers.]—So a covenant not to carry on the trade of horsehair manufacturer within 200 miles of Birmingham is valid. Harms v. Parsons, 32 Beav. 328; 32 L. J., Ch. 247; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 7 L. T. 815; 11 W. R. 250.

A mercantile house, dealing in lace, employed travellers to obtain orders, and sell for them, in England, each in a particular district. A vacancy having occurred in the travellership of the midland district, the plaintiffs acquainted the defendant with the fact, he being in their employ in another occupation, and it was verbally agreed with him that he should fill the place, the understanding being, that a contract in writing should be afterwards drawn up and signed. The defendant started on the midland district, and afterwards the following form of contract was sent down to him and he signed it:—"In consideration of my entering upon your employ, at a salary of 50*l.*, I agree to do so, with the understanding, that in the event of my wishing to travel, and doing so, for any other house in the same trade, on any part of the same ground, to pay you 50*l.*" The defendant, after having travelled for the plaintiffs on this district for about a year, quitted their service, and commenced travelling, for a rival house of business, over the same district. In an action by the plaintiffs for the penalty:—Held, that they were entitled to recover, for that a good consideration for the defendant's promise appeared on the face of the writing; that the circumstances under which he became traveller showed a good consideration in fact; that the contract meant to engage the entire services of the defendant so long as he was in the plaintiffs' employ, and that it would have been a breach of it to travel for any one else in the absence of the prohibitory part; and that, therefore, the contract intended the penalty to attach in case the defendant travelled over the same ground for any other house in the same trade after he left the plaintiffs' employ; that extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to identify the particular service in which the defendant was to be employed, viz., that of a traveller, and the ground over which he was to travel, viz., the midland district: that the subject of the contract being thus ascertained, the contract was not unlimited in point of space, and so void as in restraint of trade. And that the written contract, even apart from the extrinsic evidence, was not void as in restraint of trade. Mumford v. Gething, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 305; 29 L. J., C. P. 105; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 428; 1 L. T. 64; 8 W. R. 187.

A covenant not to carry on the business of a manufacturer for a period of five years under a particular name or style is not void, as being a covenant in restraint of trade, notwithstanding that it may be unlimited in point of space. Vernon v. Hallam, 56 L. J., Ch. 115; 34 Ch. D. 748; 55 L. T. 676; 35 W. R. 156.

Commission Merchant.]—The plaintiffs, who were agents and commission merchants, agreed with the defendant that he should enter their service as clerk, and that he should not for five years after the determination of the service engage in "any trade or business in the united kingdom in connection with any kind of goods of continental manufacture which" the plaintiffs "should have dealt in at any time previously to such determination":—Held, that "any trade or business" was to be construed as confined to any trade or business competing with the plaintiffs'; that the limit of space was not too wide having regard to the circumstances; that "dealt in at any time" meant, dealt in at any time while the defendant was their clerk, and that, therefore, the agreement was not unreasonable. Moenich v. Fenestre, 61 L. J., Ch. 737; 2 R. 102; 67 L. T. 602—C. A.

Wine Merchant.]—Where a defendant in an action had agreed to act as clerk and traveller for the plaintiff in the business of a wine and spirit merchant, carried on by him at Burton-on-Trent, and had further agreed not at any time thereafter, either alone or in partnership with, or as clerk, agent, or traveller, to, any person or persons whomsoever, to carry on or conduct, or assist in carrying on or conducting, the trade or business of a wine and spirit merchant, or any branch thereof, within the distance of fifty miles from that town without the licence and consent of the plaintiff, the court held that the restriction imposed upon the defendant was not in excess of what was required for the reasonable protection of the plaintiff in his business; that the agreement was not invalid on the ground that it was contrary to public policy, as being in unreasonable restraint of trade, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from a breach thereof. Parsons v. Cotterell, 56 L. T. 839; 51 J. P. 679.

Tailor.]—The defendant was employed by the plaintiff, a tailor in Regent Street, as a cutter and fitter of wearing apparel. The defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff that, upon the termination of his employment for any cause, he would not carry on the business of a tailor within a circuit of ten miles of Charing Cross for the period of three years from such termination of employment. Some time afterwards the defendant left the plaintiff's employment, and set up the business of a tailor and outfitter within about two hundred yards of the plaintiff's premises. An application for an injunction to restrain the defendant having been made, the defence was raised that the restriction imposed by the agreement upon the defendant was far in excess of what was required for the reasonable protection of the plaintiff in his business; and that the agreement was therefore invalid on the ground that it was contrary to public policy, as being in unreasonable restraint of trade:—Held, that the agreement was not unreasonable, either in point of space or in point of time, for a tailor like the plaintiff to require the defendant to enter into; that therefore the agreement was not invalid; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction claimed. Nicoll v. Beere, 53 L. T. 659.

Milkmen.]—The servant of a milkman, in a street in London, agreed not to carry on the like business within three miles therefrom:—Held, that this was not an undue restraint of trade, and the servant was restrained by injunction from violating his agreement. Benwell v. Inns, 24 Beav. 307; 26 L. J., Ch. 663.

A. agreed to take B. as his servant, "at such wages as might from time to time be agreed on," and B. on his part agreed to serve A., and not to set up trade for himself within certain limits. B. accordingly entered into and continued in A.'s service at the wages agreed on.—Held, that there was a good and valuable consideration to support the agreement as against B., and the court enforced it. Ib.

A milkman, carrying on business in three places, took the defendant into his service. The defendant agreed, as regarded the milkman, his assignees and successors, not to carry on a similar trade within certain limits. A. sold his branch business at one of the three places to the plaintiff, who retained the defendant in his service:—Held, that the plaintiff as assignee and successor of part of the business, was entitled to the benefit of the defendant's contract. Ib.

A., a cowkeeper and milkman, agreed to keep and retain B. in his service for one month certain, and until the expiration of a month's notice, to be given by either party to the other of them, in writing, of his intention to determine such contract and service; in consideration whereof B. agreed to serve A., and that he would not, during the continuance of such service, nor within twenty-four calendar months after quitting or being discharged from the same, commence, carry on or be concerned in any way whatsoever, either as servant or master, in the trade or business of a cowkeeper or milkman, within five miles of Northampton Square, under a penalty:—Held, that this contract did not operate in restraint of trade to such a degree as to render it void. Proctor v. Sargent, 2 Scott (N.R.) 289; 2 Man. & G. 20; 10 L. J., C. P. 34.

Carrier.]—By agreement, D. and Co., of London, foreign carriers, agreed to engage L. as their clerk on certain conditions, which L. agreed to observe and perform. The agreement contained the following covenant:—"The said L. agrees that he will not within twelve calendar months after the termination of the agreement, from whatever cause, carry on or be engaged in, or interested, directly or indirectly, in the cities of London, Birmingham, Liverpool, England, and New York, United States, or within fifty miles thereof of each of the above-named places, either as principal, clerk, agent, or otherwise, in any business similar to the business now or hereafter to be carried on by employers." The defendant, on leaving the plaintiff's service, entered into the service of a rival firm in London. The plaintiffs had not any trade with Birmingham, but a considerable business with the other places mentioned in the agreement:—Held, that the limit of time was reasonable; also that of space with the exception of Birmingham, with which place the plaintiffs appeared to have no connection; that the words "principal, clerk, agent, or otherwise," in the agreement, were not too wide; that the words "now or hereafter" in the agreement were not reasonable, and that the court could separate the different parts of the covenants, holding part good and part bad. Davies v. Lowen, 64 L. T. 655.

Other Trades.]—A., for valuable consideration, covenanted not to exercise certain trades, during his life, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of 600 miles from the same respectively:—Held, first, that this covenant was good so far as it related to London and Westminster, but that the rest was void, as being an unreasonable restraint of trade. Green v. Price, 13 M. & W. 695; 14 L. J., Ex. 105; 9 Jur. 857. Affirmed, Price v. Green, 16 M. & W. 346; 16 L. J., Ex. 108; 9 Jur. 880—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the part relating to London and Westminster might be enforced notwithstanding the illegality of the rest. Ib.

A covenant by a vendor of a business not to carry on the same business within 200 miles of a certain place, is not unreasonable, as in restraint of trade, if by reason of the character of the business such a limit of exclusion is necessary for the protection of the purchaser. Harms v Parsons, 32 Beav. 328; 32 L. J., Ch. 247; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 7 L. T. 815; 11 W. R. 250.

The members of an association agreed not to sell certain goods at less than a particular price for ten years, and to forfeit 10*l.* for each contravention of this agreement. There was no restriction as to area:—Held, that such an agreement was unreasonable both as to time and area, and would not be enforced by the court. Urmston v. Whitelegg, 55 J. P. 453—C. A.

W. entered the service of C. as a shopman at weekly wages, and covenanted not to carry on business within one mile of the shop at any time thereafter. The business was afterwards moved to another shop close by, and sold by C. to J., together with the goodwill and beneficial interest thereof. W. then left the shop, and set up business within a mile of the old shop:—Held, that the covenant was not unreasonable, and endured for the life of W., though the original covenantee should cease to carry on business altogether, and that the covenant was not affected by the removal of the business to another shop near at hand, though it might have been otherwise if the business had been removed to quite a different neighbourhood. Jacoby v. Whitmore, 49 L. T. 335; 32 W. R. 18; 48 J. P. 335—C. A.

An agreement in writing, dated April, 1889, providing that the defendant was to be employed as commercial traveller by the plaintiff for ten years upon the terms (inter alia) that the defendant would not within twelve years or for two years after the termination of his employment, if the same should continue beyond ten years, engage in business similar to that carried on by the plaintiff, or act as commercial traveller for any person or body carrying on similar business, provided that such restriction should only extend to such counties in Ireland as the defendant should travel in for the plaintiff at any time during his employment, is a reasonable agreement for the protection of the interests and trade of the plaintiff as employer, and therefore valid. Cussen v. O'Connor, 32 L. R., Ir. 330.

vii. Measurement of Distance.

In a straight Line.]—In determining whether there has been a breach of a covenant entered into by the assignor of a lease of premises, used for a particular business, "that he would not be concerned in that business within a certain distance of the assigned premises," the distance is not to be measured along the nearest practicable route between the two places of business, but along the shortest straight line that can be drawn from one to the other as on a map, without regard to the curvature or to the inequalities of the surface of the earth. Mouflet v. Cole, 42 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 8 Ex. 32; 27 L. T. 678; 21 W. R. 175—Ex. Ch.

Under a contract not to carry on business within a given distance, the distance is to be measured in a straight line upon a horizontal plane, and not by the nearest practicable mode of access. Duignan v. Walker, Johns. 446; 28 L. J., Ch. 867; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 7 W. R. 562.

—— Or by Nearest Route.]—In the construction of an engagement (a bond) not to open a shop within a mile of a certain spot, the shortest way of access by the footpath is to be taken. Woods v. Dennett, 2 Stark. 89.

In a covenant not to keep a public-house within half a mile of a particular spot, the distance must be estimated by the nearest mode of access at the time of the covenant—per Lord Tenterden, C.J., and Littledale, J.; or as the crow flies—per Parke J. Leigh v. Hind, 4 Man. & Ry. 597; 9 B. & C. 774; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 313.

Action on a deed, whereby the defendant and the plaintiff agreed to enter into partnership as surgeons for three years, and the defendant covenanted, that after the termination of the partnership he would not at any time practise as a surgeon at No. 28, Dorset Crescent, or within the distance of two miles and a half thereof, measuring by the usual streets or ways of approach thereto, nor reside within the distance of two miles and a half of No. 28, Dorset Crescent, without the plaintiff's consent, nor would attempt to prevail on any of the patients of the defendant, or of the partnership, to withdraw from the plaintiff, or to employ any other medical attendant in prejudice of the plaintiff, but would in all things endeavour to promote the business and advantage of the plaintiff as a surgeon, so far as it was in the power of the defendant, and as he could reasonably and properly be required to do. Breach, that after the expiration of the term, the defendant resided within the distance of two miles and a half of the premises:—Held, that the distance was to be measured, not by the most frequented public ways, but by any of the usual public ways. Atkyns v. Kinnier, 4 Ex. 776; 19 L. J. Ex. 132.

viii. In Respect of Time.

For Life.]—A contract whereby, in consideration of employment, and the payment of a certain sum weekly for life, a party engages to serve another for life, and not to set up during his life the trade of a carrier, is a legal contract, and not in restraint of trade. Wallis v. Day, 2 M. & W. 273; M. & H. 222; 6 L. J., Ex. 92; 1 Jur. 73.

An agreement in partial restraint of trade is not void because the party is thereby restricted from exercising his business in a particular place for his life, notwithstanding the death of the other party. Hitchcock v. Coker, 1 N. & P. 796; 6 A. & E. 438; 2 H. & W. 464; 6 L. J., Ex. 266—Ex. Ch.

An unlimited restriction in point of time cannot be pronounced void as in restraint of trade where there is reasonable consideration. Archer v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 959; 2 N. & P. 562; W. W. & D. 641; 6 L. J., K. B. 244.

—— Or Lifetime of Obligee.]—To an action on a bond by the executors of the obligee, the defendant, after setting out the condition, which was, that "if the obligor should practise as a surgeon or an apothecary at S., at any time without the consent in writing of the obligee, then, if the obligor should pay the obligee 1,000*l.*, the bond should be void, otherwise it should remain in force," pleaded, that he did not practise as a surgeon or an apothecary at S. without the consent in writing of the obligee:—Held, that the period of restraint mentioned in the condition was not confined to the lifetime of the obligee. Hastings v. Whitley, 2 Ex. 611.

The defendant entered into a written agreement with W., in consideration of being employed as assistant master, not to carry on the business of a school within nine miles of the place where W.'s school was carried on, for twelve years after leaving the school. Subsequently, and while the defendant was in his service, W. entered into a partnership agreement with the plaintiff, who was on his death to succeed to the business. W. died, and thereupon the defendant commenced a school in the same place. On a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to restrain the defendant from so doing:—Held, (1) that the defendant's agreement was not limited to the life of W.; (2) that though goodwill was not mentioned in the partnership agreement, the benefit thereof did pass so as on the death of W. to vest in the plaintiff; and that, following Jacoby v. Whitmore (49 L. T. R. 355), the defendant's agreement formed part of such goodwill; and (3) that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the benefit thereof, and to the injunction asked for. Smith v. Hawthorne, 76 L. T. 716.

Consideration of Service.]—In consideration of A. employing B. at a weekly salary of 21*s.* to go about London and sell oil for him, B. agreed that he would not for twelve calendar months after the determination of the agreement, which was determinable on a week's notice on either side, sell oil within a radius of eight miles from the General Post Office. After a year's employment, B. determined the agreement, and then commenced selling oil on his own account within the prohibited area:—Held, that the agreement not being a hard bargain, and being for valuable consideration, A. was entitled to an injunction. Middleton v. Brown, 47 L. J., Ch. 411; 38 L. T. 334—C. A.

B. gave a bond to A. (a coal merchant in London), by which, after reciting that he, at the request of B., had received and taken him into his service in the capacity of a town traveller and collecting clerk, it was conditioned that he should not, within two years after leaving A.'s service, solicit or sell to any of his customers; that he should not follow or be employed in the business of a coal merchant for nine months after he should have left the employment of A.; and that he should not leave his employment without giving a month's notice:—Held, that this condition prevented B. from setting up in business as a coal merchant on his own account, or from being employed in that business by another master for the time limited. Ward v. Byrne, 5 M. & W. 548; 9 L. J., Ex. 14; 3 Jur. 1175.

Held, also, that the bond was void, on the ground that there was a restraint of trade unlimited in point of space. Ib.

And an agreement by which a brass founder was to work exclusively for certain factors, for his and their lives, they not undertaking to find him full employment, but on the contrary, reserving liberty to employ others to execute their orders in his trade if they should think fit, and to put an end to the agreement at three months' notice, is bad, though London and six miles round were left open to the party to take orders from. Young v. Timmins, 1 Tyr. 226; 1 C. & J. 331; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ex. 68.

A. made an agreement with B. to serve him at all times during seven years as a crown-glass maker, and that he would not during the term work for any other person at any other glass-house or place of business without the licence of B.; that during any depression of trade he should be paid a moiety of his wages; that if he should be sick B. should be at liberty to employ any other persons in his stead, without paying him any wages; that B. should pay him wages as long as he should be employed, and 8*l.* per annum in lieu of house-rent and firing; and that B. should have the option of dismissing him from his service, on giving him a month's wages or a month's notice:—Held, that this contract was not void on the ground of being in restraint of trade. Pilkington v. Scott, 15 M. & W. 657; 15 L. J., Ex. 329.

A. contracted to serve B. and his partner or partners for the time being, for seven years, in his business of glass and alkali manufacturer, and that he would not during the term neglect or absent himself from the service without the consent in writing of B., or his partner or partners for the time being, as should carry on the business, nor would work for or serve any other person or persons without such consent, in consideration of which services B. agreed to pay A. 24*s.* per week, for a certain amount of work, and to find him some other description of work, provided he should not require that quantity of specified work, so that A.'s wages should not be less than 24*s.* per week, except when a furnace should be out, when A. agreed to work for 21*s.* per week; and that if A. should be sick, or otherwise incapacitated from performing the service, or in case of misconduct, or if B. or his partner or partners for the time being, as should carry on the trade, should discontinue the trade during the term, in either of such cases B. or his partners should be at liberty to retain or employ any other person in the room or stead of A. without being obliged to pay him any wages or satisfaction:—Held, that this agreement was not void as being in unreasonable restraint of trade. Hartley v. Cummings, 5 C. B. 247; 2 Car. & K. 433; 17 L. J., C. P. 84; 12 Jur. 57.

A. and B. entered into the following agreement:—"In consideration that A. of Macclesfield, surgeon and apothecary, will engage me, B., as assistant to him as surgeon, I, B., promise A. that I will not at any time practise as surgeon or apothecary at Macclesfield, or within seven miles thereof, under a penalty of 500*l.*; and I, A., agree with B. to engage B. as an assistant to me as a surgeon, on the terms aforesaid." In an action by A. against B. for a breach of this agreement:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the promise of B., and that the contract was not void as an unreasonable restraint of trade. Sainter v. Ferguson, 7 C. B. 716; 18 L. J., C. P. 217; 13 Jur. 828.

The defendant, on being appointed agent for the sale of wine and spirits of the plaintiffs, gave to them a bond, with a condition that he should diligently, honestly, and faithfully serve them as such agent, and should not engage in, undertake, transact, or do any business in the same trade within ten miles of the town of T., for himself or any other person or firm, and should use his best endeavours to promote the interest and increase of the business connection of the plaintiffs, and should faithfully and punctually collect, account for, and pay over all debts of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the restriction as to the defendant doing business for other persons in the same trade within the particular district was limited to the time he remained in the plaintiffs' service. King v. Hansell, 5 H. & N. 106; 1 L. T. 376.

—— Separable Covenants.]—A deed recited that the plaintiff had carried on the business of an attorney; that the defendant had for four years been his salaried clerk, and had applied to him to accept the defendant as his articled clerk, without premium, which the plaintiff consented to do on his entering into certain covenants, and the defendant bound himself clerk to the plaintiff for five years by articles. In pursuance of the agreement, the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff and his partners, that he should not, during the term of five years, or at any time after its expiration, directly or indirectly interfere or intermeddle with or be concerned as attorney, agent, or otherwise, for any person who had already been or should thereafter become the client or correspondent in business of or with the plaintiff, or any partner or partners he might admit to a share with him, or any person to whom he might sell or assign the whole or any part of his business as attorney, and that the defendant should not act as partner, clerk, or assistant with or to any person who should interfere or intermeddle as aforesaid; and in case he should commit any breach of his covenants, he should forfeit 100*l.*; and each day's repetition or continuance of any interference should be deemed a fresh breach of covenant, and incur a separate penalty and right of action. The plaintiff assigned in his declaration breaches in respect of persons who had been his clients before and at the time of the making of the deed, and of persons who had been his clients while the defendant continued under the articles:—Held, that the part of the covenant in respect of which the breaches were assigned was good, as not operating unduly in restriction of trade, and might be separated from the rest, and therefore an action might be brought on such breaches. Nicholls v. Stretton, 10 Q. B. 346; 11 Jur. 1009. See S. C., 7 Beav. 42.

Goodwill.]—An agreement to give up a house and goodwill of a business, and not to open a shop in the same line of business within one mile of the house, under a forfeiture, is not illegal on the ground that the restraint of trade is unlimited in point of time, and may continue though the purchaser ceases to carry on the business. Pemberton v. Vaughan, 10 Q. B. 87; 16 L. J., Q. B. 161; 11 Jur. 411.

Upon a contract for the sale of a lease and the goodwill of the business of a baker, an agreement by the assignor that he would not, during the term assigned, solicit the custom of, or knowingly supply bread or flour to, any of the customers then dealing at the premises, without the consent of the assignee, under a penalty, is not void as an unreasonable restraint of trade. Rannie v. Irvine, 8 Scott (N.R.) 674; 7 Man. & G. 969; 14 L. J., C. P. 10; 8 Jur. 1051.

A butcher, on assigning for the residue of a term premises upon which he had carried on his business, together with the fixtures and goodwill of the trade, covenanting with the purchaser that he would not at any time thereafter, either by himself or as agent or journeyman for another, set up, exercise, or carry on, or be employed in the trade or business of a butcher within five miles from the premises assigned, is not an unreasonable restraint either in respect of time or in respect of distance, and the covenant does not cease to be a binding contract on the expiration of the term, or on the covenantor's ceasing, by himself or his assigns, to carry on the business assigned. Elves v. Crofts, 10 C. B. 241; 19 L. J., C. P. 385; 14 Jur. 855.

And see Jacoby v. Whitmore, 49 L. T. 335; and cases supra, ii. and vi.

ix. What Constitutes a Breach.

Acting for Others.]—A restrictive covenant that the covenantor will not carry on a certain business in his own name or that of any other person is not violated by his acting as manager at a weekly salary to another person carrying on the same business. Allen v. Taylor, 39 L. J., Ch. 627; 22 L. T. 651. Affirmed, 19 W. R. 35.

An agreement by a man not to carry on a particular business, directly or indirectly, either alone or in partnership with, or with the assistance of, any other person, is broken by his carrying it on as manager to another person. Dales v. Weaber, 18 W. R. 993.

On the sale of his business the vendor agreed that he would not exercise or carry on the trade, either in his own name or that of any other person or persons, in a particular town:—Held, that his managing the business of another person in the same trade in the town, at a weekly salary, was not a breach of the agreement. Allen v. Taylor, 24 L. T. 249; 19 W. R. 556.

Under a bond, conditioned that the defendant should not "travel for any porter, ale, or spirit merchant, as agent, collector, or otherwise":—Held, that the condition of the bond was not broken by his entering into the service as traveller of a brewer. Josselyn v. Person, 41 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 7 Ex. 127; 25 L. T. 912; 20 W. R. 316.

A covenant not to carry on, or be concerned in carrying on, either directly or indirectly, the business of a sadler, or sell any goods in any way connected with that trade within a distance of ten miles from Croydon under a penalty of 100*l.* to be paid by way of liquidated damages for every such offence, is broken by selling goods as a journeyman in the employment of a person carrying on the particular trade in Croydon; and the breach will be restrained by injunction. Jones v. Heavens, 4 Ch. D. 636; 25 W. R. 460.

A. undertook to manage the business of B., a chemist, and agreed that he, A., would not carry on the business of a chemist either in his own name or for his own benefit, or in the name or names or for the benefit of any other person, within seven miles of the place. He afterwards solicited orders for another chemist within the seven miles:—Held, that this was not a breach of his agreement. Clark v. Watkins, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 142; 8 L. T. 8; 11 W. R. 319.

C. assigned to R. his business as a surgeon and apothecary, carried on by C. in Park Street, Camden Town; and C. covenanted that he should not nor would, directly or indirectly, by himself or in co-partnership with any other person, carry on or exercise his practice or profession of a surgeon and apothecary, or either of them, either by residing or visiting any patient within the distance of three miles from the then place of business of C. in Park Street; and that, in case of any breach of this covenant, C. should and would pay to R. 500*l.*, as and for liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. After the execution of this deed, C. attended several ladies in their confinements, within the three miles, and, on one occasion, received 14*l.* 14*s.* for his services; but he attended these persons, with the knowledge and consent of C., in consequence of a request by him that R. should for a time continue to visit the patients, to keep the connection together; and the jury, in an action on the covenant, found that C. in these instances exercised the practice and profession of a surgeon for the purpose of assisting R.:—Held, that the facts did not constitute a breach of the covenant. Rawlinson v. Clarke, 14 M. & W. 187; 14 L. J., Ex. 364.

In consideration of A. paying a sum to B., B. assigned all his interest in the business to A., and covenanted that he would not at any time carry on, or practise, or engage in, alone or with any other person, the trade or business of a tailor, within the space of twenty miles from London. In another part of the deed A. covenanted that B. should be employed as a cutter in the business so long as the business should be carried on, or so long as B. should diligently and faithfully attend to the business. Upon a bill by A. for an injunction to restrain B. from carrying on the business of tailor:—Held, that acting as the foreman of the business of a tailor was a violation of the agreement by B. Rolfe v. Rolfe, 15 Sim. 88; 10 Jur. 61.

D. sold his business, goodwill, fixtures, &c., to N., and covenanted not to carry on or be concerned or interested in the business of a tailor within five miles of the former shop. D then engaged himself to his nephew, carrying on the same trade within a quarter of a mile of the former place of business, and whose name was the same as his own, as a journeyman at a weekly salary:—Held, that this was within the spirit and letter of the covenant, and an injunction was granted. Newling v. Dobell, 38 L. J., Ch. 111; 19 L. T. 408.

Where a defendant covenants not to carry on "either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as agent or assistant of, or in partnership with, any other person or persons," or "be interested or concerned in a business within two miles" of the plaintiff's premises; the acting by the defendant, outside the prohibited distance, as agent in certain matters for a firm who carry on the same class of business within the prohibited distance, is not a breach of the covenant. Fairbrother v. England, 40 W. R. 220.

S. entered into a written agreement of service with W. & Co., who were general drapers, haberdashers, &c., and agreed not to "engage in a similar business" within half a mile of W.'s premises for six months after leaving the same. S. left W.'s service, being at the time buyer in one of the departments at a fixed salary, and almost immediately entered the service of a rival establishment of universal purveyors next door, where he was appointed to a salaried post in a precisely similar department:—Held, that, without precisely defining the meaning of the words "engage in business," the defendant had done that which the agreement intended he should not do, and an injunction must be granted. Watts v. Smith, 62 L. T. 453.

M. became assistant to H. & P., surgeons at N., and entered into a bond which recited that he was taken into their employment on the terms "that he should not at any time set up or carry on the business or profession of a surgeon" in N., or within ten miles thereof. The condition of the bond was that M. "shall not at any time hereafter, directly or indirectly, and either alone or in partnership with or as assistant to any other person or persons, carry on the profession or business of a surgeon" in N., or within ten miles thereof. The partnership having been dissolved, both partners continued to practise in N., and H. engaged M. as his assistant at a salary. P. brought his action to restrain M. from acting as such:—Held, that there had been a breach of it, for that a person acting as a surgeon was carrying on the profession of a surgeon, although he only acted as salaried assistant to a surgeon who carried it on for his own benefit, and, therefore, that an injunction ought to be granted. Allen v. Taylor (19 W. R. 556) distinguished. Palmer v. Mallet, 57 L. J., Ch. 226; 36 Ch. D. 411; 58 L. T. 64; 36 W. R. 460—C. A.

T., as trustee on behalf of a company about to be formed, purchased from the trustee in liquidation of H.'s affairs the business carried on by the latter, and by an agreement made between T., H., and the trustee, H. agreed with T., both personally and on behalf of the proposed company, that so long as the company carried on the business, H. would not "engage in, or be in any way concerned or interested, in any similar business within ten miles of the Royal Exchange, London." The company was subsequently formed, and whilst it was carrying on its business, H. became an employé of B. & Co., who were carrying on a similar business in London:—Held, that H. had committed a breach of his covenant. Hill & Co. v. Hill, 55 L. T. 769; 35 W. R. 137; 51 J. P. 246.

The defendant, on entering into the service of the plaintiff bank, executed a bond in the penal sum of 1,000*l.* One of the conditions on which the bond was to be void was if the obligor should pay to the bank a sum of 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages in case he should, within two years after his retirement or dismissal from the plaintiffs' service, accept any employment in any rival bank within twenty miles of the plaintiff bank or any branch at which he should have been employed at the date of his dismissal or retirement. There was no express agreement not to enter into any such employment:—Held, that the bond, reasonably construed, contained an agreement by the defendant not to enter into the employment of any rival bank within the time and distance mentioned, which could be enforced by injunction, and that the defendant had not the right to enter into such employment on paying 1,000*l.*; that the reason for inserting the penalty of 1,000*l.* was that, in the event of the bank proceeding for damages at common law, the damages for the committal of the act should, without further proof, be taken to be the sum of 1,000*l.* National Provincial Bank v. Marshall, 58 L. J., Ch. 229; 40 Ch. D. 112; 60 L. T. 341; 37 W. R. 183; 53 J. P. 356—C. A.

Acting by Servant.]—On a contract by the defendant on a sale by him of the goodwill of a business, that he would not, within a certain time, open any new business of the kind, a business having, in fact, been opened by a servant of the defendant, it was left to the jury to say whether there had been a new business opened, and whether, if so, it was really and substantially the business of the defendant, and carried on on his behalf and for his benefit. Clark v. Howard, 2 F. & F. 125.

Similar Business set up by Vendor's Wife—Separate Estate—Injunction.]—On the sale of a grocery business the vendor agreed "not to carry on or be in anywise interested in" the business of a grocer within five miles from the old shop for a period of ten years. Six or seven years afterwards the vendor's wife, out of her own separate money, set up in her own name—i.e. in the name of her husband, with the prefix "Mrs." — a grocer's shop close to the place where her husband had formerly carried on business, and was assisted by her nephew. The vendor helped his wife to get a lease of the shop: he introduced her to a local bank, where she opened an account in her christian and surname, and he introduced the nephew to certain wholesale provision merchants who had supplied him in his business, and induced them to give the nephew credit; he assisted in the preparation of a circular inviting old friends and customers to deal at his wife's shop, and distributed this circular among various friends. He had not, however, any pecuniary interest in the business, and did not otherwise than as above stated concern himself in it:—Held (dissentiente Kay, L.J.), that the vendor did not carry on, and was not interested in, his wife's business within the agreement. Smith v. Hancock, 63 L. J., Ch 477: [1894] 2 Ch. 377; 7 R. 200; 70 L. T. 578; 42 W. R. 456; 58 J. P. 638—C. A.

Subsequent Marriage to Person Carrying on Similar Business.]—A. agreed, under a penalty, that she would not take, keep, be interested or concerned in, any licensed house within one mile of the plaintiff's premises. A. afterwards married a publican having a licensed house within one mile of plaintiff's premises, and assisted him in his business:—Held, that there was no breach of the agreement. Loe v. Lardner, 4 W. R. 597.

"Similar" — Restaurant.]—The business of one restaurant-keeper may be "similar," within the meaning of a restrictive covenant, to that carried on by another, though the establishment of the latter is a fully licensed public-house and the former has no licence of any sort. Drew v. Guy, 63 L. J., Ch. 547; [1894] 3 Ch. 25; 7 R. 220; 71 L. T. 220; 58 J. P. 803—C. A.

Supplying from Outside District.]—An agreement, by which, in consideration that the plaintiff would purchase the defendant's premises and stock of wine, and would pay 2,000*l.* as a premium for the goodwill of his business of a wine merchant, he agreed that he would not, by himself or agent, or otherwise howsoever, either directly or indirectly, set up, embark in, or carry on the business or trade of a wine and spirit merchant at C., or at any other town or place within the three counties of C., A., and M.:—Held, that the defendant had broken the agreement by supplying wine to persons resident in C. and in other towns and places within the counties of C., A., and M., solicited by him from them, within C. and the other towns and places, personally, and by his agents, though he had no place of residence, warehouse, cellars, or place of business within C. or the other towns and places. Turner v. Evans, 2 El. & Bl. 512; 22 L. J., Q. B. 412; 17 Jur. 1073; 1 W. R. 434. S. C., 2 De G. M. & G. 740.

Upon the sale of the goodwill of a drapery business, the vendor covenanted that he would not carry on, or assist in the carrying on, of a business such as that carried on upon the premises assigned, within two miles:—Held, that this covenant was broken by the vendor's supplying from a place beyond the prescribed limit, goods to customers residing within the district, at their solicitation. Brampton v. Beddoes, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 538; 7 L. T. 679; 11 W. R. 268.

"Holding Out"]—A., for valuable consideration, covenanted with B. that he would not carry on certain businesses within ten miles of the town of O., and would not "by publication, advertisement, circular, or otherwise, hold himself out to have been, nor seek to induce others to believe him to have been, formerly connected in trade, either as partner, manager, or servant with B." A. and B. had carried on business in co-partnership at M. and O., and B. still continued to carry on business at those places:—Held, that the covenant was not unnecessarily wide for B.'s protection, nor in general restraint of trade; and that an advertisement issued by A., in which he described himself as "late of O. and formerly of M.," was a breach of the covenant. Wolmershausen v. O'Connor, 36 L. T. 921.

Manufacture or Trade.]—A covenant, on the purchase of the business of horsehair manufacturers, not to carry on the trade of a horsehair manufacturer, construed to prevent the covenantor from the buying and selling manufactured horsehair. Harms v. Parsons, 32 Beav. 328; 32 L. J., Ch. 247; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 7 L. T. 815; 11 W. R. 250.

Fraud—Misrepresentation as to Age.]—In April, 1870, A. agreed with B., a milk seller, to serve him at weekly wages for a certain time, and not to carry on the same business on his own account within two miles of his house for two years after quitting his service. At the time of the execution of the agreement, A. was a minor, but he represented himself to be of age, and he attained his majority eighteen months before leaving B.'s service. He left it in April, 1872, and immediately afterwards set up in business within the prescribed limits, and obtained many of B.'s customers:—Held, that B. was entitled to an injunction to restrain him. Cornwall v. Hawkins, 41 L. J., Ch. 435; 26 L. T. 607; 20 W. R. 653.

Waiver.]—The defendant was under a covenant with the plaintiff not to enter the service of a coachbuilder within a certain area. In answer to a letter from a coachbuilder within the prescribed distance, inquiring after the defendant's character, the plaintiff replied, "The defendant will be of no use to you as foreman." The defendant entered into his service, and continued there to the knowledge of the plaintiff, for upwards of nine months. Bill for injunction dismissed. Vaythorne v. Palmer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 230; 11 L. T. 261; 13 W. R. 37.

—— Assignment of Goodwill—Benefit of Restrictive Agreement.]—The plaintiffs in March, 1886, employed the defendant as brewer's traveller under an agreement restraining him from becoming employed in the sale of beer, spirits, tobacco, or cigars within a limited area for two years after leaving their service, without their written consent. In March, 1887, they assigned their business of brewers, with the goodwill, to a company, agreeing verbally with the company that the latter should employ their old travellers. The defendant entered the company's service, and left them in September, 1887, and became employed in a similar business. The plaintiffs brought an action against defendant for injunction:—Held, (1) that the benefit of the restrictive agreement passed to the company with the goodwill, and that the plaintiffs were merely trustees thereof for the company; (2) that leave might be given to the plaintiffs at the trial to add the company as co-plaintiffs without putting the plaintiffs on terms as to costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' consent to defendant's entering the service of the company (independently of its not having been in writing) was not a release of the restrictive agreement for the future. Showell v. Winkup, 60 L. T. 389.

Competition, what is.]—An agreement for the sale of a medical practice provided that the vendor would not practise or reside within a given radius, or otherwise directly or indirectly enter into competition with the purchaser. The vendor was called in by patients resident within the radius, and visited them. He did not, however, solicit such patients, and they stated that they would in no event have called in the purchaser.—Held, that the competition contemplated by the agreement was not confined to active competition, and that the acts of the vendor constituted an infringement of the covenant. Rogers v. Drury, 57 L. J., Ch. 504; 36 W. R. 496.

Agreement by Music Hall Artiste—Performance Elsewhere on Sunday.]—See Kelly v. London Pavilion, 77 L. T. 215.

x. Satisfaction for Breach.

Injunction.]—A coachmaster having sold his share of the business to his partner, with an undertaking not to be concerned in any coach running from R. to London, or prejudicial to the business which he had sold, an injunction was granted, restraining him from running a coach from P. through R. to London. Williams v. Williams, 2 Swanst. 253.

—— Covenant Determined by Notice.]—A. agreed to act as assistant to B. in his business of surgeon and apothecary, and covenanted with him that he would not at any time after he should cease to act as B.'s assistant, and whether the deed should be in other respects determined or not, carry on or exercise the profession and business of a surgeon and apothecary in the town of C., or within the compass of five miles therefrom. The deed contained a proviso that it should be lawful for A., by giving one month's notice, to determine the deed and the covenants and agreements therein contained, subject nevertheless and without prejudice to any rights of action which might have accrued, or which might accrue thereafter to B., by virtue of the deed, and for the true performance of the covenants thereinbefore contained, on the part of A., not to carry on the profession or business of a surgeon and apothecary at C. A. by due notice determined the deed "and the covenants and agreements therein contained," and then proceeded to practise as a surgeon and apothecary at C. An injunction to restrain him was granted in the terms of the covenant. Giles v. Hart, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1381; 1 L. T. 154; 8 W. R. 74.

—— Where no negative Covenant.]—Where in breach of an agreement by the defendant to serve the plaintiff for fourteen years as manager of his business (which agreement contained no express negative covenants), the defendant left the plaintiff and started a similar business a few doors off:—Held, that the court had power to grant an injunction. Jackson v. Astley, 1 Cab. & E. 181.

—— Penalty—Condition in Bond.]—The defendant having been appointed by the plaintiffs their bank manager at Leeds, executed a bond in 1,000*l.* to the plaintiffs, conditioned to be void if the defendant, after quitting the plaintiffs' employ, should not enter into similar employ within the time and distance specified. The defendant having committed a breach of the condition, contended that the plaintiffs' only remedy was to recover the monetary penalty in the bond:—Held, that the condition of the bond was evidence of an agreement sufficient to sustain an injunction. London and Yorkshire Bank v. Pratt, 56 L. J., Ch. 987; 57 L. T. 875; 36 W. R. 135.

—— Discretion of Court.]—The court, in granting an injunction against breach of contracts by defendant not to engage in trade similar to that of plaintiff:—Held, to have a discretionary jurisdiction to limit the extent of the injunction, and in the circumstances of the case, granted it for two years only, from the date of the termination of defendant's employment. Cussen v. O'Connor, 32 L. R., Ir. 330.

By Assignee.]—A covenant by one partner upon the dissolution of the partnership, not to trade, act, or deal, so as to directly or indirectly affect the continuing partners:—Held, to be personal to the continuing partners, and could not be sued upon by their assignees. Davies v. Davies, 56 L. J., Ch. 962; 36 Ch. D. 359; 58 L. T. 209; 36 W. R. 86—C. A.

A shopman at weekly wages covenanted with his employer not to carry on business within a mile from the shop at any time thereafter. The employer sold his business together with the goodwill and beneficial interest thereof to the plaintiff:—Held, that the covenant added to the value of the goodwill, and, therefore, was part of the goodwill and assignable with it, and did, in fact, pass by the sale of the goodwill and beneficial interest to the plaintiff so as to give him a right of action. Jacoby v. Whitmore, 49 L. T. 335; 32 W. R. 18; 48 J. P. 325—C. A.

Consideration for Annuity—Performance.]—An action was brought to cover arrears of an annuity, the consideration for which was an agreement by the annuitant, a commercial traveller in the hop trade, "that he would not at any time thereafter, either on his own account or on account of any other person or persons whomsoever, excepting the defendant, solicit orders for hops from any of the customers in the West of England or in South Wales or any district whatsoever":—Held, without deciding whether the restraint of trade, so far as it regarded the West of England and South Wales, could be enforced, that the plaintiff, who had performed his part of the contract, was entitled to recover the consideration due in respect of it. Bishop v. Kitchin, 38 L. J., Q. B. 20.

j. In Restraint of Marriage, &c.

Mutuality.]—An engagement or a bond engaging not to marry any one but the obligee, who did not engage to marry the obligor, is void, because against policy and reason. Low v. Pure, Lofft, 345. S. C., nom. Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2225.

Where the condition of a bond was that one defendant should not marry any other person but the plaintiff, and to pay 1,200*l.* in case she did so, or refuse to marry him within a month after her father's death : semble, that when she married the other defendant, although her father was alive, the bond was forfeited, and the money payable. Box v. Day, 1 Wils. 59.

Reduction of Annuity.]—A covenant to pay to C. during her life, subject to the proviso hereinafter contained, an annuity of 40*l.*; the proviso being, that in case C. should at any time thereafter happen to marry, the annuity should thenceforth be reduced to 20*l.* only, which sum should in such case be paid and payable to C., from the time of her marriage, for the remainder of her life, is, in effect, a covenant to pay an annuity of 40*l.* until marriage, and afterwards an annuity of 20*l.* only ; the proviso for reducing the annuity being part of the original gift itself, and not operating as a condition subsequent, so as to be void as in restraint of marriage. Webb v. Grace, 2 Ph. 701 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 13 ; 12 Jur. 987.

Wager.] — A wagering contract for fifty guineas, that the plaintiff would not marry within six years, is primâ facie in restraint of marriage, and therefore void ; no circumstances appearing to show that such restraint was prudent and proper in the particular instance. Hartley v. Rice, 10 East, 22 ; 10 R. R. 228.

Compromise.]—An agreement by a petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage to withdraw from the suit, in consideration of a sum of money paid and to be secured by the co-respondent, is a fraud on 20 & 21 Vict. c 85, and void as against public policy. Gipps v. Hume, 2 J. & H. 517 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 37 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1301 ; 5 L. T. 307 ; 10 W. R. 38.

A deed of separation, between husband and wife, contained a covenant by the trustees of the wife that she would not molest or disturb her husband :—Held, that a suit for a judicial separation was no breach of the covenant. Thomas v. Everard, 6 H. & N. 448 ; 30 L. J., Ex. 214.

Condition in Will.] — Testatrix devised real estate to her father for life, remainder to her brother for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over. She then bequeathed the proceeds of her residuary personalty in trust for her brother absolutely. But, she declared, if her brother should thereafter, whether he should at the time be in possession as tenant for life or not, marry a domestic servant, or a person who had been a domestic servant, then the devises and bequests in favour of her brother and issue should be null and void, and in lieu thereof she devised her real estate to the use of the plaintiffs, and declared that the personalty was to be held and enjoyed with a specific part of the realty. The father survived the testatrix and died. Thereupon the brother became entitled to the realty as tenant for life in possession. Afterwards, the brother married a person who at the time of her marriage was, and had previously been, a domestic servant :—Held, that the condition was valid, and that the real estate passed to the plaintiffs. Jenner v. Turner, 50 L. J., Ch. 161 ; 16 Ch. D. 188 ; 43 L. T. 468 ; 29 W. R. 99 ; 45 J. P. 124.

A condition in restraint of the second marriage whether of a man or of a woman is not void. Allen v. Jackson, 45 L. J., Ch. 310 ; 1 Ch. D. 399 ; 33 L. T. 713 ; 24 W. R. 306—C. A.

D. made his will as follows :—"I give, devise, and bequeath unto my sister Mary, her daughter Elizabeth, and Sarah, the daughter of David Jones, all my landed property, together with all my goods, chattels, and effects, to possess and enjoy the same jointly during their lifetime ; and when any or some of the before-mentioned parties shall depart this life, I give, devise, and bequeath her or their shares to be possessed and enjoyed by my sister Jemima, the wife of John Davies, together with her daughter Mary, during their lifetime ; provided the said Mary, daughter of the said Jemima, my sister, shall remain in her present state of single woman, otherwise, if she shall alter her present state of single woman and bind herself in wedlock, she is liable to lose her share of the said property immediately, and her share to be possessed by the other mentioned parties, share and share alike :"—Held, that the estate of Mary Davies ceased on her marriage ; for the object of the testator appeared to be, not to restrain marriage, but to provide for Mary Davies while she was unmarried ; and the question whether the clause amounted to a condition or a limitation was immaterial, as the authorities upon such a distinction did not apply to a devise of realty. Jones v. Jones, 45 L. J., Q. B. 166 ; 1 Q. B. D. 279 ; 34 L. T. 243 ; 24 W. R. 274.

k. Contrary to Bankruptcy Laws.

Promises to pay Debt barred by.]—A promise to pay a debt barred by bankruptcy is a mere nudum pactum, notwithstanding the Bankruptcy Repeal Act, 1869. Jones v. Phelps, 20 W. R. 92.

A debtor and his creditors entered into a deed of composition while the Act of 1861 was in operation, which deed was to have the same effect on his debts as if the debtor had been discharged in bankruptcy. After the repeal of the statute by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83, s. 20, the debtor gave a bill of exchange to one of his creditors who was barred by the composition deed, for his old debt:—Held, that the operation of s. 164 upon this transaction was preserved by the saving clause in s. 20; and the bill was therefore void. Rimini v. Van Praagh, 42 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 8 Q. B. 1; 27 L. T. 540; 21 W. R. 107.

To a declaration by an indorsee against the acceptor of two bills of exchange made in January, 1870, he pleaded that there was no other consideration for the bills than a debt barred by a composition deed entered into by him, with his creditors in 1869, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861:—Held, that the plea was good. Ib.

In 1859, W. became insolvent and obtained his discharge. The defendant was at that time a scheduled creditor for 200*l.* In 1865, W. gave to the defendant a bill of sale on his furniture and effects to cover the prior debt of 200*l.* and further advances with interest at 5*l.* per cent. Sundry payments were made by W., who was charged 15*l.* per cent. interest; and the amount due, apart from the 200*l.*, was reduced to 38*l.* In February, 1867, W. gave the defendant a note of hand for 100*l.* The defendant then seized under the bill of sale, and sold the furniture and effects for 121*l.*, paying thereout 40*l.* due to the landlord. W. became bankrupt in October, 1867:—Held, that the 200*l.* due prior to the insolvency could not be revived; that the bill of sale was a security only for the advances made thereon with interest at 5*l.* per cent., and not for any further advances; that the seizure was illegal, and the sum of 40*l.* paid to the landlord was an improper payment; and that the 121*l.* realised by the sale must be refunded. Peakman v. Harrison, L. R. 14 Eq. 484.

A promise by a debtor to pay a debt barred by a discharge under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 49, is nudum pactum, and its breach does not afford a cause of action. Heather v. Webb, 46 L. J., C. P. 89; 2 C. P. D. 1; 25 W. R. 253.

An agreement between an insolvent debtor and his assignee, by which an estate of the insolvent is to be held in trust by the assignee to pay, out of the rents and profits, annuities to the insolvent and his wife, and the surplus towards the extinction of a debt owing to the assignee, is a transaction which, being brought before a court of equity at the instance of the insolvent himself, must be rescinded on the ground of public policy. M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh, 229.

Debt Released.]—Where a debtor, after having obtained an order of discharge under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, promises, for a new and valuable consideration, to pay a debt which by virtue of s. 49 has been released by the discharge, an action lies against him for the amount of the debt. Heather v. Webb (supra) distinguished. Jakéman v. Cook, 48 L. J., Ex. 165; 4 Ex. D. 26; 27 W. R. 171.

Agreements to withdraw Opposition.]—A promise made by a friend of a bankrupt, when he was on his last examination, that in consideration that the assignees and commissioners would forbear to examine him touching certain sums which he was charged with having received, and not accounted for, he would pay such sums as the bankrupt had received and not accounted for, is void, as being against the policy of the bankrupt law. Nerot v. Wallace, 3 Term Rep. 17.

If a creditor has taken money for signing a bankrupt's certificate, it may be recovered back. Smith v. Bromley, 2 Dougl. 696, n. S. P., Sievers v. Boswell, 4 Scott (N.R.) 165; 3 Man. & G. 524; 11 L. J., C. P. 14.

A fiat issued against the defendant on the petition of the plaintiff. After the fiat, and before the choice of assignees, the plaintiff obtained from the bankrupt his acceptance for part of his debt. The plaintiff was afterwards chosen one of the assignees, and the defendant obtained his certificate:—Held, that it was not competent to the plaintiff to sue upon the bill; the security being void, both as being contrary to the policy of the bankrupt law generally, and contrary to the spirit of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8. Rose v. Main, 1 Scott, 127; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 357; 4 L. J., C. P. 18.

An agreement between the petitioning creditor, who had sued out a fiat, and the bankrupt, that the former should abandon the prosecution of the fiat, and that the bankrupt should accept a bill of exchange for a certain amount, was illegal, even as between the bankrupt and the petitioning creditor; and the bill accepted by the bankrupt, in pursuance of such an agreement, was void, and no action could be maintained upon it. Davis v. Holding, 1 M. & W. 159; 1 Gale, 380; 1 Tyr. & G. 371; 5 L. J., Ex. 102.

A covenant by a friend of a bankrupt to pay all his creditors their full debts, in consideration that they will not proceed any further under the commission, is good in law. Kaye v. Bolton, 6 Term Rep. 134.

An agreement by which A., an opposing creditor of B., an insolvent, undertakes to withdraw his opposition, on the terms that A. shall be sole assignee, and shall in that capacity receive a certain sum within a given time, is contrary to public policy, and therefore void. Murray v. Reeves, 2 Man. & Ry. 423; 8 B. & C. 421; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 348.

A promise by a third person to pay a creditor a sum of money in consideration of the creditor withdrawing his opposition to the discharge of the debtor, is founded on an illegal consideration. Hall v. Dyson, 17 Q. B. 785; 21 L. J., Q. B. 224; 16 Jur. 270.

A creditor may legally contract to sue out a commission of bankruptcy against the debtor, in consideration that a friend of the debtor will give the petitioning creditor 5*s.* in the pound for his debt; and a bill of exchange given for the agreed sum is a valid bill. Fry v. Malcolm, 5 Taunt. 117; see 15 R. R. 655.

—— Attorney for Costs.]—An attorney, conducting a commission of bankruptcy, having received a debt due to the bankrupt, in order to effect an arrangement for a supersedeas, undertook to pay the defendant, the solicitor of the bankrupt, the surplus of the sum so received, should any remain, after defraying certain charges incurred by the plaintiff, if the defendant would pay the plaintiff his costs of conducting the commission:—Held, not a sufficient consideration to support an action against the defendant on his promise to pay the plaintiff's costs without an averment and proof that the commission had been superseded, as the contract without a supersedeas was illegal. Haslam v. Sherwood, 4 M. & Scott, 434; 10 Bing. 541; 3 L. J., C. P. 176.

—— Partial Performance — Bar to Action for Money paid.]—Where money is paid under an illegal contract which has been partially carried into effect, the money cannot be recovered back. The defendants were solicitors to the petitioning creditor in certain bankruptcy proceedings, and had incurred costs which were to be paid out of the estate. The plaintiff, a friend of the bankrupt, offered to pay to the defendants a sum of money for these costs, which had not been paid owing to want of assets, on their undertaking not to appear at the public examination of the bankrupt, and not to oppose his order of discharge. The defendants, with the consent of their client, agreed to this, and received the money. They did not appear at the public examination of the bankrupt, and, before any application for his discharge had been made, the plaintiff brought an action to recover back the money from the defendants:—Held, that though the contract was illegal, the partial performance of it prevented the plaintiff from recovering back the money paid under it. Kearley v. Thomson, 59 L. J., Q. B. 288; 24 Q. B. D. 742; 63 L. T. 150, 38 W. R. 614; 54 J. P. 804—C. A.

Re-entry.]—A proviso in a lease for twenty-one years, that the landlord shall re-enter on the tenant's committing any act of bankruptcy, whereon a commission shall issue, is good. Roe d. Hunter v. Galliers, 2 Term Rep. 133; 1 R. R. 445.

Consent to Assignment.]—An agreement between a bankrupt and a third person, that the former should receive a certain sum from the latter, on his obtaining the assent of his assignee to the sale of his house to such person at a certain price, is void in law. M'Shane v. Gill, 1 Car. & P. 149.

Fraudulent Assignment — Immateriality.]—The plaintiff, in order to carry out a scheme to defeat his creditors, assigned goods to A. The defendant, one of the creditors, was a party to the scheme, which, however, was not carried out. A., without the plaintiff's sanction, assigned the goods to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff not being compelled to rely on the illegal transaction as a material part of his case, was entitled to recover his goods from the defendant. Taylor v. Bowers, 46 L. J., Q. B. 39; 1 Q. B. D. 291; 34 L. T. 938; 24 W. R. 499—C. A.

I. Contrary to Revenue Regulations.

Generally.]—The breach of mere revenue regulations, which tend to insure the due payment of duties imposed upon the manufacture of an exciseable article, does not render the trade itself illegal, so as to incapacitate the manufacturer from recovering the price of such article, or from suing upon a guarantee given for the due payment thereof. Brown v. Duncan, 5 Man. & Ry. 114; 10 B. & C. 93; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 60.

A statute forbidding an act under a penalty, intended to protect the revenue, does not make void the act if done, nor prevent a right of action arising out of it. Swan v. Bank of Scotland, 1 Dcac. 752. See Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale, 231; 6 L. J., Ex. 63.

But if a thing is prohibited for other than revenue purposes no action can arise. Ib.

A contract entered into in contravention of a statutory provision, whether the prohibition is express, or is implied from the imposition of a penalty, will not support an action. Cundell v. Dawson, 4 C. B. 376; 17 L. J., C. P. 311.

Where a statute, with the view of affording protection to the public, imposes a penalty for doing an act, it thereby prohibits the act itself, and renders it illegal. D'Allax v. Jones, 26 L. J., Ex. 79; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 979.

Sale of Bricks.]—The 17 Geo. 3, c. 42, which required bricks for sale to be of certain dimensions, and gave a penalty for the breach of that regulation, being passed to protect the buyer against the fraud of the seller, if bricks were sold and delivered under the statutable size unknown to the buyer, the seller could not recover the value of them. Law v. Hodson, 11 East, 300; 2 Camp. 147; 10 R. R. 513.

Sale of Butter.]—Where a statute contains regulations for the protection of buyers against the fraud of sellers, a seller cannot recover for the price of goods sold in contravention of the regulations, although the statute does not in terms prohibit such a sale, but imposes a penalty on the seller. Where, therefore, butter was sold in firkins not branded according to 36 Geo. 3, c. 86, and 38 Geo. 3, c. 73, which require that makers of vessels for the packing of butter shall brand them with their names, under a pecuniary penalty, and that sellers of butter shall, under a further penalty, use vessels so branded, and brand their own names:—Held, that an action for the price could not be maintained. Foster v. Taylor, 3 N. & M. 244; 5 B. & Ad. 887; 3 L. J., K. B. 137. See Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale, 231; 6 L. J., Ex. 63.

Secus, in the case of a breach of a mere revenue regulation, which is enforced by a penalty. Ib.

Excise.]—A factor selling a parcel of prize manufactured tobacco, consigned to him from his correspondent at Guernsey, of which a regular entry was made on importation, but without having entered himself with the excise officer as a dealer in tobacco nor having any licence as such, may yet maintain an action against the vendee for the value of the goods sold and delivered; and this, though the tobacco was sent to the defendant without a permit, at his desire; there being no fraud upon the revenue, but at most a breach of revenue regulations protected by penalties; even if such factor could, upon this single and accidental instance, be considered as a dealer in tobacco within the 29 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 70, which requires every person who shall deal in tobacco first to take out a licence, under a penalty. Johnson v. Hudson, 11 East, 180; 10 R. R. 465.

The 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, ss. 25, 26, imposes penalties on any manufacturer of, or dealer in, or seller of tobacco, who shall not have his name painted on his entered premises, in manner therein directed, or who shall manufacture, deal in, retail or sell tobacco, without taking out the licence required for that purpose:—Held, that the effect of these sections was to impose a penalty on the offender for the benefit of the revenue, but that they did not render void a contract for the sale of tobacco made by a manufacturer or dealer who failed to comply with their requisites. Smith v. Mawhood, 14 M. & W. 452; 15 L. J., Ex. 149.

If the legislature had intended to prohibit the contract itself, if only for the purposes of revenue, it would have been illegal, and no action could have been maintained on it. Ib.

An agreement, the object of which is to enable an unlicensed person to sell excisable liquors, contrary to 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, is on this ground illegal. Ritchie v. Smith, 6 C. B. 462; 18 L. J., C. P. 9; 13 Jur. 63.

An agreement having for its object the carrying on a trade in contravention of the excise laws is illegal. Ib.

See further, REVENUE.

Conveyancer.]—The 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, s. 14, which imposes a penalty on any unqualified person who acts as a conveyancer, is a prohibitory act, and therefore such person cannot recover for conveyances drawn by him. Taylor v. Crowland Gas and Coke Co., 10 Ex. 293; 2 C. L. R. 1247; 23 L. J., Ex. 254; 18 Jur. 913; 2 W. R. 563.

Pawnbrokers.]—See supra, col. 162.

Surgeon.]—The 3 Hen. 8, c. 11, which imposes a penalty on a person exercising or occupying himself as a surgeon without being duly admitted, is a prohibition of his practising as a surgeon, and disables him from recovering for work and labour as such. D'Allax v. Jones, 26 L. J., Ex. 79; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 979.

But a plea founded on that statute must show that the work was done within the places to which the statute extends. Ib.

Registration of Ships.]—A. and B., British subjects, purchased and repaired an American-built ship, on a joint speculation, with a view to employing her in the trade between the two countries, until an opportunity should occur for reselling her to advantage; for which purpose they procured her to be registered in the United States, in the name of C., a citizen of that country, upon a false declaration that she was bonâ fide the sole property of C. After the ship had made several voyages, B., who had had the management of her, attempted to exclude A. from his share in the speculation, and, in spite of the dissent of A., sent her on another voyage to America:—Held, that, even supposing the declaration, and the registration thereby effected, to have been a fraud upon the American law, and the subsequent employment of the ship so registered to have been a fraud upon the English navigation laws, such fraud would not prevent A. from maintaining a suit in equity against B. for an account and payment of his share of the realised profits of the speculation. Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Ph. 801.

The courts of this country will not refuse to administer justice between joint importers of any article of commerce, merely upon proof that, in the production or exportation of such article, some fiscal law of the country of produce has been violated. Ib.

Agreement between A., B., and C., that they shall purchase a ship, and that it shall be registered in the names of A. and B., is against public policy, and demurrer allowed to bill for account in such transaction. Battersby v. Smyth, 3 Madd. 110.

m. Contrary to Poor Laws.

As to Pauper's Residence.]—A covenant with a lessor of premises in a parish to indemnify the parish against any paupers which the covenantor may cause to be settled in it, is valid, although it was objected that it was unreasonable, in restraint of trade, and contrary to the policy of the poor laws. Walsh v. Fussell, 3 M. & P. 457; 6 Bing. 163; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 261.

A bond given to parish officers, reciting that B. had taken a house in the parish for a term of seven years, and conditioned to indemnify the parish against any charges which they might sustain on account of B. and his family becoming inhabitants of and belonging to the parish, is not discharged by B.'s purchasing an estate of the value of 30*l.* in the parish, and residing on it upwards of forty days after the expiration of the seven years' lease. Edwards v. Bobbit, 1 M. & S. 120.

n. Solicitors.

Right of Unqualified Practitioner to Recover.]—A person not duly qualified as a solicitor, who nevertheless acts for parties in an action in the county court, and does solicitor's work for them, is not entitled to recover his expenses and fees from those for whom he acts; the Solicitors Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 68), s. 12, having enacted that none but duly-qualified solicitors shall be entitled to do so. Verlander v. Eddolls, 51 L. J., Q. B. 55; 45 L. T. 543; 30 W. R. 104; 46 J. P. 229.

Employing Uncertificated Solicitor—Costs.]—Under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 68), s. 12—which enacts that no costs, fee, reward, or disbursement on account of or in relation to any act or proceeding done or taken by any person who acts as an attorney or solicitor without being duly qualified so to act shall be recoverable in any action, suit, or matter by any person or persons whomsoever—the successful party in a legal proceeding cannot, where the solicitor employed by him was uncertificated, recover his costs or disbursements from the party otherwise liable. Fowler v. Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Co., 48 L. J., Q. B. 457; 4 Q. B. D. 334; 41 L. T. 159; 27 W. R. 659.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 (The Attorneys and Solicitors Act), s. 26, does not extinguish the debt of a solicitor or an attorney for costs in respect of business done while uncertificated, but only his remedy. Jones, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 83; L. R. 9 Eq. 63; 21 L. T. 482; 18 W. R. 159.

Therefore, where a client has taken out an order of course for taxation of his solicitor's bill, with the usual submission to pay what should be found due, and the master had disallowed certain items for business done while his certificate had not been renewed:—Held, that he was entitled to be allowed the items in question. Ib. This was, however, before the passing of the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, and the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 68, s. 12. See preceding case.

Proceedings taken by an uncertificated attorney are not, as affects his client, deemed void or irregular. Brown v. Tolley, 31 L. T. 485.

Granting Annuity out of Profits.]—Where a father, who never was duly qualified pursuant to 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, after carrying on for some years the business of a proctor conjointly with his son, who was duly qualified, retired, and his son granted him an annuity, payable out of the capital or profits of the business in consideration of his retiring, and giving up his share in the profits:—Held, that it was not illegal to grant the annuity in consideration of the father ceasing to do that which was illegal; and that the fact that the annuity was to be paid out of the profits of the business did not make the transaction illegal, within 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 8, but that the grant was voluntary, and that the consideration was not good against the son's creditors for value. Eddison v. Rothery, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 11 L. T. 134; 12 W. R. 1138.

Upon the dissolution of partnership between H. & A., solicitors, it was agreed that H., continuing the business on his own account, should grant to A. an annuity, and be at liberty to continue his name in the firm, guaranteeing him against all liability by reason thereof:—Held, that such an agreement is not void as being against public policy. Aubin v. Holt, 2 Kay & J. 66; 25 L. J., Ch. 36; 4 W. R. 112.

Agreement as to Loss.]—A contract whereby an attorney stipulates with a client to receive, in consideration of the advances requisite to the conducting the proceedings to a successful issue, over and above his legal costs and charges, a sum which should be commensurate with his outlay and exertions, and with the benefit resulting to the client, is void on the ground of maintenance. Earle v. Hopwood, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 566; 30 L. J., C. P. 217; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 775; 3 L. T. 670; 9 W. R. 272.

And see SOLICITOR.

o. Trade Unions and Combinations.

Agreement—Direct Enforcement.]—By the Trade Unions Act, 1871, s. 4, it is provided that nothing in the act shall enable the court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to its members. The plaintiffs, members of a trade union within the act, sought for an injunction to restrain other members from applying the funds in a manner contrary to an agreement to provide benefits to members:—Held, that such an injunction would not be a direct enforcement of the alleged agreement, and that the court might entertain the proceeding. Wolfe v. Mathews, 51 L. J., Ch. 833; 21 Ch. D. 194; 47 L. T. 158; 30 W. R. 838.

Central Society suing Branch for Wrongfully Dividing Funds.]—The central body of a society brought an action against a branch to restrain the latter from dividing certain funds in possession of the latter. Some of the rules of the society provided for benefits to members, and there were others which were in restraint of freedom of trade:—Held, that the action could not be maintained—(1) as it was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union to provide benefits to members within the meaning of s. 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871; and (2) as the agreement could not have been enforced previously to that act. Duke v. Littleboy, 49 L. J., Ch. 802; 43 L. T. 216; 28 W. R. 977.

Effect of, on Rights of Action.]—In such cases it makes no difference whether a central society sues a branch, a society sues an individual, or an individual sues a society. Ib.

Principle on which Court interferes to prevent Expulsion of Member of Voluntary Association.]—The foundation of the jurisdiction of the court to prevent a member of a voluntary association from being improperly expelled is the right of property vested in such member of which he is deprived. Rigby v. Connol, 49 L. J., Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482; 42 L. T. 139; 28 W. R. 650.

Agreement as to Lien.]—An agreement entered into by a number of dyers, pressers, bleachers, &c., at a public meeting, that they would not receive any more goods to be dyed, &c., but on condition that they should respectively have a lien on those goods for their general balance, is good in law; and any one who after notice of it delivers goods to any of those persons must be taken to have assented to those terms; and consequently cannot demand goods so delivered to any such dyer, &c., without paying the balance of his general account. Kirkman v. Shawcross, 6 Term Rep. 14; 3 R. R. 103.

Not to Compete.]—An agreement between two coachmasters not to oppose each other, and to charge the same prices, is legal. Hearn v. Griffin, 2 Chit. 407.

An agreement between three persons carrying on the trade of trunk and box makers, and travelling by themselves and their servants into various parts of England to vend trunks and boxes, to divide, and not interfere with certain districts of the several cities, boroughs, towns, and villages, as set forth by them on Bowles' post map of England; and that each during his life, by himself and his agents duly authorised, should travel into, to sell trunks and boxes in his way of business, without any interruption whatever by either of the other two, during their joint lives, in certain cities, boroughs, towns, and villages, and not to suffer any goods in the trade to be manufactured at their shops, houses, or warehouses, or from any other place, for the purpose of being sold or disposed of on the ground to be travelled by the other parties thereto; and not to aid and assist any person to oppose all or any and either of the parties; and not to purchase any tea-chest or chests, black or green, at a higher price than 6*d.* or 8*d.* each in Oxford; and in case, at any time, during their joint lives, any person or persons should set and oppose any or either of the parties, to meet together and enter into such mutual agreement, to the intent therein agreed to, as should be beneficial to the mutual interests of the parties, it being their declared intention not to do any act prejudicial to the interests of each other, but to aid and assist each other in their trade and business to the utmost of their power;—does not operate in general restraint of trade, and, as an agreement contemplating a partial restraint only, if founded on a sufficient and valid consideration, is good. Wickens v. Evans, 3 Y. & J. 318.

Not to Employ.]—The condition of a bond recited that the obligors were manufacturers in Wigan and the neighbourhood, and that combinations of workmen, preventing free labour by fear of social persecution, injuriously interfered with the management of their manufactories, and that these combinations were sustained by funds extorted from workmen employed by the manufacturers, and that measures were necessary to protect as well the manufacturers in the free management of their capital as the workmen in the free disposal of their labour; wherefore the manufacturers had agreed, in regard to the amount of wages, the periods of engagement, the hours of work, and the general management of their establishments, to act for twelve calendar months in conformity with the lawful resolutions of a majority of the manufacturers present at a meeting, and declared that the bond should be void if this agreement were performed. In an action on the bond:—Held, that the bond was illegal at common law, and could not be enforced, as being contrary to public policy and in restraint of trade. Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47; 25 L. J., Q. B. 199; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 587; 4 W. R. 326—Ex. Ch.

Enforcing Penalty.]—An agreement between persons jointly interested, to horse a coach, each of them one stage, on the road from L. to B.; and that, in case of default, one of them should sue the defaulter for a penalty, which, when recovered, was to be divided amongst the non-defaulters, is an agreement on which an action may be maintained against the defaulter, by one of the parties appointed by the others to sue, and the others need not join in the action. Rudenhurst v. Bates, 3 Bing. 468; 11 Moore, 121; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 169; 28 R. R. 659.

A contract made between two or more persons to enter into a partnership in contravention of the law, is void, and confers no rights upon either party. Armstrong v. Lewis, 4 M. & Sc. 1.

See also TRADE.

p. Consideration or Security tainted with Illegality.

Not Enforceable.]—Where a deed is given as a security for the payment of a debt tainted with illegality, the law which will not enforce the payment of the debt will not enforce the payment of the security. Fisher v. Bridges, 3 El. & Bl. 642; 2 C. L. R. 929; 23 L. J., Q. B. 276; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 670; 2 W. R. 706—Ex. Ch.

A., being about to compound with his creditors, in order to induce B. (one of them) to execute the deed, without the knowledge of the other creditors, gave him two promissory notes, each beyond the amount of the composition. Upon the first of these becoming due it was dishonoured, and an action was brought upon it, and judgment obtained, and execution issued. C., who was a party to the notes, in consideration of A.'s forbearing to enforce the judgment, gave him a guarantee for the amount of the judgment and the outstanding note; and thereupon the two notes were given up:—Held, that the guarantee was tainted with the original fraud, and therefore could not be enforced, notwithstanding part of the consideration for it was the giving up a judgment in an action in which the illegality might have been, but was not pleaded. Clay v. Ray, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 188. S. P., Geere v. Mare, 2 H. & C. 339; 33 L. J., Ex. 50; 8 L. T. 463; 12 W. R. 17. See Scott v. Gillmore, 3 Taunt. 226; 12 R. R. 641.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiffs, who were proprietors of a newspaper, at the solicitation and request of the defendant, published a statement in their newspaper; that one C. afterwards commenced an action against them for a libel contained in the publication; and that the defendant, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiffs would defend the action, undertook to save the plaintiffs harmless, and indemnify them from all payments, damages, costs, charges, and expenses which they might incur, sustain, or be liable for, by reason of their publishing the statement, and of their defending the action:—Held, that the consideration was entire, and that the part of it which consisted of the publication of a libel being illegal, the whole of it was tainted with illegality, and that the action could not be supported; and that if the former part of the consideration was rejected as surplusage, the promise was then void as amounting to maintenance. Shackell v. Rosier, 2 Hodges, 17; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 634; 3 Scott, 59; 5 L. J., C. P. 193.

Where Valid.]—Where, upon an advance of money, a security has been taken which is tainted with usury or other illegality, and afterwards another security is taken, for the same advance, untainted with the illegality, and obviating any necessity of resorting to the former one for the recovery of the money, such substituted security is valid, and the money really advanced can be recovered thereon. Att.-Gen. v. Hollingworth, 2 H. & N. 416; 27 L. J., Ex. 102; 5 W. R. 684.

A loan of money at usurious interest before the repeal of 12 Anne, c. 16, is a good consideration for a promise, made after the repeal, to repay the loan at the same interest. Flight v. Reed, 1 H. & C. 703; 32 L. J., Ex. 265; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1016; 8 L. T. 638; 12 W. R. 53.

D. INTERPRETATION OF CONTRACTS.

1. CONSTRUCTION.

a. By what law.

Where made.]—The place of making a contract should be considered in expounding it unless the parties have a view to another kingdom. Robinson v. Bland, 1 W. Bl. 234, 256.

The law of a country where a contract is to be enforced must govern the construction of such contract. Don v. Lippmann, 6 Cl. & F. 1.

The legality of a contract is determined by the lex loci contractûs. Branley v. S. E. Ry., 12 C. B. (N.S.) 63; 6 L. T. 458.

When a contract is entered into in one country and is sought to be enforced by the courts of justice of another country, the question is, not only whether it is a valid contract according to the law of the country where it was entered into, but whether it is, or is not, in accordance with the laws of the country in which it is sought to be enforced. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 26 L. J., Ch. 417; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 5 W. R. 387.

As a general rule the lex loci contractûs governs the construction of contracts. Gibbs v. Freemont, 9 Ex. 25; 22 L. J., Ex. 302; 17 Jur. 820; 1 W. R. 482.

Therefore if a bill of exchange, on the face of which no interest is reserved, is drawn in one country, payable in another, the drawer is liable on its dishonour to pay as damages interest at the current rate in the country where the bill was drawn. Ib.

In an action on a contract where the question at issue has no relation to the manner of performing the contract, or to the consequences of non-performance, and relates entirely to the effect of the transaction at the place where it was entered into, the liability of the defendant must be determined by the lex loci contractûs. Scott v. Pilkington, 2 B. & S. 11; 31 L. J., Q. B. 81; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 557; 6 L. T. 21.

A contract between domiciled Englishmen, relating to real estate in a foreign country, is to be determined by the lex loci; but a contract between an Englishman domiciled and resident in England and an Englishman resident in a foreign country, but not having acquired a foreign domicil, must be governed by the rules of English law. Cood v. Cood, 33 Beav. 314; 3 N. R. 275; 33 L. J., Ch. 273; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1335.

The rule governing the interpretation of a contract made in one country, to be performed wholly or partly in another country, is, that the law of the country where the contract is made governs as to the nature of the obligation; and the interpretation of it, if the parties to the contract are either subjects of a power there ruling, or as temporary residents owe that power a temporary allegiance. In either case they must be understood to submit to the law there prevailing, and agree to its action on their contract. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Shand, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 272; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 771; 12 L. T. 808; 13 W. R. 1049.

It is immaterial that such agreement so to be ruled by the lex loci contractûs is not so expressed in terms; it is equally an agreement, in fact, presumed de jure: and a foreign court interpreting or enforcing a contract so made on any contrary rule, defeats the intention of the parties, as well as neglects to observe the recognised comity of nations. Ib.

Intention.]—The rights of parties to a contract are to be judged of by that law which they intended, or rather, by what they may justly be presumed to have bound themselves. Lloyd v. Guibert, 6 B. & S. 100; 35 L. J., Q. B. 74; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115; 13 L. T. 602—Ex. Ch.

A party who relies upon a right or an exemption by foreign law, is bound to bring that law properly before the court, and to establish it in proof, otherwise the court, not being authorised to notice such law without judicial proof, must proceed according to the law of England. Ib.

Where a contract of affreightment does not provide otherwise, there, as between the parties to such contract, in respect of sea damage and its incidents, the law of the ship should govern. Ib.

Method.]—When a contract is made in a foreign country, and in a foreign language, an English court, having to construe it, must first obtain a translation of the instrument; secondly, an explanation of the terms of art (if any); thirdly, evidence of the foreign law applicable to it; and fourthly, evidence of any peculiar rules of construction which may exist in that law; and must then itself interpret the instrument on ordinary principles of construction. Di Sora v. Phillips, 10 H. L. Cas. 624; 2 N. R. 553; 33 L. J., Ch. 129.

Reference to Foreign Law—Effect of.]—A reference to foreign law in an English contract does not incorporate the foreign law, but merely affects the interpretation of the contract. Dever, Ex parte, Suse, In re, 56 L. J., Q. B. 552; 18 Q. B. D. 660—C. A.

Questions of Procedure.]—The law of the country, where a contract is made or is to be performed, furnishes the rules for expounding the nature and extent of its obligations. Ferguson v. Fyffe, 8 Cl. & F. 121.

But the law of the country, where it is sought to enforce the performance of a contract, governs all questions as to the remedy and mode of procedure, including lapse of time. Ib.

As to contracts purely personal, it is a general rule that questions relating to the validity and to the interpretation of a contract, are to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made; and if a remedy for the non-performance of a contract is sought in another country, the mode of suing, and the time within which the suit must be brought, are governed by the law of the country in which the action is brought. Cooper v. Waldegrave (Earl), 2 Beav. 282.

Questions of procedure are to be determined by the lex fori, not by the lex loci contractûs. MacFarlane v. Norris, 2 B. & S. 783; 31 L. J., Q. B. 245; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 74; 6 L. T. 492.

Semble, that set-off is matter of procedure, and, as such, determinable by the lex fori. Ib.

The law of the country where the contract is to be enforced, not that of the country in which it is made, governs the question of admissibility of evidence on a trial arising out of such contract. Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Ry., 3 H. L. Cas. 1. See also INTERNATIONAL LAW.

b. Particular Words, Terms and Phrases.

Construction for Court.]—The construction of a contract, unless there is something peculiar to the words, by reason of the custom of the trade to which the contract relates, is for the court. Bowes v. Shand, 46 L. J., Q. B. 561; 2 App. Cas. 455; 36 L. T. 857; 25 W. R. 730.

The construction of a contract, and the meaning of particular words used in it, are for the judge, except in cases where there is evidence that a particular word was used in a sense peculiar to a particular trade or business, or that its meaning depends on the usage of a particular place. Simpson v. Margitson, 11 Q. B. 23; 17 L. J., Q. B. 81; 12 Jur. 155.

Where it was agreed that an auctioneer should receive a commission, in case a sale of an estate should be effected within two months of a given day:—Held, that months, primâ facie, meant lunar months, and that the subsequent conduct of the parties was not to be looked at to show that it meant calendar months. Ib.

In an action upon a covenant, or other written agreement, it is the duty of the judge to state to the jury its construction as a matter of law, or to explain to them how far its construction may be modified by evidence of usage, when such evidence is admissible; and in cases where such evidence is not admissible, and the construction of the contract is a question of law, his omitting to direct the jury as to its construction is a misdirection. Griffiths v. Rigby, 1 H. & N. 237; 25 L. J., Ex. 284.

In an action on a covenant on a demise of coal mines, accompanied by a proviso that in case the coals, so far as the same could be fairly wrought, should be worked out prior to the expiration of the term, the rent should cease, it is a misdirection on the part of the judge to leave the meaning of the proviso, especially with reference to the words "fairly wrought," to the jury, upon evidence as to the impossibility of working the mine at a profit; the question of profit having no bearing upon the proviso, which regarded only the manner of working; and the construction of which was a question of law for the judge to determine by his direction. Ib.

If a doubt arises upon the construction of a phrase in a written instrument, it is to be decided by the court upon inspection, and not by the jury. Rex v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 521.

In Equity.]—There is no equitable construction of an agreement distinct from its legal construction. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 28 L. J., Ch. 230; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 105; 7 W. R. 153—L.JJ.

Where the law has declared the construction of a contract, a court of equity will not interfere to aid either of the parties merely on the ground of their own or their agents' dealings under it, for that would be to make a new contract, which can only be done by mutual consent, by persons properly authorised, and in due form. Midland Great Western Ry. v. Johnson, 6 H. L. Cas. 798; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 643; 6 W. R. 510.

If such dealings relate to a contract with an incorporated company, the new contract, like the old one, must be under seal. Ib.

Language that of both Parties.]—An agreement must be taken to be in the words of both parties. Wood v. Copper Miners Co., 7 C. B. 906; 18 L. J., C. P. 293.

Construction Preferred which gives Meaning.]—Words construed so as to have some meaning rather than rejected; therefore vendor proposing a price, clear of all expenses, construed that the purchaser should bear the expense of making out the title, the law imposing on him the expense of the conveyance. Stratford v. Bosworth, 2 Ves. & B. 341.

Ordinary Meaning.]—In construing instruments, the words are to be construed according to their strict and primary acceptations, unless from the context of the instrument, and the intention of the parties to be collected from it, they appear to be used in a different sense, or unless in their strict sense they are incapable of being carried into effect; subject, however, to this, that the meaning of a particular word may be shown by parol evidence to be different, in some particular place, trade, or business, from its proper and ordinary signification. Mallan v. May, 13 M. & W. 511; 14 L. J., Ex. 48; 9 Jur. 19.

By articles of agreement between A., described as of Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square, in the county of Middlesex, and B., the former agreed to instruct the latter in the business of a surgeon-dentist for a term of four years; and it was stipulated that B. should not, without the consent of A., carry on the business of a surgeon-dentist "in London, or any of the towns or places in England or Scotland" where A. may have been practising before the expiration of the term:—Held, that, in its strict and proper meaning, the word London meant the city of London, in which sense it ought to be understood, as there was nothing in the context to prevent its being construed in its proper sense; and that a statement in the case, that London had a popular or colloquial sense, in which Great Russell Street would be understood to be within its limits, was not sufficient for the purpose of causing a different construction to be put upon that word in the instrument. Ib.

Contracts should be construed according to the natural meaning of the words used, except (a) where the context affords a different interpretation, and (b) where their conventional meaning is not the same as their legal sense; in the latter case, the meaning to be attributed to the words must depend upon whether the parties at the time of making the contract had or had not the law in their contemplation. McCowan v. Baine, [1891] A. C. 401; 65 L. T. 502; 7 Asp. M. C. 89.

Meaning acquired by Mercantile Usage.]—If a mercantile document is insensible when read according to the ordinary sense of the words used therein, it is a question for the jury whether the language thereof has not acquired a definite meaning by mercantile usage. Ashworth v. Redford, 43 L. J., C. P. 57; L. R. 9 C. P. 20.

A plaintiff sold to the defendants goods; the invoice was dated the 1st of May, and at the foot of it were written the words, "Terms—Net cash, to be paid within six to eight weeks from date hereof." The goods not having been paid for, the plaintiff issued a writ to recover the price on the 18th of June, scarcely seven weeks from the 1st of May. At the trial the judge left to the jury the question whether the credit had expired on the 18th of June according to mercantile usage; the jury having found that the action was not brought too soon:—Held, that the direction to the jury was proper, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict. Ib.

Inserted by Mistake.]—By a written agreement the plaintiff undertook to do work to some houses of the defendant in South Street and Southampton Street. It was proved that the defendant had no houses in Southampton Street. The judge asked the jury whether the parties meant to describe houses in South Street only, and whether the insertion of the word "and" in the agreement was a mistake:—Held, that the judge should have construed the agreement himself, and not have left it to the jury to say whether there was a mistake. Hitchin v. Groom, 5 C. B. 515; 17 L. J., C. P. 145.

As to Time.]—Where a thing is to be done in a reasonable time, the reasonableness of the time is a question wholly for the jury. Nelson v. Patrick, 2 Car. & K. 641.

A contract to be performed "directly," means to be performed not "within a reasonable time," but "speedily," or at least "as soon as practicable." Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 225.

On the 18th of February the plaintiff wrote to the defendant, offering to supply him with linseed cake at 10*l.* 15*s.* per ton; on the 19th the defendant replied, "I can take five tons at 10*l.* 10*s.*, but it must be put on board directly;" and on the 22nd the plaintiff again wrote, "I shall ship you five tons best cakes to-morrow": —Held, that this correspondence did not prove a contract on the part of the defendant to accept cake to be delivered within a reasonable time. Ib.

Contract for Lease—"Immediate Possession if required."]—In a contract for a lease the words "immediate possession if required" do not fix the commencement of the term. Rock Portland Cement Co. v. Wilson, 52 L. J., Ch. 214.

"Say about"—Words of Expectation.]—A charter-party provided that the ship should proceed to the port of loading and there load "a full and complete cargo of iron ore, say about 1,100 tons.' The charterer provided a cargo of 1,080 tons, the actual capacity of the ship being 1,210 tons:—Held, that the words, "say about 1,100 tons," were not mere words of expectation, but words of contract, and that the charterer's undertaking was not to load the ship up to her actual capacity; but that three per cent. was a fair amount of excess over 1,100 tons to allow in estimating what was a full and complete cargo of about 1,100 tons, and consequently that the cargo actually provided fell short of the charterer's obligation by fifty-three tons. Morris v. Levison, 45 L. J., C. P. 409; 1 C. P. D. 155; 34 L. T. 576; 24 W. R. 517.

Freight payable on Measurement of Goods—Place of Measurement.]—By a charter-party made between plaintiff, a shipowner, and defendants, merchants at Manchester, it was agreed that plaintiff's ship should sail to Bombay, and there load a cargo of cotton, and proceed with it to Liverpool and "deliver the same" on being paid freight at the rate of "7*5s.* per ton of 50 cubic feet delivered; the freight to be paid on right delivery of the cargo." The ship accordingly sailed to Bombay, and received a cargo of cotton, which, previously to being loaded, had been subjected in accordance with the usual practice to a high hydraulic pressure, so as to reduce its contents to a minimum. On being removed from the hold at Liverpool, the cotton naturally expanded very considerably, and the plaintiff claimed in this action freight on its measurement when delivered, and not when shipped. At the trial it was proved to be the custom of the Bombay trade to pay freight for cotton goods under a charter-party worded as above, on the measurement of the goods at the port of shipment. No evidence was given to show that plaintiff had actual notice of the custom:—Held, first, that apart from the custom proved, the freight was payable, on a true construction of the charter-party itself, on the measurement of the goods when shipped, and not when delivered; and, secondly, that the evidence of the custom was properly admitted as not being contradictory of the terms of the charter-party. Buckle v. Knoop, 36 L. J., Ex. 49; L. R. 2 Ex. 125; 16 L. T. 231; 15 W. R. 588.

Per Kelly, C.B., and Pigott, B., that the circumstances of the case were such as to raise a presumption that the plaintiff was aware of the custom. Ib.

Per Channell, B., that the fact of the plaintiff not having been proved to have had notice of the custom was an objection rather to the weight than to the admissibility of the evidence. Ib.

"Say not less than."]—In an agreement, on the 12th December, between A. and B., that B. should deliver to A. all the wool which B. might pull up to the 6th January, "say not less than 100 packs," the word "say" in this agreement must be read as if it had been written "that is to say;" and the words following it, therefore, must be taken to form part of a binding stipulation, and not to be merely words of conjecture or estimate; and the true construction of the agreement is, that B., on his part, was bound to deliver at least 100 packs of wool. Leeming v. Snaith, 16 Q. B. 275; 20 L. J., Q. B. 164; 15 Jur. 988.

The court, in construing a mercantile contract, is bound, in the absence of any averment to the contrary, to construe all words in their ordinary, and none in any technical sense. Ib.

"If Remainder are as Good as Sample, you may send me thirty more"—Less than thirty sent.]—Plaintiff wrote to defendant, "I have bought 100 cheese, 30 of which are very fine, 80 lbs. a cheese. The remainder are not so large. On receipt of your order, I will forward sample." Defendant replied, "You may send me 6 Cheddar cheese as a sample." Plaintiff sent 6 with a letter saying, "I am obliged to change one of the cheese, fearing it would not bear carriage." Defendant afterwards wrote, "If remainder are as good as sample, you may send me 30 more. You may also send sample of the smaller ones, and say the lowest price for cash." Plaintiff replied, "Your favour to hand. I will send the cheese to-morrow; I could not say less than 78*s.*, they ought to be 80*s.*" The plaintiff then forwarded to defendant 12 larger cheeses, and 6 smaller ones, which defendant refused to accept, as he said on account of badness of quality:—Held, that he was bound to accept the 12 larger ones, but not the 6 smaller ones, as the contract for the larger ones did not mean 30 absolutely, but as many of the lot of 30 as were of the same quality as the samples previously sent, and as the 6 smaller ones were sent as samples merely, which the defendant was not bound to keep. Symes v. Hutley, 2 L. T. 509.

"Prosecution Laid."]—Freeholders, claiming a common right of fishery, subscribed an agreement to bear each other's expenses of defending any prosecution laid against them for fishing in the alleged common water. A question arising on the trial of a civil action against subscribers for so fishing:—Held, that the words "prosecution laid," in the agreement, must be taken to mean criminal proceedings only. Rawlins v. Jenkins, 4 Q. B. 419; 12 L. J., Q. B. 151.

Vendor "to take upon himself all risks and dangers of Sea."]—By an agreement in which C. was described as vendor, and P. as purchaser, C. agreed to ship a cargo of ice, and on being shipped, to forward to P. bills of lading, on receipt of which he was to "take upon himself all risks and dangers of the sea, &c.," he agreeing also to buy and receive the ice on its arrival, taking the ice from alongside the ship, and paying for it in cash on delivery at the rate of 20*s.* per ton, weighed on board during delivery:—Held, that the effect of the clause as to risks and dangers of the seas was not merely to save C. from liability for non-delivery, but to bind P. to insure the cargo on receiving the bill of lading; and that the ship and cargo having been lost on the voyage through perils of the seas, P. was liable to pay C. the price or the value of the cargo. Castle v. Playford, 41 L. J., Ex. 44; L. R. 7 Ex. 98; 26 L. T. 315; 20 W. R. 440—Ex. Ch.

And see SALE and SHIPPING (Charter-party).

Agreement to use Influence and Secure Situation.]—A party agreed with another as follows:—"Provided you use your influence, and secure me the situation of superintendent, I agree to pay you the amount of my first quarter's salary":—Held, that, to maintain an action on the agreement, the influence used must be such that the situation was, in fact, secured by it. Neelly v. Lock, 8 Car. & P. 527.

"Receiving Notice."]—A declaration stating a promise of a defendant to be, that "if he received seven days'" notice requiring the appearance of W. at a place to be in the notice named, he would produce him, need not aver a notice in writing. Thompson v. Ayling, 4 Ex. 614; 19 L. J., Ex. 55.

A declaration set out an agreement, dated the 27th April, 1840, whereby, after reciting that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiffs in 60*l.*, to be repaid with interest at 5*l.* per cent., it was agreed "that the 60*l.* shall remain in the hands of the defendant from the date thereof, for one whole year; that at the expiration of that period (if the interest shall be then paid, and no notice be then given to call in the same), the 60*l.* shall continue in the hands of the defendant for another year, and so on from year to year, until notice in writing shall be given by the plaintiff to call in the same; that twelve calendar months' notice in writing shall be given to call in the 60*l.*, and that at the expiration of the notice the same shall be paid by instalments of 10*l.* every third month until the whole amount be paid, the first payment of 10*l.* to be made at the expiration of fifteen months from the date of the notice, so that the whole amount of 60*l.* shall be paid by the end of two years and six months from the date of the notice," and averred that a notice in writing, dated the 29th day of May, 1846, was served upon the defendant to call in the principal, and that although twelve calendar months from the date of such notice and service elapsed before action, and although six months from the expiration of the twelve months had also elapsed, and although two instalments had become due, yet the defendant had not paid the same:—Held, that after the expiration of the first year, the notice to pay off the principal might be given at any period of the year, and that the time for payment of the instalment was to be calculated from the date of the notice, not from the day of the year corresponding with the date of the agreement. Brown v. Hartill, 2 Ex. 846; 17 L. J., Ex. 278.

Default in Payment on Demand.]—Where by the terms of a mortgage deed the plaintiffs were to remain in possession on their own account, and managed the mortgaged property until they should make default in payment of the mortgage money upon demand in writing in manner specified, and such demand was made on the wife of one of the plaintiffs during the plaintiff's absence by a person who represented himself as the defendant's agent, and upon non-payment the defendant forthwith entered upon possession and seized the mortgaged property:—Held, in an action of trespass against the mortgagee, that such non-payment before the plaintiffs had had any opportunity to inquire into the truth of the alleged agency did not constitute default, and that the defendant was liable to the mortgagors in substantial damages. Moore v. Shelley, 52 L. J., P. C. 35; 8 App. Cas. 285; 48 L. T. 918—P. C.

Default in "Punctual Payment" of Instalment—Right to retake Possession of Goods.]—A piano was let on the three years' hire system, under an agreement providing that "In case of default in the punctual payment of any instalment, the instalments previously paid shall be forfeited to J. B. C., who shall thereupon be entitled to resume possession of the instrument":—Held, upon default, that J. B. C. was entitled to the possession of the piano, although the instalments in arrear were tendered by the hirer, before action brought. Cramer v. Giles, 1 Cab. & E. 151. Affirmed in C. A.

"Keep in Order."]—A. contracted, in consideration of 220*l.* 10*s.*, to sell and plant a quantity of trees on B.'s land, and also that "he should and would, at his own costs and charges, well and sufficiently keep in order the trees aforesaid for two years after the planting, and that such as should die during the period (except from injury by sheep, game, or cattle.) should be replaced by him." In an action to recover the price, the jury thought that the words, "keep in order," meant to prune only, and did not extend to weeding and clearing the ground, and they found their verdict accordingly. The court, thinking this an improper construction, granted a new trial:—Held, also that evidence of non-performance by A., of any part of the contract on his part, was admissible in reduction of damages. Allen v. Cameron, 1 C. & M. 832; 3 Tyr. 907; 2 L. J., Ex. 263.

"Ship"—Owners of Ship.]—The plaintiffs were owners of the ship W., and M. of the ship G., which was insured in two companies, one of which was represented by the defendant, the other by M. himself. The G. ran into the W., and was arrested in the Admiralty Court; an agreement was entered into by the plaintiffs, M., and the insurers, that the plaintiffs would release the ship, and the other parties would "pay the amount of damage which the ship W. had received from the collision," and that in case of dispute about "the amount of damages claimed by Heard Brothers (the plaintiffs) by reason of the collision," the matter should be referred:—Held, that "ship" in the first clause must be read "owners of the ship," and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for loss of profits, as they would have done in the Admiralty Court. Heard v. Holman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 1; 34 L. J., C. P. 239; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 544; 12 L. T. 455; 13 W. R. 745.

"His Share" equivalent to share of Firm.]—Where a memorandum of mutual agreement had been entered into between M., the plaintiffs, and three other firms, whereby M. agreed to surrender to the plaintiffs "his share" in a certain mortgage held by him as trustee :—Held, upon all the circumstances of the case, that the share of M.'s firm therein passed, and not merely his own individual share as between himself and his partner. Marshal v. Maclure, 10 App. Cas. 325—P. C.

Machine for cutting Glue Pieces strong and sound "to approval of A."]—The proper construction of an agreement to make a machine "for cutting glue pieces according to drawing, &c., strong and sound workmanship to the approval of A.," is that the approval of A. is to be as to the strength and workmanship of the machine, not as to its efficiency for cutting glue pieces. Ripley v. Lordan, 2 L. T. 154.

"Continued Ill-health."]—A schoolmaster, in 1842, contracted with the defendant to rent of him a house and school-room, at the rent of 35*l.* a year; and it was agreed between them that unless death or continued ill-health in either case should take place, the defendant promised to provide two bedrooms over the intended school-room, but not before 1844; and when such rooms should be provided, the defendant agreed to pay for them an additional rent of 5*l.* a year. In an action on this agreement, the declaration alleged as a breach that although the whole of 1845, except a few days, had elapsed, and although the defendant had not been prevented by any ill-health, he had not, although often requested, provided the two bedrooms :—Held, that "the continued ill-health in either case" meant ill-health of either of the parties, and therefore that the declaration was bad for not averring that there had been no continued ill-health on the part of the plaintiff. Ireland v. Harris, 14 M. & W. 432.

Contract by Music Hall Artiste—"Engagement," whether Sundays included—"Perform."] —See Kelly v. London Pavilion, post, col. 271.

"Good" or "Fine" Barley.]—The defendants wrote to the plaintiffs, and offered them a quantity of good barley, to which they answered that they accepted the offer, expecting the defendants would give them fine barley. The defendants, in reply, stated that their letter contained no such expression as fine barley, and that therefore they declined to ship the same. In an action against the defendants for not delivering the barley :—Held, that it was for the jury to say whether the words "good" and "fine" were mercantile phrases, and that the court was to determine the meaning of the contract; and the jury having found that there was a distinction in the corn trade between good and fine barley, there was not a sufficient acceptance, and therefore the plaintiffs must be nonsuited. Hutchinson v. Bowker, 5 M. & W. 535; 9 L. J., Ex. 24.

"Cider"—Liability to Duty.]—Where a contract was made between A. and B., whereby A., having a quantity of apples, agreed to sell his cider to B. at a certain price per hogshead, to be delivered at T. at a future time, and to lend such pipes as he had for the use of the cider, to be manufactured on his, A.'s, premises, and to be paid for before it was removed; and A., in pursuance, delivered a quantity of juice expressed from the apples to a servant hired by B. to manufacture the cider on A.'s premises, and before the cider was completely manufactured it was seized by the excise officers, because the place where it was deposited had not been entered, and was condemned in the Exchequer as B.'s property, together with the casks; and, in action for goods sold and delivered, by A. against B., it appeared that the word cider, at the place where the contract was made, meant the juice of the apples as soon as it was expressed :—Held, that the contract must be construed to have been for the sale of cider in that sense of the word, and that the property passed to B. as soon as the apple juice was delivered to his servant; and secondly, that it was B.'s duty to enter the premises; and as through his fault it became impossible for A. to deliver the goods at T., the failure to do so did not bar his action. Study v. Sanders, 5 B. & C. 628; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 290.

"Timber Dues"—Remission of Duty.]—Upon the dissolution of a partnership between G. and one B., a deed was entered into to settle the rights of the parties. It contained a clause to the effect that, should the respondent succeed in obtaining from the government a remission, in whole or in part, of an amount due from the firm for "timber dues," secured by a bond, he should account for and pay to G. one-half of the amount so remitted. The government, upon the application of B., subsequently remitted upon the bonds an excess of rents paid by the firm :—Held, that the assignee of G. was entitled under the agreement to have the benefit of this remission. Burstall v. Baptist, 21 W. R. 485—P. C.

"Becoming Insolvent."] — The expression "Becoming insolvent" means a general inability to pay debts, and does not signify taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, unless the context so restrains it. Biddlecombe v. Bond, 4 A. & E. 332; 5 N. & M. 621; 5 L. J., K. B. 47.

In a contract for the supply of goods there was a condition that in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of the vendee, the contract should be terminated, or if he should be afflicted in mind or body so as to be unable to carry on his trade :—Held, that there was nothing in the contract to show that the word insolvency was used in a technical sense, and therefore it must be understood in its ordinary import of being unable to pay his just debts. Parker v. Gossage, 2 C. M. & R. 617; 1 Tyrw. & G. 105; 1 Gale, 288; 5 L. J., Ex. 4.

"Weekly Accounts"—Building Contract.]—In a contract under seal, by which the plaintiff contracted to build for defendants a house and premises for a certain sum, it was provided that "no alterations or additions should be admitted unless directed by the defendants' architect by writing under his hand, and a weekly account of the work done thereunder should be delivered to the architect every Monday next ensuing the performance of such work." In an action on the contract :—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show that by the usage of the building trade "weekly accounts" meant accounts of the day work only, and did not extend to extra work capable of being measured. Myers v. Sarl, 30 L. J., Q. B. 9; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 97; 9 W. R. 96.

"Rent Balance."]—Action for work done under the following agreement :—"Mrs. E. agrees with Mr. B. to cleanse the cesspools to the thirteen houses in S. street for 8*l.* 2*s.*: Mr. H.'s rent balance to be deducted from the said sum." H. was a weekly tenant to the defendant of one of the houses. The agreement was signed in the middle of one of the weeks of his tenancy. At that time 2*l.* was due from him for rent, but when the work was completed, another week's rent had become due. The judge at the trial having expressed an opinion that the rent balance meant the amount due when the agreement was signed, and the verdict having been found accordingly, the court refused a new trial. Edwards v. Bagster, 2 M. & W. 221.

Ice to be taken "from the Deck."]—A cargo of ice was consigned to the plaintiff, and before the ship came into harbour the defendants purchased the cargo, with a condition that the ice was to be taken from the ship's deck by them:—Held, that the contract "from the deck" meant that the vendor should pay all that was necessary in order to enable the purchaser to remove the cargo from the deck, and that harbour dues charged to be paid before goods could be removed were payable by the vendor. Playford v. Mercer, 22 L. T. 41.

Whether Usage excluded.]—When two parties enter into a written contract, specifying the terms on which they contract, they are mutually bound by the terms as expressed in the writing, and construed by the court, although one may have understood differently from the other the effect of those terms. Baines v. Woodfall, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 657; 28 L. J., C. P. 338; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 19.

The usage of insurance brokers at Liverpool is, that if, on the occasion of a policy for time being cancelled before the expiration of the time, the premium, or a part of it, is to be returned, the return is made only in respect of unbroken months; but a contract made by a proposal or request in these terms:—"We will thank you to render us a credit note for unexpired time, say from the 12th instant, to the date of the expiration of the policy," and an acceptance in these: "Please to hand bearer stamped policies, &c., to put forward returns for cancelling," must be construed as having been made irrespective of and excluding the usage. Ib.

And see Buckle v. Knoop, supra.

Mode of Carrying out Contract.]—The mode agreed on to carry a contract into effect is as much binding on the parties as the contract itself. Frankfort v. Thorpe, 2 Ball & B. 372.

c. Implied Terms.

Intention.]—In the construction of a document, the court will not imply a contract or a covenant not expressed in terms, unless it is satisfied from something to be found in the document that the parties to it must have intended such a contract or a covenant. Midland Ry. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 15 L. T. 264.

—— Agreement for Sale of Products of a Business.]—The defendants, who carried on business as brewers, entered into an agreement in writing, by which they agreed to sell to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs agreed to buy, all the grains made by the defendants, at the average of the rates charged each year by certain specified firms, from July 10, 1885, until September 30, 1895. In 1890 the defendants sold their business, and in consequence ceased to supply grains to the plaintiffs:—Held, that a term could not be implied in the contract to the effect that the defendants would not by any voluntary act of their own prevent themselves from continuing the sale of grains to the plaintiffs for the period mentioned. Such an implication of a term in a contract ought to be made only where it is necessary in order to give the transaction such efficacy as both parties must have intended it to have, and to prevent such failure of consideration as cannot have been within the contemplation of either party. The question whether in any case such an implication ought or ought not to be made must depend on the particular facts of the case. The construction of one contract in this respect affords little or no guidance for the construction of another. Hamlyn v. Wood, 60 L. J., Q. B. 734; [1891] 2 Q. B. 488; 65 L. T. 286; 40 W. R. 24—C. A.

Not to alter Circumstances.]—If a party enters into an arrangement which can only take effect by the continuance of a certain existing state of circumstances, there is an implied engagement on his part that he shall do nothing of his own motion to put an end to that state of circumstances under which alone the arrangement can be operative. Stirling v. Maitland, 5 B. & S. 840; 34 L. J., Q. B. 1; 11 L. T. 337; 13 W. R. 76.

An insurance company covenanted with C. D., for a valuable consideration, to appoint him their agent, together with A. B., and that if A. B. should be displaced from the agency they would pay C. D. a certain sum; the company having transferred their business to another company, and wound up their affairs, and dissolved themselves:—Held, that it was a displacement of A. B. within the meaning of the covenant. Ib.

Altered Circumstances—Extra Cost.]—Where a contract is made with reference to certain anticipated circumstances, and when it becomes wholly inapplicable or impossible of application to any such circumstances, without any default on the part of the plaintiff, it ceases to have any application: it cannot be applied to other circumstances which could not have been in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. Bush v. Whitehaven Trustees, 52 J. P. 392.

B. contracted with W. in the month of June to lay a certain conduit pipe, and W. agreed to be ready at all times to give B. possession of the sites, to enable him to proceed with the construction of the works. By means of W.'s delay in giving possession of portions of the sites to B., B. was thrown into the winter months when wages were higher and the works were more difficult to construct:—Held, that a summer contract having, by implication, been in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, B. was entitled to a quantum meruit or damages in respect of the increased expenditure which he was thereby compelled to incur. Ib.

Transfer of Goodwill—Covenant to carry on Business.]—A., in consideration that B. would transfer to him the goodwill of his business as a surgeon, promised to pay B. one-fourth part of his earnings for and in respect of each of four successive years, if he should be living at the end of each respective year:—Held, that there was an implied covenant by A. to carry on the business, and that he would not during the four years, by his wilful acts or default, prevent the receipt of earnings. M'Intyre v. Belcher, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 654; 32 L. J., C. P. 254; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 8 L. T. 461; 11 W. R. 889.

Assignment of Patent in consideration of Royalty—Covenant to Maintain.]—By a deed, dated in 1883, a patent was assigned by the inventors and patentees to a company in consideration of 250*l.*, and the other considerations thereinafter appearing. The deed contained covenants for title by the assignors, including a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the patent "during the term subsisting therein." The company covenanted for the payment of a royalty for every article manufactured and sold by them under the patent "while subsisting," and also for payment of a share of any sums obtained by granting licences under the patent "while subsisting." In consequence of the company having, by inadvertence, omitted to pay one of the renewal fees of 10*l.*, payable under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, in lieu of the stamp duty of 50*l.*, the patent became void. An unsuccessful application was then made by the company to parliament for an act to revive the patent. Subsequently the company went into voluntary liquidation. The assignors sent in a claim to the liquidators for 2,000*l.* damages for the loss of the patent, contending that the assignment contained, by implication, though not in express terms, a covenant by the company to keep the patent on foot. Thereupon a summons was taken out by the liquidators under s. 138 of the Companies Act, 1862, for directions as to whether they should allow all or any part of the claim:—Held, that there was no implied covenant to keep the patent on foot, and that, therefore, the claim of the patentees entirely failed. But held, that even if such a covenant could be implied, yet, as there was no obligation on the part of the company to manufacture the patented article, in no circumstances could more than nominal damages be claimed. Railway and Electric Appliances Co., In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 1027; 38 Ch. D. 597; 59 L. T. 22; 36 W. R. 730.

Contract to supply Gas—Specific Period.]—A gas company agrees to supply with gas A.'s premises, situate in a town where there is no other gas company, and he accordingly fits his premises with pipes, burners, stoves, and meter, for the reception and use of the gas. There is no implied contract that the company, although having a monopoly, is to continue to supply the gas for any specific period. Haddesdon Gas and Coke Co. v. Haselwood, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 239; 28 L. J., C. P. 268; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1013; 7 W. R. 415.

Agreement to pay Debt on recovering Estate—Promise to take Proceedings.]—A., by agreement, not under seal, in consideration of B.'s consenting to a supersedeas of a commission against him, undertook, in the event of his recovering a certain estate, to liquidate B.'s claim on him, which he was not bound legally to do:—Held, that this raised an implied promise on the part of A. to take some steps for recovery of the estate. Edmunds v. Wilkinson, 7 Car. & P. 387.

Agreement by Landlord to give Land for Tramway—Rights vested in Landlord.]—Tenants of quarries situated about three miles from their works, who were accustomed to convey the stones from the quarries to the works by carts, entered into an agreement with their landlord to construct a tramway from the quarry to the works, to run, inter alia, "by the end of the policy" of the landlord; and they further agreed to compensate the farm tenants along the line for any damage done to their farms during the currency of their leases. The landlord agreed, inter alia, to give gratuitously the land required for the tramway. Outside the policy ground there was a private road, the property of the landlord, which, before it reached the tenants' works, ran through another tenant's stone pavement yard. This was the only practical route outside the policy for the tramway; and it was alleged that the only obstacle to laying it along that road was, that the other tenant might refuse to allow it being laid on that part passing through his yard, but for this there was no termini habiles. The tenants claimed that the landlord was bound to give them the use and possession of land for the purpose of the tramway, and that either (1) "within and by the end of the policy," or (2) "in any other place as suitable and convenient for them in every respect":—Held, that under the agreement the stipulation was that the tramway should pass outside the walls which enclose the policy of the landlord; and that, by agreeing to give gratuitously the lands required, the landlord merely undertook to give the tenants such rights as were vested in him, leaving them (with power to use his name) to settle with any persons who might have a right or interest entitling them to object to the formation of the tramway. Sinclair v. Caithness Flagstone Quarrying Co., L. R. 6 App. Cas. 340.

Agreement in Articles of Association Excluding Voluntary Winding-up.]—See Ellis v. Dadson, 60 L. J., Ch. 353.

Implied Warranty.]—See supra, Warranty.

To Give Employment.]—Where H. contracts to furnish R. with a reasonable quantity of work at a fixed rate of wages, and R. is bound not to work for any other person or persons for a period of seven years, there is a mutuality of contract implied, and H. is bound to furnish work for the whole period of seven years. Hartley v. Cummings, 5 C. B. 247; 2 Car. & K. 433; 17 L. J., C. P. 84; 12 Jur. 57.

The plaintiffs agreed in writing with L., that he should serve them for seven years as a crown-glass maker—that he should not, during that term, work for any other person without their licence—that they might deduct from his wages any fine he might incur for breach of their rules—that, during any depression of trade, if he should be sick or lame, the plaintiffs should be at liberty to employ any other person in his stead without paying him any wages—that the plaintiffs should pay him so long as he should be employed and work wages by the piece, and 8*l.* a year in lieu of house-rent and firing; and that the plaintiffs should have the option of dismissing him from their service on giving him a month's notice or a month's wages:—Held, that this agreement bound the plaintiffs to employ him during the seven years, subject to the above power of dismissal—that there was, therefore, a good consideration for L.'s contract to serve for seven years. Pilkington v. Scott, 15 M. & W. 657; 15 L. J., Ex. 329.

An agreement, by which a person and others agreed to serve the owners of a colliery, to work coals and do other works for carrying on the colliery as they should be required, at the rates and on the terms as follows:—The parties hired shall, during all times the pit shall be laid off, work, and continue the servants of the owners, subject to their orders and directions, and liable to be employed by them at such work as they shall see fit, and that the hewers shall, when required (except when prevented by sickness or other unavoidable cause), do and perform a full day's work on each and every working day":—Held, that there did not arise upon this agreement an implied promise on the part of the owners to keep the works open, for the purpose of affording to the plaintiff an opportunity of working and earning wages. Williamson v. Taylor, 5 Q. B. 175; 13 L. J., Q. B. 81; 8 Jur. 79.

To Teach a Trade.]—A written agreement "to remain with A. two years, for the purpose of learning a trade," is not binding, for want of an engagement in the same instrument by A. to teach. Lees v. Whitcomb, 5 Bing. 34; 2 M. & P. 86; 3 Car. & P. 289; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 213; 30 R. R. 539.

To Accept Goods.]—A. agreed to let, and B. to take, for one year, at a stipulated rent, certain works; and A. agreed to supply to B. the whole of the chlorine still waste, as it came from his stills, neither adding to nor taking anything from the same, at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* for every twenty-one hundredweight of waste so supplied, with the undertaking that B. was to have the option of a lease of the premises for seven or fourteen years at the same rent, if he should feel disposed so to do, within three months from the date thereof. And A. agreed not to use, or injure, or part with any of the still waste except to B., so long as he should hold the works:—Held, that B. was bound to accept and pay for the whole of A.'s chlorine still waste during the year or such further term as B. should hold the works; and that it was no answer to an action for not accepting it, that B.'s manufacture failed and was discontinued and the chlorine still waste proved useless, and was no longer necessary for the manufacture. Beatty v. Stuart, 7 H. & N. 753; 31 L. J., Ex. 281; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 389.

To Supply Goods for Carriage—Unilateral Contract.]—By agreement of the 1st of October, 1851, between a railway company and the plaintiff, the plaintiff undertook to provide all waggons, horses, &c., necessary for the cartage of grain, merchandise, &c., between Hatfield and Ware, and to convey all grain, merchandise, &c., that might be presented to him for that purpose between the above points for 5*s.* per ton. "And it is mutually agreed that the agreement should continue in force for the period of twelve months from the date thereof." The plaintiff purchased waggons, horses, &c., and commenced carrying between Hatfield and Ware, under the agreement. On the 18th March, 1852, the company gave the plaintiff notice that the arrangement entered into for the conveyance of grain, merchandise, &c., would cease from and after the 1st of April next. Accordingly, on the 1st of April the company ceased to present any goods whatever to the plaintiff for carriage in consequence of having leased a portion of the line to another company, and bound themselves not to carry between Hatfield and Ware. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action against the company, the declaration in which stated that it was mutually agreed between the plaintiff and the company "that the plaintiff should carry all grain and other merchandise for the company between Hatfield and Ware, at the rate aforesaid, for one year," and alleged as a breach that although the plaintiff had always been ready and willing to perform his part of the agreement, yet the company would not permit him to perform the same, but prevented him from so doing, and wrongfully discharged him from any further performance of it:—Held, first, that the above was a unilateral agreement, the only contract on the part of the company being to pay the stipulated price for the carriage of such goods between Hatfield and Ware as might be presented to the plaintiff for that purpose, and consequently the agreement alleged in the declaration was not proved. Burton v. Great Northern Ry., 9 Ex. 507; 23 L. J., Ex. 184; 2 W. R. 257.

Held, secondly, that if the declaration was amended by stating that the agreement was to carry such goods "as should be presented to the plaintiff," the declaration would be bad in arrest of judgment, since there was no breach of that contract, for no goods were ever presented. Ib.

d. Several Documents.

Construction preferred which renders contemporaneous documents consistent. Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 683; 34 L. T. 854.

Failure to prove one of the Documents.]—The plaintiffs claimed the specific performance of an agreement for the composition of a literary work by the defendant, alleging that the agreement was contained in three written documents. At the trial the first and third of the documents were proved; the second was not produced, nor was any evidence given of its contents. The defendant, by his statement of defence, denied that he had agreed with the plaintiffs as alleged by them with reference to the second document:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance of the agreement contained in the first and third documents, or to damages for the breach of it. Post v. Marsh, 50 L. J., Ch. 287; 16 Ch. D. 395; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

Covering Letter to Agent — Condition — Waiver.]—T., who was desirous of floating a gold mining company in England, sent, through his broker F., a letter to D., a Dublin stockbroker, offering him a specified fee in consideration of the company going to allotment, and D. allowing his name to be used as stockbroker. D. signed a letter of acceptance, which had also been forwarded to him by T., through F., and sent the acceptance to F. in a covering letter addressed to F., in which D. mentioned that he signed the acceptance on the distinct understanding that Messrs. H. (an English firm) also joined. The company's prospectus was issued, but instead of Messrs. H., another firm of equal high standing appeared as the English brokers of the company. D., who was only interested in not being associated with what are commonly known as mining brokers, made no objection to the substitution, did not withdraw his name, and acted as Dublin broker until the company went to allotment. In an action for the fee:—

Held, (i.) that the complete contract in T.'s letter and D.'s acceptance could not be varied by the covering letter addressed to F. as T.'s agent; (ii.) that, as matter of construction, the covering letter was not intended to make the contract conditional upon H. being the English brokers; and (iii.) that even if such a condition were imported into the contract, it could be waived by D., being one for his benefit only. Maconchy v. Trower, [1894] 2 Ir. R. 663.

e. Joint or Several Contracts.

Rule of Equity.]—There is no settled rule of equity that a contract which is in terms joint, and would be so construed at law, is to be treated in equity as joint and several. Kendall v. Hamilton, 48 L. J., C. P. 705; 4 App. Cas. 504; 41 L. T. 418; 28 W. R. 97.

Every joint loan, whether contracted in relation to mercantile transactions or not, is in equity to be deemed joint and several; therefore, where four persons had opened a joint account with certain bankers who had advanced to them money on such joint account:—Held, that upon the decease of one of the joint contractors, the bankers had a right in equity to immediate relief out of his assets without claiming any relief against the surviving joint contractors, or showing that the latter were unable to pay by reason of their insolvency. Thorpe v. Jackson, 2 Y. & C. 553.

Intention.]—Where it appears upon an instrument that a promise by two contractors is intended to be joint, it may be treated as such although the promise is in terms several only. Lee v. Nixon, 3 N. & M. 441: 1 A. & E. 201; 3 L. J., K. B. 160.

Names—Primâ facie Evidence.]—The name in which a contract is made is primâ facie evidence of the party for whom the contract was made, but it is not conclusive; therefore, where two persons sue on a contract between them and their bankers, and it appears at the trial that the bank account was opened in the name of one only, it is competent for the two to prove that the account was opened on behalf of them both; and it is sufficient to maintain the action if it is proved that the one who actually opened the account at the time, intended it to be the account of the two, without shewing that the bankers had, before the action, any notice that he had so intended. Cooke v. Seeley, 2 Ex. 746; 17 L. J., Ex. 286.

All Parties to Consideration should Sue.]—Generally, in an action of simple contract all the parties to the consideration should jointly sue. Jones v. Robinson, 1 Ex. 454; 17 L. J., Ex. 36; 11 Jur. 933.

By an agreement between the plaintiff and A., B. and C., and the defendant, reciting that the plaintiff had obtained a patent for an improvement in furnaces, and was solely interested in another patent invention; that the plaintiff and A. had obtained a patent for another invention, the plaintiff and B. for another, and the plaintiff and C. for another; it was agreed between the parties, that it should be lawful for the defendant exclusively to use, manufacture, and sell any or all of the patent inventions within certain limits, during the continuance of the several patents, on certain terms: viz. that an office and warehouse should be prepared for the sale of articles connected with the inventions, and that books of account of sale of the inventions should be kept there by the defendant, and be open at all times to the inspection of the parties, and the defendant should pay to the plaintiff 400*l.* a year, as a consideration for the licence for the sale of the patents, and that such sum should be charged as a payment by the defendant in his books of account; that he should pay a ratable sum on all machines used on his patent principle; that he should also pay the plaintiff a moiety of the net profits to arise from all the inventions (except those in which B. and C. were interested); to the plaintiff and B., two-thirds of the net profits to arise from them; and either of the parties might determine the agreement at the end of five, seven, or ten years. In an action on this agreement, by the plaintiff alone, to recover a half-yearly payment:—Held, that the declaration was bad on the ground of variance, inasmuch as it stated the agreement to be made between the plaintiff and the defendant; whereas there were other parties to it besides the plaintiff, from whom the consideration for the defendant's promise moved as well as from the plaintiff. Chanter v. Leese, 5 M. & W. 698; 9 L. J., Ex. 327—Ex. Ch.

A Spanish firm, C. & Co., authorised the plaintiff, a London merchant, by letter of attorney, to sign in the name of the firm a contract for the sale of their mines in Spain. The plaintiff was to be remunerated by part of the purchase-money. Two documents were then made between the plaintiff, "acting for himself, and, under the letter of attorney, for and on behalf of C. & Co., co-proprietors with him of the mines, of the one part," and the defendants of the other part, whereby the plaintiff, "acting for himself and his co-partners, called the vendors," agreed to sell the mines belonging to the vendors to the defendants, and they agreed to buy them. One part was sealed with the defendants' seal; the other signed by the plaintiff "for self and partners":—Held, that C. & Co. were parties, and ought to be joined as plaintiffs in an action on this contract. Jung v. Phosphate of Lime Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 73; L. R. 3 C. P. 139; 17 L. T. 541; 16 W. R. 309.

At a vestry meeting the accounts of the defendant K., a surveyor of highways, were opposed and rejected, on the ground that he had incurred costs in defending appeals without due authority, but in consideration of his offering to pay 50*l.* towards the bill of the attorneys for defending the appeals, a majority in the vestry agreed by a resolution not to oppose the accounts when presented to the magistrates for their approval. The sum of 50*l.* was to be paid by K. to his successor in office. The plaintiff, who was a member of the vestry, and who had signed the resolution, together with the other vestrymen, was appointed successor to K., as surveyor of the highways. The accounts having passed before the magistrates, and K. having refused to pay the 50*l.*, the plaintiff sued for that sum:—Held, that the other vestrymen should have joined as plaintiffs. Kilham v. Collier, 21 L. J., Q. B. 65; 15 Jur. 1175.

Semble, that the contract with the vestry was illegal as contrary to public policy. Ib.

Action for Work—Two Persons on Duty when Order given.]—A herald and a pursuivant at arms may maintain a joint action for work in making out a pedigree, both having been on duty when the order was given, although only one of them was applied to by the defendant. Townsend v. Neale, 2 Camp. 190.

Offer of Reward—Communication afterwards made to another Person.]—A hand-bill relating to a stolen parcel offered a reward of 100*l.* to "whoever should give such information as should lead to the early apprehension of the guilty parties":—Held, that where the communication was first made by the plaintiff to C. in conversation, but the information was afterwards communicated to a constable jointly by the plaintiff and C., they ought both to have joined in the action. Lockhart v. Barnard, 14 M. & W. 674; 15 L. J., Ex. 1; 9 Jur. 929.

Acting on behalf of Others—Member of Orchestra.]—The plaintiff, acting on behalf of the members of an orchestra to which he himself belonged, signed a proposal "on behalf of the members of the orchestra" to continue their services, provided the defendant would guarantee a certain salary then due to them. The defendant accepted this proposition, but failed to pay the salary due. The plaintiff alone brought an action for the whole money due to himself and the rest, and stated the contract to be with himself and the rest. The jury found that he had acted on behalf of himself as well as the rest:—Held, that the contract was joint, and that he alone could not recover. Lucas v. Beale, 20 L. J., C. P. 134; 10 C. B. 739.

—— Member of Firm.]—Although in an action on a written agreement made by or with one or more members of a firm on behalf of the rest, all the members may be joined, it is otherwise when the agreement is inter partes, and there is no partnership between the person who is party to it on the one side or the other, and the third person whom it sought to join. Robinson v. Rudkins, 26 L. J., Ex. 56.

A., being in want of money, applied to D. & S., who were in partnership, for an advance. They sent him an acceptance by D. alone; and A. agreed that, if he discounted that acceptance, he would give to D. & S. his own acceptance. He discounted D.'s acceptance, but failed to give his cross acceptance. D. was afterwards sued on his acceptance by the holder of it, and paid it out of the money of D. & S. D. sued A. for money paid:—Held, that the action could be maintained by D. alone, upon an implied contract to indemnify him, which arose when he paid the acceptance, upon which he alone was liable to be sued. Driver v. Burton, 17 Q. B. 989; 21 L. J., Q. B. 157; 16 Jur. 373.

—— Members of Company.]—Two members of a company, but which was not completely registered in their own names, entered into a contract, by their agent, but which was in fact for the benefit of the company:—Held, that they might sue and be sued upon the contract. Clay v. Southan, 7 Ex. 717; 21 L. J., Ex. 202; 16 Jur. 1074.

Guarantee.]—Where A., as farmer and renter of tolls, and B. as his surety, severally promise, undertake, and agree to and with the lessors, that A. shall pay a yearly rent; A. and B. cannot be sued jointly upon default by A. to pay the rent. Lee v. Nixon, 3 N. & M. 441; 1 A. & E. 201.

By Two Persons.]—Action by a plaintiff against the defendants jointly upon the following guarantee: "In consideration that you will sell to Mr. F. the distillery situate at, &c., and will take Mr. F.'s acceptance, to be dated 29th of September, 1849, for 400*l.* (the amount of the purchase-money), and interest, payable at six months after date, we undertake and guarantee that the 400*l.* and interest shall be duly paid to you when the acceptance arrives at maturity, in the proportion of 200*l.* each":—Held, that the defendants were severally liable to the plaintiff to the extent of 200*l.* each. Fell v. Goslin, 7 Ex. 185; 21 L. J., Ex. 145.

Effect of Death on Joint Contract.]—A., B., C., D. and E. obtained a concession from, and entered into a contract with, the Egyptian government for the construction of certain works. Before the works had been actually begun, A. died. Doubts existing as to the rights of A.'s trustees and executors (who by his will had the fullest power of management given them, and of completing any existing contracts), and the other contractors inter se, a contract was, after considerable negotiations, drawn up between B., C., D. and E. and " executors and trustees of the will of" A., and signed by B., C., D. and E. before the will of A. had been proved. The agreement was that the work should be completed in the joint interests of the survivors and the estate of A. Subsequently one of the executors and trustees renounced and disclaimed, and the others signed the agreement. B., C., D. and E. filed a bill to set aside the agreement for a declaration that the partnership was dissolved by A.'s death, and for winding-up:—Held, first, that the agreement was binding on all parties. M'Clean v. Kennard, 43 L. J., Ch. 323; L. R. 9 Ch. 336; 30 L. T. 186; 22 W. R. 382.

Held, secondly, that independently of the agreement, the right of A.'s representatives was to have the contract completed, the estate being liable to contribute towards the required capital, and liable for any losses. Ib.

Right of Joint Contractors to sue for what one of them has Sanctioned.]—Action by A. and two others on a contract, on the deposit of goods by the three with the defendant, not to give them up without the joint order of the three. Breach, that they were given up without such joint order. Plea, that they were given up to A. at his request, is a good plea; for A. being disabled from suing for what he himself procured to be done, could not sue, though joining the others with him. Brandon v. Scott, 7 El. & Bl. 334; 26 L. J., Q. B. 163; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 362; 5 W. R. 235.

f. Alternative.

Alternative or Absolute.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant received certain bills of lading and drafts on the terms that on the acceptance of the latter by B., the former should be delivered to him, that he should present such accepted drafts to B. for payment, and remit to the plaintiff the proceeds if the same should be paid, and if the drafts should not be paid, either return them to the plaintiff, or pay him the amount, for reward to the defendant; that everything happened to entitle the plaintiff to have the drafts returned or the amount paid by the defendant, yet he did not return the drafts, nor did he pay the plaintiff their amount. Judgment went by default, and it appeared that the drafts were of no value :—Held, by Keating, J., Brett, J., and Grove, J., that, the true construction of the declaration was that the defendant promised if he did not return the drafts to pay their amount, which was, therefore, recoverable; but per Bovill, C.J., the contract alleged was only alternative to return the drafts or pay their amount, and that only the nominal damages arising from the least burdensome alternative were recoverable. Deverell v. Burnell, 42 L. J., C. P. 214; L. R. 8 C. P. 475; 28 L. T. 874.

Alternative or Optional.]—In general, where the contract is in the alternative, the election is in the party who is to do the first act. Chippendale v. Thurston, 4 Car. & P. 98.

Option with whom—Penalty.]—Under an agreement to perform one of two things, the option is in the person who is to perform; and if one of the two things is prohibited under a penalty, no action will lie for the penalty until the party makes his election by performing the prohibited part of the contract. Layton v. Pearce, 1 Dougl. 15.

Right to exercise Option, whether Determined—Payment by Cheque.]—On 15th June, 1864, plaintiff advanced 500*l.* on loan to defendants, on terms of an agreement between them of that date, whereby it was agreed that "in consideration of F.'s making an advance for a period of two months, such advance shall be repaid at any time after the expiration of two months from the date hereof on the application of the said F., and further that the said F. shall have the option while the amount remains unpaid of accepting paid-up shares in the company, or partly paid-up shares to the amount, or for such amount thereof as the said F. may desire, or of accepting a deposit receipt of 1*l.* per share on 500 shares, or any proportion thereof at his the said F.'s discretion." On 17th November in the same year, in pursuance of a resolution of the company that such advance should be repaid, the secretary of the company sent to plaintiff a cheque on the company's bankers for the amount of the said loan, which cheque the plaintiff immediately returned to the defendants, with a letter dated 17th November, in which he declined to receive the cheque, and applied to have 500 shares in the company allotted to him and a deposit receipt of 1*l.* per share on the same forwarded to him in accordance with the terms of the agreement of 15th June. The defendants refusing to comply with his demand, plaintiff brought an action for damages for breach of contract to allot shares and for money lent, to which defendants, amongst other things, pleaded payment within the meaning of the agreement before plaintiff exercised his option :—Held, that the money advanced by plaintiff remained unpaid on 17th November, the date of his demand for an allotment of shares, inasmuch as the sending of the cheque, which was forthwith returned to plaintiff, did not amount to payment, and therefore plaintiff had a right to exercise an option, and to elect to be repaid by an allotment of shares, which application on his part not having been complied with by defendants, the present action was maintainable, the plea of payment not having been proved. Ferguson v. Washoe Mining Co., 17 L. T. 409.

Per Bramwell and Channell, BB. The plaintiff might have exercised his right of option within the two months from the date of the loan, although it could not have been enforced until after the expiration of that time.

Per Bramwell, B., under the terms of the contract there was no power or right in defendants to repay the money until after an application first made by plaintiff for its repayment.

One Alternative Impossible]—If an agreement is in the alternative, and one branch of the alternative cannot by law be performed, the party is bound by law to perform the other. Stevens v. Webb, 7 Car. & P. 60.

A. was in custody on a ca. sa., and, in consideration of the plaintiff consenting to his discharge, B. agreed to pay 35*l.* or to surrender A. to the sheriff; A. on a subsequent day offered to surrender himself to the sheriff, who would not retake him, as the plaintiff had consented to his discharge :—Held, that the agreement was absolute for the payment of the 35*l.*, and that the other alternative was not satisfied by the offer of the surrender. Ib.

An agreement to do either of two things is not discharged when one of the two things becomes impossible by the act of God. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 153; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 5 W. R. 156.

In the case of an ordinary memorandum of association, according to which the capital is divided into shares of equal amount, the interests of the shareholders are equal in all respects. Where, therefore, in consideration of the assignment of a lease, A. agreed to pay B. 1,000*l.* within twelve months, or otherwise transfer to B. the like amount in fully paid-up shares in a company to be formed by A., and the company was formed by A., with preferred and deferred shares :—Held, that B. was entitled to receive shares, the interest in which was equal in all respects to those held by other shareholders; that A. by forming the company with two unequal classes of shares, had put it out of his power to comply with the one alternative of the contract, and that, therefore, he was bound to perform the other alternative, viz. to pay 1,000*l.* Studholme v. Mandell (1 Ld. Raym. 279) followed. McIlquham v. Taylor, 63 L. J., Ch. 758; [1895] 1 Ch. 53; 8 R. 740; 71 L. T. 484; 43 W. R. 297. Affirmed in C. A., 64 L. J., Ch. 296; 8 R. 750, n.; 71 L. T. 679.

—— Or Illegal.]—If one of the parties to a contract stipulates for the option of performing his part in one of two lawful ways, he is, after having once made his election, bound by such election; and if the performance is impossible, and not illegal, he is liable to damages for not being able to perform it. Brown v. Royal Insurance Society, 1 El. & El. 853; 28 L. J., Q. B. 275; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1255; 7 W. R. 479.

In an action on a policy of insurance against fire, which contained a condition by which the society reserved to itself the right of reinstatement in preference to the payment of claims, a plea by the company that, having elected to reinstate the insured premises, they were proceeding with the reinstatement, when, by order of the Commissioners of Sewers, lawfully acting in that behalf, the premises were taken down, being in a dangerous condition, such condition not being caused by the fire, and that if the premises had not been so taken down, they would have proceeded with the reinstatement, and would have restored them to the condition they were in before the fire, is a bad plea. Ib.

Where an agreement is entered into between two parties, whereby one of them covenants to do one of two specified things, if either of the alternatives is to do an illegal act, the whole agreement is void: but if the condition is to do an act which may be effected either by lawful or unlawful means, the law will presume in favour of the contract that the contracting parties contemplated the former. Lewis v. Davidson, 4 M. & W. 654; 1 H. & H. 425; 8 L. J., Ex. 78; 3 Jur. 387.

g. Entire or Divisible.

To Let Milking of Cows.]—A contract by A. to let, and by B. to take, the milking of thirty cows, at 7*l.* 10*s.* per cow per annum, from 14th February, the rent to be paid quarterly in advance, and by C. to pay the rent, is an entire and not divisible contract. Whitcher v. Hall, 8 D. & R. 22; 5 B. & C. 269; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 167; 29 R. R. 244.

To Cure Sheep.]—Where in an action of assumpsit for curing 497 sheep of the scab, it appeared that the plaintiff agreed he should not be paid anything unless he cured all:—Held, that he could not recover, because 40 of the flock were not cured. Bates v. Hudson, 6 D. & R. 3.

Salary—Abandoning Contract.]—The defendant having contracted with the Lords of the Admiralty to provide a steam-vessel for exploring the river Niger, wrote to the plaintiff as follows: "I am willing to give you the command of the steamer destined for an exploring and a trading voyage up the river Niger and its tributaries, your pay to be at the rate of 50*l.* per month, commencing from the 1st of December, 1853, and a commission of twenty per cent. on the net proceeds of the produce you may bring down." In reply, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant as follows: "In answer to your letter of yesterday, offering me the command of the vessel to go out in a trading and an exploring voyage to the river Niger and its tributaries, at a fixed pay of 50*l.* per month, and twenty per cent. on the net proceeds of the goods obtained, I beg leave to say, that I accept the service, and the terms you mention." The vessel proceeded up the Niger, under the command of the plaintiff, as far as Dagbo, when the plaintiff refused to proceed further, and abandoned the command:—Held, that this was not an entire contract for the whole voyage, but a contract which gave a cause of action for the salary as each month arose, and which, when once vested, was not subject to be lost or divested by the plaintiff's desertion or abandonment of the contract. Taylor v. Laird, 1 H. & N. 266; 25 L. J., Ex. 329. See Cutter v. Powell, 6 Term Rep. 320; 3 R. R. 185.

Action by Administrator—Completion of Contract.]—A. declared as administrator of B., stating that the defendant in B.'s lifetime was indebted to B. in money to be paid by the defendant to B. on request. It was proved that B., had contracted with the defendant in writing to do certain works for him for 400*l.*, to be paid upon completion of the works. B. died before their completion, and A., before he had taken out letters of administration, agreed with the defendant to complete, and did complete, the works:—Held, that these facts did not support the declaration, inasmuch, as the contract being entire, and the works unfinished at B.'s death, no debt accrued from the defendant to B. in B.'s lifetime, although the new agreement with A. amounted as between him and the defendant to a rescission of the original contract, which would entitle A. as administrator, to sue on a quantum meruit in respect of the work done by B. Crosthwaite v. Gardner, 18 Q. B. 640; 21 L. J., Q. B. 356; 17 Jur. 377. See further, SALE OF GOODS.

Printing—Damage by Fire.]—Where a printer has been employed to print a work, of which the impression is to be a certain number of copies, if a fire breaks out and consumes the premises before the whole number has been worked off, the printer cannot recover anything, although a part has actually been delivered. Adlard v. Booth, 7 Car. & P. 108. S. P., Gillett v. Mawman, 1 Taunt. 137.

Part Performance with Assent of Both Parties.] — Although an entire contract is not divisible, and a part-performance cannot therefore be the subject of an action on the contract itself; yet if there be part-performance, with the assent of both parties, an action may be maintained to recover a fair value or reward in respect of that part-performance. Shipton v. Casson, 5 B. & C. 378; 8 D. & R. 130; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 199.

Within Statute of Frauds.]—S. agreed by parol to procure for C., as purchaser, the estate of R., in consideration of C.'s making to S. a lease of a quarry, and of paying to S. the sum, if any, by which the purchase-money of the estate should fall short of a maximum price fixed on:—Held, that the contract was indivisible, and being within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, no action could be brought by S. upon it to recover the difference between the purchase money and the maximum price. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R., 1 C. L. 434; 16 W. R. 133.

"If Remainder are as good as Sample you may send me 30 more"—Less than 30 sent.]—See Symes v. Hutley, ante, col. 236.

h. Uncertain.

Validity.]—Where parties have expressed the matter of their agreement in such uncertain or imperfect terms that it is impossible to ascertain any definite meaning, such agreement is necessarily void. Baxter, Ex parte, Vince, In re, 61 L. J., Q. B. 836; [1892] 2 Q. B. 478; 67 L. T. 70; 41 W. R. 138; 9 Morrell, 222—C. A.

In Part.]—An agreement to take a lease of a house if put into thorough repair, and the drawing-rooms "handsomely decorated according to the present style," is too uncertain for a court of equity to enforce. Taylor v. Portington, 7 De G. M. & G. 328; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1057; 3 Eq. R 781.

"Et cætera"—Effect of.]—Where terms for letting farms provided that all materials required for building proposed to be built, or that might thereafter be built, should be led at the expense of the tenant; that the landlord should drain, the tenant leading tiles; that gates, buildings, "&c.," should be left in repair by the tenant, the landlord finding new gates when required; that the landlord reserved to himself all customary rights and reservations, such as liberty to cut and plant timber, search for and work mines or minerals, "&c.," allowing the tenant for any reasonable damages:—Held, that these stipulations did not render the agreement uncertain, so as to be incapable of being enforced specifically. Parker v. Taswell, 2 De G. & J. 559; 27 L. J., Ch. 812; 6 W. R. 608.

The terms "goodwill, &c.," in a contract for the sale of a foundry, are not so uncertain as alone to prevent a decree for specific performance of it, for the words "et cætera" point to things necessarily connected with, and belonging to, the good-will, and to be defined in the conveyance. Cooper v. Hood, 26 Beav. 293; 28 L. J., Ch. 212; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1266; 7 W. R. 81.

Specific performance of an agreement to purchase one-third of a foundry refused, on the ground of uncertainty, the contract not specifying what portion of the purchase-money was to be left in the business, but only a large portion, and not stating when it was to be paid, or how to be secured, and what interest was to be allowed in the meanwhile. Ib.

Promise to do Act—If Horse Lucky.]—A. bought a horse from B., and promised that "if the horse was lucky to him he would give 5*l.* more, or the buying of another horse." It was held that such a promise was too vague to be considered in a court of law. See Guthing v. Lynn, 2 B. & Ad. 232.

"For such Remuneration as should be Deemed Right."]—A. agreed with B. to do certain services for such remuneration as should be deemed right:—Held, that there was no promise that A. should receive anything, nor any engagement capable of enforcement. See Taylor v. Brewer, 1 M. & S. 290.

"So far as the Law Allows."]—A. covenanted with B. to retire from a trade "so far as the law allows." It was held that the parties must fix the limit of their covenant and not leave the court to do so. Davies v. Davies, 36 Ch. D. 359.

2. PAROL EVIDENCE.

To establish Collateral Parol Contract.]—A tenant entered on lands on the understanding that a lease should be signed at a future time. When the lease was presented to him for signature he refused to sign unless the landlord would undertake to destroy the rabbits. This the landlord by word of mouth promised to do, and the tenant thereupon signed. The lease contained a clause by which the tenant agreed not to shoot, hunt, or sport on the land, or destroy any game, but to use his best endeavours for the preservation of the same, and to allow his landlord or friends at any time to hunt, shoot, and sport on the land. In an action by the tenant against the landlord, for breach of agreement in not destroying the rabbits:—Held, that this agreement was collateral to, and did not alter or vary the written contract, and that therefore evidence of such agreement was admissible. Morgan v. Griffith, 40 L. J., Ex. 46; L. R. 6 Ex. 70; 23 L. T. 783; 19 W. R. 957.

On the sale by auction of a lease, containing a covenant against alienation without the consent of the lessor, the auctioneer announced that the landlord would give his consent for a certain sum, then mentioned, which the vendor verbally agreed to pay; and the auctioneer, on the day of the sale, signed and delivered to the purchaser a memorandum of the names of the vendor and purchaser, the price and the amount to be paid for the landlord's consent, containing a stipulation that the latter sum should not be charged to the purchaser. A deed of assignment, not specifying by whom the sum requisite to obtain the landlord's consent should be borne, having been executed, the purchaser was compelled, by the default of the vendor, to pay it, in order to render his title valid:—Held, that the memorandum was a sufficient note of an agreement by the vendor, collateral with the deed of assignment, and not merged therein, to pay the sum necessary to obtain the landlord's consent to the assignment, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount which he had paid for that purpose from the defendant. Carrigy v. Brock, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 501.

To establish Trust—On Conveyance of Realty.]—L. agreed by parol with W. for a conveyance of a life interest in real estate, part of which, a cottage, was in his own occupation. The terms were, that W. should be repaid the purchase money and interests out of the rent, and should allow L. to continue to occupy the cottage. G. swore that this was the effect of the parol arrangement, but two other witnesses swore that they had heard W. deny it. A short time after this agreement, W. asked L. to execute an absolute conveyance of the same life interest to W.'s daughter, an infant, which L. accordingly did, and W. entered into possession of the property, leaving the cottage in L.'s possession, rent free. W. wrote letters afterwards to G. and to J., saying that he had bought the property out and out, and offered L. an annuity for life if he would give up possession of the cottage. W., by will, devised his real estate to his daughter, and appointed B. his executor, and her guardian. B. made L. an offer of the annuity on the same terms as W. had done, but the offer was refused. Thereupon B., as the next friend of W.'s daughter, brought ejectment against L., who filed a bill to restrain it, alleging the parol agreement, and praying an injunction to stay the action, and a re-conveyance of the property on payment of what was due:—Held, that evidence of the parol agreement was admissible notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), and a decree made declaring the daughter of W. to be a trustee for L., who was entitled to redeem on payment of what was due. Lincoln v. Wright, 21 L. J., Ch. 705. S. P., Haigh v. Kaye, 41 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 7 Ch. 469; 26 L. T. 675; 20 W. R. 597.

—— On Assignment of Leaseholds.]—Marlborough (Duke), In re, Davis v. Whitehead, 63 L. J., Ch. 471; [1894] 2 Ch. 133; 70 L. T. 314; 42 W. R. 456.

Part Written, part Oral.]—A., having entered into a contract for supply of iron rails for Vera Cruz, applied to B. & Co., shipowners and brokers, to procure vessels to carry it thither; whereupon B. & Co. on the 19th of November wrote to A.: "We engage to find tonnage for about 5,000 tons of rails to load at M. for Vera Cruz, subject to the following conditions, viz. 1,000 tons to be delivered at Vera Cruz in three months from this time, and 1,000 tons per month afterwards." After a long correspondence and several interviews as to the class of vessels to be chartered, and the flag, B. & Co. on the 11th of December, wrote to A. as follows: "Our engagement to procure tonnage for Vera Cruz, in the letter addressed to your Mr. B. on the 19th November; and, in accordance therewith, we are arranging to take up vessels for the first shipment of 1,000 tons. We cannot restrict ourselves to vessels of any particular flag or class, but will of course give a preference to neutral ships of high class." On the 15th of December B. & Co. wrote to A. saying, "that they would prefer abandoning the contract altogether." And afterwards on the same day A. wrote, "We accept your offer of the 19th of November last, coupled with the initialled offer of the 18th. Messrs E. hold us to our contract, and therefore we must hold you to yours, and cannot consent to your abandoning it as intimated" :—Held, that these letters did not constitute a complete contract, but that recourse must be had to parol evidence; and, consequently, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether or not a binding contract as alleged in the declaration was to be inferred from the whole. Bolckow v. Seymour, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 107.

Where a contract is to be made out partly by written documents and partly by parol evidence, the whole becomes a question for the jury. Ib.

Incomplete Written Agreement]—Where there is a parol agreement between two persons, and a subsequent written agreement which does not embrace all the terms of the parol agreement, it is a question of fact for the jury whether it was the intention of the parties that there should be a distinct parol agreement collateral to the written agreement, and evidence of the terms of the parol agreement is admissible Lindley v. Lacey, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 578; 34 L. J., C. P. 7; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1103; 11 L. T. 273; 13 W. R. 80.

A. verbally agreed with B. to sell him certain goods, B. having induced A. so to do on his undertaking to settle an action about to be commenced against A. The agreement as to the sale was put into writing, and in the agreement authority was given to B. to settle the action, but his obligation to do so was not stated. The action was not stayed, and execution issued. In an action on the agreement for the price of the goods and damages sustained, by the action having been allowed to proceed, it was objected that evidence of the verbal agreement was not admissible, as being part of one entire contract which had been reduced into writing :—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Ib.

State of Document when Signed.]—A. signed a proposal for a contract in a certain form. B. then altered it and signed it in the altered form and brought it to A. Parol evidence having been given in an action against A. that he verbally agreed that the altered document should be the contract :—Held, that such evidence was rightly admitted, as showing what was the state of the document when it became an agreement. Hudson v. Stuart, 43 L. J., C. P. 204; L. R. 9 C. P. 311; 30 L. T. 333; 22 W. R. 534.

No Contract.]—When a document appears on the face of it to contain the terms of a written agreement, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was not intended to be an agreement, but was written for some other purpose, and the question whether this is so or not is for the jury. Clever v. Kirkman, 33 L. T. 672; 24 W. R. 159.

The defendant gave the plaintiff a paper stating, "The terms upon which I agree to sell you the business . . . are as follows : . . .," addressed to the plaintiff, signed by the defendant. The plaintiff afterwards wrote below, "I agree to the above terms, and accept the same," and signed. In an action for not selling, the defence was that the paper was not meant to be a contract of sale. The judge left it to the jury whether the defendant signed the paper as an agreement or an offer to the plaintiff, or as a memorandum of terms on which the plaintiff might offer the business for sale to a purchaser : —Held, a proper direction. Ib.

Evidence is admissible to show that a document, apparently an agreement, was signed without any intention of making a present contract, but that it was to be conditional only upon the happening of an event which has not occurred. Pym v. Campbell, 6 El. & Bl. 370; 25 L. J., Q. B. 277: 2 Jur. (N.S.) 641; 4 W. R. 528. S. P., Davies v. Jones, 17 C. B. 625; 25 L. J., C. P. 21; 4 W. R. 248; Furness v. Meek, 27 L. J., Ex. 34.

Different Contract.]—When letters contain certain terms which may form the basis of a contract, it is necessary to ascertain from the letter whether the terms are finally arrived at, and if they are not, verbal evidence is admissible to shew that a different contract has been entered into. Johnson v. Appleby, 43 L. J., C. P. 146: L. R. 9 C. P. 158; 30 L. T. 261; 22 W. R. 515.

A document purporting to be a contract, signed by the parties, is not necessarily so; and it is competent for either of the parties to show by parol evidence that it was not their intention, in signing, that it should operate as a contract, and that the real contract between them was not in writing. Rogers v. Hadley, 2 H. & C. 227; 32 L. J., Ex. 241; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 898; 9 L. T. 292; 11 W. R. 1074.

Of what Matters.]—In ambiguous contracts, the domicile of the parties, the place of execution, the purpose, and the various provisions and expression of the instrument are material to be considered in the construction. Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 2 Bligh, 66; 21 R. R. 43.

Surrounding Circumstances.]—Extrinsic circumstances not only may but must always be looked at, because an agreement can never be made intelligible unless the persons and subject-matter with which the parties are dealing can be identified. Brown v. Fletcher, 35 L. T. 165.

—— Unilateral Contract.]—Where a document purports to be a unilateral contract, binding the signatories for an indefinite time to sell certain specified debentures of a company to one of its officers at a specified price; but the circumstances under which it was executed shewed that the real intention of the signatories was to limit for their common benefit their claims against the company, in order to facilitate some financial operation then contemplated :—Held, that such intention controlled its effect, and that it could not be treated as an agreement for sale, for the benefit of such purchaser. Senécal v. Pauzé, 14 App. Cas. 637—P. C.

Subsequent Acts.]—Acts or communications of the parties, after an agreement, may be evidence of facts existing at the time of the agreement material to its construction, but not to determine its meaning. Monro v. Taylor, 8 Hare, 56; 3 Mac. & G. 713; 21 L. J. Ch 525.

To Vary.]—Neither a plaintiff nor a defendant can at law avail himself of a parol agreement to vary or enlarge the time for performing a contract previously entered into in writing, and required so to be by the Statute of Frauds. Hickman v. Haynes, 44 L. J., C. P. 358; L. R. 10 C. P. 598; 32 L. T. 873; 23 W. R. 871.

Agreement to purchase established upon a correspondence referring to the terms of such agreement. Parol evidence is admissible to explain the subject matter of an agreement, although not to vary the terms. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer 53; 17 R. R. 13. And see Child v. Comber, 3 Swanst. 423, n.

—— Assent to Contract Signed by Other Persons.]—If a party, by the payment of money, and by his conduct in other respects, signify his assent to the terms of a written agreement, signed by other persons, but not by himself, he will not be entitled, in an action arising out of that contract, to give verbal evidence of a subsequent variance, in order to proceed against any of those persons, as on a new and independent contract, or to recover back the money so paid as money had and received, without resorting to the written agreement. Day v. Canning, 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 231.

To show previous Parol Promise.]—When a written contract has been executed, containing all the terms agreed upon between the parties, a previous parol promise relating to the same subject-matter is invalid. Angell v. Duke, 32 L. T. 320; 23 W. R. 548.

The defendant let a house and furniture to the plaintiff by a written agreement; evidence of a previous parol promise by the defendant to put in more furniture was tendered at the trial and rejected:—Held, that the rejection was right. Ib.

E. DISCHARGE AND BREACH OF CONTRACTS.

1. BY DISCHARGE OR RESCISSION.

Where new Agreement.]—Novation means that, there being a contract in existence, some new contract is substituted for it, either between the same parties (for that might be), or between different parties; the consideration mutually being the discharge of the old contract. A common instance is in partnership cases, when the members of the new firm take over the liabilities of the old firm. Scarf v. Jardine, 51 L. J., Q. B. 612; 7 App. Cas. 351; 47 L. T. 258; 30 W. R. 893—H. L. (Sc.) And see Hobson v. Cowley, 27 L. J., Ex. 205; 6 W. R. 334.

Retaining Smaller Sum in Lieu of Larger.]—Where a lesser sum has been tendered, even though after time, and retained in discharge of a larger sum, which in default of payment of the lesser sum would have become due, the receiver cannot retain such sum otherwise than as the discharge. Such larger sum is of the nature of a penalty, and the court is at liberty to grant any equitable relief from such payment as it may think fit. Johnson v. Colquhoun, 32 W. R. 124.

Exercise of Right of Election to Rescind.]—The exercise of a right of election to rescind a building agreement must be signified in an unqualified manner and within a reasonable time, or, at all events, not after the other party to the agreement has gone to expense in the belief of the right of election not being exercised. Marsden v. Simbell, 43 L. T. 126; 28 W. R. 952.

Mistaken Claim to Rescind, Effect of.]—A mistaken claim by one of the parties to such an agreement to rescind it, does not ipso facto operate to rescind the agreement, unless the other party claims a rescission on the ground of the mistaken claim. Ib.

If one of the parties to such an agreement himself rescinds it, he is not entitled to make entry on the premises for the purpose of removing the goods after the date of rescission. Ib.

Mutual Stipulations—Discharge of One Party, whether Discharge of Both.]—Where something is covenanted or agreed to be performed by each of two parties at the same time, he who was ready and offered to perform his part, but was discharged by the other, may maintain an action against the other for not performing his part. Jones v. Barkley, 2 Dougl. 684.

Where Third Party has Acquired an Interest.]—Where an agreement is made between two parties, by virtue of which a third party acquires such an interest as would entitle him, after the death of one of the contracting parties, to sue as plaintiff in a court of equity, the contracting parties are not necessarily prevented from altering or rescinding the contract. Hill v. Commee, 1 Beav. 540. Affirmed, 5 Myl & C. 250; 9 L. J., Ch. 54; 4 Jur. 165.

Mutual Consent.]—B., being about to erect seats for viewing a public funeral, entered into an agreement with A., a foreign agent, to make the scheme known abroad and dispose of tickets for the seats. A. was to be paid for his work and expenses by a percentage on the tickets which he sold. After he had incurred expenses, but before he had sold any tickets, B. desired him not to dispose of them, as he would sell them himself. A. accordingly sent all applicants for the tickets to him, and after the funeral delivered to B. a bill for work done and expenses incurred. B. paid the expenses, but refused to pay for the work:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the original contract was not rescinded by mutual consent, and whether there was not a new implied contract that A. should be paid for the work actually done, as upon a quantum meruit. De Bernardy v. Harding, 8 Ex. 822; 1 C. L. R. 884; 22 L. J., Ex. 340; 1 W. R. 415.

A rescission of a contract can only be by mutual consent, and any expression of wish to rescind uttered by one party, and not communi-cited to the other, is immaterial. Heinekey v. Earle, 8 El. & Bl. 410; 28 L. J., Q. B. 79; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 848; 6 W. R. 687—Ex. Ch.

Two persons, in 1799, sign and give to each other papers by which each charges his real and personal estate with 1,000*l.* in favour of the other if he should survive him, each paper expressly referring to the other as its inducement. The parties never met afterwards; but, many years afterwards, a correspondence took place between them, in which each expressed a wish to abandon the agreement, and one of them sent back to the other his paper. Shortly afterwards both died:—Held, that the estate of the survivor had no purely equitable claim against that of the other, and, the legal claim being doubtful, the bill was retained for twelve months, with liberty to bring an action. Ryan v. Daniel, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 60.

Quære, whether he had a legal claim, and whether, if legal originally, it was not legally cancelled. Ib.

—— Proof.]—A rescission of an agreement requires proof of an actual agreement to rescind. Rockcliffe v. Pearce, 1 F. & F. 300.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff was possessed of a house for the residue of a term of six years, and of goods and furniture therein, and that the plaintiff agreed to assign the lease of the house to the defendant at a certain price, and the furniture at a valuation, possession to be delivered at a certain day; and that she was ready and willing to assign her interest in the house, and to deliver up possession of the goods at a fair appraisement. It was proved at the trial that a great part of the house and furniture were destroyed by fire shortly after the agreement, and before the time of its completion. The agreement provided that either party making default should pay to the other 500*l.* as liquidated damages. After making the agreement, but before the day for its completion arrived, the parties agreed, by an indorsement on the former agreement, to enlarge the time for its performance for a few days:—Held, that this amounted to a fresh agreement. Bacon v. Simpson, 3 M. & W. 78; M. & H. 309; 7 L. J., Ex. 34.

A waiver of a stipulation in an agreement must, to be effectual, be made intentionally, and with knowledge of the circumstances. Darnley (Earl) v. London, Chatham, and Dover Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 2 H. L. 43; 16 L. T. 217; 15 W. R. 817.

Where a written agreement exists, and one of the parties sets up an arrangement of a different nature, alleging conduct on the other side amounting to a substitution of this arrangement for the written agreement, he must clearly show, not merely his own understanding as to the new terms of arrangement, but that the other party had the same understanding. Ib.

A contract in writing was made for the sale of goods above 10*l.* in value, to be delivered at a future time. Before the time for delivery arrived the parties made a parol agreement extending the time:—Held, that the parol agreement, being invalid under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 17), did not effect an implied rescission of the former contract. Noble v. Ward, 4 H. & C. 149; 36 L. J., Ex. 91; L. R. 2 Ex. 135; 15 L. T. 672; 15 W. R. 520—Ex. Ch.

Leave and licence cannot be pleaded to a breach of contract; but the defendant must show an exoneration or discharge. Dobson v. Espie, 2 H. & N. 79; 26 L. J., Ex. 240; 3 Jur. (N S.) 470; 5 W. R. 560.

A plea, in an action on a contract to do several things, that the contract was rescinded before breach, even although the breach laid in the declaration is general, is to be construed as meaning that the rescission was before any breach, and, therefore, if this is not proved, the plea fails in toto, and there is no necessity for a new assignment. Burgess v. De Lane, 27 L. J., Ex. 154.

A valid contract cannot be waived unless both parties assent, at the same time, to the proposal to put an end to it. Whittaker v. Fox, 13 L. T., 588; 14 W. R. 192.

A contract cannot be rescinded by one party for the default of the other, unless both can be put in statu quo, as before the contract. Hunt v. Silk, 5 East, 449; 2 Smith, 15; 7 R. R. 739.

When Impossible.]—A contract which cannot be rescinded in toto, cannot be rescinded at all; but the party complaining of the non-performance of the fraud must resort to an action for damages. Sheffield Silver Nickel and Plated Co. v. Unwin, 46 L. J., Q. B. 299; 2 Q. B. D. 214; 36 L. T. 246; 25 W. R. 493

A defendant entered into an agreement in writing with the plaintiff, by which he was to board and lodge with the plaintiff at a certain weekly sum, and the plaintiff agreed to take in payment for the board and lodging certain furniture of the defendant in the plaintiff's house. The furniture having afterwards, and before the plaintiff had appropriated it, been taken in execution for a debt of the defendant to another party:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for board and lodging generally, as if the special contract had never existed. Keys v. Harwood, 2 C. B. 905; 15 L. J., C. P. 207.

By Parol.]—Agreement in writing may be discharged by parol, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Goman v. Salisbury, 1 Vern. 240.

Recovery back of Money Paid.]—An action for money had and received lies when a payment has been made on a contract which is put an end to. Towers v. Barrett, 1 Term Rep. 133. S. P., Weston v. Downes, 1 Dougl. 23; Davis v. Street, 1 Car. & P. 18.

But if it continues open, the plaintiff can only recover damages, and then he must state the special contract and the breach of it. Ib.

Where the master and part owner of a vessel agreed to purchase the remaining moiety of his partner, and having paid the purchase-money, and received the title-deeds, which he deposited with a third person as a security, required entire possession of the ship, but his partner afterwards refused to execute a bill of sale or refund the money:—Held, that an action would not lie to recover the purchase-money, as the parties could not be restored to their original situation. Reed v. Blandford, 2 Y. & J. 278.

Where some act is to be done by each party under a special agreement, and the defendant, by his neglect, prevents the plaintiff from carrying the contract into execution, the plaintiff may recover back any money paid under it. Giles v. Edwards, 7 Term Rep. 181; 4 R. R. 414.

B. engaged to let A. land on building leases, and to lend him 4,000*l.* to assist him in the erection of twenty houses, the money to be repaid by June, 1823. A. agreed to build the houses, to convey them as security for the loan, and repay the money. When six houses were built, and 1,168*l.* had been advanced, B. requested A. not to go on with the other fourteen houses; A. desisted: —Held, that, after June, 1828, B. might recover the 1,168*l.* as money lent; and that it was not necessary to sue on the agreement, which was rescinded by consent. James v. Cotton, 7 Bing. 266; 5 M. & P. 26.

Discharge in Country of Debtor's Domicil.]—The discharge of a debt or liability under a contract by the law of a foreign country, not being the country where the contract was made or is to be performed, is no answer to an action upon the contract in England, even though the discharge has been obtained in the country of the debtor's domicil. Gibbs v. Société Industrielle des Métaux, 59 L. J., Q. B. 519; 25 Q. B. D. 399; 63 L. T. 503—C. A.

2. ALTERATION.

By Agent—Building Contracts.]—A. built a house on land of B. under a written agreement with him containing provisions for payment, on certificates of B.'s architect, and stipulations as to orders for extras. The contract, while in the custody of the architect, was altered in a material particular relating to such orders. The main work only having been certified and paid for, A. sued B. upon a quantum meruit to obtain payment for certain extra work done, and he put the written agreement in evidence:—Held, that the alteration by the architect must be treated as if made by B. himself; but, nevertheless, that A. could not recover, because the work, having been done on land, no contract could be implied by law from the mere retention of that which could not be returned: and it appeared that a special written bargain had been made, the terms of which, however, could not be proved by A., as the agreement containing them having been vitiated by a material alteration, was inadmissible, although sufficiently existing in specie to be capable of showing that an express contract had been entered into under which the work was done. Pattison v. Luckley, 44 L. J., Ex. 180; L. R. 10 Ex. 330; 33 L. T. 360.

By one Party—Assent.]—An alteration in a material part of a written contract, without the consent of both parties, is a material alteration, which avoids the contract, although it may not have altered the duty of the party sought to be charged. Mollett v. Wackerbarth, 5 C. B. 181; 17 L. J., C. P. 47.

A material alteration in a sold note made by a buyer without the knowledge or consent of the seller, prevents the former from suing on the contract, notwithstanding the duty of the latter may not be varied by the alteration. Ib.

C. & Co. and H. & Co. were merchants at Calcutta. H. & Co. sold to C. & Co. a quantity of indigo, through a broker, who drew up a sold note, addressed to H. & Co., and submitted it to H. for his approval, when he having objected to a particular word remaining, the broker took the note to C., and informed him of H.'s objection. C. struck his pen through the word objected to by H., placing his initials over that erasure, and returned it to the broker, who thereupon delivered it, so altered, to H. & Co. The broker delivered to C. & Co., on the following day, a bought note, which differed in certain material terms from the sold note. In an action brought by H. & Co. against C. & Co. for non-performance of the contract contained in the sold note:—Held, that the transaction was one of bought and sold notes, and that the circumstances attending C.'s alteration of the sold note, and affixing his initials, were not sufficient to make that note alone a binding contract; and that, there being a material variation in the terms of the bought note with the sold note, they together did not constitute a binding contract. Cowie v. Remfry, 5 Moore P. C. 232; 3 Moore Ind. App. 448; 10 Jur. 789.

—— Not Insisted on.]—An alteration made by the owner of a house in the terms of an agreement for a lease thereof, but not insisted on by him:—Held, not to vitiate the contract. Jolliffe v. Blumberg, 18 W. R. 784.

After Breach.]—An alteration of a written agreement, even after breach, after delivery to the party suing upon it, renders the agreement void. Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778; 12 L. J., Ex. 467.

Plea, to a guarantee, that, after it had been signed and delivered to the plaintiff, and whilst in his hands, it was, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, altered in a material particular by some person to the defendant unknown, and its nature and effect materially changed, by such unknown person affixing a seal by or near to the signature of the defendant, so as to make it purport to be sealed by the defendant, and to be the deed of the defendant; by reason of which alteration the guarantee became void. At the trial it was proved that the guarantee when signed had no seal to it, but, when produced in evidence by the plaintiff, it had a waifer affixed to it before the signature of the defendant:—Held, that the plea was proved, and that it purported to be the deed of the defendant. Ib. Affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, 13 M. & W. 343; 13 L. J., Ex. 276.

Held, also, that the plea was a good defence to the action. Ib.

By Broker—Margin of Charterparty.]—A merchant at Liverpool entered into a charterparty on the following terms with the owner of a vessel:—"It is mutually agreed with the owner of the good ship 'Zwaan,' now at Amsterdam, and to sail from thence for Liverpool on or before the 15th of March next, of the one part, and the charterer, of the other part, that the ship, being tight, staunch and strong, shall with all convenient speed be made ready," as in the usual printed form of charterparty. The exception was as follows: "Restrictions of princes and rulers, the dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation, the act of God, fire, pirates, and enemies throughout this charterparty always excepted." After signing the charter, the broker who had acted for the owner wrote in the margin, to come in after the words "March next," "wind and weather permitting, with cargo or in ballast, for ship's benefit." He then took the charter to the charterer, and told him that he had made the note in the margin, which he said did not affect it. The charterer said that the note altered the matter, and he did not know that he would then accept the charter; and he ultimately refused to do so. The ship did not sail from Amsterdam, in consequence of what was admitted to be "the act of God":—Held, that the charter-party was avoided by the alteration so made in the margin. Crookewit v. Fletcher, 1 H. & N. 893; 26 L. J., Ex. 153; 5 W. R. 348.

Bank Note—Erasure of Number.]—In an action against the Bank of England for the non-payment of notes payable to bearer which had been regularly issued by the bank, it appeared that the notes had been bonâ fide purchased by the plaintiff for value, but that before the plaintiff took them the notes had been altered by erasing the numbers upon them, and substituting others, with the object of preventing the notes from being traced, as payment had been stopped and a notice issued specifying their numbers:—Held, that although the alteration did not vary the contract, it was material in the sense of altering the notes in an essential part, and that therefore the notes were vitiated, so that the plaintiff could not recover in his action on them against the bank. Suffell v. Bank of England, 51 L. J., Q. B. 401; 9 Q. B. D. 555; 47 L. T. 146; 30 W. R. 932; 46 J. P. 500—C. A.

Schedule added after Execution of Agreement.]—Where the subject-matter of an agreement of hiring was expressed to be "furniture, &c., &c., mentioned in the schedule hereto," and the schedule was added by the plaintiff after execution:—Held, that this did not vitiate the agreement. Harris v. Tenpany, 1 Cab. & E. 65.

By Court.]—Court of equity has no power to alter the contracts of parties from an eventual change not contemplated at the time. Revell v. Hussey, 2 Ball & B. 288; 12 R. R. 87.

3. Repudiation and Non-performance.

Repudiation.]—An absolute unconditional renunciation of a contract before time of performance amounts to a breach at the election of the promisee. Wilkinson v. Verity, 40 L. J., C. P. 141; L. R. 6 C. P. 206; 24 L. T. 32; 19 W. R. 604. S. P., Frost v. Knight, 41 L. J., Ex. 78; L. R. 7 Ex. 111; 26 L. T. 77; 20 W. R. 471—Ex. Ch.

The repudiation of a contract upon insufficient grounds will be good, if at the time there existed sufficient grounds of which the person repudiating was not aware. London and Mediterranean Bank, In re, Wright's Case, 41 L. J., Ch. 1; L. R. 7 Ch. 55; 25 L. T. 471; 20 W. R. 45.

When the defendant has contracted to sell goods to be delivered at various times, if he repudiates at the date of an early delivery, the plaintiff may treat that as a breach of the whole contract and sue accordingly. And the measure of damages will be the differences between the contract price and the prices at the different times of intended delivery. Roper v. Johnson, 42 L. J., C. P. 65; L. R. 8 C. P. 167; 28 L. T. 296; 21 W. R. 384.

Of Executory Contract.]—When two parties enter into a contract which is to be performed at a future day, and, before the day for performance arrives, one of them gives the other notice that he does not hold himself bound by it, the other is at liberty to treat such renunciation as a breach of the contract, without waiting the arrival of the day fixed for its performance. Danube and Black Sea Railway and Kustendjie Harbour Co. v. Xenos, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 152; 31 L. J., C. P. 84; 5 L. T. 527. Affirmed, on appeal, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 825; 31 L. J., C. P. 284; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 439; 10 W. R. 320—Ex. Ch.

When there is an executory contract for the manufacturing and supply of goods from time to time, to be paid for after delivery, if the purchaser, having accepted and paid for a portion of the goods contracted for, gives notice to the vendor not to manufacture any more, as he has no occasion for them, and will not accept or pay for them, the vendor having been desirous and able to complete the contract, he may, without manufacturing and tendering the rest of the goods, maintain an action against the purchaser for breach of the contract. Cort v. Ambergate Ry., 17 Q. B. 127; 20 L. J., Q. B. 460; 15 Jur. 877.

A declaration stated an executory contract, whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant to buy, on arrival by a certain ship, one-third of a cargo of tea, to be consigned to the plaintiff, and delivered in Belfast, from the ship to the defendant, at a certain price payable after delivery. It averred that the ship arrived at Belfast with a cargo of tea, consigned to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver the cargo in Belfast to the defendant according to the agreement; yet the defendant before the arrival of the ship with the cargo at Belfast, discharged the plaintiff from delivering the cargo, and thenceforth refused to perform the agreement:—Held, first, that the defendant was not bound before the arrival of the cargo to give the plaintiff a distinct answer whether he would fulfil the contract or not. Ripley v. M'Clure, 4 Ex. 345; 18 L. J., Ex. 419.

Held, secondly, that a refusal by the defendant, before the arrival of the cargo, to perform the contract, was not a breach of it; but that such refusal unretracted, down to and inclusive of the time when the defendant was bound to receive the cargo, was evidence of a continuing refusal, and a waiver of the condition precedent of delivery, and consequently the defendant was liable for the breach of contract. Ib.

See also Sale of Goods.

Before Time for Performance—Election.]—In a lease of premises for a term of twenty-one years determinable by the lessee at the end of the first four years by a six months' notice, the lessor covenanted to rebuild the premises after the expiration of the first four years of the term upon a six months' notice from the lessee requiring him to do so. Before the expiration of the first four years of the term the lessor on many occasions told the lessee that he would be unable to procure the money for rebuilding the premises. The lessee, in consequence of this statement by the lessor, gave the requisite notice, under the provisions of the lease, to determine the term at the end of the first four years. After the determination of the lease he continued to occupy the premises for some months, paying rent to the lessor's mortgagees, on the chance, as he stated, of the lessor's procuring the money to rebuild. The lessor being, however, unable to rebuild the premises, the lessee claimed damages against him for breach of the contract to do so:—Held, that the covenant to rebuild never having been actually broken, because the lessee had before the time for its performance determined the term, he could not recover unless there had been a breach of contract by anticipation within the doctrine of Hochster v. De la Tour (2 El. & Bl. 678) and Frost v. Knight (L. R. 7 Ex. 111), by reason of a wrongful repudiation of his covenant by the lessor before the time for performance; that what had been said by the lessor did not under the circumstances of the case amount to such a repudiation; and that, if it did, such repudiation before the time of performance arrived would not amount to a breach of the contract, unless the lessee elected to treat it as putting an end to the contract except for the purposes of an action for such breach, and the lessee had not under the circumstances so elected; and that he could not therefore maintain his claim. Quære, whether the doctrine of Hochster v. De la Tour (2 El. & Bl. 678), can be applicable to the case of a lease or other contract containing various stipulations where the whole contract cannot be treated as put an end to upon the wrongful repudiation of one of the stipulations of the contract by the promisor. Johnstone v. Milling, 55 L. J., Q. B. 162; 16 Q. B. D. 460; 54 L. T. 629; 34 W. R. 238; 50 J. P. 694—C. A.

By Tenant—Action for Rent—Fitness of House for Occupation.]—One who has agreed to take a furnished house is not bound to fulfil his contract if the house be infected with measles at the date fixed for the commencement of the tenancy. If in such a case the lessor sue for rent, he must show, to entitle him to succeed, that the house was in fact in a state fit for human occupation at the date fixed for the commencement of the term, notwithstanding a previous intimation by the tenant of his intention to repudiate the contract. Bird v. Greville (Lord), 1 Cab. & E. 317.

Non-performance of Executory Contract.]—An agreement was executed between a banker of Paris and the directors of a company formed to take over his business. No day was fixed for the completion of the transfer of the business and offices. In fact, the transfer was never carried out; but the company was started, and it transacted business, and the banker admitted a committee of its directors to his offices, which he vacated, removing his clerks to a higher storey in the same building, where he continued to transact his business pending the completion of the contract, which he was always anxious and willing to effect by handing over books and executing legal transfers. The contract never was completed by the default of the company. The company came to a winding-up. The banker claimed the full amount of the purchase-money for which he had contracted:—Held, that the contract was in fieri, and as it was owing to the fault of the company that it never became fully executed, an inquiry was directed before the chief clerk as to the damages sustained by the banker through the breach of the contract, he to be allowed to prove for the amount of the damages so ascertained. Lafitte & Co. v. Lafitte, 42 L. J., Ch. 716; 29 L. T. 80; 21 W. R. 750—H. L.

Declaration on an agreement to employ the plaintiff as a courier from a day subsequent to the day of the writ. Averment, that the plaintiff from the time of the agreement to the refusal after mentioned was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. Breach, that before the day for the commencement of the employment the defendant refused to perform the agreement and discharged the plaintiff from performing it, and wrongfully and wholly put an end to the agreement:—Held, that a party to an executory agreement may, before the time for executing it, break the agreement, either by disabling himself from fulfilling it, or by renouncing the contract; and that an action will lie for such breach before the time for the fulfilment of the agreement: and that it sufficiently appeared on the face of this declaration that there was on the part of the defendant not merely an intention to break the contract, of which intention he might repent, but a renunciation communicated to the plaintiff, on which he was entitled to act. Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678; 22 L. J., Q. B. 455; 17 Jur. 972; 1 W. R. 469.

A. stipulated that he would as soon as he should become possessed of a public-house, execute a lease thereof to B. from the 21st December, 1825, for fourteen or twenty-one years. At the time of the agreement, the house was upon lease, which would not expire till Midsummer, 1827; the legal estate being in trustees, first, to pay debts, and then to pay an annuity, and subject thereto to the use of A. if he attained twenty-four. In June, 1825, after A. had attained twenty-four, but before the outstanding lease had expired, he and the trustees joined in a lease to C. for twenty-three years:—Held, that A. having thereby put it out of his power, so long as the latter lease of 1824 subsisted, to grant any lease to B., had committed a breach of his agreement, and was liable to an action for a breach of that agreement, although the first lease had not expired. Ford v. Tiley, 6 B. & C. 325; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 169; 30 R. R. 339.

—— Grant for Life.]—If a parson contracts that a party shall occupy the parsonage lands during a certain term of years, his resignation of the living is a breach of his contract. Price v. Williams, 1 Gale, 362; 1 M. & W. 6; 1 Tyr. & G. 197; 5 L. J., Ex. 129.

S. was lord of a manor, and the office of steward of the manor was in his gift. The former steward resigned his office upon the lord agreeing to execute a bond to him for an annuity for his life. The defendant, in consideration of S. permitting the defendant to hold the office at the will of S., promised to pay out of the fees of the office the annuity to the former steward during his life, and to indemnify S. therefrom, so long as the defendant should execute the office, either by himself or deputy to be approved of by S. S. appointed the defendant accordingly, and afterwards appointed him by deed for life; S. died, and the defendant refusing to pay the annuity to the former steward, on the ground that his promise only extended to his continuing in office at the will of S., which had been terminated by the grant for life; he was thereupon sued by the executors of S.:—Held liable. Mattock v. Kinglake, 1 P. & D. 46; 8 A. & E. 795; 1 W. W. & H. 667; 8 L. J., Q. B. 56.

Place for Performance—Demand.]—Where a condition is to be performed—e.g. where money is to be paid—at a particular place, there is no default by the person liable, unless the person entitled to require performance of the condition

—e.g. payment of the money—has required it at the place appointed. Thorn v. City Rice Mills, 58 L. J., Ch. 297 ; 40 Ch. D. 357 ; 60 L. T. 359 ; 37 W. R. 398.

Partial Non-performance.]—Where, by the terms of an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, it was agreed that each of them was to perform certain acts, a partial failure of performance by the plaintiff will not authorise the defendant to rescind the contract. Franklin v. Miller, 4 A. & E. 599.

The maxim in chancery that he who seeks equity must do equity, when applied to a case of partial non-performance of an agreement, includes the rule at law which, in actions for damages upon contracts, discriminates between a whole or only a partial failure of performance ; the breach being a bar when it goes to the whole, but no bar to a partial failure. In which case the party injured is entitled by a cross action to compensation. Oxford v. Provand, L. R. 1 P. C. 135 ; 5 Moore P. C. (N.S.) 150.

Seller prevented from fulfilling Condition by Buyer.]—If, in the case of a contract of sale and delivery, which makes acceptance of the thing sold and payment of the price conditional on a certain thing being done by the seller, the buyer prevents the possibility of the seller fulfilling the condition, the contract is to be taken as satisfied. By a written contract A. agreed to buy of B. a digging machine, if it fulfilled certain conditions, one of which was that it should be capable of excavating a given quantity of clay in a fixed time on a "properly opened-up face" at the C. railway cutting. The machine failed at another cutting to excavate the required quantity, and on its being removed to the C. cutting and tried at a face not a "properly opened-up one," and breaking down, after a few days' work, A. refused to give it any further trial or to pay the price of the machine :—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that B. was entitled to a decree against A. for payment of the price of the machine. Mackay v. Dick, 6 App. Cas. 251 ; 29 W. R. 541 —H. L. (Sc.)

Goods to be delivered by Instalments—Failure as to One.]—The defendant in October, 1879, sold to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff bought of the defendant, 2,000 tons of pig iron at 42*s.* a ton, to be delivered to the plaintiff free on board at the maker's wharf, at Middlesborough, "in November, 1879, or equally over November, December, and January next, at 6*d.* per ton extra." The plaintiff failed to take delivery of any of the iron in November, but claimed to have delivery of one-third of the iron in December and one-third in January. The defendant refused to deliver these two-thirds, and gave notice that he considered that the contract was cancelled by the plaintiff's breach to take any iron in November : —Held, in an action by the plaintiff for damages, in respect of the defendant's refusal (Brett, L.J., dissenting), that by the plaintiff's failure to take one-third of the iron in November, the defendant was justified in refusing to deliver the other two-thirds afterwards. The decision in Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N. 19) held to be right by Bramwell and Baggallay, L. JJ., and wrong by Brett, L. J. Honck v. Muller, 50 L. J., Q. B. 529 ; 7 Q. B. D. 92 ; 45 L. T. 202 ; 29 W. R. 830 —C. A.

Successive Deliveries—Non-Payment for one Delivery.]—See supra, col. 126.

Excuse for Non-Performance.]—The plaintiff contracted with a wife (as her husband's agent) that she should play the piano at a concert to be given by the plaintiff on a specified day. She was, on that day, unable to perform through illness. The contract contained no express terms as to what was to be done in case of her being too ill to perform. In an action against the husband for breach of this contract :—Held, that his wife's illness and consequent incapacity excused him, inasmuch as the contract was in its nature not absolute, but conditional upon her being well enough to perform. Robinson v. Davison, 40 L. J., Ex. 172 ; L. R. 6 Ex. 269 ; 24 L. T. 755 ; 19 W. R. 1036.

The plaintiffs contracted to erect machinery on the defendant's premises at specific prices for particular portions, and to keep it in repair for two years, the price to be paid upon the completion of the whole. After some portions of the work had been finished, and others were in the course of completion, the premises with all the machinery and materials thereon were destroyed by an accidental fire :—Held, that both parties were excused from the further performance of the contract, but that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in respect of those portions of the work which had been completed, whether the materials used had become the property of the defendant or not. Appleby v. Meyers, 36 L. J., C. P. 331 ; L. R. 2 C. P. 651 ; 16 L. T. 669—Ex. Ch. Reversing 14 W. R. 835.

And see IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS, supra.

—— Mistake as to Terms—Rectification.]—A company guaranteed a firm against loss in respect of their gross annual returns. To an action to recover the annual subscriptions in respect of the guarantee, the defendant pleaded, that by certain printed rules and regulations delivered to him as the rules and regulations under and subject to which the agreement for guarantee was to be made, the amount of subscription payable by the assured was to be increased at a certain specified percentage rate, according to the amount of admitted claims in the previous year, and that the defendant entered into the contract upon the basis and faith of such rules and regulations ; but that the contract did not contain them, and other and much less advantageous rules, with other rates were substituted, of which the defendant had no notice : —Held, that the plea was bad, as the facts stated would not relieve the defendant from the performance of the contract, but would only entitle him to have it reformed. Solvency Mutual Guarantee Co. v. Freeman, 7 H. & N. 17 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 197.

Breach—Music-hall Artiste—Construction.]—The plaintiff K., a music-hall artiste, entered into contracts with each of the three defendant companies by which she agreed to perform for ten weeks certain, commencing at a certain date, every evening at the time notified by the management, in "her usual entertainment as mimic" in two of the contracts, "as singer and mimic" in the other, at a salary of 8*l.* per week in respect of each hall, subject to the following conditions (inter alia)—namely, "that the said artiste shall not perform before nor during this engagement at any theatre, music-hall, club, concert, or place of entertainment within one mile of the said music-halls respectively." At the end of the contract was this clause: "In the event of the above-named artiste not observing these conditions in every respect, the company shall have the option of cancelling this agreement." During the fulfilment of the engagement she went to a smoking concert at a certain club one Sunday evening within a mile of these music-halls by invitation. Nobody except members and their guests were admitted to this club, and no admission money was paid. At this concert she sang a song and danced for a few minutes. The following night she performed at the halls, but at one of them the manager asked if she had sung at the club, and she replied she had done so. He told her it was against the rules, and that she must not do it again. The following night a letter was handed her cancelling the three engagements, and signed by the manager of the halls. These actions were then brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for wrongful dismissal, and for breach of contract:—Held, that the word "engagement" did not include Sundays, that day in such contracts being a dies non. That the performance was not within the meaning of the word "perform" as contemplated by the parties, for the plaintiff did not use her powers of mimicry. That, although singing was included in one contract, singing before a private audience such as the present case was not a performance. Kelly v. London Pavilion, 77 L. T. 215.

Breach of School Rules by Parent—Right of Schoolmaster to refuse to complete Contract.]—The defendant's son was a pupil at the plaintiff's school, one of the rules of which—the defendant having notice of it—was that no "exeat," or permission to leave the school and remain away for one night, was allowed during Easter Term. During Easter Term the defendant requested that his son might be allowed to come home and remain for the night, which the plaintiff refused to allow; but subsequently, on the defendant repeating the request and sending a servant for the boy, the plaintiff allowed him to go home, writing to the defendant at the same time that he did so on the understanding that the boy returned the same night. On the boy reaching home, the defendant telegraphed to the plaintiff that it was not convenient to send the boy that day, but he could return the next morning, to which the plaintiff telegraphed in reply that unless the defendant's son returned that night he should not receive him back. In consequence of the last telegram the defendant did not send the boy back, and the present action was brought to recover the school fees due on the first day of Easter Term, of which term less than three weeks had expired when the boy left. The defendant paid 13*l.* into court with a denial of liability, and counter-claimed damages for breach of contract by the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff's contract was to board, lodge, and educate the defendant's son for the term on the condition that he should be at liberty to enforce with regard to the boy the rules of the school, or such of them as were known to the defendant; that this condition having been broken by the defendant, the plaintiff had the right to refuse to complete his contract, and was consequently entitled to succeed in this action both on claim and counter-claim. Price v. Wilkins, 58 L. T. 680.

Leave and Licence.]—Leave and licence cannot be pleaded to a breach of contract; but the defendant must show an exoneration or a discharge. Dobson v. Espie, 2 H. & N. 79; 26 L. J., Ex. 240; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 470; 5 W. R. 560.

Revival of Creditors' Rights on Non-performance.]—A. obtained a judgment against B. for 563*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*, but agreed to take 200*l.* in discharge, B. giving three acceptances for that sum, and depositing some waggons as security. If none of the bills were paid at maturity, the judgment to be enforceable against B. The last of the bills would mature in March, 1871. B. subsequently made payments on account of the bills, and another settlement of account took place in March, 1871, when A. claimed 118*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*, as the balance due on B.'s three acceptances, and it was agreed that B. should give his acceptance for that sum in full of all demands under the three acceptances or otherwise, and deposit title deeds as security. B. did not pay the bill for 118*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* at maturity, but tendered the money four days after it had been presented to his bankers, which A. refused, declining also to give up the waggons and title deeds:—Held, that as B. had not performed the terms of the first agreement, A. was remitted to his original right as existing at that time, and was at liberty to enforce the judgment. Barton v. Hobson, 30 L. T. 230.

Renunciation acquiesced in but not acted upon—Withdrawal of.]—The expression of a firm determination on the part of a promiser never to perform his part of the contract, when communicated to the promisee and acted upon by him (whether such determination can properly be termed a breach or not), gives the latter an immediate right of action, and he need not aver conditions precedent of any kind. The mere intimation of an intention of one party to an executory contract not to be bound by it communicated to the other party to the contract, unless final and conclusive in its nature, does not entitle the other party to treat the contract as rescinded. Société Générale de Paris v. Milders, 49 L. T. 55.

Injunction to Restrain.]—A contract for the sale of chattels to the plaintiff contained an express negative stipulation not to sell to any other manufacturer. The court granted an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative stipulation, although the contract was one of which specific performance would not have been granted. Wolverhampton and Walsall Ry. v. L. & N. W. Ry. (L. R. 16 Eq. 433) considered. Donnell v. Bennett, 52 L. J., Ch. 414; 22 Ch. D. 835; 48 L. T. 68; 31 W. R. 316; 47 J. P. 342.

Action for Breach—General Principle.]—The rule of law in respect of breach of contract confines the remedies by action to the contracting parties, and to damages directly and proximately consequential on the act of him who is sued. The exception in the case of master and servant dates from the Statute of Labourers, 25 Edw. 3, and is limited by it. Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216; 22 L. J., Q. B. 463; 17 Jur. 827; 1 W. R. 432.

—— Jurisdiction — Place where Contract

made.]—An order to make certain bets having been transmitted by postal telegraph from the plaintiff without the City of London to the defendant within it, he telegraphed from the City that the order had been obeyed:—Held, that the contract of agency was made in the City, and that an action for the breach of such contract was within the jurisdiction of the Mayor's Court. Cowan v. O'Connor, 57 L. J., Q. B. 401; 20 Q. B. D. 640; 58 L. T. 857; 36 W. R. 895.

Delay — Evidence of New Contract.] — The lapse of twenty years from the time of making a contract, to be performed in futuro, is not of itself evidence of a new contract averred to have been performed, and pleaded as an accord and satisfaction of the original contract. Kirkman v. Siboni, 4 M. & W. 339; 8 L. J., Ex. 304.

A. CONVERSION.

1. PRINCIPLES.

Doctrine in Equity.] — The rule is that whatever ought to have been done shall in equity be looked upon as done; thus money agreed to be laid out in land shall be taken as land, et è converso. Lechmere v. Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211.

In equity, land agreed to be sold shall be taken as money, and money agreed to be laid out in land as land. Best v. Stamford, 1 Salk. 154.

—— Scotch Law.]—The doctrine of constructive conversion appears to be the same in England and Scotland. In both countries the question is one of intention depending on the nature and effect of the directions given. Buchanan v. Angus, 4 Macq. H. L. 374. (And see Annandale (Marquis) v. Annandale (Marchioness), 2 Ves. sen. 381.)

—— Actual Condition, Effect of.]—If an absolute duty is imposed upon trustees to turn an estate into money, whether it has been so turned or not will be immaterial, for in whatever form it was then held, it would be treated for the purpose of succession as if it were money. Ib. See also Basset v. St. Levan, 71 L. T. 718; 43 W. R. 165.

—— Real Estate—Mixed Fund.]—Where a real estate is directed to be sold absolutely, and is blended with personal property, it becomes personalty, and shall go accordingly. Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. C. C. 497.

—— Money—Agreement.]—Money articled to be laid out in land is to be taken as land, even as to collateral heirs. Lingen v. Sowray, 1 P. W. 172; Pre. Ch. 400; Gilb. Exch. Rep. 91; 10 Mod. 39.

Money agreed to be laid out in land shall be taken as land, and go to the heir; and no difference where the money thus agreed to be laid out and settled is deposited in the hands of trustees, and where it remains in the hands of the covenantor. The agreement is binding in both cases, and makes it as land. Lechmere v. Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211.

Charges.]—Money vested in a trustee, to purchase and settle lands in tail, is considered as land, and is liable to any charges which would affect the land if it was purchased and settled. Lismore (Lord), In re, 1 Hog, 177. S.P., Frederick v. Aynscombe, 1 Atk. 392.

Trust for Sale.]—A trust for sale cannot, in equity, convert real into personal estate unless it is absolute and effective. Goodier v. Edmunds, 62 L. J., Ch. 649; [1893] 3 Ch. 455.

—— Unattested Codicil before Wills Act.]—Direction by will to sell real estates, and after the sale to pay certain legacies:—Held, upon the will, not a conversion out and out of the realty so as to give a testator before the Wills Act the right to treat it as personal property, capable of disposition as such. Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481. S. P., Hooper v. Goodwin, 18 Ves. 156.

2. Operation of Doctrine.

a. Imperative and Discretionary Trusts, Distinction of.

Generally.]—To convert real or personal property, as between the real and personal representatives, from the state in which it is found at the death, the character of land or money must, by the trust, covenant, etc., be imperatively and definitively affixed to it: otherwise, if there was an option, there is no equity. The bill by the heir, claiming property as real estate, was dismissed without costs. Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 388. Affirmed 8 Ves. 227. And see Whitty, In re Ir. R. 9 Eq. 41.

The rule, that money directed to be laid out in land shall be considered as land, holds only where the quality of land is imperatively fixed on the money. Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. 184.

Personalty to be invested in Land or Securities.]—Personal estate under marriage articles to be invested in land, or government or other securities. The court, finding it in its original state, considers it as personal; but part having been laid out in land which was settled and afterwards sold, and the produce invested in stock till a proper purchase of land could be found to be settled to the same uses, that was considered as land. Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. 336; 2 R. R. 185.

Power to Invest Fund in Real or Personal Estate—Intention.]—Where discretionary power is given by will to trustees to invest fund in real or personal estate, and it is to be collected from the whole will that it shall be invested in real estate, though never invested, it shall be regarded as real estate. Cowley v. Hartstonge, 1 Dow, 361.

Personalty to be laid out in Land or any other Security, as Trustees think fit and convenient.]—M., by will, devises land to his wife for life, remainder over, with remainder to W. and P. in fee; he leaves 400*l.* to be laid out in the purchase of land or any other security, as his trustees should think fit and convenient, to be settled as his lands devised. The 400*l.* not being laid out in land:—Held, the trustees had no election to consider it as money or land. True construction, to be laid out in land, and on security till a purchaser could be found. Earlom v. Saunders, Amb. 241.

Money to remain at Interest or be laid out in Real Estates.]—Money bequeathed to A. to remain at interest or to be by him laid out in real estates, to go with other estates devised. A., being tenant in tail of the real estates, and being entitled under an assignment of the money from the reversioner, subject to contingent limitations, disposed of the money by will. The court inclined in favour of the disposition, upon the ground that A. might have called for the money, as absolute owner; but it was established, upon the option, to continue it personal estate. Amler v. Amler, 3 Ves. 583.

Money to be invested in Land or other Securities.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to his wife, and appointed her his executrix, with the tuition of his younger children, and to provide for them with regard to their fortunes, and he advised her thus: "As to my son John, I would have 250*l.* a year paid him until a sum of 10,000*l.* can be invested in land or some other securities, which is to be invested in trustees for his use, as to the interest of such money or produce of such lands, for his natural life; and if he marries with consent, etc., that he may make such settlement on such wife, etc., as you may judge proper, and that the remainder may go to such child or children he may have lawfully begotten, but in failure of these to my eldest son Isaac and his heirs for ever." The sum of 10,000*l.* was invested partly in personal securities and partly on mortgage of real estate:—Held, doubtful if the fund had been impressed by the will with the character of real estate. Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & F. 121;

9 Jur. 499. Affirming Cookson v. Reay, 5 Beav. 22.

"Shall and may" be laid out in Land—Intention.]—A proviso was in a settlement of 1,000*l.*, "shall and may" be laid out by the trustees in land. Per curiam, where there is a power to lay out money in land, but the original intention was it should be considered as money, if not vested in land, it shall not be considered as such, or go to the heir. Stamper v. Miller, 3 Atk. 212.

Money to be laid out in Land—Trusts to pay Money.]—3,000*l.* was vested in trustees in trust to pay 2,000*l.* to the eldest son, and 1,000*l.* for the benefit of younger children; and it was agreed that the 3,000*l.* should be laid out in land, and the estate so purchased should be to the same use, etc., and subject to the same conditions which were declared concerning the 3,000*l.*:—Held, that the lands should be taken as money; the laying it out upon real estate being merely to make the fund for the benefit of the children more permanent and secure. Combe v. Combe, 2 Atk. 188.

Fund to Purchase Land to go "as described"—No Description Found.]—A testator, after devising his real estate upon certain limitations, bequeathed all the residue of his property to trustees "to form a trust fund to purchase land to go with the inheritance in a manner described in a paper marked B*." After his death no such paper could be discovered:—Held, that, notwithstanding the non-existence of the paper, there was an imperative trust declared for the conversion of the residuary estate into land which was to go according to the limitations affecting the real estate. Willoughby v. Storer, 22 L. T. 896; 18 W. R. 658.

Land—Power of Sale—Trust to Reinvest in Land, or Government or Real Securities.]—When land is subject to a power of sale, and the power is exercised, it is converted into personalty from the time of the sale, unless the proceeds are reinvested in land, or are stamped with a trust for reinvestment in land. Atwell v. Atwell, 41 L. J., Ch., 23; L. R. 13 Eq. 23.

A trust to reinvest the proceeds in land, or government or real securities, with a direction superadded that these when purchased shall be and enure, and be made liable to the same uses, trusts, estates, limitations, and provisoes, as the land originally settled, does not amount to a trust for reinvestment in land, at least when the limitations of the land originally settled are applicable to personalty as well as realty. Ib.

—— Trust to Re-invest in Realty or Leaseholds — Power of Interim Investment in Personalty.] — Testator devised real estate to trustees, on trust to raise thereout certain sums, and subject thereto to pay the rents to his wife for life, with remainder to T. for life, with remainder to T.'s children living at testator's death—if sons, attaining twenty-one, and if daughters, marrying—absolutely. There was a power to sell the property, with a trust to invest the proceeds in real, leasehold, or copyhold hereditaments, to be held on the same trusts, with power to make an interim investment in personal estate, the income thereof to be applied as if it were rents of hereditaments so to be purchased. The trustees raised the sums directed, and, after the widow's death and during T.'s life, sold the property and invested the proceeds in consols. The proceeds never were invested in land. One of T.'s sons living at the testator's death attained twenty-one, and died in T.'s lifetime intestate:—Held, that his share in the proceeds of sale devolved on his heir on T.'s death. Bird, In re, Pitman v. Pitman, 61 L. J., Ch. 288; [1892] 1 Ch. 279; 66 L. T. 274; 40 W. R. 359.

—— Trust to sell "as soon as Trustees shall see necessary."—One devises land to trustees in fee, in trust to apply the profits until sale for the benefit of all his four children and the survivors and survivor of them equally, and in further trust that as soon as the trustees shall see necessary for the benefit of the children, they should sell the premises, and apply the money for the benefit of his four children, equally to be paid at twenty-one or marriage. A., the eldest of the four children, attained twenty-one and married, and died without issue, intestate, leaving a wife:—Held, the land, being in all events devised to be sold, though the time for sale was left to the executors, was personal estate, and A.'s widow must have a moiety of A.'s share, and the profits of the land, until sale, must go as the money arising upon sale would. Doughty v. Bull, 2 P. W. 320.

—— Trust for Sale—Power to Direct Investment in Land.] — Real estate devised to be sold, and the produce disposed of with the personal, with a power to direct the fund to be laid out in land; no such direction having been given, it was held personal property. Maberly v. Strode, 3 Ves. 451.

Heritable and Movable Estate—Direction to Pay over—Power "if necessary" to Convert.]—A testator conveyed his whole estate, heritable and movable, to trustees, directing them, after the discharge of legacies, to "pay over" the residue to his brother and sister equally, with power to the trustees, "if necessary, to convert the same into money":—Held, that the settlement did not convert the heritable or real into personal or movable estate. Buchanan v. Angus, 4 Macq. H. L. 374.

If the right to sell it is made to depend on the discretion of the trustees, or is to arise only in case of necessity, there is no change in the quality of the property. Ib.

Power to Manage Freeholds so that same might at Discretion be Sold.]—Testatrix, after expressing her intention to dispose of all her real and personal estate as thereinafter mentioned, gave certain legacies, and appointed A. and B. her executors; and gave to them and their heirs all lawful powers and authorities to conduct and manage her freehold estates, so as that the same might, at their discretion, be sold and converted into money, and the net money to form part of her personal estate; and for those and every purpose connected with her property, whether real or personal, she invested them, and the survivor of them, and his heirs, executors, and administrators, with her full authority; and she directed that any undisposed-of surplus moneys should be paid as she should, by any future writing or will, direct:—Held, that the real estate was converted out and out into money, and subjected, in common with the personal estate, to the payment of the testatrix's debts and legacies. Flint v. Warren, 14 Sim. 554; 9 Jur. 420.

Desire that Estate may be sold unless Beneficiaries would rather divide on A. attaining Twenty-one.]—A testator devises real estate to his widow for life, and after her death, to six younger children, with a direction, that if any of these children die under twenty-one, his or her share is to go to the survivors. He then adds, that it is his desire, that, as soon as the youngest survivor shall attain his or her age of twenty-one years, the estate may be sold, and the produce divided amongst the survivors, unless they would rather mutually divide the estate amongst themselves.—Held, by the Lord Chancellor on appeal, that the share of a daughter who attained twenty-one, and died intestate in the lifetime of the widow, was transmissible as part of her personal estate. Parish v. Parish, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 21.

Mixed Fund—Income to A. for Life—Specific Gifts after A.'s Death of Realty included in Fund.]—The testator gave real property, by description, and funded property, and all his furniture, &c., to A. for life, begging, however, that according to the advice of his executors the same might be sold, and when so sold, the residue, after paying all debts and mortgages, to be invested. The income of those several estates, &c., to be given to his sister for life, and after her death the above property to be divided as follows:—To B. for his life only, one-third of the property arising from the sale of certain houses after his death, to be equally divided between his two sons; and one-third of the same property to C. and his daughter: leaving one-third undisposed of. The testator then proceeded to give other specific freeholds, which were included in the direction for sale, to other persons:—Held, that the real and personal estate were made a mixed fund only for the purpose of giving a life estate to A., and, subject thereto, must be applied in the usual order for the payment of debts. Hill v. Twogood, 1 Jur. 704.

Trust to Retain as long as Trustee thinks proper or to Sell.]—Testatrix devised all the residue of her real and personal estate, after payment of her debts, certain legacies, &c., to a trustee, his executors, &c., upon trust, to retain and keep the same in the state it should be in at the time of her death, as long as he should think proper, or to sell and dispose of the whole or such part thereof, as and when he or they from time to time should think expedient, &c.; and in speaking of the trust she used the words: "And for facilitating such sale and sales as are by me hereinbefore authorised to be made of my real and personal estate," &c.:—Held, that the testatrix did not intend an absolute conversion of the real property into personalty; and that until the trustee exercised the power, the property must be considered to remain in its original state. Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & C. 708; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq., 12; 1 Jur. 958.

Power of Sale—Trust for Division of Proceeds—Shall and May Divide.]—A testator gave to his widow, "for the benefit and advantage of his children," power of selling his W. estate. By a codicil he expressed himself (in effect) thus:—"I do empower my wife to sell all my estates whatsoever, and the money arising from such sale, together with my personal estate, she my said wife shall and may divide and proportion among my said children as she shall think fit and proper, or as she shall direct by will." The estate was neither sold nor appointed by the widow.—Held, that the direction to sell operated as a conversion of the real estate, and that the shares of those children who were dead devolved on their representatives as personalty. Greeveson v. Kirsopp, or Cursop, 2 Keen 653; 6 L. J., Ch. 261.

Power if Trustees think fit to Sell—Proceeds on Trusts of Residuary Personalty—Right of Residuary Legatee.]—Testator, after devising his real estates in strict settlement, subject to the payment of his debts and legacies, empowered his trustees, if they in their discretion should think fit, absolutely to sell his estate at C., and directed them to apply the proceeds on certain trusts therein before declared of his residuary personal estate. The sale of the estate was not required for payment of debts and legacies:—Held, that the power of sale vested in the trustees was discretionary, and that the residuary legatee of the personalty could not compel a sale. Shipp rdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 441; 6 Jur. 658.

"Full Power" to sell after A.'s death—Gift to A. for Life—Trust for Division after A.'s death.]—A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his wife for life; and, after her death, he gave "full power" to his executors, their heirs or assigns, to collect all his property together, and sell the houses and other estates, and convert into money his funded property, and then to pay certain legacies; then the whole of his property was to be divided amongst his twelve first cousins:—Held, on the context, that the real estate ought to be considered as converted into personalty. Burrell v. Baskerfield, 11 Beav. 525; 18 L. J., Ch 422; 13 Jur. 311.

Power to Sell after Death of Life Tenant—Assignment during her Life of Personal Estate — Sale after her Death.] — A testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the rents and profits to his wife during her life, if she should so long continue his widow; and from and after her death or second marriage he declared that they should stand possessed thereof upon trust for his children who should be then living, and their respective heirs, as tenants in common, but subject to a power for the trustees, if they should in their discretion think fit so to do, to sell the real estate: and in the event of such sale the trustees were to pay, divide, and apply the proceeds unto and among his children who should be then living, in equal shares. During the lifetime of the widow one of the children assigned all his personal estate in possession, remainder, or expectancy to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. Upon the widow's death the trustees of the will, in exercise of the power therein contained, sold the real estate:—Held, that the child's share of the proceeds did not pass to the trustees of the creditors' deed. Ibbitson, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 226; 21 L. T. 163.

Trust for Division — Power to Sell for Specified Purpose.]—Devise of real estate to trustees in fee, upon trust, to divide the same among certain persons; and the testator authorised his trustees to sell any part of the estates as they should think best, for the purpose of dividing the same:—Held, that this amounted to a mere permission, and not to an absolute direction to convert, and, in the absence of the exercise of the power, the will did not convert the real estate into personalty. Lucas v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 273; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 945.

Real and Personal Estates—Direction for Sale on A. and B. attaining 21—Division of Proceeds.]—A testator directed his trustees to permit his wife to hold a house for her use to bring up their children, E. and M., and that at their arriving at the age of 21, all his estate, real and personal, should be sold and converted into money, and the proceeds divided between his wife and as many children as she might have at his death:—Held, that it was the intention of the testator, in the event of his wife and any of his children living at his death surviving him, that there should at some time or other be an absolute sale and conversion of his real estate for their benefit. Tily v. Smith, 1 Coll. C. C. 434; 9 Jur. 409.

Held, also, the wife and one of the daughters having survived the testator, that the daughter did not take by devise or descent from him any real estate descendible to her heir-at-law. Ib.

—— Trust for Division—Division on A. attaining Twenty-one.]—The testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to apply the rents, issues, and proceeds for the benefit of his two daughters, with a direction, on the youngest attaining twenty-one, to divide the whole into two equal moieties, of which the testator gave one to his two daughters equally; and directed the other to be placed out on government or real securities, and the dividends thereof to be paid to the daughters for their lives; and, upon their death, the said moneys and effects to be divided amongst their children:—Held, that there was no conversion by the will of the money of the real estate devised to the daughters on the youngest attaining twenty-one. Cornick v. Pearce, 7 Hare, 177: 12 Jur. 997.

—— Power to convert Personal Estate—Limitations of Real and Personal Estate—Intention.]—A testator made a will in the following form:—"Whereas I am seised in fee simple of divers freehold manors, etc., situate, etc.; and of a leasehold estate in, etc., and also of a copyhold estate situate, etc., and also of freehold estates in, etc., and of large sums in the funds of England: Now I do hereby give and devise, after my just debts and funeral expenses and legacies are paid (which I order to be paid out of my personal estate), all my estates in the funds of England, and all my said manors," to three persons successively in tail male in strict settlement; "and for default of such issue, I give and devise the same to my own right heirs for ever." He then gave his trustees a power, with the consent of the person who might be in possession, to lay out his personal estate in the purchase of freeholds, etc., and to settle the same, when purchased, to such uses as were declared of his "manors, etc., and premises, devised by this my will, as shall be then existing, undetermined or capable of taking effect, etc., to, etc., for no other estate, use, trust, or purpose whatsoever":—Held, first, that the power to trustees to convert personalty into realty did not operate as an absolute conversion: but, secondly, that on face of the will, it was the intention of the testator to make the two funds a blended property, and to give them the character of real estate, and to make both properties go together, and to give both to persons expressly designated; and that such intention did not cease with the failure of issue male, under the limitations, so as to make the real estate afterwards go in one way, and the personal estate in another. De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Cas. 524; 16 Jur. 1147. Affirming 15 Sim. 163; 15 L. J., Ch. 305; 10 Jur. 406.

—— Full Power to Sell—Limitations of Real and Personal Estate.]—A testator, by his will, dated in 1850, gave all his property, real and personal, including land in certain colonies, and funds specified by him, in trust for the benefit, in equal portions, to the extent of the annual income of his property, of his brothers E. and C., or the heirs of their bodies lawfully begotten; and the meaning of his will was, that if either brother should die leaving lawfully-begotten heirs of his body, then should the share or portion of such brother descend to such lawfully-begotten heirs; but if one brother should die without lawful issue, then should the whole annual income be paid to the surviving brother; or in case of his death also, to his lawfully-begotten heirs: but in case both brothers should demise without lawfully-begotten heirs, then should the whole property be divided among his nearest of kin. The testator then appointed executors, with power to appoint other executors; also with full power to get in all moneys, and to sell, dispose of, and convert into money all his real and personal estate, either by public auction or private contract, as to his executors should seem meet:—Held, in the court below (6 Jur., N.S., 138; 8 W. R. 176), and on appeal, that the testator's personalty was subject to an executory gift over, on the death of his two brothers without leaving issue living at his death. On appeal held also, reversing the court below, that there was no conversion of the realty; and that the brothers took an estate tail as tenants in common, with cross remainders between them, of such lands as were subject to English law. Greenway v. Greenway, 29 L. J., Ch. 601—L.JJ.

—— Direction to Sell such Part as Trustees think necessary for Paying Debts—Presumption as to Other Parts.]—When a residue comprising leaseholds, freeholds, and other property is devised in strict settlement, and a direction is given to the trustees to sell so much and such part as, in their sole discretion, they may think necessary for the purpose of paying all the testator's debts, a presumption is raised against the conversion of such parts as the trustees may not think necessary to sell for the purpose mentioned, and the court will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees. L. & N. W. Ry., In re, 19 W. R. 220.

Real Estate to be considered Personal "for Purpose of Distribution."]—A testator empowered his trustees to sell his real estate, and directed N., "for the purpose of distribution," to be considered personal estate. He then gave it and his personal estate to certain persons, with an ultimate limitation to "his own right heirs and next of kin, according to the respective natures and qualities thereof." The prior limitations having failed:—Held, that there was no absolute conversion, but that the heir-at-law took the produce of the realty. Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268.

Trust for Sale—Not until Trustees Judge most Beneficial—Power or Trust.]—A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, that a piece of land, part of his real estate, might be absolutely sold as soon as conveniently might be after his death, in such mode as his trustees should decide upon, but in case it should so happen that at the time the complying with his will in that particular would be a sacrifice of property, then it was his will that the piece of land should not be disposed of until such time as his trustees should judge most beneficial for his estate; and when all his children attained the age of twenty-one, then he devised his real and personal estate to his children equally as tenants in common. All the children attained the age of twenty-one. The trustees did not sell the piece of land:—Held, that the trustee had a discretionary power and not a trust for sale, and that there was no constructive conversion of the piece of land; and that, consequently, the heir-at-law, and not the next of kin of a deceased child, was entitled to the share of such child. Glover v. Heelis, 32 L. T. 534: 23 W. R. 677.

A testator gave an annuity to his wife, and he gave and bequeathed to his seven children all his real and personal estate after deducting the said annuity; and after his wife's decease the annuity, together with all rents, dividends and profits arising from his estate, to be divided between his seven children equally; and he directed his executors to sell and convert into money, his furniture, lands, houses, tenements, and other property whenever it should appear to their satisfaction that such sale would be for the benefit of his children, and all money arising from the sale to be invested for the benefit of his children:—Held, that the direction to convert was imperative, and operated from the death of the testator. Raw, In re, Morris v. Griffiths, 53 L. J., Ch. 1051; 26 Ch. D. 601; 51 L. T. 282; 32 W. R. 986.

—— As and when if Trustees think fit.]—Testator directed his trustees to sell his real estate "as and when, if they should, from time to time or at any time, think fit . . . as they should think proper," one-sixth part or share of the real and personal estate, or the produce, was to be paid, transferred and assigned to each of his children:—Held, that a share in the realty of a child who had died intestate passed to his heir-at-law in its unconverted state. A conversion qualified by a discretion not the same as an absolute conversion. Harding v. Trotter, 1 W. R. 502.

Personal Estate—Trust to Invest in Land or Stock—Limitations Appropriate to Real Estate.]—Where personalty is left by will to trustees with limitations applicable only to real estate, and it appears from the whole tenor of the will that such personalty is to pass as realty, a trust may be implied to invest such personalty in the purchase of real estate; but a mere gift of personalty with limitations appropriate to real estate, a great part of which must necessarily fail as applied to personalty, will not justify an implied trust for the conversion of that personalty into realty. Where a testator directed his trustees to invest the proceeds of the sale and conversion of his personal estate "in the purchase of land, or real securities, or stock," and to pay the "interest, dividends, and income of his trust estate" to B. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to W. R. B. for life, with similar limitations in favour of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder over, and the trust estate was not invested in land:—Held, that this did not necessarily lead to the inference that the testator did not intend to give the trustees an option to invest permanently in personal securities. Evans v. Ball, 47 L. T. 165; 30 W. R. 899.

Share of Realty — Settlement — Devise.]—Marriage articles included a policy of assurance, and declared the trusts upon which the policy was to be held in the usual manner. The ultimate trust which took effect, was for the husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns. By the same articles the mother of the intended wife covenanted to devise one-eighth of her lands which were held in fee-simple or a rent-charge, or a gross sum of money equivalent thereto, to the trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to invest and re-invest the same if they should so think fit, and to hold the said shares upon the same trusts as were declared of the policy, or such of them as should be applicable thereto. The mother subsequently devised one-eighth of the lands to her daughter, and directed the trustees to convey it. This was not done. The husband survived the wife:—Held, that there was no conversion of the lands, and that accordingly they passed to the heir-at-law of the wife. Owen v. Owen, [1897]1 Ir. R. 580.

b. Request or Consent, Trust Depending on.

Money to be laid out — With Consent — No Consent given.] — Where money is, on marriage, to be laid out on a purchase, and settled to the uses of the marriage settlement, adding a clause, that the purchase shall be made with the consent of the husband and wife, it makes no difference, though no consent given to any purchase made during the life of the husband and wife, for still the money shall be taken as land. Lechmere v. Carlisle (Earl), 3 P. W. 218. See also Symons v. Rutter, 2 Vern. 227; Pre. Ch. 23.

—— After Request — No Request Made.]—As between representatives money was considered as land, under a direction in a settlement with all convenient speed, after request, to lay it out, though no request was made, upon the construction; all the limitations being adapted to real uses, and other circumstances. Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 129; 7 R. R. 359.

—— On Government Securities or Particular Real Estate—No conversion without Consent.]—Money charged on land by articles of marriage, to be laid out on government security, or freehold estate, in a particular situation, with consent of the wife, to be settled upon trust for her separate use for life, and after her death to be conveyed or assigned to her husband, his heirs, or executors; if she survives, for the issue; if more than one, subject to her appointment by deed or will, equally at twenty-one; their heirs, if land; their executors, if money; if no issue, subject to her appointment; and in default, to his other next of kin, their heirs or executors. After the husband's death, having disposed of his personal estate by will, this property held personal; to the interest of which his widow was entitled for life, with power of appointment by implication in the event of an only child, dead, under age, and intestate, and liberty to apply. Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

—— With Consent and not without—No Conversion.]—By a marriage settlement, the husband covenanted to pay to the trustees 1,200*l.* in trust with the consent of the husband and wife, and not without, to lay it out in the purchase of lands in fee, or for long terms of years, or of copyhold or of customary tenure, and to settle the same on the husband for life, without impeachment of waste, remainder to the wife for life, in bar of dower, remainder to the use of the children of the marriage, as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of all the children of the marriage in tail. The 1,200*l.* was invested in the funds, and so remained, with the acquiescence of husband and wife. There was one child of the marriage. The wife survived her husband, and afterwards died:—Held, that the fund had not ceased to be money. Davies v. Goodhew, 6 Sim. 585.

Money Charged upon Land—Power to lay out with Consent—Release of Jointure.]—A sum of money charged upon lands was, by a marriage settlement, assigned to trustees, to pay the interest to A., the husband, for his life, and after his death to pay the wife a jointure of 200*l.* a year, provided that it should be lawful for A., with the consent of the trustees, in writing, to call in the fund, and lay out and dispose of the same in the purchase of an estate of inheritance or freehold, for a term of at least three lives, or of a lease for a term of years, whereof ninety-nine years shall be unexpired, or otherwise advantageously, which purchase or disposal, when so made, should be settled and vested to the several uses, trusts, intents, and purposes thereinbefore mentioned in respect to the said sums. A portion of the fund was paid to the surviving trustee, who lent it to A., on a release being executed by A. and the wife, and C. their son, and acknowledged by her:—Held, after the death of A., in a suit by B. to replace the trust fund, that the release as to her was inoperative. Smithwick v. Smithwick, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 181.

Money to be laid out with Consent—Power of Interim Investment with Consent—Conversion.]—By settlement 500*l.* was assigned to trustees in trust to lay the same out in land with the consent of the wife, and to pay the rents to the wife for her life, for her separate use, remainder for the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor, in trust to convey the same to such persons and for such estates as the wife should by will or deed appoint, and in default of appointment, in trust for the right heirs of the wife for ever; proviso, that until such purchase should be made, the trustees should invest the money in the public funds, with the consent of the wife, and pay the dividends to the wife for her separate use, and after her death to such persons as the rents of the lands to be purchased would go to, according to the limitations aforesaid, and to pay or transfer the principal sum of 500*l.*, or the stock in which the same should be invested, to such person as, according to the limitations aforesaid, would be entitled to the inheritance of such lands. This 500*l.* was never paid to the trustees, but remained in the hands of the husband at the death of the wife. She having made no appointment, this 500*l.* vested in her heir-at-law (subject to the life interest of the husband), but the heir took it as money, and therefore at her death this interest passed to his personal representative. Russell v. Smythies, 1 Cox, 215.

—— Strict Settlement — Conversion.]—By a marriage settlement a sum of money, part of the fortune of the intended wife, was vested in trustees upon trust to call in the same, and, with the consent in writing of the intended husband and wife, or the survivor of them, to invest the sum in the purchase of real estate in such part of Ireland as the husband and wife should approve of, and it was declared that such lands, and, until the purchase, such sum of money, should be held upon trust, out of the income, to make up any deficiency in the wife's jointure, and, subject thereto, and to certain portions for younger children, in trust for the husband for life, and after his death to the use of or in trust for the issue of the marriage in strict settlement, with ultimate remainder to the right heirs of the husband: and it was provided, that in case the intended husband, who was a minor at the date of the marriage, should refuse to ratify it upon attaining full age, he should forfeit all interest in the money:—Held, that there was a constructive conversion of this sum into real estate. Batteste v. Maunsell, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 314.

Bequest of Personal Estate to be laid out with Consent—Trusts applicable to Realty—Conversion.]—A testator directed his trustees, with the consent of his widow, to invest his personal estate in freehold, leasehold, or copyhold messuages, tenements, or hereditaments, and settle them upon certain trusts which were applicable to realty:—Held, that a conversion into real estate was intended. Hereford v. Ravenhill, 5 Beav. 51; 11 L. J., Ch. 173.

Trust for Sale at Request of A. and B. or Survivor—No Conversion without Request.]—By a marriage settlement freehold estate and some personal estate were conveyed and assigned to trustees, upon trust on the request of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and after the death of either upon the request of the survivor, to sell the estate, and to stand seised and possessed of the estate until sold, and of the purchase money, in case the same should be sold upon trust for the husband for his life, and after his decease upon trust for the wife for her life, and after the death of the survivor of them to convey the estate, unless sold, and assign the personal estate unto the children and grandchildren of the marriage born in the lifetime of the husband and wife, as they or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment unto and amongst the children of the marriage equally. Held, that the estate having been real when settled, it was not meant by the settlement that it should become personal unless the husband and wife or the survivor requested it to be sold; also that the words of request should not be construed as merely intended to enforce on the trustees the obligation of sale, but as inserted for the purpose either of enforcing obligation or giving discretion as the context of the instrument might require. Taylor's Settlement, In re, 9 Hare, 596. And see Rainy v. Ellis, 27 L. T. 463.

Devise of Real and Personal Estate with "consent and approbation" of A. to Sell—Realty not Sold—Gift of Residue of Mixed Fund.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to permit his wife to have the enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits thereof for her life, or otherwise, with her consent and approbation in writing, to sell the real and personal estate, and invest the moneys to arise from the sale of his real and personal estate on Government or real security, and pay the interest to her for life; and after her decease to pay two legacies of 50*l.* each, and divide the residue of the moneys to arise from his real and personal estate between his nephews and nieces living at the death of his wife. The real estate was not sold during the life of the widow:—Held, that the nephews and nieces were entitled to the produce of the real estate. Waddington v. Yates, 15 L. J., Ch. 223; 10 Jur. 241.

3. Application of Doctrine.

a. Sale and Purchase.

i. Contract.

Devise of Land—Subsequent Contract for Sale.]—Land devised, and afterwards contracted to be sold, becomes personal estate. Mayer v. Gowland, Dick. 563.

A testatrix devised a real estate and afterwards sold it. The purchase was not completed until after her death:—Held, that the purchase money belonged to the personal representatives, and not to the devisees of the testatrix, notwithstanding her lien on the estate for the purchase money, and notwithstanding the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 23. Farrar v. Winterton (Earl), 5 Beav. 1; 6 Jur. 204.

Agreement between Claimants to Estate for Sale and Division of Purchase Money—Death of Party before Sale.] — A. and B. had conflicting claims to a freehold estate. A. proposed that the estate should be sold as soon as possible, and the produce divided between them, and that until the sale a receiver should be appointed to divide the rents in the same proportions. This was accepted by B. Before the sale, which was postponed, A. died intestate:—Held, that the property had been converted into personalty, and that A.'s next of kin, and not his heir, were entitled. Hardey v. Hawkshaw, 12 Beav. 552; 14 Jur. 707.

In such cases, the effect of the act is to be considered, and not the intention as affecting the real and personal representatives. Ib.

Land Contracted to be Sold—Purchaser without right to Specific Performance.]—A. contracted to sell an estate. The contract was valid at his death, but the purchaser lost his right to a specific performance by subsequent laches:—Held, that the estate belonged to the next of kin, and not to the heir-at-law. Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 6, n.

—— Parol Contract by Intestate.]—An owner in fee entered into a verbal contract for the sale of the land, and died intestate. After his death, a conveyance was made by the heir to the purchaser, in which the contract was recited, and that administration had been granted to the heir. The heir afterwards brought in his account of the residuary personal estate, in which he included the proceeds of the sale:—Held, that the heir had adopted the contract, and that the land must be considered as converted by the intestate. Frayne v. Taylor, 33 L. J., Ch. 228; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 119; 12 W. R. 287.

—— Parol Contract by Testator—Contract in writing by Residuary Devisee.]—A testator agreed verbally to sell land, and received a deposit. The residuary devisee contracted in writing to sell the land to the same purchaser at the same price, to be paid partly by the deposit:—Held, that the devisee had not adopted his testator's parol contract so as to affect a conversion relating back to the testator's lifetime. Harrison, In re, Perry v. Spencer, 56 L. J., Ch. 341; 34 Ch. D. 214; 56 L. T. 159; 35 W. R. 196.

Contract to Purchase Estate.]—Where a man had agreed to lay out money in land generally, and devised his real estate before the purchase was completed, the money agreed to be laid out was held to pass to the devisee. Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 572.

—— Death of Purchaser—Rescission after.]—A person contracted to purchase real estate, subject to a condition that if he made any requisition which the vendor was unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract. He made several requisitions and died intestate without completing the contract, and after his death the vendor rescinded it on account of his alleged inability to comply with one of the requisitions, which, if not complied with might have given the purchaser a right to compensation, but would not have entitled him to annul the contract:—Held, that the heir-at-law of the purchaser was entitled to have the amount of the purchase money paid to him out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cooke or Cook, 41 L. J., Ch. 306; L. R. 13 Eq. 417; 26 L. T. 180; 20 W. R. 407.

Testator contracts for a particular estate, but dies before the purchase is completed; afterwards, from the state of his affairs, the contract is dissolved; yet the purchase money shall not be sunk into his personal estate, but shall be laid out in other lands to the same uses as he had devised the land contracted for. Whittaker v. Whittaker, 4 Bro. C. C. 31.

—— Contract not Absolute.]—Decree upon the answer admitting a contract, and a letter offering to sell at a valuation for a conveyance on payment of the purchase money into bank by the plaintiff on a certain day: in default of payment the bill to be dismissed with costs. No binding contract until payment. The estate therefore did not pass by a previous devise, but descended to the heir. Gaskarth v. Lowther, 12 Ves. 107; 8 R. R. 310.

Contract to Sell Land — Leaseholds — Subsequent Devise of "all Leasehold Estates."]—Leaseholds were contracted to be sold in 1808, but, the evidence of the vendor's title being defective, it was agreed that evidence of the vendor's title being defective, it was agreed that until the defect was remedied the purchaser should occupy at a rent; and that on remedy thereof and payment of purchase money, the vendor would assign to the purchaser. The vendor in 1812 bequeathed "all his leasehold estates," and died before completion of the purchase:—Held, that the leaseholds did not pass under this bequest. Gould v. Trague, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 116; 7 W. R. 84.

—— Death of Vendor before Completion—Defective Title.]—Testator at the date of his death had contracted to sell certain lands for 3,000*l.* After his death the trustees found that no title could be made to part of the lands, and rescinded the contract. They then put up the lands to which they had a title for sale by auction, and sold them for 2,500*l.* to the same purchaser:—Held, that there was no conversion by the testator's contract of the property comprised therein. Thomas, In re, Thomas v. Howell, 56 L. J., Ch. 9; 34 Ch. D. 166; 55 L. T. 629. See also Lysaght v. Edwards, 45 L. J., Ch. 554; 2 Ch. D. 499; 34 L. T. 787; 24 W. R. 778.

ii. Option to Purchase.

Lease with Option to Purchase—General Devise of Lessor's Realty—Exercise of Option after Testator's Death—Conversion.]—A. makes a lease to B. for seven years, and on the lease is indorsed an agreement that if B. shall, within a limited time, be minded to purchase the inheritance of the premises for 3,000*l.*, A. would convey them to him for that sum. B. assigns to C. the lease and the benefit of this agreement. A. dies, and, by will, gives all his real estate (generally) to D., and all his personal estate to E. and D. equally. Within the limited time, but after the death of A., C. claims the benefit of the agreement from D., who accordingly conveys the premises to C. for 3,000*l.* This sum of 3,000*l.*, when paid, is part of the personal estate of A., and E. is entitled to one moiety of it as such. Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, 167; 1 R. R. 10. S. P., Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. 591. But see Graves, In re, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 357.

—— Landlord and Tenant—Fire Insurance.]—Under the terms of a lease the landlord covenanted to insure, and the tenant had the option to purchase for a fixed sum. Before the time for exercising the option, the demised buildings were burnt, and the landlord received the insurance money. The tenant then exercised his option to purchase, and claimed the insurance money as part of his purchase:—Held, that under the circumstances the tenant had no claim to the insurance money. Edwards v. West, 47 L. J., Ch. 463; 7 Ch. D. 858; 38 L. T. 481; 26 W. R. 507.

There is no conversion of the estate, as between the person giving and the person exercising an option to purchase, from any date earlier than the exercise of the option. Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, 167, considered. Ib.

Lease for Lives Renewable—Option to fine down Rent.]—Where C. made a lease for lives renewable for ever, reserving the yearly rent of 20*l.*, and thereby covenanted that if the lessee, his heirs or assigns, should be minded to fine down the said rent, it should be released on payment of 300*l.*:—Held, that the said sum of 300*l.*, being paid after the death of C., was personalty, and should go not to his heir but to his executor. Crofton, In re, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 204.

Lease with Option of Purchase — Exercise after Lessor's Death.]—Under an agreement to lease real estate, the tenant was to have the option of purchasing the premises at the expiration of the term, or sooner, if the lessor should wish to dispose thereof. The lessor died, and at the expiration of the term the lessee claimed to be entitled to a conveyance, which was executed:—Held, that the realty was converted, and the purchase money belonged to the personal representatives of the lessor. Collingwood v. Row, 26 L. J., Ch. 649; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 785; 5 W. R. 484.

—— Option to Purchase after Death of Lessor — Intestacy.] — The principle of Lawes v. Bennett (1 Cox, 167), that where an option of purchase of real estate given by contract is not exercised until after the death of the creator of the option, the proceeds of the sale form part of his personal estate, applies to the case of an intestacy, and notwithstanding the fact that the option is exercisable only after the death of the creator of such option. Isaacs, In re, Isaacs v. Reginall, 63 L. J., Ch. 815; [1894] 3 Ch. 506; 8 R. 660; 71 L. T. 386; 42 W. R. 685.

—— Specific Devise.]—Where lands let on lease, subject to an election in the lessee to purchase the fee simple, were devised by the specific description, not in general terms, and after the death of the testator the lessees elected to purchase:—Held, that the purchase money did not fall into the residue of the personal estate, but went to the specific devisees of the land. Drant v. Vause, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 580; 11 L. J., Ch. 170; 6 Jur. 313.

A testator devised an estate, N., by his will, the limitations of which he varied by a codicil, both dated prior to the Wills Act, and afterwards he entered into a contract by which he agreed to give, after his death, to A. alone the option of purchasing the estate N., and also another estate W., upon the purchase of which the contract for an option was entered into. By a second codicil, made after the Wills Act, reciting the purchase of the estate W., he devised that estate. A. enforced a sale to him by suit against the devisees of the testator:—Held, that the purchase moneys of estates N. and W. devolved according to the limitations of the will, which would have been applicable to these estates in case there had been no sale. Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & Sm. 722.

Where a testator, after having by his will specifically devised real estate, subsequently made a codicil confirming his will, but not in terms referring to his real estate, and also on the same day (but whether before or after the execution of the codicil did not appear) executed a lease of the real estate so devised, giving the lessee an option to purchase the same, and such option was exercised after the testator's death:—Held, that there was sufficient indication of intention on the part of the testator to take the case out of the rule established by Lawes v. Bennett (1 Cox, 167), and that the proceeds of sale of the real estate went to the specific devisee, and did not form part of the testator's residuary estate. Emuss v. Smith (2 De G. & Sm. 722) followed. Pyle, In re, Pyle v. Pyle, 64 L. J., Ch. 477; [1895] 1 Ch. 724; 13 R. 396; 72 L. T. 327; 43 W. R. 420.

Where, after making a will devising a specific estate and bequeathing the personal residue to other persons, a testator entered into a contract, giving an option of purchase over part of the estate, which option was exercised after the death:—Held, that the property was converted from the date of the exercise of the option, and went to the residuary legatees. Weeding v. Weeding, 1 John. & H. 424.

iii. Statutory Powers.

Purchase under — Death of Testator after Notice given and Price agreed.]—The common council of London being empowered by a local act of parliament to take a freehold house belonging to A. for the purposes of the act, at the expiration of six months after notice given of their intention to take the same, served A. with the required notice in September, 1840. The amount of the purchase-money was afterwards agreed upon, and an abstract of A.'s title was sent to the common council. In April, 1841, he died, having by his will, dated in 1837, devised his real estate to B., and his residuary personal estate to C.:—Held, that the purchase money (which after A.'s death was paid into court under the act) was to be considered, not as part of his real, but as part of his personal, estate, and that all his debts, &c., having been paid, it belonged to his residuary legatee. Hawkins, Ex parte, 13 Sim. 569.

Settled Land.]—Money paid by certain commissioners under act of parliament for land of which A. was seised in fee in remainder, and which money had been invested in 3*l.* per cent. annuities:—Held, to be real not personal estate. Stewart's Trusts, In re, Cramer, Ex parte, 1 Sm. & G. 32; 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063; 1 W. R. 17.

Under the compulsory powers of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, a poor-law union compulsorily took lands, and paid the purchase-money into court. On the petition of the tenant for life, the amount was invested in stock, and the dividends were, under an order of the court, paid to her for life. On her death, intermediate limitations having failed, her heir at law, to whom the ultimate remainder was limited, petitioned the court that the stock might be paid out to him:—Held, that the stock continued real estate, and the money was ordered to be paid to him. Horner's Estate, In re, 5 De G. & S. 483; 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063.

By a marriage settlement freehold estate and some personal estate were conveyed and assigned to trustees, upon trust on the request of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and after the death of either upon the request of the survivor, to sell the estate, and to stand seised and possessed of the estate until sold, and of the purchase money, in case the same should be sold upon trust for the husband for his life, and after his decease upon trust for the wife for her life, and, after the death of the survivor of them, to convey the estate unless sold, and assign the personal estate unto the children and grandchildren of the marriage born in the lifetime of the husband and wife, as they or their survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment, unto and amongst the children of the marriage equally. The estate was taken by the corporation of London under the London Bridge Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 50), and, the price having been fixed by a jury, the purchase money was paid into court under the act,—the trustees of the settlement not making out a satisfactory title:—Held, that in the absence of any conveyance by the trustees, the sale must be deemed to have been effected under the act of parliament only, and therefore that the purchase money was impressed with the character of real estate under the thirty-fifth section of the London Bridge Act; also that if there had been any conversion, it must have been by the conjoint operation of the articles and settlement, and of the act of parliament, but that the settlement and act of parliament could not in this case have any conjoint operation. Taylor's Settlement, In re, 9 Hare, 596.

Stock produced by a real estate under the London Dock Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 47), subject to jointure, considered as real estate, the original character not having been displaced by a complete conversion. Shard v. Shard, 14 Ves. 348.

Land subject by Will to Option of Purchase.]—A testator directed his trustees to offer certain land to his son at a specified price on the death of his widow. The land was purchased by a railway company under its act for more than twice the specified sum:—Held, that the son's right of pre-emption was not affected by the purchase, and the son was entitled to the difference. Cant's Estate, In re, 4 De G. & J. 503; 28 L. J., Ch. 641; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 7 W. R. 624.

Where Owner Incapacitated.]—In the absence of special clauses for that purpose, the effect of a railway act is not to alter the course of devolution of property without the consent of the owner; and, therefore, if a company, by virtue of its act, contract with an incapacitated person for the purchase of lands, the money is to be considered as real, and not as personal, estate. Midland Counties Ry. v. Oswin, 1 Coll. C. C. 80; 3 Railw. Cas. 497; 13 L. J., Ch. 209; 8 Jur. 138.

The Commissioners of Woods and Forests took real estate for public purposes from incapacitated persons. They paid the purchase-money into the Court of Exchequer. That court made an order for its investment at the cost of the commissioners. The stock was afterwards transferred into the Court of Chancery under the 5 Vict. c. 7. Upon an application by the parties who would have been entitled to the real estate:—Held, that they were entitled to a transfer of the stock, and that the costs of the petition and transfer must be paid by the commissioners. Robertson, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 349.

Lands Clauses Act—Character of Purchase-Money under.]—The purchase-money of lands taken under the Lands Clauses Act, when paid into court under the 69th section, is realty; when under the 76th section, it is personalty. Harrop's Estate, In re, 3 Drew. 726; 26 L. J., Ch. 516; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 380; 5 W. R. 449.

—— Purchase of Infant's Real Estate.]—Purchase money paid into court by a railway company under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for land of which an infant is absolutely seised in fee, remains impressed with the character of the real estate, and on the death of the infant descends to his heir-at-law. Kelland v. Fulford, 6 Ch. D. 491; 25 W. R. 506.

Compulsory Powers — Death of Landowner after Agreement as to Price, but not as to quantum of Land to be taken.]—An agreement was entered into between a landowner and a company having compulsory powers to take land, and if the company should make its line, it would pay for such, if any, of the land as it should so take at the rate of 500*l.* per acre; and in consideration of such agreement, the landowner agreed that he would permit the company to take such land under the authority of its act on those terms. The landowner died, and then the company took some of his land:—Held, that the money belonged to his real, and not to his personal, representatives. Walker's Estate, In re, 1 Drew. 508; 22 L. J., Ch. 888; 17 Jur. 706; 1 W. R. 378.

—— Death of Testator after Agreement, but before Completion.]—The owner of an estate, after having devised it to an infant, agreed under compulsion to sell a portion of it to a railway company. The owner having died before the completion of the purchase without having altered his will:—Held, that his executors, and not the devisee, were entitled to the purchase money, and to the compensation for severance; and, secondly, that the railway company was bound to pay the costs of the infant devisee. Manchester and Southport Ry., In re, 19 Beav. 365.

—— Notice to Treat, Effect of.]—Where a notice to treat for the purchase of property was served by a railway company on the owner of such property, and nothing further was done until after the death of the owner, who had specifically devised the property comprised in the notice to treat:—Held, first, that the mere notice to treat served by the company did not constitute a contract by the owner for the sale of the property. Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 426; 30 L. J., Ch. 578; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 595; 4 L. T. 199; 9 W. R. 497.

Held, secondly, that if it did, a bill for specific performance would not lie against the owner; and, therefore, that the notice to treat did not effect a conversion of the property comprised in the notice. Ib.

A public body gave notice to the owner of land of their desire to treat with him under their parliamentary powers for the purchase of it. He offered to take 1,250*l.* for the land, and afterwards died intestate, nothing further having been then done on either side. The purchasers subsequently proceeded with the transaction, and paid the money into court. Upon a question whether the heir-at-law or the administrator of the intestate was entitled to the money:—Held, that as the purchase-money had not been finally ascertained in the lifetime of the intestate, that there was no contract in existence at his death; that there had been no conversion of the land into money in his lifetime; and that the heir-at-law was entitled to the money. Arnold, Ex parte, Battersea Park Acts, In re, 32 Beav. 591; 8 L. T. 623; 11 W. R. 793.

A railway company gave notice to a landlord to treat for the purchase of land. The company was let into possession under a verbal arrangement. The price had not been fixed when the landowner died:—Held, that there was no conversion. Righton v. Righton, 36 L. J., Ch. 61.

—— Valuation.]—W., by will, in 1859, bequeathed leaseholds to his sister A., and the residue of his estate to his sister E., and in 1865 was served with a notice on the part of a railway company to treat for the purchase, under the provisions of its acts, of the leaseholds for the purposes of the railway. Surveyors appointed by W. and the company, but not in writing, settled the value of the leaseholds, and the former verbally agreed to accept the sum named. W. died in February, 1869, the matter remaining in abeyance till April, 1870, when the sale was completed by his executor:—Held, that the notice to treat, followed by the valuation of the surveyors, was, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, a valid contract; that there had been an ademption of the bequest to A.; but that she was entitled to the rents which had accrued between the death of the testator and the completion of the purchase by the company. Watts v. Watts, L. R. 17 Eq. 217.

—— Award as to Value.]—Where a vendor of freehold land died after an award had been made under the compulsory clauses of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and the amount of the award had been paid into court, the personal representative of the vendor was held entitled to the amount so paid in as part of the personal estate of the testator. Wootton, In re, 1 N. R. 193; 7 L. T. 620.

Real Estate taken under Compulsory Powers, Proceeds of—"Moneys" or "Real Estate" of Testator.]—A testator gave to his wife all the residue of his personal estate, including all moneys to which he was entitled under his father's marriage settlement, and declared it was not his intention to make any disposition of his real estate. He was entitled, under his father's marriage settlement, to consols, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, taken under compulsory powers, and paid into court:—Held, that this sum was not included in the moneys bequeathed, but went as real estate to the heir. Skeggs, In re. 11 Jur. (N.S.) 274; 12 L. T. 166; 13 W. R. 512. S. C., on appeal, 2 De G. J. & S. 533; 13 W. R. 567.

Contract for Purchase of Settled Estate with Tenant for Life and Ultimate Owner in Fee.]—A. being tenant for life of real estate, under a marriage settlement, and ultimate owner in fee, subject to intervening interests, contracted to sell the estate to a railway company absolutely. A., by his will, made previous to the contract, had specifically devised this estate, and there was no general devise in the will. No conveyance having been executed to the company, it paid interest upon the money to the tenant for life; and upon his death, and failure of all the intervening interests, the company paid the principal and arrears of interest into court under its special act, the clauses of which correspond with the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that there was no conversion of the real estate; that the specific devise failed; and that the purchase money descended to the heir of A., and the devisees under the will of the heir were entitled. Bagot, In re, 31 L. J., Ch. 772; 6 L. T. 774; 10 W. R. 607.

Settlement to such uses as D. should appoint—Contract for Sale to Railway Company—Power Executed by.]—Under a settlement lands stood limited to such uses as D. should by deed appoint, and subject thereto to the use of D. and the heirs of his body, with remainders over. D. was also absolutely entitled in fee to other lands. A railway company required part both of the settled estate and of the lands to which D. was absolutely entitled. By an agreement, not under seal, made between D. and two of the directors of the company, the parties thereto bound themselves to abide by the determination of the arbitrators and umpire therein named as to purchase money and compensation to be paid. The schedule comprised the lands required by the company, without any distinction as to the titles under which they were held; and a single sum was awarded to D. as the purchase money for the whole thereof. Before any conveyance was executed, D. died:—Held, that the agreement operated in equity as an execution of the power of appointment in the settlement; and that the purchase money was payable to the legal personal representative of D. as part of his personal estate. Dykes, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 337; 20 L. T. 292; 17 W. R. 658.

b. Mortgages.

Power of Sale—Trust of Surplus Produce.]—Mortgage deed containing power of sale, and that surplus of produce shall be paid to mortgagor, his executors, &c., if sale takes place in lifetime of mortgagor, surplus is personal estate; but if after his death, it is real estate, as equity of redemption descends to heir-at-law. Wright v. Rose, 2 Sim. & S. 323; 25 R. R. 209.

Sale after Mortgagor's Death.]—Real estate was conveyed to a trustee, on trust to permit a mortgagor to receive the rents and profits, and, upon payment of the principal and interest of the mortgage debt as therein mentioned, to reconvey the estate to the mortgagor, his heirs and assigns; but if default should be made in such payment, then that the trustee should enter into possession of the premises, and, at his discretion, sell the same, and pay over the residue or surplus (after payment of the debt, interest, and costs) to the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. There was default in payment, but no sale of the estate took place until after the death of the mortgagor, who devised it to the plaintiffs for life, with remainder over in tail:—Held, that there was no conversion, but that the surplus proceeds passed by the devise as real estate. Bourne v. Bourne, 2 Hare, 35; 11 L. J., Ch. 416; 6 Jur. 775.

Sale during Mortgagor's Life—Surplus Paid into Court.]—A mortgagee, in pursuance of a power in his mortgage deed, sold the real estate comprised therein and paid the surplus moneys into court to the credit of the mortgagor. The moneys were not claimed by the mortgagor during her lifetime:—Held, that her administrator was entitled to have the fund in court paid out, although the application was opposed by the heir of the mortgagor, upon the ground that the mortgagor, at the time of executing the mortgage, was not of sound mind, and that an ejectment had been brought by the heir against the purchaser of the property. Smith, In re, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 9 W. R. 799.

Trust of Surplus for Mortgagor, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns.]—In consideration of money lent, real estate was conveyed to the lender, his heirs and assigns, upon trust, in case the principal money and interest should be repaid by a given day for the borrower, his heirs or assigns; but in case default should be made, then upon trusts for sale, and the trusts of the purchase-money were declared to be for payment of the principal money, interest, and costs, and subject thereto for the borrower, "his executors, administrators, or assigns." Default having been made:—Held, that the trust of the surplus being for the borrower, "his executors, administrators, or assigns," and not for him, "his heirs or assigns," the deed operated to convert the property as between his real and personal representatives. Underwood, In re, 3 K. & J. 745.

A. mortgaged real estate to B, and gave B. a power of sale, and the trusts of the surplus purchase-moneys were declared to be for A., his executors, administrators, and assigns. A. died. After A.'s death the estate was sold under the power of sale:—Held, that A.'s real, and not his personal representatives, were entitled to the surplus purchase-money. Clarke's Trusts, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 230.

Inconsistency between Reservation of Equity of Redemption and Trust of Surplus Proceeds.]—By a marriage settlement land belonging to the husband was conveyed, for making a provision for the wife and the issue of the marriage, to such uses as the husband and wife should by deed jointly appoint, remainder to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to uses in favour of the children of the marriage, with ultimate remainder to the use of the heirs and assigns of the husband. A right of entry was given to the trustees in the event of the death of the parents during the minority of the children. There was no settlement of any money, and no power of sale. The husband and wife exercised their joint power of appointment, and mortgaged the property comprised in the settlement. There was a proviso for redemption which provided that, on payment of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee should reconvey the property to the uses of the settlement. The mortgage contained a power of sale which provided that the mortgagee should pay over the surplus proceeds of the sale to the husband, "his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." The husband died, and the mortgagee exercised his power of sale, and after payment of the mortgage debt, interest, and expenses, had a surplus in his hands:—Held, that there was no resulting trust of the surplus, and that the husband's legal personal representative was entitled to the fund, and not his heir-at-law. Jones v. Davies, 47 L. J., Ch. 654; 8 Ch. D. 205; 38 L. T. 710; 26 W. R. 554.

Right to Interest—Death of Mortgagee under Contract to Purchase Estate.]—Where a testator, having contracted to purchase an estate, and taken a transfer of a mortgage on it, specifically devised it:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to the interest on the mortgage between the testator's death and the completion of the purchase. Puxley v. Puxley, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T. 570.

c. Order for Sale.

Power of Sale—Consent of Trustee—No Sale.]—Where parties interested under a will which gave to the devisee in trust a discretion as to whether he should convert the realty or not, had filed a bill to carry the trusts of the will into effect, and upon consent of the trustee the court had directed a sale of a certain freehold estate; but, after various attempts to sell, no sale had taken place, and the master to whom the matter had been referred had reported against the expediency of a sale:—Held, that the nature of the property was not altered by such proceedings. Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & C. 708; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 12; 1 Jur. 951.

Sale under Decree for raising Charge — Surplus.]—A party seised in fee of real estate, subject to a term for raising charge, devised in general terms, sufficient to comprise the estate charged, part thereof was afterwards sold under a decree for raising the charge, and the testator afterwards sold the reversion, and part of the purchase-money remained in court, after paying off the charge, until after the death of the testator:—Held, that such surplus still retained the character of real estate. Jermy v. Preston, 13 Sim. 356. See also Scott v. Scott, 9 L. R., Ir. 367. But quære, see Steed v. Preece, post.

Administration Suit — Sale — Surplus after Payment of Debts.]—Subject to the debts, real estates were devised to A. They were all sold in an administration suit, to which the devisee was a party. After payment of the debts, there remained a sum in court at the death of the devisee:—Held, that it was of the character of real estate, and passed to her heir. Cooke v. Dealey, 22 Beav. 196. But see next case.

Suit for Administration of Trusts—Sale under Decree for Infants' Real Estate.]—It a conversion is rightfully made, whether by the court or a trustee, all the consequences of a conversion must follow, and there is no equity in favour of the heir or anyone else to take the property in any other form than that in which it is found, and the whole question to be considered is, whether the estate has been rightfully or wrongfully sold. Jermy v. Preston, 13 Sim. 356, and Cooke v. Dealey, 22 Beav. 196, doubted. Steed v. Preece, 43 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 18 Eq. 192; 22 W. R. 432.

Presumption of Lawfulness of Order.]—The court must be assumed and presumed to have acted rightly and lawfully, and not to have done anything that it could not rightfully and lawfully do. Smith, In re, L. R. 10 Ch. 79; 23 W. R. 297.

Sale for Purpose of Paying off Mortgage—Power of Sale—Consent of Beneficiaries—Surplus.]—A brother gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his three sisters as tenants in common, and he empowered his executor to sell all or any part of his real estate, and to stand possessed of the clear proceeds upon trust to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and to hold the residue in trust for his said three sisters as tenants in common, and to pay and divide the same accordingly. A portion of the real estate was sold under an order of the court, with the concurrence of the sisters, for the purpose of paying off a mortgage on another part of the estate. The purchase-money was paid into court. The mortgage did not exhaust the proceeds of the sale:—Held, that the conversion was absolute, and that the surplus was personal estate. Crowther v. Bradney, 28 L. T. 464.

Order for Sale—Death of Party before Sale—Sale under Decree.]—When, in an administration suit asking also for partition of real estate, the court directed a sale, but before it was effected one of the parties interested in the real estate died:—Held, that the estate was sufficiently converted, and the estate having been sold, the share of the deceased beneficiary passed to his legal personal representative. Steed v. Preece, supra, followed. Arnold v. Dixon, L. R. 19 Eq. 113; 23 W. R. 314.

—— Power of Sale in Trustees—Administration Action.]—An absolute order for sale made within the jurisdiction of the court in an administration suit operates as a conversion from the date of the order and before any sale has taken place. Hyett v. Mekin, 53 L. J., Ch. 241; 25 Ch. D. 735; 50 L. T. 54; 32 W. R. 513.

—— Death of Party before Sale—Part only Sold.]—One of several tenants in common of an unincumbered estate, who had presented a petition as owners and obtained an absolute order for sale, died intestate before any sale. Part was afterwards sold, and part remained unsold.—Held, that the order for sale operated as conversion into personalty of the share of the deceased in the estate. Beamist's Estate, In re, 27 L. R., Ir. 326.

d. Act of Parliament.

Abolition of Slavery Act—Compensation.]—The compulsory manumission or sale of slaves, effected by the Abolition of Slavery Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, so impressed slaves with the character of personal estate from the passing of the act, that the compensation money for slaves passed under the will of a testator made after the passing of the act, and who died before the period of manumission had arrived, although the will was not attested so as to pass real estate. Richards v. Att.-Gen. for Jamaica, 6 Moore, P. C. 381; 13 Jur. 197.

It is difficult to distinguish between the case of a conversion by a voluntary agreement for sale, and a conversion effected by a sale which the legislature has rendered compulsory on the vendor, and which acts as a conveyance of the vendor's interest. Ib.

Irish Church Act, 1869—Abolition of Advowsons—Compensation.]—A testator made a devise of advowsons in Ireland. The Irish Church Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 42, was afterwards passed abolishing advowsons and giving their owners a right to compensation. The testator after the passing of the act made a codicil to his will and then died. Compensation for the advowsons was claimed on behalf of the devisee, and was ascertained and made payable to the executors of the testator:—Held, that the compensation money was payable to the executors of the testator, and not to the devisee of the advowsons. Frewen v. Frewen, L. R. 10 Ch. 610; 33 L. T. 43; 23 W. R. 864.

Railway Act — Extinguishment of Freehold Rights in Shares of a Company by.]—After a devise of "all my real estate" upon certain trusts, the testator appointed his executor, and gave to him "all my railway, canal, and navigation shares, moneys, and personal estate," for payment of debts and legacies, and gave "the residue and overplus of my personal estate and effects," after the payments therein before mentioned, unto C., her executors, and administrators absolutely. The navigation undertaking, in which testator held two shares, became vested in a railway company under an act of parliament which provided for the extinguishment of the freehold rights in the shares upon a conveyance to the railway company by the holder, who was to be thereupon entitled to receive shares in the railway company. No conveyance of the shares to the railway company was executed by the testator, and they were at his death standing in his name in the share register of the navigation company in possession of the railway company:—Held, that the effect of the act of parliament was to convert the shares into personal estate. Cadman v. Cadman, 41 L. J., Ch. 468; L. R. 13 Eq. 470; 20 W. R. 356.

4. Effect of Disability.

a. Infant's Property.

Principle.]—In all cases the court will so guard the property of an infant, as that the conversion of it shall not change the nature of it, between the representatives. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 278; 8 R. R. 144.

Infant's Personalty laid out in Real Estate.]—Upon the application to lay out part of an infant's money in land, if he dies before twenty-one, or disapproves of the purchase, the property will not alter. Sergison v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 413.

Lands purchased by guardian for infant, during his minority, considered as personalty. Gibson v. Scudamore, Dick. 45.

An executor in trust for an infant of a lease for 99 years, determinable on three lives, on the lord's refusing to renew but for lives absolutely, complies with the lord, and changes the years into lives; on the infant's dying under twenty-one and intestate, this shall be a trust for his administrator, and not for his heirs. Witter v. Witter, 3 P. W. 99.

Personal property of infant ordered to be laid out in land, though there were no directions in will for changing nature of it; the estate to be conveyed in trust for him, his executors, &c., till twenty-one, and after to him and heirs. Ashburton v. Ashburton, 6 Ves. 6; 5 R. R. 201.

Purchase of Mother's Jointure.]—Infant entitled in remainder, under a reference to the master and order of court, purchases her mother's jointure, and having attained twenty-one, receives one year's rent and dies:—Held, the purchase was to be considered real estate, though made during infancy. Inwood v. Twyne, Ambl. 417; 2 Eden, 152.

Money paid for Replacing burnt Tenement—Infant Tenant in Tail.]—A sum of 96*l.* paid to guardian of an infant, tenant in tail, for building a copyhold tenement that had been burnt down, but which had never been so applied during the infant's life:—Held, to belong to the succeeding remainderman in tail, subject to a deduction of interest upon a larger sum at which the loss was computed, such interest to belong to the personal representatives as a compensation for the loss of the rents and profits sustained by the infant, who could not alien. Rook v. Worth, 1 Ves. sen. 460.

Proceeds of Timber cut by Guardian—Infant Tenant in Tail.]—Where guardian of an infant tenant in tail cut down timber, the money for it shall be personal estate of the infant; but, if the infant has the fee, it shall be considered as real estate. Tullit v. Tullit, Ambl. 370; Dick. 322.

Proceeds of Timber cut and sold by Order of Court—Infant entitled in Fee, with Executory Devise over.]—An estate being devised to A. in fee, with an executory devise over in the event, which happened, of his dying under twenty-one without issue:—Held, that a fund produced by the sale of timber on the estate, cut and sold by order of the court in the lifetime of A., was the personal property of A. Dyer v. Dyer, 34 Beav. 504; 34 L. J., Ch. 513; 12 L. T. 442; 13 W. R. 732.

Land subject by Will to Option of Purchase—Purchase under Compulsory Powers during Infancy of Beneficiaries—Shares of Beneficiaries dying under Age.]—A testator gave to his children, in succession, the option of purchasing his real estate, and in the meantime the rents were to be divided equally between them. Before an option had been exercised, and while some of the children were infants, a corporation purchased part of the property for public improvements under compulsory parliamentary powers:—Held, that the shares of children who had died infants remained real estate until the option had been exercised. Hardy, Ex parte, 30 Beav. 206.

Lease with Option of Purchase—Exercise after Lessor's Death—Infancy of Lessor's Heir.]—A lease for 21 years contained a proviso, that if the lessees should be desirous of purchasing the fee, and should give to the lessor, his heirs or assigns, notice of such desire, they should be entitled to become the purchasers of the premises at the price named, and the lessor, his appointees, heirs, or assigns, would, on payment of the purchase money, do all acts for conveying the premises to the use of the purchasers. The lessor died, having devised all his real estate to trustees, who disclaimed, and leaving an infant heir. The lessees having served on the infant and his guardian notice of their election to purchase:—Held, that such notice was effectually served, and constituted a valid and binding contract, which the court would not refuse to carry out, on the ground that the infant could not give a discharge for the purchase-money. Woods v. Hyde, 31 L. J., Ch. 295; 6 L. T. 317; 10 W. R. 339.

Lands Clauses Act, s. 69—Purchase of Infant's Real Estate.]—Purchase money paid into court under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for land of which an infant is seised in fee remains real estate. Kelland v. Fulford, 6 Ch. D. 491; 25 W. R. 506.

Suit for Administration of Trusts—Sale under Decree of Infant's Real Estate.]—In a suit for the division of real estate devised in trust for tenants in common in tail male, one of whom was an infant, the court declared the infant's costs a charge on his share, and, being of opinion that a sale would be for the benefit of the infant, and the adult consenting, ordered a sale of the entirety. After sale the infant died:—Held, as between his real and personal representatives, that the surplus which remained in court after payment of costs was converted into personalty.

Partition Suit—Sale under Decree—Partition Act, 1868, s. 8.]—The sale of infant's real estate under a decree in a partition suit does not work a conversion. Foster v. Foster, 45 L. J., Ch. 301; 1 Ch. D. 588; 24 W. R. 185.

A decree for the sale of infant's real estate having been made in a partition suit, the property was sold, and the proceeds of sale were paid into court. They afterwards attained twenty-one, but died intestate before the money was distributed, leaving their father their heir-at-law and sole next-of-kin. He took out administration to each of them, and then died intestate:—Held, that the father took his children's shares of the money as their heir-at-law. Mordaunt v. Benwell, 51 L. J., Ch. 247; 19 Ch. D. 302; 45 L. T. 585; 30 W. R. 227.

b. Lunatic's Property.

Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), p. iv. s. 123. provides that a lunatic's interest in property is not to be altered by any disposition thereof under the powers of the act.

Lunatic—Money secured on Scotch realty to be laid out in English land—Proceeds of Heritable Jurisdiction in Scotland.]—A sum devised to be laid out in land in England, in trust for A., with remainders over, was, by act of parliament, secured on A.'s estate in Scotland during his minority. A. attained twenty-one, and became a lunatic:—Held, it might be called in, and laid out pursuant to the trust, and that it was to be considered as if it were a real estate in England, the interest thereon, however, to be considered as personal estate in England. Another sum in the exchequer in England, arising from the sale of heritable jurisdiction in Scotland, considered as real estate in Scotland. Annandale (Marquis) v. Annandale (Marchioness), 2 Ves. sen. 381.

Investment by Committee of Lunatic—Personalty in Land.] — Committee of a lunatic invests part of his personal estate in the purchase of lands in fee. This shall be taken as personal estate, and in case of his death shall go to the next-of-kin, and not to his heir. Awdley v. Awdley, 2 Vern. 192.

Railway Company—Contract with Imbecile.]—A railway company having powers to contract with incapacitated persons for the purchase of lands, and acquire a title to the fee simple, upon payment of the price into the bank, and having so contracted with a person of weak mind who died before payment of the money:—Held, the nature and quality of the estate not changed in point of devolution. Midland Counties Ry. v. Oswin, 1 Coll. C. C. 74; 3 Railw. Cas. 497; 13 L. J., Ch. 209; 8 Jur. 138.

Compulsory Purchase of Land of Lunatic not so found.]—Sect. 7 of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, does not authorise a person of unsound mind to sell land to a company or public body who have statutory power to take it; the section only authorises the committee of a lunatic to sell. A public body having given notice under their statutory powers to take land belonging to a lady of unsound mind not so found, the value of the land was ascertained by two surveyors, one appointed by an uncle of the lady, who purported to act on her behalf, and the other by the public body; the sum thus ascertained was paid into court, and the public body took possession of the land. The lady afterwards died intestate, being still of unsound mind, and her heir-at-law petitioned for payment of the money to him:—Held, that the land had never been converted into personalty, and that the heir was entitled to the money. Flamank, Ex parte, post, dissented from. Tugwell, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1006; 27 Ch. D. 309; 51 L. T. 83; 33 W. R. 132.

Money paid into court by a railway company for land taken under the Lands Clauses Act, from a person who was in a state of mental imbecility, and who continued in that state until his death, but was not the subject of a commission of lunacy, ordered, after his death, not to be reinvested in or considered as land, but to be paid to his executors. Flamank, Ex parte, East Lincolnshire Railway Act, In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 260.

Lunatic's Real Estate—Partition Act, 1868, s. 8.]—By an order made in a partition suit a share of real estate belonging to a lunatic was sold, and the proceeds paid into court to the credit of the matter of the lunacy, but they were not carried to a real estate account. The lunatic died intestate, and his administrator claimed the money as part of the lunatic's personal estate:—Held, that the money retained the character of real estate, and passed to the lunatic's heir-at-law. Barker, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 334; 17 Ch. D. 241; 44 L. T. 33; 29 W. R. 873.

Proceeds of Timber on Estate of Lunatic.]—Timber on estate of lunatic, cut under order of court, sold, and produce paid into the bank on account of the lunatic; after his death on petition by his heir for the money, Lord Chancellor was of opinion that the court may do it for lunatic's benefit, but only on pressing occasions; that when property is converted, equity will recall it for the representative if done by breach of trust, not if by accident, the court, or the tort of a stranger. Bromfield, Ex parte, 1 Ves. 455; 2 R. R. 126.

There is no equity between the real and personal representatives, after the death of a lunatic, to have property which was altered by the court restored; therefore the produce of timber on estate of a lunatic, cut and sold by order, on report that it would be for his benefit, is personal assets. Oxenden v. Compton (Lord), 2 Ves. 69; 2 R. R. 131.

If a bailiff cuts timber without authority, and before it is sold the party dies, it is personal assets; and the heir has no action against the personal representative, nor is there any equity between them on the subject. Ib.

Timber on a lunatic's estate, ex parte paternâ, cut and applied in discharge of a mortgage on his estate ex parte maternâ: no equity between the heirs. Phillips, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 123; 12 R. R. 151. See also S. C., ib. 118.

c. Married Woman's Property.

Real Estate—Partition Action—Sale—Partition Act, 1868, s. 8.]—In a partition suit a sale was ordered of real estate, to seven-eighths of which the plaintiff was entitled, and to one-eighth of which a married woman was entitled. It was then arranged between the parties that the plaintiff should purchase her share, and by an order of the court it was ordered that the plaintiff should pay 1.200*l.* as the purchase money of such share into court, and that on such payment the plaintiff should be let into possession, and all proper parties sign and execute a proper conveyance. The plaintiff paid the purchase money, but then, before any conveyance was executed, she died:—Held, that the purchase money of her share must be treated as real estate, Mildmay v. Quicke, 46 L. J., Ch. 667; 6 Ch. D. 553; 25 W. R. 788.

Partition—Partition Act, 1876, s. 6—Separate Examination.]—In a partition action, an order for sale of a married woman's share of real estate, when made with her consent or at her request under s. 6 of the Partition Act, 1876, operates as a conversion of such share into personal estate. Wallace v. Greenwood, 50 L. J., Ch., 289; 16 Ch. D. 362; 43 L. T. 720.

Where, in a partition action, the share of a married woman in the proceeds of sale of real estate is under 200*l.*, the court will order the same to be paid out to her upon her separate receipt and upon an affidavit of no settlement, and will dispense with her separate examination as to her election to take the money as personal estate. Shaw, In re, post, not followed. Ib.

A married woman will not be allowed to elect to take as personalty her share in the proceeds of sale of real estate sold under an order in a partition action without being separately examined either in court, in chambers, or by commission, even where her share is under 200*l.* Shaw, In re, Topham v. Burgoyne, 49 L. J., Ch. 213; 41 L. T. 670.

The share of a married woman in the proceeds of the sale of real estate devised to her in fee, which has been sold under an order in a partition action, may be paid to her husband on her electing by examination in court to take the money as personal estate. Standering v. Hall, 48 L. J., Ch. 382; 11 Ch. D. 652; 27 W. R. 749.

Interest in Land—Land Devised on Trust for Sale—Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74).]—Lands to be sold under a trust for sale created by will, are not, where the cestuis que trustent are married women, so absolutely personal that their husbands can give valid discharges for the proceeds. Franks v. Bollans, 37 L. J., Ch. 664; L. R. 3 Ch. 717; 18 L. T. 623; 16 W. R. 1158.

The interest of a married woman in the proceeds of real estate devised by the will under which she took such interest, upon trust for sale:—Held, to pass by her deed executed and acknowledged according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, for abolishing fines and recoveries, and substituting more simple modes of conveyance, whether such interest be in possession or reversion, and whether the sale of real estate be or be not made. Briggs v. Chamberlain, 11 Hare, 69; 23 L. J., Ch. 635: 18 Jur. 56.

Though no assignment can be made of the reversionary interest of a married woman, so as to bind her, in the event of the death of her husband in her lifetime, and before it falls into possession, yet a perfect conveyance may be made by her and her husband under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 77, of a reversionary interest in the produce of real estate directed to be sold. Tuer v. Turner, 20 Beav. 560; 24 L. J., Ch. 663; 3 W. R. 583.

Appointment by Will.]—There is a distinction between a will made by a married woman under a power and when disposing of property in her own right as a feme sole. The power must be looked at to see in what character the property was held when disposed of by the testator, and where by virtue of the power it has been converted into personalty, she is in fact disposing of personalty. Gunn, In Goods of, 53 L. J., P. 107; 9 P. D. 242; 33 W. R. 169; 49 J. P. 72.

d. Alien's Property.

Naturalisation Act, 1870 (33 Vict., c. 14), s. 2, enacts that real and personal property of every description may be taken, held or disposed of by an alien, and the cases turning on the disability of an alien, prior to the act, to hold land are omitted as obsolete.

Trust of Land for Alien—Naturalisation Act, 1870, ss. 2, 18.]—In March, 1862, L. and S. (the wife of an alien) conveyed land of which they were tenants in common to a trustee, upon trust to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds for L. and S. in equal shares, the share of S. to be for her separate use. In April, 1862, L. and S. entered into an agreement to allot the lands in severalty, and that the trustee should stand possessed of each such respective allotment on the respective trusts declared by the deed of March, and that nothing in the agreement should prejudice or affect any of the powers or trusts of the deed. No sale was ever effected, and S. died in 1866, having by her will given to her husband, the alien, her personal estate absolutely and a life interest in her real estates:—Held, first, that the land was not in equity converted into money. Sharp v. De St. Saveur, 41 L. J., Ch. 576; L. R. 7 Ch. 343; 26 L. T. 142; 23 W. R. 269.

Held, secondly, that the title of the alien having accrued before the passing of the Naturalisation Act, 1870, that act did not remove his disability to hold land. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the trust for the alien could be enforced for the benefit of the crown. Ib. S. P., Barrow v. Wadkin, 24 Beav. 1; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 679; 5 W. R. 695.

5. Effect of Conversion on Devises and Bequests.

Agreement to buy Land.]—A. articles to purchase lands in trust for B., and, before any conveyance made, B., by will, directed all his freehold estate to be settled on C., and his first son, &c. The lands articled for will pass by the will. Greenhill v. Greenhill, 2 Vern. 679; Pre. Ch. 320.

In all cases where money is agreed to be laid out in the purchase of lands, for the benefit of a person and his heirs, though such person dies before the purchase is made, yet if he makes no disposition of the moneys, the benefit thereof shall go to his heirs; in the same manner as the lands would have gone, had the purchase been actually made. Warwick (Countess of) v. Edwards, 1 Bro. P. C. 207; 2 P. W. 171. See also Kettleby v. Atwood, 1 Vern. 298; Lancy v. Fitzchild, 2 Vern. 101.

Money was to be laid out in land, to be settled to the husband for life, remainder to raise portions for younger children. The money was afterwards invested, by direction of the husband, in South Sea annuities; afterwards, by will, he devised generally all his manors, &c., to certain uses. The money in the funds must be laid out in land. Hickman v. Bacon, 4 Bro. C. C. 333.

—— Devise of all my Estates.]—Personal estate to be laid out in land but lent on mortgage instead, considered as land, having been always out in trustees, and the uses never united with the possession, and passed by such general words in a will as would pass land, as "all my estates, &c., whatsoever and wheresoever." Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. 201; 3 Bro. C. C. 99.

—— Gift of the "Money and Land."]—Money under the direction to be laid out in land considered as real estate, under a general disposition, by the will of a person entitled absolutely in either shape, of the "money and land," in the absence of intention, the word "money" being answered by another fund of stock. Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161.

—— Devise of Real Estate.]—By articles previous to the marriage of A. G. with the plaintiff, reciting her portion to be 2,800*l.*, and that the defendant as an advancement of his brother, &c., had agreed to pay 4,000*l.*, it was agreed to be laid out in the purchase of lands, or in some church, college, or other renewable lease, to be settled to the same uses as the freehold and leasehold estates, which A. G. was seised and possessed of, were appointed to be settled; the last limitation to A. G. and his heirs. The 2,800*l.* and 4,000*l.* remained in money to A. G.'s death: he by will devised all his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold lands, lying in Islington, and in Hampshire or elsewhere, to the plaintiff for life, and after her death to the defendant and his heirs; and his personal estate, after paying his debts and legacies, he gave to the plaintiff, and made her and the defendant executors. The 2,800*l.* and 4,000*l.* must be laid out in the purchase of lands of inheritance, or in church or leasehold, for the court was of opinion if there had been only a general devise of his lands, this money would certainly have passed. Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 254.

Real Estate directed to be Sold after Life Tenancy—Devise of Share.]—Testator devised a real estate to his daughter for life, and then to be sold, and the proceeds divided amongst her children. One of her children died in her lifetime, having devised his share of the estate to his son:—Held, that the deceased child took his share of the estate as personalty in reversion, expectant on his mother's death, and consequently that his executrix, and not his son, was entitled to it. Elliot v. Fisher, 12 Sim. 505.

Land subject by Will to Option of Purchase—Purchase under Railway Act—Effect on Option.]—Land was devised in trust for the testator's widow for life, and after her death for sale and division of the proceeds among his children equally, with a direction that the trustees should offer the land to the testator's son at a specified price upon the death of the widow. The land was purchased by a railway company, under the powers given by its act, for more than twice the specified sum:—Held, that the son's right of pre-emption was not affected by the purchase, and the son was entitled to the difference. Cant's Estate, In re, 4 De G. & J. 503; 28 L. J., Ch. 641; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 7 W. R. 624.

Money liable to be Invested in Land—Fund in Court—Accumulations—Devise of Real Estate.]—Freeholds in which a lunatic was interested were taken compulsorily by a company, and the purchase-money, which, under the act of parliament, was liable to be invested in land, was paid into court, and laid out in the government funds. The existence of the fund was overlooked, and it went on accumulating. A., who became tenant in tail in possession, with immediate remainder to her in fee, devised her real estate, and bequeathed "all such capital, stock, and moneys as she should be possessed of, or interested in, at her death, in the public government, or parliamentary funds"; but she expressed no further intention as to conversion:—Held, that the principal fund passed as real estate, and the accumulations as personal estate. Dixie v. Wright, 32 Beav. 662.

Real Estate taken under Compulsory Powers, Proceeds of—"Moneys" or "Real Estate" of Testator.]—Real estate was settled by a marriage settlement, not comprising any personal estate. The tenant for life sold part of the land to a company under the powers of its act, and the proceeds were paid into court and invested. Afterwards, the tenant for life, under the power in the settlement, appointed by will to his son the whole of the settled estate, and the purchase money of the part which had been sold. The son by will disposed of his residuary personal estate of which he might be possessed, or over which he might have any power of disposition at his death, including in such personal estate "all moneys to which I may be entitled under the marriage settlement of my father and mother"; and he declared that he did not by his will intend to dispose of any real estate, but only of personal estate and chattels real. The widow of the tenant for life, who was entitled to a jointure, was still living:—Held, that the fund arising from the sale did not pass by the will. Skeggs, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 533; 13 W. R. 567.

Trust to Reinvest in Land, Stock, subject to—Will of Personal Estate—Intestacy.]—In 1789, money belonging to a married woman was, with consent of herself and husband, laid out in land, settled upon trust for the wife for life, for her separate use, and after her death, upon trust, for the children equally, and "in default of such child or children without lawful issue," in trust for the husband, his heirs and assigns. Then followed a power of sale by the direction of the husband and wife, the produce to be laid out in land, and settled upon the like trusts. In 1801 the lands were duly sold, and the money was invested in the funds, the dividends being paid to the wife for her life. The husband, wife, and the surviving trustee, by a deed, declared the stock to be held on the trusts of the deed of 1789. The husband died, in the wife's lifetime, intestate. She made her will after his death, whereby she gave all her personal estate and effects, "whatsoever and wheresoever," and of every kind soever, which she should be possessed of or entitled to at the time of her death, in "possession, remainder, reversion, or expectancy," to her two daughters. The produce of the sale of the land was never reinvested in land, pursuant to the trusts of the original settlement:—Held, that the deed of 1789 gave a life estate to the wife with remainder to her children for life, but no more, the remainder to the husband being void; that the stock was to be treated as real and not personal estate; that it did not pass by the will of the wife, the words there used relating exclusively to personal estate; and that it descended to the heir-at-law. Gillies v. Longlands, 4 De G. & Sm. 372; 20 L. J., Ch. 441; 15 Jur. 570.

—— Money subject to.]—Money arising from the sale, under a power, of lands in Staffordshire, forming part of the C. settled estates, was held upon trust to invest it in lands in England or Wales, to be settled upon the limitations of the C. settlement. Under that settlement C. was tenant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee. He died without issue, leaving a will by which he gave all his lands in Staffordshire to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of one family, and gave all his real and personal estate not otherwise disposed of to trustees for another family:—Held, that the moneys, being impressed with a trust to invest in land, were to be treated as land and would pass under a devise of land. Observations of Jessel, M.R., in Chandler v. Pocock (15 Ch. D. 491), considered: but held that, as under the trust the money might have been invested anywhere in England, it would not pass under a devise of lands in Staffordshire; and that, therefore, it passed under the residuary devise of real estate. Cleveland's (Duke) Settled Estates, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 955; [1893] 3 Ch. 244; 13 R. 235, n.; 69 L. T. 735—C. A.

Referential Trust for Conversion of Real Estate—Deferred Period for Sale—Death of Testator before.]—By articles, previous to the marriage of F. N. and E. S., the wife grants to trustees, &c., an undivided sixth part of certain estates for eighty years, if S. N. should so long live, and then, upon trust (as soon as convenient after the death of S. N., and after settlement made by the husband of an estate called the F. estate, and of a rent charge of 260*l.*, to which he was entitled in reversion, expectant on the death of S. N.), absolutely to sell and dispose of the same, and apply the money arising from the sale thereof, and of the other premises after mentioned, upon the trusts after mentioned. By the same articles, the husband covenants, within two years, to convey the F. estate to the same trustees, upon the like trusts as were declared as to the said undivided sixth; and likewise covenants, within six months after the death of S. N., to settle upon them the said rent charge upon the trusts therein mentioned. The trusts of the moneys to arise by sale of all the premises directed to be sold are then declared, to the husband for life, then to the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue as the husband should appoint. The husband dies in the lifetime of S. N. without issue, having by his will, after confirming the marriage articles, given to his wife all the real and personal estate to which he became entitled by his marriage, and which should remain undisposed of at his death, and the residue of his personal estate, and appointed her his executrix, and having devised all other his real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to the defendant. S. N. afterwards dies. No sale takes place; and no settlement is made of the F. estate, according to the articles. The widow enters into possession of that estate, conceiving herself to be only entitled as tenant for life under the will of her husband; and, upon her death, the defendant enters, as entitled in remainder under the same will. Upon a bill filed by the executor of the widow, to whom she had devised all the residue of her estate, real and personal, claiming to have the F. estate sold under the covenant in the marriage articles, and the produce paid to him as part of the personal estate of the widow, it was decreed accordingly: his honour being of opinion, that the covenant to convey, being absolute and unqualified, the estate must be considered as having been converted into personalty by the marriage articles; that the testator could not be held to have elected to take it otherwise, the period of sale not having arrived when he died; that the will afforded no evidence of an intention to pass it as real estate; and, lastly, that the widow could not, by any conduct tending to show in what light she considered it, at all affect the question. Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 521.

Devise in Trust for Sale—Executory Gift Over of Money or Unsold Real Estate—Intention.]—Devise of real estate in trust to sell, and out of the money to pay debts, &c., and with the surplus to maintain and educate the daughter of the testatrix until twenty-one or marriage; but if she should die unmarried under twenty-one, all such money as should remain in the hands of the trustees, or such parts of the real estates as should remain unsold (if any), to be to the use of A. The daughter lived to attain twenty-one. This is a conversion out and out, and the real estate remaining unsold at her death goes to her personal representative. Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296; 15 R. R. 116.

Gift of Corpus of Produce of Realty to Charity after Life Estate.]—Real estates were devised to trustees, upon trust to sell and pay the income of the produce to the testator's wife for life; and after her death, upon trust to pay the principal to a charitable institution. The ultimate gift to the charitable institution was held to be void:—Held, that the trust for conversion took effect immediately upon the testator's death, and did not operate only upon the interest given to the charitable institution. Wilson v. Coles, 28 Beav. 215; 6 Jur. 1003; 8 W. R. 383.

Residuary Real and Personal Estate of B., Produce of—Bequest by A. of his "Moneys."]—A. bequeathed to his wife his pay, "clothing, money, and moneys that may be now due or may become due to me at my decease; also, the whole of my property and effects; that is to say, my box, clothes, bedding, &c.":—Held, that the whole residue passed, including a reversionary interest in the produce of the sale and conversion of a residuary real and personal estate of another testator. Gover v. Davis, 29 Beav. 222.

Real Estate—Contract for Sale by equitable Life Tenant—Trustees with Power of Sale—

Bequest of Money arising from Sales.]—An equitable tenant for life, with remainder in tail male and reversion in fee, of estates vested in trustees with powers of sale and exchange, contracted to sell a portion, and died without issue male before the purchase was completed, having by his will directed that all sums of money which might have arisen from sales of the estates, and were subject or applicable to the same uses as the estates, should be applied towards payment of certain incumbrances:—Held, that as the purchase-money did not arise from a sale of the estate by the trustees, the purpose of which would be convenience, and not conversion, but from a sale of the testator's limited interest therein, it was not to be applied under the direction in the will as money arising from sales of the estates, but that it formed part of the testator's personal estate, and must be dealt with under the clauses relating thereto. Saville v. Kinnaird, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 195; 11 L. T. 687; 13 W. R. 308.

Devise of Real and Personal Estate—Contingent Trust for Sale—Occurrence of Contingency.]—Testator gave all his estate and effects of what nature, kind, or quality soever, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to trustees, their heirs, executors, &c., in trust, in case there should not be sufficient to pay the annuity thereinafter given to his wife, to sell all his real and personal estate and invest the proceeds in the funds, and out of the dividends or the rents of his real estate, until the same should be sold, to pay his wife an annuity of 300*l*., and, after paying an annuity to another person, to pay the residue of the rents and dividends to his wife for her life: and he gave all the rest of his estate and effects, after payment of his debts, legacies, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the before-mentioned annuities, to his four sisters, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but if any of them should die before their shares should become due and payable, leaving a child or children, then he gave the share of such of them so dying unto such child or children. The testator left no residuary personal estate; and the rents of his real estate were not nearly sufficient to pay his wife's annuity; but nevertheless the real estate remained unsold long after her death:—Held, that, under the circumstances, it was to be considered as converted into personalty by the will. Ward v. Arch, 15 Sim. 389; 10 Jur. 977.

See A. 3, a. (iii.), ante; B. 3, C. 3, post.

6. Time when Conversion takes Place, and Right to Income.

Will—Death of Testator.]—A will is ambulatory till testator's death, nor till then can money directed to be laid out in land be considered as land. Beauclerk v. Mead, 2 Atk. 167.

—— Direction for Sale with all convenient speed.]—Estate by will directed to be sold with all convenient speed after the death of A., and interest of produce bequeathed to plaintiff; estate continued unsold: this is primâ facie a direction for an immediate sale after A.'s death. Fitzgerald v. Jervoise, 5 Madd. 25; 21 R. R. 268. See also Hutchin v. Mannington, 1 Ves. 367; 2 R. R. 115.

Plaintiff, on construction of will, held to be entitled to rents and profits of first year after testator's death. Ib.

—— Sale at such Time as Trustees think Proper.]—Devise in trust to sell in such manner, and at such time, as the trustees shall think proper. The period of conversion as between those entitled for life and in remainder, depends not upon an arbitrary discretion, nor even a sound discretion in each case, but upon some fixed rule ascertaining a given period, as upon a trust to sell with all convenient speed; controlled in this instance by consent. Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387.

—— Sale when it should appear to Trustees Advantageous.]—A testator devised his real estate to trustees to sell, whenever it should appear to them advantageous. He directed annuities to be paid to charities out of his personal estate until his real estate should be sold, when he gave the produce to charities. But if the charity bequests should be defeated, he gave the principal money to the plaintiffs. No sale of the realty took place; the infant plaintiffs (under the chief clerk's certificate, finding it for their benefit) elected to take the land in lieu of the produce:—Held, that the real estate must be considered as converted from the death of the testator, from which time the plaintiffs were entitled to the rents. Robinson v. Robinson, 19 Beav. 494.

Held, secondly, that the charity annuities ceased to be charges on the personal estate from the date of the chief clerk's certificate. Ib.

—— Conversion or Not according to Circumstances at Testator's Death.]—The time of the testator's death is the period at which to look whether there is a conversion of real estate out and out, or whether circumstances may have made it unnecessary to convert real estate into personalty, for the purposes of the devise. And therefore, where at the death of the testator, it was uncertain whether, as to one moiety of the property, the purposes of the devise might ever require the conversion, and ultimately before a sale of the property the purpose as to that moiety failed:—Held, that the property took the character of personalty at the death of the testator. Carr v. Collins, 7 Jur. 165.

Deed—Conveyance of Equity of Redemption on Trust for Sale—Conversion from Delivery of Deed.]—Conversion of real estate into personalty from the delivery of the deed as between the real and personal representatives of a party who conveyed the equity of redemption thereof to trustees for sale for benefit of creditors, and to pay surplus to himself. Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 299; 19 L. J., Ch. 100; 14 Jur. 166.

—— Trust to Arise after Settlor's Death.]—Settlement of real estate by deed (not enrolled) to use of settlor for life, with remainder (subject to a power of revocation, which he never exercised) to use of trustees and their heirs, upon trust to sell and pay certain sums of money to persons named, or to such of them as might be living at settlor's death, and to apply the residue to charitable purposes:—Held, that notwithstanding the trust was not to arise until after settlor's death, the property was impressed with the character of personalty immediately upon the execution of the deed, and the proceeds, so far as they were directed to be applied to charitable purposes, resulted to the settlor as personalty. Clarke v. Franklin, 4 Kay & J. 257; 27 L. J., Ch. 567; 6 W. R. 836.

Power of Sale—Exercise—Conversion from Time of Sale.]—When land is subject to a power of sale, and the power is exercised, it is converted into personalty from the time of the sale, unless the proceeds are reinvested in land, or are stamped with a trust for reinvestment in land Atwell v. Atwell, 41 L. J., Ch. 23; L. R. 13 Eq 23.

Income, Right to—Money to be laid out.]—Where money is given to be laid out in lands, and when bought to be settled on such and such persons, on a bill brought here, the course is to direct a purchase, and the profits of the money to go as the land would itself, till purchased Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Atk. 369.

Suppose a direction by will to purchase an estate, which is afterwards swallowed up by an inundation, the money so devised shall not go to an executor, but as the rents would have done when the land was purchased. Ib.

T. devised his real estates to trustees, on trusts, one of which was a disposition, good as an executory devise, which could not take effect until the death of his daughter. He directed the residue of his personal estate to be divided into three equal parts, and gave the same to the trustees (who were also his executors) to invest two third parts in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same purposes as those directed as to his original real estate; the other third to be also invested in the purchase of real estate to be conveyed to the use of a person then in being:—Held, that the intermediate income of these two-thirds was not undisposed of by the will, but must be laid out in the purchase of real estate, according to the directions in the will, until such time as some person should be entitled to possession under the limitations declared by the will so far at least as not to exceed the period allowed by law for accumulation. Beetue (Countess) v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Cas. 656.

—— Real Estate—Devise on Trust for Sale.]—S. devised real estates to trustees, upon trust "as soon as conveniently may be after my death," to sell and dispose of the same, either by public or private sale; and to stand possessed of the proceeds on certain trusts for several persons respectively for life, and after their respective deceases for their children. The decree declared, that the devisees for life named in the will are entitled to the rents and profits of the real estates thereby devised from the decease of the testator; and directed a sale; the produce to be paid into the bank, subject to further order. Casamajor v. Strode, 19 Ves. 390.

—— Real Estate—Agreement for Sale—Intestacy.]—An agreement was made for the sale of an estate at a future time. Before that time arrived the vendor died intestate.—Held, that the rents accrued between the vendor's death and time for completing the contract belonged to the vendor's heir, and not to his executor. Lumsden v. Fraser, 12 Sim. 263; 10 L. J., Ch. 362.

—— Option to Purchase—Rents until Option made.]—Option to a tenant to purchase; the rents, until the option made, belonging to the heir, from that time the conversion takes place, and the purchase money belongs to the personal representative. Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. 591; 9 R. R. 352.

—— Real Estate—Agreement for Sale—Intention.]—Where upon the sale of real estate the intention of the vendor was clear, that it should be kept as realty up to the time when converted absolutely into personal estate:—Held, that upon his death before the purchase completed, the intermediate rent belonged to the heir. Shadforth v. Temple, 10 Sim. 184.

—— Brickfield—Trust for Sale at Discretion of Trustees—Royalties.]—A testator devised a brickfield to trustees for sale when they should think desirable. They deferred the sale in the exercise of their discretion:—Held, that the tenant for life was entitled to the royalties as income. Miller v. Miller, 41 L. J., Ch. 291; L. R. 13 Eq. 263; 20 W. R. 324.

—— Specific Devise of Land—Agreement for Sale.]—When a testator had specifically devised certain lands, but such lands were contracted to be sold in his lifetime, so that the devise was adeemed:—Held, that the rents received between his death and the conveyance of the property passed to the devisee. Watts v. Watts, 43 L. J., Ch. 77; L. R. 17 Eq. 217; 29 L. T. 671.

—— Land subject by Will to Option of Purchase—Purchase under Compulsory Powers during Infancy of Beneficiaries—Shares of Beneficiaries Dying under Age.]—A testator gave to his children in succession an option to purchase certain real estate, and in the meantime the rents were to be equally divided between them. Before the option was exercised part was purchased under compulsory powers:—Held, that the shares of some children who had died infants remained real estate, until the option had been exercised, and that the interim income belonged to their heir-at-law. Hardy, Ex parte, 30 Beav. 206.

—— Land—Trust for Sale and Purchase of other Land—Timber—Right to Cut]—Devise of lands to be sold, and other lands to be purchased in another county; A. to be tenant for life (sans waste) of the lands to be purchased; and the rents and profits of the lands to be sold to be to the same uses: A. cannot cut down timber on the lands to be sold, since he thereby would have the benefit of double waste. Plymouth v. Archer, 1 Bro. C. C. 159. See also Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 174; 10 R. R. 150.

See also A. 3, a. (ii.), ante.

7. Effect on Rights and Liabilities.

a. Curtesy.

Money to be Laid Out.]—A. devised 300*l.* to be laid out in land, and settled to the use of her daughter and her children, and if she died without issue to go over. She married B., and had a child by him, and she and the child being dead, and the money not laid out, on a bill brought by B.:—Held, the money to be considered as land, and the plaintiff to be tenant by the curtesy. Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536.

Money by marriage articles to be laid out in land to uses of husband and wife for life, then to the children, as they should appoint, in default of appointment equally; but if one, to that one in tail, reversion to husband in fee. There is one daughter; the trustee pays it to her and her husband, she not being sui juris, not separately examined; the payment not sufficient to make it considered as money, the sister of the half-blood may claim the reversion in fee from the father; but the husband of the other sister, who was tenant in tail, will be tenant by curtesy. Cunningham v. Moody, 1 Ves. sen. 174.

Where money is given to be laid out in land for a place of retirement for testator's sister, to be for ever entailed on her issue, the husband of one of the daughters of the sister entitled as tenant by the curtesy to one-third. Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. C. C. 404.

Real Estate—Settlement—Power of Sale—Proceeds impressed with Trusts of Realty.]—By a marriage settlement, the wife's freehold estates were vested in a trustee, in trust for her separate use during her life, remainder for such persons as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment, in trust for her right heirs. The wife died without having made any appointment, leaving her husband and a son surviving. After her death the trustee sold the estate under a power in the settlement, which directed the proceeds to be invested in the purchase of other lands, or on mortgage, or in the funds, and the securities to be held on the trusts aforesaid:—Held, that on the wife's death the husband became equitable tenant by the curtesy of the estates, and therefore was entitled to the interest of the purchase-money during his life. Follett v. Tyrer, 14 Sim. 125; 13 L. J., Ch. 441; 8 Jur. 528.

b. Escheat.

The Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, expressly extends the law of escheat to any estate or interest, whether legal or equitable, in any incorporeal hereditament. See also s. 7.

Money to be Laid Out—Crown—Next of Kin—Equities as Between.]—Testator directed money to be laid out in manors, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, or very long terms, with limitations applicable to real estate; money not having been laid out, the crown, on failure of heirs, has no equity against next of kin to have it laid out in real estate, in order to claim by escheat. Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. 169; 2 R. R. 185.

Real and Personal Estate—Devise in Trust for Sale—Undisposed-of Residue—Crown—Trustees—Equities as between.]—Where a testatrix devised real and personal estate to executors and three trustees, in trust to sell, immediately after her death, and invest the proceeds, and out of the income to pay certain annuities, and the residue in trust for such persons as by any codicil she should direct. She made no codicil, and died, leaving no heir or next of kin:—Held, that the crown was entitled only to the residue of the personal estate, and that the proceeds of the real estate belonged to the trustees, the crown having no equity to compel the conversion of the real into personal estate. Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8.

Real Estate—Money Charged on—Mortmain—Crown—Devisee—Equities as between.]—Devise of copyhold land in fee, upon condition that the devisees within one month pay 2,000*l.* to the testator's executor, to be applied, after payment of debts and legacies, to charitable purposes. The testator died without leaving any customary heir or next of kin:—Held, upon appeal, that the proportion of the 2,000*l.* which was void by the Mortmain Act was to be considered as real estate undisposed of, and that the devisee, and not the crown, was entitled to it. Henchman v. Att.-Gen., 3 Myl. & K. 485. Reversing 2 Sim. & S. 498; 4 L. J., Ch. (o.s.) 155; 25 R. R. 255.

—— Trust for Sale — Proceeds of Sale not effectually disposed of—Executors or the Crown entitled—Intestates' Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), ss. 4, 7.]—A testatrix died without an heir, having devised a house of which she was legally seised in fee simple to her executors, upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds to pay her debts, funeral expenses, and legacies. There was no gift of residue:—Held, that the balance of proceeds of sale, after paying the debts, expenses, and legacies, did not belong to the executors for their own benefit, but escheated to the crown. Wood, In re, Att.-Gen. v. Anderson, 65 L. J., Ch. 814; [1896] 2 Ch. 596; 75 L. T. 28; 44 W. R. 685.

c. Forfeiture.

The Act 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, abolishes the forfeiture of lands and goods for treason and felony, and the cases under this head are omitted as obsolete.

d. Liability to Debts.

Land devised for Sale for Payment of Debts.]—Where lands are devised to executors to be sold for payment of debts, the money becomes legal assets, and shall be paid in a course of administration. Cutterback v. Smith, Pre. Ch. 127.

Real Estate—Conversion for Special Purposes.]—Real estate to be converted into personal for special purposes, not personal property to all intents, so as to let in creditors by simple contract. Gibbs v. Ougier, 12 Ves. 413; 8 R. R. 348.

Money to be Laid Out and Settled.]—Plaintiff lent B. 500*l.* on note, on assurance that an aunt had left him 4,000*l.* by will; B. dies soon after; and his representative refused to pay the 500*l.*, as the legacy was directed to be laid out in land and settled on B. in fee:—Held, that as money devised to be laid out in land is land, the plaintiff can have no remedy. Trelawney v. Booth, 2 Atk. 307.

Land agreed to be Sold—Bankruptcy—Judgment Creditors.]—Judgment creditors have no lien upon lands articled to be sold before a bankruptcy, the conveyance to which remains unexecuted at the bankruptcy. Sharpe v. Rhoade, 2 Rose, 192.

B. RESULTING TRUST ON FAILURE OF GIFT.

1. Principles.

Trust for Conversion—Failure of Purpose—Resulting Trust.]—It is a clear rule in equity, that where real estate is directed to be converted into personal for a purpose which fails, either wholly or partially, to that extent the money is considered real estate. Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 174.

Where a testator means to convert real estate into personal for a particular purpose, if that purpose cannot be served, the court will not infer any other purpose. Ib. 175.

It is a general principle, that where a person dealing upon his own property only has directed a conversion for a particular purpose, or out and out, but the produce to be applied to a particular purpose, when the purpose fails, the intention fails, and this court regards him as not having directed the conversion. Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 425.

—— No Disposition.]—Land devised to be sold, the produce to be applied as after mentioned; if no disposition is made, the heir shall take. Sheldon v. Barnes, 2 Ves. 447.

—— Mixed Fund.]—Where a testator by will directs his real estate to be sold, and the produce to be invested in the same manner as his personal estate, that produce, so far as it is not disposed of by the will, goes to the heir, unless there is on the will satisfactory proof of the intention of the testator, that the money to be raised by the sale should go to the same persons, who would be entitled to his original personal estate. Madgin v. Lumley, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 236.

Testatrix directed her real estate to be sold, and all her estate to be converted into money for the purpose of her will. The will was satisfied without touching the real: no equity for the next of kin against the heir. Chitty v. Parker, 2 Ves. 271; 4 Bro. C. C. 411.

Testator gave several legacies, and ordered his real and personal estate to be sold, his debts and legacies paid, and the residue to certain legatees, in the proportion of their legacies. Two of the residuary legatees died, living the testator. These shares are lapsed, and so far as they are constituted by personal estate, shall go to the person next of kin; and so far as they consisted of real estate, to the heir-at-law. Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Bro. C. C. 503; 3 P. W. 22, n. See 7 Price, 258.

Term raised for Particular Purpose.]—Term raised for a particular purpose when that purpose is answered the term shall be in trust for the heir. Levet v. Needham, 2 Vern. 139.

Legacy to Heir—Residuary Legatees "Appointed and Devised" by Testator.]—The intention of the testator being to provide an auxiliary fund for legacies, and not a complete conversion out and out, the residue of the real estate, after making good the deficiency of the personal in payment of legacies, is a resulting trust for the heir, notwithstanding a legacy given him, and the testator "appointed and devised residuary legatees." Kellet v. Kellet, 1 Ball & B. 533; 12 R. R. 54. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 248; 15 R. R. 63.

Personal Estate to be Converted into Real.]—Where a testator directs his personal estate to be converted into real estate for several purposes, some of which fail, the heir is not, after satisfying the purposes which can take effect, entitled to the personalty as being impressed with the character of realty. Hereford v. Ravenhill, 1 Beav. 481.

If a testator devised land for purposes altogether illegal, or which altogether fail, the heir takes it as undisposed of; so if he bequeath personalty under the same circumstances, the next of kin are entitled. Cogan v. Stephens, 1 Beav. 482, n.; 5 L. J., Ch. 17.

If a testator devise land for purposes which are in part illegal, or which partially fail, or which require part only of the land devised, the heir takes the part which fails, or is not required for the purposes of the will; and so conversely in the case of personal estate, the next of kin are entitled Ib. But see Fletcher v. Chapman, 3 Bro. P. C. 1.

Actual Conversion of Land—Intention of Testator.]—The heir is not affected by the actual conversion of land into money, and so much of the interest as is not exhausted by the disposition belongs to him; but when it can be clearly ascertained that the intention of the testator is, that the produce of his real estate shall, to all intents and purposes, be treated as personal estate, so as to devolve upon the persons entitled thereto, the court will give effect to that intention, whether directly expressed, or necessarily to be inferred. Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 409; 9 L. J., Ch. 244. And see Norreys v. Frank, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 18.

Where, for the purpose of a disposition in a will, real estate is directed to be converted into money, or money to be converted into real estate, and the disposition fails, though the conversion has actually taken place, the real estate, or the money, will retain its original character for the purpose of ascertaining the ownership of it. Bective (Countess) v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Cas. 656.

The rules which are applicable to a gift of a residue are applicable to the parts into which that residue may be divided. Ib.

—— Bankruptcy—Sale after Owner's Death—Surplus.]—Partnership become bankrupt, real estate of one sold to make up the deficiency, part during owner's life, and part after, leaving surplus:—Held, heir has no claim as to those sold before the death, but he has for the surplus of those sold after with 4 per cent. interest. Banks v. Scott, 5 Madd. 493. And see Bromley v. Goodere, 1 Atk. 75.

Real Estate—Conversion for Purposes of Will—Surplus.]—Held, upon the construction of a will, that the real estate had not been converted out and out, that is, for all purposes which would attach to personal estate in the hands of the testator; but only for the purposes of the will. Therefore, to determine whether it is to go to the heir or next of kin, the only thing to be considered is the nature of the resulting trust. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 Beav. 169; 16 L. J., Ch. 59.

—— Trust for Sale—Deed.]—When a settlor conveys real estate upon trust for sale, and directs the proceeds to be applied to certain purposes, some of which fail, whether the sale is directed to be made in the lifetime of the settlor or after his decease, the property will, to the extent to which the purposes fail, result to the settlor as personal estate. Clarke v. Franklin, 4 Kay & J. 257; 27 L. J., Ch. 567; 6 W. R. 836.

Secus, if there is a failure of the whole purposes for which the sale is directed. Ib.

Resulting Trust—Limit of Doctrine.]—Question of a resulting trust only arises between the real and personal representatives of the testator, not between the representatives of a party taking under the will. Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296; 15 R. R. 116.

—— Intention.]—Wherever lands, &c., which would descend to heir-at-law are devised for the purposes which law will not suffer to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of, whether the testator intended he should have it or not. Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 196.

2. Application of Doctrine.

a. Creditors' Deeds.

Real Estate—Trust for Sale—Intention.]—Real estate held upon the particular expressions of a deed to be converted into personal out and out, under a trust to sell for the payment of debts, and to pay the residue to the grantor, his executors, &c. Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

A., after reciting that he was desirous that his real estates should be sold, conveyed them to trustees, in trust to sell or mortgage the same, and to stand possessed of the money to be raised, in trust for him, his executors, &c. By deed of even date, he assigned all his personal property to the same trustees, in trust for himself, his executors, &c. By a third deed of even date, after reciting that he was indebted to various persons, and was desirous that his affairs should be wound up, and his real and personal property converted into money, and his debts paid, and that the conveyance and assignments were made to enable his trustees, in the first place, to pay his debts; he declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the money to arise from the sale or mortgage of his real and personal property, in trust to pay his debts, and then in trust for him, his executors, &c. The trustees sold part of the real estate, and the proceeds were more than sufficient to pay A.'s debts. Shortly afterwards A. died intestate:—Held, that the unsold estates were to be considered as personalty. Biggs v. Andrews, 5 Sim. 424.

C. S. by deed conveyed lands in fee to trustees, upon trust to obtain possession and absolutely dispose thereof, and convey the fee simple and inheritance to the purchaser without the concurrence of C. S., and after defraying expenses to apply the moneys to arise from the sale in payment of certain debts mentioned in the deed, and pay the surplus to C. S., his executors, administrators, or assigns. C. S. survived the execution of the deed three years, and died without anything having been done in performance of the trusts. Immediately before his decease he had agreed to execute a further charge upon the property:—Held, that there had been an absolute conversion of the land into personal estate. Bayden v. Watson, 12 L. J., Ch. 277; 7 Jur. 245.

Conversion of real estate into personalty as between the real and personal representatives of a party who conveyed the equity of redemption thereof to trustees, for sale for benefit of creditors, and to pay surplus to himself. Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 299; 19 L. J., Ch. 100; 14 Jur. 166.

S., on his marriage in 1812, settled real estate upon trusts for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to their children as tenants in common (without the word heirs), remainder in default of children of the marriage to himself in fee. In 1830 he executed a creditor's deed conveying all his real estate to trustees for payment of his debts. There were several children of the marriage, and it being thought that he had only a life estate in the settled property that alone was sold, and the creditors being satisfied, the question arose as to whether his reversion in fee had been converted into personalty by the deed:—Held, that the surplus property not sold for the purposes of the deed of 1830 was not converted. Clissold v. Cook, 27 L. T. 143; 20 W. R. 796.

b. Illegal Disposition.

1. Mortmain.

By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, and the law relating to Mortmain was otherwise amended by the act.

Money to be Laid Out—Real Estate to be Sold.]—Money directed to be laid out in lands for an illegal purpose (charity), shall not be laid out for the heir, and the trust is void altogether; as to the testatrix's real estate, which was devised to be sold partly for such purposes, the heir was declared entitled to the surplus proceeds. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. sen. 52.

A testator devised certain freeholds to trustees to sell, and he directed the proceeds to be carried to the fund of his personal estate:—Held, not to be a conversion from realty to personalty, so as to entitle the next of kin to take a part of the produce, which being given to charity was void, under the Statute of Mortmain, but that the heir was entitled. Williams v. Williams, 5 L. J., Ch. 84.

A testator directed his executors immediately to lay out 30,000*l.*, in the purchase of an estate in his name, the income of which he settled to one for life, with remainder to others in tail, with remainder to a charity; the money was not actually laid out previous to the estate for life and the estates tail being spent. The gift of the charity failing by reason of the Mortmain Act, and the estates tail not having been barred:—Held, that the next of kin, and not the heir-at-law, were entitled to the 30,000*l.* Cogan v. Stephens, 1 Beav. 482, n.; 5 L. J., Ch. 17.

Mixed Fund—Actual Conversion.]—Upon a direction to convert all testator's real and personal estate into money, and at a certain time to invest a sum out of personal estate for a charity, and at the end of twelve months to lay out the residue, "all his property being personal," for other charitable purposes:—Held, that the charitable purposes failed, so far as the fund arose from the real estate, or any other than pure personal property, and that the heir was entitled to so much of the residue of the mixed fund as arose from the sale of the real estate. Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 409; 9 L. J., Ch. 244.

ii. Accumulation and Remoteness.

Rents and Profits, Accumulations of—Not Disposed of.]—Rents and profits under a trust to accumulate, being in the event not disposed of, belong to the heir-at-law. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491.

—— Void under Thellusson Act—Unexhausted Interest out of Real Estate.]—The 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, was not intended, nor does it operate, to alter any disposition of a testator, except his direction to accumulate; and the income which the statute forbids to accumulate must go as in the case of intestacy. Where the testator empowered trustees to sell the real estate when they pleased after his death, but if not done before the death of his youngest child then to sell for the benefit of the grandchildren or their children, and his youngest child survived him twenty-nine years:—Held, that the direction that the income should accumulate after twenty-one years was void, and that the void accumulation belonged to the next of kin, but the unexhausted interest arising out of the real estate to the heir. Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564; 4 Myl. & C. 231; 7 L. J., Ch. 220; 3 Jur. 450; 2 ib. 583.

Charge on Estate—Trusts of Fund declared by Reference—Trusts of Principal Fund for Accumulation—Void under Thellusson Act—Effect of Charge—Conversion.]—By a settlement, a moiety of freehold estates was limited by the settlor for uses, with an ultimate remainder to himself in fee. Power was reserved to the settlor to charge the moiety, by deed or will, with 6,000*l.*, to be raised and paid as he should think fit. By a deed poll, the settlor charged the moiety with 6,000*l.*, and directed that it should be raised and held upon such trusts as he should by his will direct. And by his will he directed the 6,000*l.* to be retained and held upon the trusts thereby declared of his residuary personal estate. The trusts declared by the settlor's will of his residuary personal estate partly failed, by reason of the accumulations directed being void:—Held, that although there had been a failure of the purposes for which the residuary estate was given, it did not follow that there had been a failure of the purposes for which the conversion of part of the moiety into the 6,000*l.* had been directed, for that conversion had been complete; that there was no resulting trust of any part of the 6,000*l.* in favour of the persons entitled to the real estate; and that therefore the whole of the 6,000*l.* must be raised out of the real estate on which it was charged. Simmons v. Pitt, 28 L. T. 327. Affirmed, L. R. 8 Ch. 978; 21 W. R. 860.

Devise for Conversion Void for Remoteness—Heir—Law of Descent.]—Under a devise, previously to the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, to trustees, one being the testator's heir-at-law upon trust (subject to prior estates) for conversion, the trust for conversion being void for remoteness, the equitable reversionary interest thus left undisposed of results as part of the old use, and descends to the heir in his character of heir, and does not so merge in his legal interest, under the devise to him as a trustee, as to break the descent and constitute him a fresh stock, from which, on decease intestate, the descent is to be traced. Buchanan v. Harrison, 1 John. & H. 662.

c. Gift for Payment of Debts and Legacies.

Real Estate, Direction to Sell and Pay Surplus — Part Unsold.]—Where trustees were directed to sell the whole real estate to pay debts, and to pay surplus to A. and B., if only part of estates are sold, and fully pay the debts, the remainder unsold shall go to A. and B., as if actually sold. Collingwood v. Wallis, 1 Eq. Abr. 395. S. P., Davers v. Folkes, ib. 396.

Lands Appointed to Pay Debts—Lands to be Sold.]—If lands are appointed to pay debts, the heir is entitled to them when the debts are paid; and if to be sold, he is entitled to the surplus; but if there be any abuse, his remedy is against the trustee, and not against the purchaser. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115.

Quære, if a purchaser with notice might not be affected. Ib.

Lands Devised for Sale in aid of Personal Estate—Devise to Wife and Heirs.]—Lands devised to his wife and heirs, to be sold for the payment of debts and legacies, in aid of the personal estate, and not being sold, if the personal estate is sufficient to discharge the whole, the heir shall have the lands as a resulting trust. Buggins v. Yates, 9 Mod. 122.

Lands Devised for Sale to Executors.]—One devises lands to his executors (who are not relations) to sell for the best price, and to pay his debts, legacies, and funerals, so far as the same will extend, and gives legacies to his heir-at-law, and 100*l.* to the children of one of his executors, but nothing to his executors; in such case the executors shall be but trustees for the heirs-at-law after debts paid. Starkey v. Brooks, 1 P. W. 390. But see Cunningham v. Mellish, Pre. Ch. 31; 2 Vern. 247.

Real Estate—Conversion for Answering Legacies.]—Conversion directed by will, of real estate into personal, not to all intents, but for the purpose only of answering legacies and annuities; subject to that as to the real estate a resulting trust for the heir. Hooper v. Goodwin, 18 Ves. 156.

—— Direction for Sale or Charge for Payment of Debts.]—The distinction between a direction to sell real estate out and out for payment of debts, and a charge for payment of debts, is exploded as to any effect in exempting the personalty. In either case the residue, if undisposed of, goes to the heir, unless there be a disposition made demonstrative of an intent that it shall change its nature and become personal. M'Cleland v. Shaw, 2 Sch. & Lef. 538.

—— Particular Property — Intention.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to persons whom he appointed his executors, in the first place to sell an advowson, and apply the proceeds in discharge of his debts and legacies, and if they should be insufficient, then to cut timber to the value of 500*l.*, and if that should not be sufficient then to raise the deficiency by sale or mortgage of his real estate; and he directed his executors to retain their expenses, but he did not expressly declare any trust of his personal estate. A suit was instituted, in which it was decided that the personal estate was primarily liable to the payment of the debts and legacies :—Held, that the money raised by sale of the advowson and timber constituted personal and not real estate. Bowra v. Rhodes, 31 L. J., Ch. 676 ; 6 L. T. 560 ; 10 W. R. 456.

See also 3, post.

d. Partial Disposition.

Produce of Real Estate not Exhausted—Mixed Fund.]—Resulting trust for the heir-at-law as to the produce of the sale of real estate, not exhausted by a trust in which it was combined with the personal. Robinson v. Taylor, 1 Ves. 44.

Devise, after payment of debts, legacies, &c., of specific freehold and leasehold estates, to A., subject to incumbrances, and of all other his freehold and leasehold estates, together with all his personal estate, to trustees, to sell, and out of the money, in the first place, to pay their expenses in execution of the will or trust, and, without further disposition, appointing the trustees executors :—Held, a resulting trust as to the produce of the real estate for the heir-at-law. Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 173.

A testator directed the proceeds of the sale of his estate to be invested for the benefit of his three daughters, and the interest thereof to be paid to each of his said daughters during their respective natural lives ; and after the decease of each of them he directed that one-half of the fund or share, the income of which was thereby directed to be paid to the parent respectively for life as aforesaid, should be paid to the children of each of his said daughters :—Held, that the daughters did not take absolute interests, and that the testator's heir was entitled to the undisposed-of portion of the real estate, whether converted or not. Whitehead v. Rennett, 22 L. J., Ch. 1020 ; 18 Jur. 140 ; 1 Eq. Rep. 561 ; 1 W. R. 406.

—— Gift for want of Appointment—Resulting Trust.]—A. by will devises his lands to trustees to sell, and to dispose of the money as he by writing should appoint, and for want of appointment, to his four nephews, and by writing appoints his trustees to pay several sums to several persons, but not near the value of lands : —Decreed, the surplus to the heir, and not to the nephews, as an interest resulting, and not disposed of. London Corporation v. Garway, 2 Vern. 571.

—— Legacy to Heir.]—Land is devised to trustees to sell, and out of the money arising by the sale, amongst other sums to pay 100*l.* to his heir-at-law, and no disposition is made by the testator of the surplus of his estate. The land shall not be turned into personal estate, nor more sold than is necessary to pay the legacy ; and the heir shall have the surplus. Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425 ; Pre. Ch. 162.

—— Settlement—Sum Reserved to Settlor.]—Upon settlement of lands, to be sold in trust for several purposes, the residue is given to B. and his assigns, reserving only 200*l.* to appointee or settlor. Settlor died without appointing : the 200*l.* shall go to his heir, and not to B. or his assigns. Anon., Comb. 345.

A. directs that his estate should be sold after his death, for several purposes, and, amongst others, that 200*l.* should be disposed of as he by a note should appoint, and dies intestate, having given no directions. This 200*l.* shall be a resulting trust for the heir-at-law. Emblyn v. Freeman, Pre. Ch. 541.

—— Sum Reserved to Answer Annuity.]—Estates devised to executors upon trust for the purposes after-mentioned. The testator proceeded to direct a sale of the estates, and the division of the produce among his five children, after first reserving a sufficient capital, the interest arising from which should be sufficient to pay an annuity of 400*l.* to his wife for her life ; but he did not declare any trust, at the wife's death, of the sum to be so reserved :—Held, a resulting trust for the heir. Watson v. Hayes, 5 Myl. & C. 125 ; 9 Sim. 500 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 8 Ib. 169 ; 4 Jur. 186 ; 3 Ib. 143.

—— Life Interest in Proceeds of Realty, Gift of — Bequest of all Testator's Effects.]—Testator devised a copyhold estate to his wife, upon trust to sell and invest the money in the funds, and gave the interest and dividends to her use. He also gave and bequeathed to her all his effects whatsoever and wheresoever, for her maintenance, upon full trust and confidence in her justice and equity, that at her decease she would make a proper distribution of what effects might be left in money, goods, or otherwise to his children :—Held, the widow, executrix, entitled to the produce of the copyhold estate for life only, with a resulting trust as to the capital for the heir. Wilson v. Major, 11 Ves. 205.

—— Devise for Sale of Rent-charges to pay Pecuniary Legacy — Surplus.] — One devises a rent charge to be sold to pay legacies amounting to 800*l.*, and if the rent charge should sell for 1,000*l.* the testator gives a further legacy of 200*l.* The rent charge sells for above 800*l.*, and less than 1,000*l.* ; what exceeds the 800*l.* shall belong to the heir as a resulting trust. Stonehouse v. Evelyn, 3 P. W. 252.

Money to be laid out — Resulting Trust whether as Real or Personal Estate.]—A testator directed a part of his personal estate to be converted into realty and settled on certain trusts. These being exhausted, and no investment having been made :—Held, that the residuary legatee was entitled to the fund, and took it in the character of personalty. Hereford v. Ravenhill, 5 Beav. 51 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 173 ; 6 Jur. 228.

Personalty directed by will to be laid out in land, to be held on trusts which do not exhaust the absolute interest, devolves, after the expiration of the specified trusts, upon the executors of the testator for the benefit of his next of kin, and not upon his heir. Such personalty is not taken by the next of kin as realty, but, notwithstanding the constructive or actual conversion, goes to the executors to be dealt with as personal estate. Head v. Godlee, Johns. 536 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 633 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 499 ; 8 W. R. 147. But see next case.

Where personal estate is bequeathed upon trusts for conversion into land to be held on trusts which ultimately fail, land purchased before the failure of the trusts goes to the next of kin as real estate. Head v. Godlee ante, overruled. Curteis v. Wormald, 10 Ch. D. 172 ; 40 L. T. 108 ; 27 W. R. 419.

—— Trusts by Reference—Uncertainty—Ineffectual Disposition.]—E. by deed conveyed several sums of money, secured by mortgages, amounting to 60,000*l.*, to trustees in trust to be laid out in the purchase of lands to the use of himself for life, remainder as to sums to the amount of 28,000*l.* to his wife for life, remainder to his son R. for life, with several remainders over, remainder to J. in fee : and as to sums amounting to 23,000*l.* to R. for life, with several intermediate remainders, remainder to J. in fee ; and as to one particular mortgage of 8,500*l.* and some leasehold estates to secure annuities, the surplus to R. in fee with power of revocation. By his will he gave these leasehold estates and the mortgage for 8,500*l.*, together with another mortgage of 6,700*l.*, in trust to secure the annuities, the surplus, interest, or rents of the lands purchased to be paid to R. for life, and to be settled in the same manner as his other estates :—Held, first, these mortgages are to be considered as real estate ; secondly, it being uncertain which of the limitations they were to follow, they are undisposed of and passed to R. as heir-at-law, and from him to his general devisee, E., who having died intestate as to the real estate, they go to the heir-at-law, D. Leslie v. Devonshire (Duke), 2 Bro. C. C. 189.

e. Lapse.

Mixed Fund.]—Testator gave several legacies, and ordered his real and personal estate to be sold, his debts and legacies paid, and the residue to certain legatees, in the proportion of their legacies. Two of the residuary legatees died, living the testator. These shares are lapsed, and so far as they are constituted by personal estate shall go to the person next of kin ; and so far as they consisted of real estate, to the heir-at-law. Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Bro. C. C. 503.

See 7 Price, 258. See also Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 752.

Real and personal, by will, to be sold ; legacies, &c. therewith to be paid ; residue by fifths to five persons. One dies before testator : —Held, to be real estate to heir of testator. Digby v. Legard, Dick, 500.

A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and as to the moneys to arise by such sale, directed that they should sink into, and be deemed part of, the residue of his personal estate, and be applied accordingly ; he then bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust for his sons and daughters in equal proportions. One of the sons died in the testator's lifetime : —Held, that the share of the deceased son in the produce of the real estate was to be deemed real estate and as undisposed of by the will, and that it went to the heir-at-law of the testator. Taylor v. Taylor, 3 De G. M. & G. 190 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 742 ; 17 Jur. 583 ; 1 W. R. 398.

The decision in Phillips v. Phillips, post, overruled. Ib.

In case of a lapsed legacy, to be paid out of a mixed fund of real and personal estate, the next of kin will take the whole benefit of the lapse, if it appears upon the will to have been the testator's intention that the produce of his real estate directed to be sold after his death should, for all purposes, have the same quality as if it had been part of his personal estate at his death. Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. & K. 649 ; 1 L. J., Ch. 214.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate, in trust to sell and constitute a mixed and blended fund. He thereout gave J. B. 100*l.* and one-eighteenth of the residue, and he gave the remaining portions of the residue to other persons. J. B. died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, that the next of kin and heir were entitled to their proportionate part of the lapsed share of the residue, and that the legacy of 100*l.* fell into the residue, and passed by the gift thereof. Salt v. Chattaway, 3 Beav. 576 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 234.

Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and pay and apply the proceeds of such real and personal estates, and also all the rents, interest, and profits thereof until sale, in such manner as thereinafter mentioned ; and, after making a provision for his wife for her life out of the said proceeds, he directed that the residue of the said fund should be divided into fifty equal shares, which he bequeathed amongst various legatees, giving a certain number to each, and directing that, in case either of such legatees should die before his shares should become vested, such shares were to sink into the residue : —Held, upon the construction of the will, that certain portions of the residue (which was wholly made up of proceeds of realty) which had lapsed by the death of the legatees thereof in the lifetime of the testator belonged to the heir at law, and not to the next of kin of the testator. Fairbairn v. Rothwell, 9 Jur. 787.

Real Estate — Conversion — Legacy.] — F., having an estate which came to her ex parte maternâ, on her marriage conveyed the same to trustees to such uses as she should direct, with remainder to her own right heirs. By will, she directed the estate to be sold, the money to be laid out in the funds, and the trustees to permit the husband to receive the interest for life ; then, after the deduction of 3,500*l.* to uses which vested in the plaintiff A., and after payment of 1,000*l.* to G., to pay the residue of the purchase-money to the three defendants. G. died, leaving the testatrix. The 1,000*l.* is real, not personal, and shall not go to the executors of G. (though given to her executors), nor to the personal representative of the testatrix, nor yet to the residuary legatee of the purchase-money, but to the heir-at-law ex parte maternâ (the side from which the estate came). Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Bro. C. C. 128.

—— Conversion for Payment of Legacy.] — Conversion of real estate into personal, by will, for payment of a legacy which lapsed :—Held, a resulting trust, for heir. Williams v. Coade, 10 Ves. 500.

Resulting trust for the heir ; a special disposition of the money to be raised by sale of real estate failing by lapse. Gibbs v. Ougier, 12 Ves. 416 ; 8 R. R. 348.

—— Conversion for Division among Legatees.] —Upon the construction of a will the court held that a testator intended a conversion of real estate for the sole purpose of division amongst specific persons, and that, the purpose for conversion having failed, so far as regarded one who predeceased him, the heir-at-law was entitled. Pring, Ex parte, 4 Y. & C. 507 ; 5 Jur. 529.

f. Contingent Gifts.

Gift if B. dies to C.—Money to be Laid Out.]—One devises 8,000*l.* to be laid out in a purchase, and settled to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs ; but if B. dies in the lifetime of A., then to C. and his heirs. B. and C. both die in the lifetime of A., the money not being laid out upon the death of A. ; this money shall be considered as lands, and shall go to the heirs of C., and not to his executors. Scudamore v. Scudamore, Pre. Ch. 543.

Gift to A. at 21—Mixed Fund.]—Bequest of accumulated fund from real and personal estate, when the legatee attains twenty-one, upon his death, under that age, a resulting trust for the respective representatives. Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368. Affirmed, 19 Ves. 652 ; 11 R. R. 214. And see Spencer v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 754 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 501 ; 29 L. T. 19.

—— Legacy out of Proceeds of Lands to be Sold.]—One has two sons, A. and B., and three daughters, and devises his lands to be sold, to pay his debts, and as to the moneys arising by sale after debts paid, he gives 200*l.* thereout to his eldest son A., at twenty-one, the residue to his four younger children equally. A., the eldest, dies before twenty-one, the 200*l.* shall go to the heir of the testator. Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 19.

Gift to Children at 21 or Marriage—Mixed Fund—Death under 21 and Unmarried of Daughter and Heir.]—A testator directs a mixed fund, composed of the produce of his real and personal estate, to be applied to certain specified purposes, and the residue to be divided equally among his children or child at twenty-one, if sons, and twenty-one or marriage, if daughters ; and if no child, to such person or persons as he should by his codicil appoint. The testator died without having made a codicil, leaving an only daughter his heir, who died under twenty-one, intestate and unmarried :—Held, that so much of the residuary fund as was constituted of real estate descended to the heir, but in the character of personal estate, and that such personal estate, together with the residuary personal estate of the testator, was, in the event which had happened, undisposed of, and divisible under the Statute of Distributions. Jessopp v. Watson, 1 Myl. & K. 665 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 197.

Discretionary power of Sale—Sale during existence of Contingent Interest.]—C., by will, devised real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his two children, a son and daughter, in equal shares, and gave the trustees a power of sale at discretion. One half the daughter's share was settled by the will. On the marriage of the daughter, E. R. C., in 1865, a deed was executed appointing new trustees of the will, and declaring that they should stand possessed of the settled half of the daughter's share on the trusts of the will, and the unsettled half upon the trusts declared by a settlement of even date. By the settlement the unsettled share and certain other property were conveyed to the same trustees upon trust for the said E. R. C. (with no words of limitation) until her marriage, then upon trust to invest and to hold the investments upon the usual trusts in favour of her, her husband and children, with an ultimate trust for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns. At the date of the settlement a large part of the real estate devised by the will remained unsold. E. R. C. afterwards survived her husband and died, leaving an infant daughter who died without ever attaining a vested interest under the settlement. A part of the real estate was sold during E. R. C.'s life, and the residue during the life of her daughter, who had a contingent, though not a vested interest :—Held, that no conversion of the real estate devised by the will was effected by the settlement, but the whole having been sold while there was in existence an interest, though not a vested interest, under the trusts of the settlement, the whole property so sold, and not only that sold in E. R. C.'s lifetime, was converted, and must be taken by her personal representatives. Sinclair's Settlement, In re, Crump v. Leicester, 56 L. T. 83.

3. Residuary Gifts, Operation of.

a. Conversion Out and Out.

Produce of Real Estate—Absolute Gift to Trustees and Executors.]—Residuary bequest to trustees and executors, describing both by their character and names, to be disposed of to such person and persons, and in such manner and form, and in such sum and sums of money as they in their discretion shall think proper and expedient :—Held, an absolute interest to them beneficially, or an absolute power of appointment, excluding the next of kin and the heir, as to the produce of real estate. Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 294 ; 13 R. R. 88.

Testator, after reciting that his property consisted of a house at C—— (which was freehold) and of mortgages, &c., directed the house to be sold, and then gave several pecuniary legacies, and amongst them 300*l.* to G. and 100*l.* to P., whom he appointed his executors. The will concluded thus : "And to Mr. G., who is likewise my executor, any sum then appearing after the contents of this my will are fully complied with and fulfilled." G. died the day after the testator, without having proved the will :—Held, in a suit by his executors against the testator's heir and next of kin, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the residue of the testator's estate, including the proceeds of the house. If an executor is also the residuary legatee, he is entitled to the residue, although he does not prove the will. Griffiths v. Pruen, 11 Sim. 202.

—— Devise of Personal Estate.]—Where a man devises his real estate to be sold to pay debts and certain pecuniary legacies, and subject to his debts and legacies devises his personal estate to his sister :—Held, that the proceeds of the real estate passed. Mallabar v. Mallabar, Cas. t. Talb. 78.

—— Trusts by Reference—Charge of Debts.—A., by will, devises his real estate to trustees in trust, to sell the same, in order to pay off the incumbrances, and apply the residue as he directed with respect to residue of his personal estate ; he devises the residue of his personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, to executors on trusts :—Held, on construction, that surplus money produced by sale of real estates. was charged with the payment of simple contract debts. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 7 Bro. P. C. 573 ; 2 R. R. 118.

—— Legacy — Lapse.] — A legacy out of the produce of a copyhold estate directed to be sold, failing, was held to pass by the residuary clause against the heir, the object being a general conversion out and out. Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802.

Devise in trust to sell, but not for less than 10,000*l*., and to pay several sums amounting to 7,800*l*., and the overplus moneys arising from the sale to A. :—Held, a specific legacy of 10,000*l*., and the sale producing less, A. and the others to abate ; legacies to charity, void by the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, fell into the general residue. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463 ; 11 R. R. 234.

Devise of freeholds to be sold, and after payment of debts the residue to be invested on certain trusts :—Held, a conversion even as to a share of which the gift lapsed. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 36 ; 7 Ib. 70 ; 2 Jur. 1029 ; 1 Ib. 915.

—— Residuary Legatees.]—A testator directed the payment of his funeral expenses and lawful debts out of the proceeds of his property, and directed the sale of all his landed property in the Landed Estates Court, for its full value, with the exception of one estate, which he devised to A. for life. and at her death to B., with remainder to T., who was constituted residuary legatee. He left several pecuniary legacies, not stating out of what fund they were to be paid :—Held, that the direction for sale of the real estate amounted to a conversion of it out and out into personalty, for the general objects of the will, and that the surplus of the proceeds of the sale passed to the residuary legatee, and not to the heir-at-law. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404 ; 38 L. T. 653 ; 26 W. R. 722.

Mixed Fund—Interest of Produce of Real Estate.]—A bequest of a moiety of the interest of the residue of the testator's personal estate :—Held, upon the context of the will, to pass the interest of the proceeds of real estate, which were directed to be invested so as to form one mixed fund with the residue of the personalty. Byam v. Munton, 1 Russ. & M. 503; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 156.

—— Charitable Legacies.]—Where a testator directed his real and personal estate to be sold, and his debts and legacies to be thereout paid, including certain charitable legacies, and gave the residue of the mixed fund to A. and B. :—Held, the failure of the charitable legacies to enure to the benefit of A. and B. Green v. Jackson, 2 Russ. & M. 238. Affirming, 5 Russ. 35.

Real estate directed to be sold, and together with personal applied (inter alia) in charitable purpose and "that the trustees should place out all the residue of testator's estate, and the interest thereon, on securities, and divide it, &c." :—Held, first, that the bequest as to the charity was void ; and next, that the whole, as to the other matters, was turned into personalty. Durour v. Motteux, 1 Ves. sen. 320.

—— Residuary Gift of Personal Estate.] — A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees to convert into money, and out of the proceeds of the conversion to pay certain legacies and annuities, and he directed his trustees to hold the residue of his personal estate so converted into money, upon trust to pay the income for the benefit of his four natural children, or such of them as might be living at his death, until they should attain twenty-one or marry, and when they attained that age upon trust to pay or transfer the residue of his personal estate unto the four children in equal shares as tenants in common :—Held, first, that the residuary clause passed all the real estate which he had before directed to be converted as well as all the personalty. Spencer v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 754 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 501; 29 L. T. 19.

Held, also, that the shares of the four children did not vest till twenty-one, and that the share of one child who died under twenty-one was undisposed of, and passed as to the realty to the heir-at-law, and as to the personalty to the next of kin of the testator. Ib.

A testator, by his will, made in 1872, after certain legacies, devised his real estate and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees to sell, and to dispose of the net moneys to arise from such real and residuary personal estate (after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies), "according to the trusts thereinafter declared concerning the same," with a discretionary power for the trustees to postpone the sale, and let and manage his unsold real estate, and with a declaration that the unsold real estate and outstanding personal estate should be subject to the trusts thereinafter declared concerning the net moneys, and that the rents should be annual income for the purpose of the same trusts, and such real estate should be considered as converted in equity. And he directed his trustees to stand possessed of the net moneys to arise as aforesaid, upon trust to pay an annuity, and subject thereto, and to the payment of his debts, legacies, funeral and testamentary expenses, to stand possessed of his "residuary personal estate" upon trust as to one moiety for his son absolutely, and as to the other moiety, for his daughter for her life, with remainder for her children :—Held, that though there was no express direction as to the proceeds of the sale of the real estate, they did not go to the heir-at-law, but were included in the trusts of the residuary personal estate. Court v. Buckland, 45 L. J., Ch. 214 ; 1 Ch. D. 605.

A testator, by his will, empowered his executors to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses out of the proceeds of his property, and, after reciting that he was possessed of landed and chattel property, as stated in a schedule, directed his executors to sell his landed property, and then proceeded to give a number of large pecuniary legacies, without stating out of what fund they were to be paid. and appointed a residuary legatee. The amount of the legacies far exceeded that of the testator's pure personalty as set out in the schedule, or at the time of his death a year afterwards, when he had practically no debts :—Held, that the direction to sell the real estate amounted to a conversion of it out and out into personalty so as to make the legacies payable thereout, and to cause the surplus to pass to the residuary legatee. The unsuccessful heir ordered to abide his own costs. Watson v. Arundell, Ir. R. 11. Eq. 53.

b. Conversion Incomplete.

Charitable Legacy raisable out of Real Estate —"After Payment of."]—Where devisor directs that after payment of 800*l.* to charity, to be raised by sale of real estate, the residue thereof should go to the residuary devisee :—Held, legacy to charity being void, 800*l.* goes to heir, and not to residuary devisee. Jones v. Mitchell, 1 Sim. & S. 290 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 163.

Proceeds of Land—Charitable Legacy out of.] —Devise of lands to be sold, and part of the money arising by sale to go to charitable uses, and the residue of the money is given over. So much as is given in mortmain shall lapse to heir, and not go to the residuary legatees. Gravenor v. Hallum, Ambl. 643.

—— Surplus—Gift of all Personal Estate and Effects.]—A testator devised his real estate to trustees in trust for sale, and out of the proceeds and out of the rents, till sale, to pay his debts and the trustees' costs, charges, and expenses, and then upon trust to pay three legacies of 500*l.* each ; and, as to all his personal estate and effects, the testator gave the same to T. R., his executors, administrators, and assigns : — Held, that the will did not give to T. R., nor dispose of, the surplus of the beneficial interest in the produce of the testator's real estate, after paying the charges which ought to be considered as imposed thereon ; and that such surplus belongs to the heir-at-law. Collis v. Robins, 1 De G. & Sm. 131 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 251 ; 11 Jur. 362.

—— Freeholds and Leaseholds—Surplus—Marshalling.]—Testatrix devised all her messuages, &c., and real estate to trustees, to sell and pay funeral, &c., expenses and legacies, except her charitable legacies, which she directed to be paid out of her personal estate legally applicable for that purpose, not out of any part of her said messuages, &c. ; and she also directed her trustees to keep separate accounts of the proceeds of her messuages, and of her personal estate legally applicable, as aforesaid ; and that if proceeds from messuages should be insufficient to pay the legacies, trustees to apply her personal estate, and she gave her personal estate and effects undisposed of to A. :—Held, first, that though personal estate was more than sufficient for charity, no part of it could be applied to pay other legacies, until proceeds of real estate were exhausted ; secondly, that testatrix's leasehold passed to trustees under devise of all her messuages, &c. ; thirdly, that her heir and next-of-kin, and not residuary legatee, were entitled to surplus proceeds of freeholds and leaseholds ; and, fourth, that freeholds having been properly sold in heir's lifetime, the surplus was part of his personal estate. Dixon v. Dawson, 2 Sim. & S. 327 ; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 195.

—— Charge of Legacies—Surplus Personalty after Charges—Marshalling.]—Devise of freehold estate, in trust to sell and apply the money towards payment of the legacies ; the residue of the personal estate, after payment of debts, legacies, &c., upon trust to convert all the said residue of testator's personal estate into ready money to be laid out in freehold property, to be settled. The personal estate leaving a residue beyond the charges, the real estate a resulting trust for the heir-at-law, and charged with the legacies, not primarily, but as an auxiliary fund to the personal estate. Maugham v. Mason, 1 Ves. & B. 410 ; 12 R. R. 251.

Mixed Fund—Legacy—Lapse—Intention.]—A testator gave her real estates upon trust to be sold, and directed the moneys to arise from such sale to be considered and taken as part of her personal estate ; she then willed that out of the moneys to arise from such sale, and out of all other her personal estate, certain pecuniary legacies should be paid, and bequeathed all the residue of her personal estate, and of the moneys arising from the sale of her real estates, upon trust for two persons and their children. Some of the pecuniary legatees died in the testatrix's lifetime : — Held, that the conversion of the real estate into personal, directed by the will, was not absolute but partial only, for the purpose of making good the pecuniary legacies, and that such of those legacies as had lapsed, in so far as they were payable out of the produce of real estate, had lapsed for the benefit of the heir at law. Amphlett v. Parke, 2 Russ. & M. 221 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 161. Reversing on these points S. C., 1 Sim. 275 ; 4 Russ. 75 ; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 139. The suit was compromised on appeal to the House of Lords. See 1 Myl. & K. 653, 660, n.

—— Pecuniary Legacy not Disposed of.]—Testator gave real estate to be sold and the produce to be considered as part of his personal estate, and thereout and out of his personal estate gave legacies to his next of kin, heir, and others ; he gave other estates to be sold and the produce to be considered from henceforth as other part of his said personal estate, and to be disposed of in manner following ; he then gave legacies, and some estates specifically, and other legacies out of his said trust moneys, and personal estate ; and gave his executor 1,000*l.* to be disposed of according to any instructions he might leave in writing ; and gave all the residue of his goods and chattels, and personal estates and effects, whatsoever, subject to debts, legacies, &c. No instructions being found, the heir is entitled to the 1,000*l.* Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. 683.

—— Appointment of "Residuary" Executors.]—Devise of real estate to be sold, the object being a provision for legacies, is not an absolute conversion, and is therefore a resulting trust for heir-at-law as to surplus, though a residuary legatee is appointed. Berry v. Usher, 11 Ves. 87.

—— Residuary Legatees "Appointed and Devised"—Legacy to Heir.]—The intention of testator being to provide an auxiliary fund for legacies, and not a complete conversion out and out, the residue of the real estate, after making good the deficiency of the personal in payment of legacies, is a resulting trust for the heir, notwithstanding a legacy given him, and the testator "appointed and devised residuary legatees." Kellett v. Kellett, 1 Ball & B. 533 ; 12 R. R. 54. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 248 ; 15 R. R. 63.

A legacy to the heir not sufficient to defeat his claim to the undisposed real estate. Ib.

Whether the case of resulting trust arise between the heir and next-of-kin, or heir and residuary legatee, the question is, what is the residue? Ib.

—— Residuary Legatee.]—In December, 1867, J. devised her moiety of the freehold lands of B. to her sister L., for life, to whom she also left certain personalty absolutely, and appointed her "residuary legatee." The testatrix then proceeded, subject to L.'s life estate, to declare a trust for the sale of the premises, and out of the proceeds gave two effectual legacies, and several charitable bequests which subsequently failed from her dying within three months of the date of her will. L. having died in July, 1869:—Held, that the words "residuary legatee" referring primâ facie to personalty, there was nothing in the context of J.'s will to enlarge their operation into a gift of real estate, and that, consequently, her heir-at-law took the realty or its proceeds, which became undisposed of from the failure of the charitable bequests charged thereon; but that, since the purpose for which a conversion had been directed had not wholly failed, he took such real estate as personalty. Hamilton v. Foot, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 572.

Real and Personal Estate—Devise to Executor to Pay Debts and Legacies—Gift to Executor of "Rest and Residue."]—Real and personal estate devised to the executor in trust to pay debts and legacies, the rest and residue to himself, the only purpose of devising the real appearing to be to insure payment of the debts, without any intention to disinherit the heir:—Held, only a charge, and that the heir was entitled to the surplus of the real estate. Halliday v. Hudson, 3 Ves. 210.

—— Gift to Executor for Purposes of Will—Construction.]—Under a gift of real and residuary personal estate to a person appointed executor, "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of this my will," the court refused to admit extrinsic evidence to show that the executor was entitled beneficially, and was not a trustee merely for the heir of the surplus real estate, the heir being entitled by construction, and not by implication of law. Barrs v. Feukes, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 669; 12 L. T. 727; 13 W. R. 987.

Real Estate—Will—Power of Sale.]—The produce of real estate, sold under a power in a will, passed by a residuary clause with the personal estate, the object being a conversion out and out; but part remaining unsold:—Held, a resulting trust for heir-at-law. Brown v. Bigg, 7 Ves. 279.

Money to be Laid Out—Settlement, Articles for—Money at Home.]—Money, by marriage articles, agreed to be laid out in land, and settled on the husband and wife, and their issue, remainder to the right heirs of the husband; though the money at first is bound by the articles, yet when the husband and wife are dead without issue, the money is in the disposal of the husband, and will be assets, and go to his executor and administrator, and à fortiori to his residuary legatee. Chichester v. Bickerstaff, 2 Vern. 295.

See also Bowes v. Shrewsbury, 5 Bro. P. C. 144.

4. EXPRESS DECLARATION, EFFECT OF.

Direction to Convert — "All Property being Personal."] — Upon a direction to convert all testator's real and personal estate into money, and at a certain time to invest a sum out of personal estate for a charity, and at the end of twelve months to lay out the residue, "all his property being personal," for other charitable purposes:—Held, that the charitable purposes failed, so far as the fund arose from the real estate, or any other than pure personal property, and that the heir was entitled to so much of the residue of the mixed fund as arose from the sale of the real estate; the heir is not affected by the actual conversion of land into money, and so much of the interest as is not exhausted by the disposition belongs to him; but when it can be clearly ascertained that the intention of the testator is, that the produce of his real estate shall, to all intents and purposes, be treated as personal estate, so as to devolve upon the persons entitled thereto, the court will give effect to that intention, whether directly expressed or necessarily to be inferred. Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 409; 9 L. J., Ch. 244.

Negative Words — Next of Kin.] — Where there is no gift of the undisposed-of residue, a testator cannot by negative words exclude one of his next of kin from participating in it. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Beav. 318.

—— Heir.]—Upon a devise of personal and real estate for sale, to be held by the trustees as a fund of personal estate only, and no part by reason of any event to lapse or result for the benefit of the heir-at-law; and the testatrix, after bequeathing certain legacies, directed the residue of her estate to be paid and applied as she should thereafter appoint, and she made no appointment:—Held, that the heir was entitled to the proceeds of the real estate undisposed of by the will. Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare, 145; 17 L. J., Ch. 361; 12 Jur. 645.

Proceeds of Realty to be Considered "Personal Estate to all Intents and Purposes."]—Devise and bequest of freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estate, upon trust for sale, with a direction that the proceeds, after payment of all costs, charges, and expenses attending the same, shall be considered, to all intents and purposes, as part of the testator's personal estate; and a gift of the residue of his money, London Assurance stock, securities for money, &c., to the London Hospital for the purposes of the charity:—Held, that the real and personal estate were thrown into one mass; and that the charge of debts, legacies, and costs were to be apportioned between the real and personal estate pro ratâ. Robinson v. London Hospital (Governors), 10 Hare, 19; 22 L. J., Ch. 754.

A direction that the proceeds of the real and leasehold estate should be considered as part of the personal estate, does not take away the right of the heir; nor does the addition to that direction, that the real estate shall be taken to be personal estate "to all intents and purposes" take away that right. Ib.

Intention to Dispose of all Real and Personal Estate — Surplus Undisposed of.]—Testatrix by her will, after expressing an intention to dispose of all her real and personal estate as thereinafter mentioned, gave certain legacies and appointed A. and B. her executors, and gave to them and their heirs all lawful powers and authorities to conduct and manage her freehold estates, so as that the same might at their discretion be sold and converted into money, and she directed that the net money should form part of her personal estate; and for those and every other purpose connected with her property, whether real or personal, she invested A. and B., and the survivor of them, and his heirs, executors, and administrators, with her full authority; and she directed that any undisposed-of surplus of moneys should be paid as she should by any future writing or will direct; she did not, however, make any future writing or will. After her death A. and B. sold her real estates. Her personal estate was sufficient to pay her debts and legacies:—Held, that her heirs, and not her next of kin, were entitled to the moneys produced by the sale. Flint v. Warren, 16 Sim. 124; 12 Jur. 810.

Proceeds of Realty to be deemed Personal Estate—Share Undisposed of.]—A testator devised freehold estates upon trust to sell, with a declaration that the moneys to arise from such sale should be deemed part of his personal estate, and that the income thereof till sale should be considered as part of the income of his personal estate, and be subject to the disposition of his personal estate thereinafter made. The testator then gave his personal estate upon trust for four persons as tenants in common. By a codicil the testator revoked the residuary gift to one of the four, who was also the testator's heir-at-law and customary heir:—Held, that the heir was entitled to so much of the lapsed residue as consisted of real estate. Gordon v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & Sm. 478.

—— Lapse.]—A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and as to the moneys to arise by such sale, directed that they should sink into and be deemed part of the residue of his personal estate, and be applied accordingly; he then bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust for his sons and daughters in equal proportions. One of the sons died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the share of the deceased son in the produce of the real estate was to be deemed real estate and as undisposed of by the will, and that it went to the heir-at-law of the testator. Taylor v. Taylor, 3 De G. M. & G. 190; 22 L. J., Ch. 742; 17 Jur. 583; 1 W. R. 398.

The decision in Phillips v. Phillips (1 Myl. & K. 649), overruled. Ib.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, to raise an annuity for his widow and invest the surplus; and after her death he directed a sale of his real estate, and declared that the produce should be deemed to be part of his personal estate, and should be subject to the disposition of his personal estate, which he gave to his children:—Held, that the realty was converted into personalty only for the purposes of the will, and that the heir of the testator was entitled to so much of the real estate as had lapsed by the death of a child in the testator's lifetime. Bedford v. Bedford, 35 Beav. 584.

—— Surplus to Executors.]—Lands devised to be sold for payment of his debts, and that the surplus should be deemed part of his personal estate, and to go to his executors; and gives his executors 100*l.* a-piece as a legacy: the surplus decreed a trust in the executors, and subject to distribution. Bristol (Countess) v. Hungerford, Pre. Ch. 81; 2 Vern. 645.

—— Surplus "as part of Personal Estate."]—A testator devised his real estates to A. and B., in trust to sell and pay off all incumbrances thereon, and stand possessed of the residue "as part of his personal estate." He bequeathed his personal estate to the same persons, in trust to convert, and with the produce thereof, and of the sales of his real estates, to pay his debts, &c., and the legacies, and to pay the residue to whom he should give the same by codicil. He made no gift of the residue:—Held, first, that the incumbrances were payable out of the real estate; secondly, that the debts and legacies were payable pari passu out of the mixed fund composed of the produce of realty and personalty; and, thirdly, that of the surplus, the part arising from realty belonged to the heir, and that from the personalty to the next of kin. Shallcross v. Wright, 12 Beav. 505.

Real Estate—Direction, "for Purpose of Distribution" N. to be Considered Personal.]—A testator empowered his trustees to sell his real estate, and directed N., "for the purpose of distribution," to be considered personal estate. He then gave it and his personal estate to certain persons, with an ultimate limitation to "his own right heirs and next of kin, according to the respective natures and qualities thereof." The prior limitations having failed:—Held, that there was no absolute conversion, but that the heir-at-law took the produce of the realty. Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268.

—— Settlement—Power of Sale—Appointed Share—Declaration, Proceeds of Sale to be Personalty.]—Parents having, under a settlement of real estate, which contained powers of sale and exchange, with a trust for reinvestment of purchase moneys in land, a power of appointment amongst their children, appointed a share to H. R. S., one of the children, and declared that the shares and interests of the persons beneficially interested in the moneys arising from any sale of the premises, should be of the quality of personal estate:—Held, that the share of H. R. S. was converted in equity into personalty by the terms of appointment. Webb v. Sadler, 42 L. J., Ch. 498; L. R. 8 Ch. 419; 28 L. T. 388; 21 W. R. 394.

Sole Heiress and Executrix, Appointment of.] — One makes his wife his sole heiress and executrix of all his real and personal estate, to sell and dispose thereof at her pleasure to pay his debts and legacies, and gives his brother (who was his next of kin and heir) 5*l.*; the wife has the residue to her own use, and not as a trustee. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193; Sel. Ch. Ca. 81; Ca. t. Talb. 268.

5. Distinction of Charge upon and Exception from Devise.

Charitable Gift — Charge.] — Money charged upon a real estate for a charity, void by the Statute of Mortmain, shall sink in favour of the specific devisee; not to go to the heir at law or residuary legatee. Secus, when it is an exception out of the devise. Wright v. Rose, 1 Bro. C. C. 61.

—— Exception.]—Where a real estate is directed to be sold, and a part of the produce is to be applied to a purpose, viz. a charitable legacy, which fails, and the residue of the produce is given over, the heir, and not the residuary devisee, will take the sum intended for the particular purpose. Where the real estate is not directed to be sold, and the residuary gift is not of the produce, but of the corpus of the estate, then if a gift intended for a particular purpose which fails is to be considered as an exception from the residuary gift, the heir will take; if it is to be considered as a charge upon the devised estate the residuary devisee will be entitled to the benefit of the failure. Cooke v. Stationers' Co., 3 Myl. & K. 262.

Trust to Raise Sum — Gift of Estate "After Raising as Aforesaid" — Charge.]—Freeholds were devised upon trust to raise 2,000*l.* "by sale or otherwise,' and to permit the testator's son, P., to enjoy the estate, "after raising as aforesaid," for his life, with trusts in remainder for P.'s children; and in the event (which happened) of P. dying without leaving issue, in trust for S. and T. in common in fee. Trusts were declared of the 2,000*l.*, which, as to 1,000*l.*, were for a daughter of the testator for life, and, after her death, for her children. The 2,000*l.* were not raised till after the death of P., who survived S. and T., and kept down the interest of the 2,000*l.* The daughter afterwards died without ever having had a child:—Held, first, that the 2,000*l.* was a charge upon the devised estate, and not an exception out of the devise, and therefore, as to the above, 1,000*l.* sank upon the daughter's death for the benefit of the inheritance. Secondly, that the 1,000*l.* formed part of the real estates of S. and T. at their decease. Cooper, In re, 4 De G. M. & G. 757; 17 Jur. 1087; 1 W. R. 231. And see Newbury, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 612; 5 Ch. D. 746; 25 W. R. 747.

Trust of Real and Personal Property for A. — Direction for Sale of Part — Trust of Produce to Answer Annuities—Charge.]—C., in 1854, gave to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, all his real and personal property, of whatever nature or kind, in trust for his sister S. The testator directed that certain farms should be sold, and that the money obtained, together with moneys due to him, should be vested in the names of the treasurers of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society on annuity such as the law directed, such annuity to be paid to his sister as she might direct. After the decease of a brother and another sister and C., the claim to the annuity was to cease:—Held, that the testator had given his property, of every description, upon trust for one particular person, and everything given to the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society was given by way of a charge thereon, which, having failed, there was an absolute trust in favour of C. Carter v. Haswell, 26 L. J., Ch. 576; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 5 W. R. 388.

The 25th section of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26, is to be construed upon the principle of assimilating a residuary devise of real estate with a similar bequest of personalty; and therefore a devise which was, by construction, residuary, was held to pass lands which had been included in a devise void as being contrary to law. Ib.

Trust for Sale of Real Estate—Direction to Pay out of Produce—Charge.]—A testator devised estates to be sold, and directed a sum of 5,000*l.* to be paid out of the produce, in satisfaction of a similar sum settled upon the wife in the event of her surviving her husband:—Held, the wife not having survived him, that this sum sunk for the benefit of the persons entitled to the residue of money arising from the sale, and was not a resulting trust for the heir. Noel v. Henley (Lord), Dan. 322; 26 R. R. 660. S. C., 12 Price, 213; 7 Ib. 241.

Devise for Term to pay Debts — After and subject to Term in Strict Settlement — Right to Residue of Term.] — A., by will, gave lands to trustees for terms, remainder to Lord F. and C. F. for life. The trusts of the terms were for payment of scheduled debts, and to make an allowance to Lord F. and C. F.; the debts being stated to be paid, a trust results to the tenants for life; a demurrer by the trustees to a bill by creditors for an account as having no interest, therefore, overruled. Davidson v. Foley, 2 Bro. C. C. 203.

See also Residuary Gifts, col. 326, ante.

6. Devolution as Realty or Personalty.

Mixed Fund — Gift to Children at 21 or Marriage—Death under 21 of Daughter and Heir.]—A testator directs a mixed fund composed of the produce of his real and personal estate to be applied to certain specified purposes, and the residue to be divided equally among his children or child at twenty-one if sons, and twenty-one or marriage if daughters; and if no child, to such person or persons as he should by his codicil appoint. The testator died without having made a codicil, leaving an only daughter his heir, who died under twenty-one, intestate and unmarried:—Held, that so much of the residuary fund as was constituted of real estate descended to the heir, but in the character of personal estate. Jessopp v. Watson, 1 Myl. & K. 665; 2 L. J., Ch. 197.

Real Estate—Conveyance on Trust for Sale—Sum Directed to be Raised.]—W. conveyed estates in fee to trustees to sell and pay debts, &c., and afterwards to apply the residue as follows: to raise a sum of 1,500*l.* and pay the interest to D. till marriage, and pay the principal to D. within twelve months after marriage, then to divide the residue in shares among the plaintiffs. By will, he gave out of other lands a charge for another daughter, the residue to plaintiffs. D. died unmarried; the 1,500*l.* resulted to the settlor as a resulting trust; but in his hands was personal estate, and passed as the residue thereof under the will, and not under the deed. Hewitt v. Wright, 1 Bro. C. C. 86.

—— Power of Sale—Conversion of Part.]—The real estate, except what was converted in execution of the power, taken by the next of kin as real, the will not operating a conversion out and out; the representatives, therefore, the trust being disappointed, taking the respective estates as they find them, having no equity against each other. The costs apportioned according to the value of the real and personal estates. Walter v. Maunde, 19 Ves. 424; 13 R. R. 230.

—— Trust for Sale — Division of Proceeds — Lapsed Shares.] — Testator devised his real estates to his daughter for life, and after her death devised them to his executors, with a direction to sell them and divide the sum arising from the sale amongst "my grandchildren that are living at my daughter's death, and by the present marriage, in the following manner: I give and bequeath to my grandson A. one-fifth, to B. one-fourth, to C. one-fifth, and the other parts, to be equally divided amongst the other children living at the death of my daughter by this present marriage." The testator died, leaving his daughter his heiress-at-law and also next of kin. She had at that time seven children, of whom A., B., and C. were three. A. and B. died in their mother's lifetime:—Held, that their shares lapsed to their mother, as the testator's heir-at-law, as personal estate. Hatfield v. Pryme, 2 Coll. C. C. 204; 9 Jur. 838.

—— Lapse—Actual Sale.]—Testator devised his real estates to trustees in trust to sell, and to pay the proceeds to the person or persons who, at the decease of S. M. and M. W., was or were their heirs or co-heirs at law respectively, in equal moieties. One of the trustees was the testator's heir; and he and his co-trustees sold part of the estate shortly after the testator's death. The heir then died; and, after his death, it appeared that the persons who were the heirs of S. M. and M. W. at their respective deaths had died in the testator's lifetime, and consequently the trusts declared in their favour failed:—Held, that the testator's real estates were not absolutely converted by his will into personalty, but only for the purpose expressed therein, and, that purpose having failed, that they descended to his heir. Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 610; 6 Jur. 404.

Held, also, that the proceeds of that part of the estate which had been sold by the testator's heir and his co-trustees was sold under an erroneous impression that one or more of the intended cestuis que trustent might be in existence, and, consequently, that those proceeds also must be considered as part of the real estate of the heir. Ib.

—— Lapse—Partial Failure.]—Where land is to be sold for benefit of A. and B., so that either dying, his moiety lapses to devisor, and A. dies in lifetime of devisor, whereby devisor's heir is entitled to that moiety, the heir takes the benefit of the partial failure as money, and not as land: but if both A. and B. die, the devisor's intention, as to the sale, is to be considered as not applying in case of the events which have happened; and the heir takes the land as real estate. Smith v. Claxton, 4 Madd. 484; 20 R. R. 320.

When a settlor conveys real estate upon trust for sale, and directs the proceeds to be applied to certain purposes, some of which fail, whether the sale is directed to be made in the lifetime of the settlor or after his decease, the property will, to the extent to which the purposes fail, result to the settlor as personal estate. Clarke v. Franklin, 4 Kay & J. 257; 27 L. J., Ch. 567; 6 W. R. 836.

Secus, if there is a failure of the whole purposes for which the sale is directed. Ib.

—— Surplus Proceeds.]—Testatrix devised all her messuages, &c., and real estates to trustees, to sell and pay funeral, &c., expenses and legacies, except her charitable legacies, which she directed to be paid out of her personal estate, legally applicable for that purpose, and not out of any part of her said messuages, &c.:—Held, that heir and next of kin, and not residuary legatee, were entitled to surplus proceeds of freeholds and leaseholds; and, freeholds having been properly sold in heir's lifetime, that the surplus was part of his personal estate. Dixon v. Dawson, Slawin v. Farside, 2 Sim. & S. 327; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 195.

Devise of real estate in trust to sell; if a conversion to personal property not absolutely, but for partial purposes, as the payment of debts, is a resulting trust, as to the surplus for the heir; but goes as personal property. Wright v. Wright, 16 Ves. 188; 10 R. R. 161.

—— Sum out of Proceeds.]—Testator directed the trustees of his will to sell his real estates, and retain 5,000*l.* out of the proceeds, and to stand possessed of that sum in trust for A. for life, remainder in trust for A.'s son for life, with divers remainders over, all of which were void for remoteness. And he gave his personal estate, after payment of the legacies thereinafter given, and the residue of the money to arise by the sale of his real estates, after making good the 5,000*l.*, to B. A. died a bachelor. The testator's heir also died:—Held, that the heir's personal representative was entitled to the 5,000*l.* Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290; 12 Jur. 712.

—— Trust for Sale after Death of M.]—In 1822 a testator, by his will of that date, devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust, after the decease of his wife, to receive the rents during the life of his son M., and to apply the same for his benefit during his life; and from and immediately after the decease of his said son, upon trust to sell, and the net proceeds of such sale he directed to be applied "in manner to be hereinafter mentioned." If it should be more to the interest of his estate that the said estates, or any part thereof, should be demised during his son's life, then the testator directed the trustees to demise the same during his said son's life. Then, after bequeathing certain legacies, the testator directed the said trustees to invest all moneys due to him, and all other his moneys, and to apply the income of his capital stock or fund for the maintenance of his said son's children, and, on their severally attaining twenty-one, to pay, assign, transfer, and "convey the aforesaid capital stock or fund, estate, and effects" to such children; and in case they should all die under age, and without leaving issue, upon the further trusts therein mentioned. The testator died in 1824; his widow died in 1834; M. the son died in 1850, a bachelor:—Held, that the trust for sale was absolute, and the property must be considered as personalty, and the son of the testator, in the events that had happened, took it as personalty, if he took it at all, as heir of the testator. White v. Smith, 15 Jur. 1096.

But, quære, whether the gift over on failure of issue of the son did not take effect; and, quære, also, whether any beneficial interest in the produce of the real estate was given by the will after the death of the son. Ib.

A testator gave an estate to his daughter E. for life, and after her death to his executors in trust to sell and to divide the proceeds equally between her children, their shares to be vested in them at twenty-one, with clauses of survivorship and accruer, and a direction for maintenance out of the interest and proceeds of their shares after E.'s decease till their shares vested. He made similar dispositions of other estates in favour of his children, A., J., W. respectively, and their respective children. He then gave the residue of his property to E. and A., and if any of the four children should die under twenty-one, he gave the part or parts intended for them respectively to the survivors or survivor of them for life, and after the decease of such survivors or survivor he gave such part or parts to his executors in trust to sell and pay the proceeds to their, his, or her children. E. and W. attained twenty-one, and died without having had any child:—Held, that the trusts for sale of the estates devised to E. and W. respectively for life were absolute, and did not depend on E. and W. having children; and that the interests which E. and A. took in those estates under the residuary gift were personal estate. Wall v. Colshead, 2 De G. & J. 683; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 985; 6 W. R. 761.

—— Direction for Sale—Power or Trust.]—A testator gave to his widow, "for the benefit and advantage of his children," power of selling his W. estate. By a codicil he expressed himself (in effect) thus: "I do empower my wife to sell all my estates whatsoever, and the money arising from such sale, together with my personal estate, she my said wife shall and may divide and proportion among my said children as she shall think fit and proper, or as she shall direct by will." The estate was neither sold nor appointed by the widow:—Held, that the direction to sell operated as a conversion of the real estate, and that the shares of those children who were dead devolved on their representatives as personalty. Grierson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen, 653; 6 L. J., Ch. 261.

—— Trust to Invest in Land or Government Securities to be Settled.]—A will contained a power to sell some real estate, and a power to reinvest in real estates or in government securities to be settled as real estate. The property was personalty during the whole of the life of the first tenant in tail:—Held, that it went to her personal representative at her death. Rich v. Whitfield, L. R. 2 Eq. 583; 14 W. R. 907.

Discretionary Power of Sale—Direction, Proceeds to be considered Personalty—Actual Conversion.]—Testator gave his real and personal estate upon trusts for the benefit of his wife and children, and empowered his trustees, as they in their discretion should think proper, to sell the real estate, the proceeds to be considered as personalty:—Held, that the shares of a child, who died, in the proceeds of real estate which had been sold devolved as personal estate. Cowley v. Smith, 2 W. R. 327.

Money to be Laid Out — Real and Personal Property directed by B. to be Settled and Accepted as an Equivalent — Conversion of B.'s Personalty.]—A. devised his estates to B., his son, for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, remainder to his daughters as tenants in common with remainders over, remainder to the testator's own right heirs of his name; and he directed the residue of his personal estates to be laid out in lands to be conveyed to the same uses as his devised estates. B., his son and executor, did not lay out the personal estate as directed by the will, but by his will he directed that certain real and personal estates should be conveyed and assigned to the trustees under the will of A., upon the trusts of that will or such of them as could then be executed; adding, that he deemed such property an equivalent in value for the residuum of his father's personal estate; and he directed that the same should be settled and accepted accordingly. The real and personal estate were not conveyed or assigned according to the will. B. died without issue:—Held, that the personal estate bequeathed by the will of B., though not actually converted, must be deemed to be converted into and to have descended as real estate. Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487. And see S. C. at law, 14 M. & W. 214; 15 L. J., Ex. 121.

—— Settlement.]—By settlement 500*l.* was assigned to trustees, in trust to lay the same out in land, with consent of wife, and to pay rents to wife for life, for her separate use, remainder to husband for life, and after the death of survivor, in trust, to convey same to such persons, and for such estates as wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for the right heirs of wife for ever, proviso, that until such purchase should be made, trustees should invest the money in the public funds, with the consent of wife, and pay the dividends to wife for life, for her separate use, and after her death to such persons as the rents of the lands to be purchased would go to, according to the limitations aforesaid, and to pay or transfer the principal sum of 500*l.* or the stock in which the same should be invested, to such person as, according to the limitations aforesaid, would be entitled to the inheritance of such lands. This 500*l.* was never paid to trustees, but remained in the hands of husband at the death of wife. She having made no appointment, this 500*l.* vested in her heir-at-law (subject to the life interest of the husband), but the heir took it as money, and therefore at her death this interest passed to his personal representatives. Russell v. Smythies, 1 Cox, 215.

—— After Failure of Trusts.]—Personalty directed by will to be laid out in land, to be held on trusts which do not exhaust the absolute interest, devolves, after the expiration of the specified trusts, upon the executors of the testator, for the benefit of his next of kin, and not upon his heir. Such personalty is not taken by the next of kin as realty, but, notwithstanding the constructive or actual conversion, goes to the executors to be dealt with as personal estate. Head v. Godlee, 1 Johns. 536; 29 L. J., Ch. 633; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 499; 8 W. R. 147. But see next case.

A testator directed his residuary personal estate to be employed in the purchase of real estate, which was to be considered subject to the direction and disposition of his will respecting his real estate, as fully and effectually as if then in his actual possession. The reversion of the real estates was not disposed of by the will:—Held, that the real estate which had been purchased went to the testator's next of kin as undisposed-of personalty, after the satisfaction of debts by the executor; and that a person claiming as heir under one of those next of kin had no locus standi. Ib.

Where personal estate is bequeathed upon trusts for conversion into land to be held on trusts which ultimately fail, land purchased before the failure of the trusts goes to the next of kin as real estate. Head v. Godlee, ante, overruled. Curteis v. Wormald, 10 Ch. D. 172; 40 L. T. 108; 27 W. R. 419.

Land Devised on Trust for Sale—Partial Failure of Trusts—Real or Personal Estate.]—Where real estate is devised upon trust for sale and conversion into personalty to be held on trust for tenants for life and in remainder, and the trusts in remainder ultimately fail after the death of the person who was heir-at-law of the testator at his death, the proceeds of sale and the real estate, if any, still unsold at the time of such failure both go to such heir as personal estate. Curteis v. Wormald (10 Ch. D. 172), Jessopp v. Watson (1 Myl. & K. 665), and Att.-Gen. v. Lomas (L. R. 9 Ex. 29), discussed and approved. Richerson, In re. Scales v. Heyhoe, 61 L. J., Ch. 202; [1892] 1 Ch. 379; 66 L. T. 174; 40 W. R. 233.

Residuary Gift.]—A testatrix gave her real and personal estate to three trustees, upon trust, as soon as they, in their discretion, should think most advantageous, to sell and convert into money her real estate, and pay her debts and legacies. She gave the residue of her estate and effects to her son, J. B.:—Held, that J. B. took the residue of the realty in the character of personalty. Griesbach v. Freemantle, 17 Beav. 314.

—— Failure of Purposes.]—Where a testator directs a sale of his real estate for purposes which wholly fail, the heir takes it as realty; but if the failure be only partial, he takes it as personalty. Bayster v. Fuckerell, 26 Beav. 469.

—— Charitable Gift after Life Interest to A.]—A testator devised real estate to trustees, to sell and invest, and pay the dividends to his wife for life, and at her death to transfer the principal to a charity. The gift to the charity being void:—Held, that there was a complete conversion of the realty into personalty, and that (subject to the life estate) the heir of the testator took the produce in the character of personalty, and that on the heir's death intestate, it passed to his legal personal representatives, and not to his heir-at-law. Wilson v. Coles, 28 Beav. 215.

Money to be Laid Out—Settlement of Real Estate—Legal Jointure.]—Where money was liable to be invested in land to be settled to uses in strict settlement, and all the uses were exhausted except a legal jointure:—Held, that the jointress had an equity to compel the investment of the money in land; and that, consequently, the money must be treated as real estate as between the real and personal representatives of the person who, subject to the jointure, was entitled thereto. Walrond v. Rosslyn, 48 L. J., Ch. 602; 11 Ch. D. 640.

Covenant to Convey Estate — Breach — Damages.]—A certain estate is covenanted to be conveyed and is not so, the breach of the covenant is in damages. Such damages are money, not land in the hands of the party injured. Wade v. Paget, 1 Bro. C. C. 364; 1 Cox, 74.

Charge on Real Estate—Failure of Purpose—Money raised whether Real or Personal Estate.]—An estate was appointed by will subject to a charge for raising a sum of money to be applied upon certain trusts. The money was duly raised in the lifetime of the appointee. After his death the trusts failed, and the charge sank for the benefit of the estate:—Held, that the money belonged to the legal personal representatives of the appointee. Newbery, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 612; 5 Ch. D. 746; 25 W. R. 747.

C. RECONVERSION.

1. Principles.

Generally.]—Where money is agreed to be laid out in land, the party who would have the sole interest in the land, when bought, may (if of age) have the money paid to him. Benson v. Benson, 1 P. W. 130.

Money given to be laid out in land to be conveyed, or land to be sold, and the produce paid to A., though in one case the money is not given to him, and in the other no interest expressly in the land, he is in equity the owner, and may elect to have the money or the land conveyed, as he shall direct. Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 104.

It is optional in the parties interested in money to be produced by the sale of land to keep the land. Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 392.

Money being once clearly impressed with real uses, and one of those uses being for the benefit of the heir, the impression will remain for his benefit; and to put an end to it in a question between the heir and executor, either the money must come to the possession of the person from whom they claim in those characters, or he must, if it is in the hands of a third person, do some act denoting a change of intention. Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 235; 7 R. R. 37.

Onus of Proof.]—The onus of proving reconversion is on the plaintiff who claims under the heir-at-law of the author of the deed. Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 299, 19 L. J., Ch. 100; 14 Jur. 166.

Right of Persons having Defeasible Title to Proceeds of Land.]—Land which, from being impressed with an absolute trust for sale, is personal estate in equity, cannot be reconverted into real estate by persons having only a defeasible title to proceeds of sale. To effect a reconversion, there must be the concurrence of the absolute owners. Sisson v. Giles, 3 De G. J. & S. 614; 32 L. J., Ch. 606; 8 L. T. 233.

A person contingently entitled to the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold may, pending the contingency, elect to take the estate as realty, and such election will become operative upon the contingency happening before or upon his death. Meek v. Devenish, 6 Ch. D. 566; 36 L. T. 911; 25 W. R. 688.

2. Capacity to Elect.

a. Infant.

Money to be laid out—Will.]—Money to be laid out in land:—Held (prior to the Wills Act), that an infant cannot dispose of it by will as money, but it will on the infant's death descend to his heir, who may take either way. Carr v. Ellison, 2 Bro. C. C. 56; Dick. 796. See also Pierson v. Shore, 1 Atk. 480.

—— Tenant in Common.]—One devises 1,000*l.*, to be laid out in a purchase of lands in fee, for the benefit of A., B., and C., and their heirs, equally to be divided. A. dies, leaving an infant heir. B. and C. may have their share paid them in money, but the infant cannot. Seeley v. Jago, 1 P. W. 389.

Real Estate to be Sold.]—Real estate converted into personal out and out, under a trust to sell for the payment of debts, and to pay the residue to the grantor, his executors, &c., and falling thus impressed with the character of money to one who died an infant (incompetent therefore to elect to have it reconverted) passed to his administratrix. Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

Election by Court.]—A testator devised and bequeathed to his trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust to convert such part thereof as should not consist of investments producing interest and invest the proceeds and receive the income of all property, and thereout to pay to his wife an annuity of 140*l.* for her life, and to pay out of the remaining income to his son George such a sum as in the discretion of his trustees should be proper and sufficient for his maintenance, but so that he should not have power to mortgage or anticipate the same. After the son's marriage, in the event of there being any issue, the trustees were to apply such part of the income as they might think reasonable in the maintenance and bringing up of such issue. After the death of the wife and son the trustees were to pay and divide the capital of the trust estate unto and amongst such issue equally. The testator's wife died in his lifetime. His son George survived him, and died in 1884, leaving an only child, a son, R. W. S. The testator left real estate. In 1882 an order was made for the administration of the testator's estate. In 1885 an order was made directing an enquiry whether it would be fit and proper and for the benefit of R. W. S. (who was an infant) that any and what part of the testator's estate should be retained in the condition in which the same was at the testator's death. R. W. S. died an infant in 1888, before any certificate had been made in answer to the enquiry. After the infant's death the question was raised whether, in the events that had happened, the real estate remaining unsold passed to the infant's heir-at-law or to his legal personal representative:—Held, that the real estate passed to the legal personal representative of the infant as personalty. Wragg, In re, Wragg v. Small, 63 L. T. 219.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees to sell whenever it should appear to them advantageous. The produce was given to charities. No sale took place, and infants, to whom such produce was bequeathed if the charity bequests should be defeated, under the chief clerk's certificate finding it for their benefit, elected to take the land instead of the produce. Robinson v. Robinson, 19 Beav. 494.

b. Lunatic.

Presumption.]—No presumption of election to take as real estate where there is incapacity, as lunacy. Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296.

Real Estate—Order for Sale—9 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 2—Fund in Court.]—Where freeholds of inheritance belonging to a lunatic were sold by order of the court, under the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 78, and the surplus proceeds, not required for the purposes for which the sale was directed, had been paid into court and invested:—Held, that the character of realty impressed upon such surplus proceeds, by the language of the 2nd section of the statute, continued through successive descents, till a person capable of electing to take the fund as personalty should have so elected. Wharton, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 33; 23 L. J., Ch. 522; 18 Jur. 299; 2 W. R. 248.

c. Married Woman.

Money to be Laid Out—Separate Examination.]—Where money was articled to be laid out in land to which feme covert was to be entitled, before she could alter the property or course of descent, the money must be invested in land, and then she may levy a fine and give it away, or upon coming into court and consenting to take the money as personal estate, and being examined as to such consent, it binds the money articled to be laid out in land as much as a fine at law would the land, and she may dispose of it. Oldham v. Hughes, 2 Atk. 452.

See also Cunningham v. Moody, 1 Ves. sen. 174; Binford v. Bawden, 1 Ves. 512; 2 Ib. 38; 2 R. R. 162; Hayes, In re, 9 W. R. 769; Standering v. Hall, 48 L. J., Ch. 382; 11 Ch. D. 652; 27 W. R. 749.

At law, money articled to be laid out in land is considered barely as money till actual investiture: and equity alone views it as real estate, and will therefore do what a fine at common law would as to land. Ib.

—— Tenant in Tail in Remainder.]—A feme covert tenant in tail in remainder of money to be laid out in land by agreement with the tenant for life and on a private examination under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 45, consented to the payment of a proportion of the money to her husband, and the order was made accordingly. Silcocks, In re, 3 Russ. 369.

Appointment by Deed by Feme Covert.]—Testator directed money to be laid out in manors, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, or very long terms, with limitations applicable to real estate; money not having been laid out, the devisees, on becoming absolutely entitled, have the option given by the will, and a deed of appointment by one, a feme covert, was held sufficient indication of her intention that it should continue personal property, against her heir claiming it, as ineffectually disposed of for want of her examination. Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. 170; 2 R. R. 185.

Real Estate to be Sold, Conveyance of—Devise of "Landed Property"—Election to Take as Personalty.]—By an indenture in March, 1862, the Baroness de St. Sauveur conveyed and covenanted to surrender to a trustee freehold and copyhold property at Ealing, upon trust to sell, exchange, or make partition of it, and, until sale, to pay the rents as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, to her absolutely. By her will in August, 1862, she gave to her husband, who was an alien, all her landed property at Ealing for his life. She died in 1866. The property at Ealing remained unsold at her death:—Held, that she had by her will elected to take the property as personalty. Sharp v. De St. Sauveur, 20 L. T. 799; 17 W. R. 1002. And see S. C., 41 L. J., Ch. 576; L. R. 7 Ch. 343; 26 L. T. 142; 23 W. R. 269.

d. Tenant in Tail.

The Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 71, enacts that money to be invested in land shall for all the purposes of the act be treated as the lands to be purchased, and the act shall apply to such money accordingly, and the cases on the earlier law are mostly omitted.

Money to be Laid Out—Tenant in Tail Reversioner in Fee.]—Money directed to be laid out in land, and limited to A. in tail with several remainders in tail, the court will order it to be laid out if nothing has been done to the remainders. Where a person is tenant in tail, reversion in fee to himself, the court will give him the money, because by a common conveyance he may bar the entail and reversion. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 447.

—— Remainder Over.]—Money devised to be laid out in land for A. in tail, with remainder over, will not be ordered to be paid to A. Anon., 2 Anstr. 453.

Party entitled as tenant in tail to land to be purchased, held not entitled to elect to take money or land. Collet v. Collet, 1 Atk. 11.

—— Agreement for Division—Tenant in Tail and Remainderman—Death of Tenant in Tail without Issue.]—An agreement between tenant in tail and a remainderman, to divide money which was to be laid out in land and settled, carried into execution in this court after the death of the tenant in tail without issue in favour of his executor. Carter v. Carter, Cas. t. Talb. 271.

e. Remainderman.

Money to be Laid out—Determination of Prior Interests.]—A. agreed, on marriage, to lay out 4,000*l.* in land in strict settlement, with remainder to himself. Wife and issue died, living A. A. may bequeath the 4,000*l.* as money. Fulham v. Jones, 2 Eq. Abr. 296. And see Lingen v. Sowray, 1 P. W. 172; Harcourt v. Seymour, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 12; 20 L. J., Ch. 606; 15 Jur. 740.

Proceeds of Sale under Compulsory Powers.]—Real estate was settled by a marriage settlement, not comprising any personal estate. The tenant for life sold part of the land to a company under the powers of its act, and the proceeds were paid into court and invested. Afterwards, the tenant for life, under the power in the settlement, appointed by will to his son the whole of the settled estate, and the purchase money of the part which had been sold. The son by will disposed of his residuary personal estate of which he might be possessed, or over which he might have any power of disposition at his death, including in such personal estate "all moneys to which I may be entitled under the marriage settlement of my father and mother"; and he declared that he did not by his will intend to dispose of any real estate, but only of personal estate and chattels real. The widow of the tenant for life, who was entitled to a jointure, was still living:—Held, that the fund arising from the sale did not pass by the will. Skeggs, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 533.

—— Fund in Court.]—A portion of real estate was taken under the compulsory powers of an act of parliament, and 2,000*l.*, the purchase money, was paid into court to the account of the estate in 1836. The tenant for life continued to receive the dividends until 1849, when she died. The person entitled to the real estate in remainder never sought to have the money reinvested in land, and made his will in the year 1844, and thereby gave the residue of his personal estate to his executors, and died intestate as to real estate. He had no personal estate of value, unless the fund in court was personalty. He died in 1844. On the petition of his heir-at-law:—Held, that the money remained impressed with the quality of real estate, and the fund was paid to him. Stewart, In re, Cramer, Ex parte, 1 Sm. & G. 32; 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063; 1 W. R. 17.

Quære, whether it is competent for a tenant in fee in remainder of land expectant on the decease of a tenant for life, to elect to convert the character of real estate impressed on money in court, the produce of a compulsory purchase of the land during the life of the tenant for life. Ib.

Converted Real Estate—Freehold in Possession—Copyhold in Remainder.]—A. being under a will entitled to freeholds in possession and copyholds in remainder, which were both impressed with the character of personalty, did acts expressive of an intention to reconvert, as regarded the freeholds only:—Held, that the copyholds still retained the character of personalty. Meredith v. Vick, 23 Beav. 559; 27 L. J., Ch. 162; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1234; 5 W. R. 639.

—— Executory Devise Over—Defeasible Interests.]—Real estate was devised to trustees, to sell and hold the proceeds for M., the wife of G., and N., as tenants in common, with a direction that if either of them should die without leaving issue, the share of the one dying should go to the survivor, and if both should die without leaving issue, then the property was to go to the testator's next of kin. By a deed, twelve years after the testator's death, executed by G. and M., his wife, and by N. (but not acknowledged by M.), they discharged the trustees from the trusts, except so far as related to their right to a reconveyance of the real estate when they should become absolutely entitled thereto. M. and N. received the rents in moieties till the death of N., who devised his real estate at F. and elsewhere, and his personal estate, to the plaintiffs. A bill was filed by them, who claimed under N., against the trustee of the will and G. and M., his wife, praying a sale of the real estate:—Held, that as the interest of M. was defeasible, neither she nor her husband could elect to take the property as real estate; that there had been no conversion, but that it retained its original character, and was liable to be sold. Sisson v. Giles, 3 D. J. & S. 614; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 951; 8 L. T. 780; 11 W. R. 971.

A person contingently entitled to the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold may, pending the contingency, elect to take the estate as realty, and such election will become operative upon the contingency happening before or upon his death. Meek v. Devenish, 47 L. J., Ch. 57; 6 Ch. D. 566; 36 L. T. 911; 25 W. R. 688.

A testator devised all the residue of his real estate to trustees upon trust for sale; and declared that they should stand possessed of the money arising therefrom upon trust, during the widowhood of his wife, to pay her an annuity, and to pay the residue of the income to his son until bankruptcy; and, after the death of his wife, upon trust, as to one moiety of the trust premises for his son absolutely; and, as to the other moiety, in case his son should not have become bankrupt, for him absolutely, and, in case of his bankruptcy, upon certain trusts in favour of his wife and children. The widow never married again. The son never became bankrupt. During his life he resided at his father's house in Sussex, and by his will devised the same in strict settlement:—Held, that the son had power to elect; and had, by his conduct in his lifetime, elected to take the house as reconverted into real estate. Ib.

Real Estate—Power of Sale—Produce to be Laid out in Land—Sale—Concurrence of all Parties Interested—Remainderman in Fee.]—A reversion of real estate, which, subject to an old life estate was vested in trustees, was sold. The trustees of the settlement had power of sale, with a direction to lay out the produce in land, to be settled to the same uses. Upon the sale, the trustees, instead of paying the value of the old life estate to the tenant for life, invested the whole in their names, and paid that person the dividends for her life. The old tenant for life, the tenant for life under the settlement, and the party ultimately entitled to the fee simple under that instrument, concurred in the sale, and in this dealing with the purchase money. Upon the death of the old tenant for life, questions were raised as to whether the money representing the sold estate was realty, or whether the acts of the party ultimately entitled to the fee simple did not amount to an election on his part to take the fund as money; and the vice-chancellor decided in favour of the latter view; but, upon appeal:—Held, that the money represented and must be treated as real estate. Pedder's Settlement, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 890; 24 L. J., Ch. 313; 3 Eq. Rep. 157; 3 W. R. 136.

f. Undivided Interests, Owners of.

Money to be Laid out—Infant Tenant in Common.]—One devises 1,000*l.* to be laid out in a purchase of lands in fee, for the benefit of A., B., and C., and their heirs, equally to be divided. A. dies, leaving an infant heir. B. and C. may have their share paid them in money, but the infant cannot. Seeley v. Jago, 1 P. W. 389.

Land to be Sold.]—Lands devised to be sold and the money divided among several persons, they cannot elect to take the lands instead of money, if one desired a sale. Deeth v. Hale, 2 Moll. 317.

Undivided Share of Land.]—Where an undivided share of real estate is devised, with a trust for conversion, the devisee cannot, without the consent of the persons interested in the other shares, elect to take it as realty. Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163; 26 L. J., Ch. 401; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 198; 5 W. R. 271.

A. was entitled to two-thirds of an estate directed to be converted into personalty:—Held, that it had not been reconverted into realty by acts of A. done independent of the person entitled to the other one-third. Ib.

Real Estate—Trust for Sale—Discretion to Postpone.]—A testator devised his real estate upon trust, either immediately or at any time after his death as to his trustees should seem most expedient, to sell and to hold the proceeds in trust for his sons W., F., H., and G., if and when they should attain the age of twenty-one years, in equal shares. F. predeceased the testator, and his share therefore lapsed and devolved upon W., as heir-at-law of the testator. H. attained twenty-one but died intestate and unmarried, leaving his mother E. and his surviving brothers W. and G. his next-of-kin. G. attained twenty-one but died, having by his will given all his real and personal estate to W. W. was subsequently found a lunatic by inquisition, and remained of unsound mind until his death, intestate and without next-of-kin or heir-at-law. Letters of administration to his personal estate had been taken out by the Solicitor to the Treasury. The real estate devised by the testator remained unsold at the time of W.'s death, and an action was brought to ascertain the persons entitled thereto. The representatives of the trustees, as the persons upon whom the legal estate had devolved, contended that, as there had been no conversion of the real estate into personalty, the Crown was not entitled through the Solicitor to the Treasury to come in and insist that the real estate should be treated as converted; that there being an absolute discretion to postpone the sale for an indefinite period, that which was a trust had been cut down to a mere power of sale; and that, as there had been a failure of the cestui que trust, the trustees were entitled to retain for their own benefit the property, or the undivided shares thereof, to which W. was entitled at his death:—Held, that the trust for conversion was absolute, and had not been displaced by the discretion to postpone, inasmuch as the several parties interested had not at any time been all competent to agree to a reconversion; that the real estate must still be treated as personal estate; and that the Solicitor to the Treasury, as administrator of the lunatic, did not stand in any different position to any other administrator, and was entitled to the beneficial interest of W. in the real estate. Heathcote, In re, Gilbert v. Aviolet, 58 L. T. 43. Affirmed, 85 L. T. Journ. 120—C. A.

Where land has been devised on trust to convert, the acts of the cestuis que trustent must be clear and unequivocal, and by all of them, in order to show their election to enjoy the property unconverted. Vincent v. Fane, 1 W. R. 264.

g. Donee of Power.

Limited Interest—Power of Appointment.]—A person having a limited interest, such as a power of appointment, cannot elect to appoint in specie that which the donor of the power has directed to be converted. Cooper v. Martin, 15 L. T. 268; 15 W. R. 5.

Real Estate—Power of Sale—Power to Reinvest in Real Estates or in Government Securities.]—A will contained a power to sell some real estate, and a power to reinvest in real estates or in government securities, to be settled as real estate. The property was personalty during the whole of the life of the first tenant in tail:—Held, that it went to her personal representative at her death. Rich v. Whitfield, L. R. 2 Eq. 583; 14 W. R. 907.

See also Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 K. & J. 26; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1066.

3. WHAT ACTS AMOUNT TO ELECTION.

Money to be laid out—Parol Declaration.]—Money directed to be laid out in land, the person entitled to it absolutely may elect to take it in money or land; and slight act done will be evidence of his intention, but parol declaration is not sufficient. Bradish v. Gee, Ambl. 229; 1 Ken. 73. S. P., Delgarno v. Morgan, 1 Ken. 128.

—— Receipt of Money.]—Where money is covenanted to be laid out in a purchase of land, and to be settled on A. in fee, the heir, and not the executor, of A. shall have it; but if A. himself has received any of this money, this is a good payment, and shall not be repaid by A.'s executor to his heir. Also if A. in this case dies, A.'s heir shall recover the remainder of the money not received by A.; so if A.'s heir is an infant, and the remainder of the money is decreed to be brought into court, it shall be looked on as land. Chaplin v. Horner, 1 P. W. 483.

Where money devised to be laid out in land comes into the hands of one who would be entitled to dispose of the lands if purchased, the money is his absolute property. Pulteney v. Darlington (Earl), 7 Bro. P. C. 530. Affirming 1 Bro. C. C. 223. And see Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 440.

Stock taken by the heir as real estate under a trust to lay it out in land not executed, considered as personal estate in him, under circumstances showing his conception and intention to treat and dispose of it as personal property. Triquet v. Thornton, 13 Ves. 345.

—— Fund in Court—Settlement—Annuity—Petition by Tenant in Tail for Payment out.]—Certain funds were brought into court, which had been directed by a testator to be invested in lands to be settled upon A. in tail, subject to the payment of an annuity. An order had been made upon a petition presented by A., that a sufficient sum to answer the annuity should be set apart, and that the residue of the fund should be paid to him:—Held, upon the death of the annuitant, that A. had elected to take the whole fund as money, thereby barring the entail, and that A.'s executors were entitled to the sum which had been set apart for the annuity. Dornford v. Dornford, 10 L. J., Ch. 341.

—— Marriage Articles—Trust for Sale of Land—Absolute Owner.]—R. B. by articles previous to his marriage, covenanted to lay out 2,000*l.* in the purchase of lands, and to settle the same on himself for life, and, after his decease, to M., his intended wife, for life, and after both their deceases, to trustees to sell, and the money arising from such sale to be divided among the children of the marriage, to sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one or marriage, provided no sale be made till one of the shares shall become payable. The purchase was made accordingly after E. the only surviving child died unmarried, but had attained the age of twenty-one, the absolute proprietor of these estates: E. having taken them as land in her lifetime, and done acts to show she intended they should be considered as real estate, they must be held as such, and go to the heir. Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680.

—— Marriage Articles—Disabling Statute.]—In what case money covenanted by marriage articles to be laid out in lands shall still be considered as money, and as such go to the personal representative of the party entitled to the money, in prejudice of the heir. Bowes v. Shrewsbury, 5 Bro. P. C. 144.

A papist, by marriage articles, previously to the disabling stat. 11 & 12 Will. 3, covenants to lay out 12,000*l.* in the purchase of land. The money is never laid out, and therefore shall still be considered as money, and go to the personal representative, instead of the heir, though that heir be a protestant. Ib.

—— Dealing with Property.]—If a person absolutely entitled to the money-land arising from a compulsory conversion have a right to elect to take it as personalty, a mere acquiescence in its remaining invested in consols during his life, and his will, by which he bequeaths personal estate only, and does not devise realty, are not such proof of election as to prevent the fund descending on his death to his heir. Stewart's Trusts, In re, Cramer, Ex parte, 1 Sm. & G. 32; 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063; 1 W. R. 17.

By a settlement certain money was directed to be laid out in land, and the income given to the husband for life; remainder subject to charges for the benefit of the wife, to the use of the right heirs of the husband for ever. No land was purchased, but the money was invested partly on mortgage, partly in the funds. In his banker's pass-books the husband had called these funds "trust-money." In a transfer of the mortgage made shortly before his death, he had agreed that the mortgage should not be paid off for five years, and had made the money payable to himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns. He had made private statements of his property, in which he had treated these trust funds in the same way as his own funded property. By his will he devised his hereditaments at P. and elsewhere in one way, and his personal estate in another way:—Held, that he had elected to take these trust funds as money, and that they passed under his will as personal estate. Harcourt v. Seymour, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 12; 20 L. J., Ch. 606; 15 Jur. 740.

A testator gave his daughter a sum of money, and directed his executors, as soon as convenient after his decease, to purchase an estate, and when she attained twenty-one she was to receive the money if the land was not bought. There was a gift over. The estate was not purchased, and she invested the money in the funds:—Held, on the daughter's death, that the money was impressed with the character of realty, and passed as such. Simpson v. Ashworth, 6 Beav. 412; 7 Jur. 410.

A sum of money directed to be invested by an executrix "in land or some other securities," for the benefit of one for life, with remainder to his children, "but in failure of these to A. and his heirs for ever," and which had not been invested in land:—Held, to have been originally impressed with the character of real estate; but by the subsequent dealing therewith by the parties beneficially interested, to have acquired the quality of personalty. Cookson v. Reay, 5 Beav. 22. Affirmed, sub nom. Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & F. 121; 9 Jur. 499.

Where money had been impressed by a will with the character of realty, but the parties who together were absolutely entitled to it in whatever shape, executed a deed, appointing a new trustee, and providing for the investment of the money as money, but by a general clause resettling it upon the trusts generally of a deed, which had been made upon the footing of the will, and provided for the investment in land:—Held, that the money had lost the character of realty. Ib.

Money directed to be laid out in land considered as real estate under a general disposition, by the will of a person entitled to it absolutely in either shape, of "the money and land," in the absence of intention, the word "money" being answered by another fund, of stock. Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161.

Personalty Settlement—Funds Invested in Real Estate.]—The trust funds of a personalty settlement were invested in real estate conveyed to the trustees. The cestui que trust received the rents and repaired the property for seven years after she had become entitled to the absolute control under the settlement:—Held, that this did not make a conversion into real estate. Parker v. Williams, 15 W. R. 1006.

Real Estate to be Sold.]—Where land has devised on trust to convert, the acts of the cestuis que trustent must be clear and unequivocal, and by all of them, in order to show their election to enjoy the property unconverted. Vincent v. Fane, 1 W. R. 264.

Where real estate conveyed to trustees on trust to sell, has been used by the devisee of the settlor to all intents and purposes as realty, and is afterwards sold by the trustees, the trust fund, the produce of the sale, is to be taken as real and not as personal estate. Gardner's Trusts, In re, 1 Eq. Rep. 57.

—— Possession of Title Deeds.]—By a marriage settlement real estates were conveyed to trustees in trust to sell and to hold the proceeds in trust for the husband and wife for their lives successively, remainder in trust for their children, remainder in trust for the survivor of the husband and wife absolutely. There was no child of the marriage. The husband survived his wife; and after her death consulted his solicitors upon his rights under the settlement; and they having advised him that he was entitled to the whole beneficial interest in the estates, he got possession of the settlement and of the title deeds, and remained in possession of them, and also of the estates, until his death:—Held, that thereby he declared his election to take the estates as land. Davies v. Ashford, 15 Sim. 42; 14 L. J., Ch. 473; 9 Jur. 612.

—— Occupation.]—Land under devise in trust to be sold, not considered as real estate, the trust not being executed, and two years' occupation of the land being too short to presume an election; but no act done showing intention to alter the character expressed by the uses of the will, an objection to the title of the heir upon that point prevailed. Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 338.

—— Possession.]—Where real estate is bequeathed in the character of personalty, and is enjoyed unconverted by the legatee, slight circumstances are sufficient to raise a presumption that he has elected to retain it as realty. In the absence of any other circumstances, the fact that a person has, for a great length of time, preserved the property in its actual state, will be sufficient to induce the court to come to this conclusion. Dixon v. Gayfere, 17 Beav. 423; 23 L. J., Ch. 60.

A. B., being entitled to an undivided share in a real estate impressed with the character of personalty, retained possession for between two and three years, and died without having said or done anything to indicate an intention to reconvert:—Held, that at his death it was personalty. Ib.

A real estate was devised to two trustees, to sell and divide the produce between A., B. and C. The trustees being dead, A. entered into possession, and received the rents, for three and a half years, accounting to B. and C. for their shares. A. then died, and at his death the estate remained unsold:—Held, that there had been no reconversion, but that the estate, in equity, retained its character of personalty. Brown v. Brown, 33 Beav. 399; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 461; 10 L. T. 83.

A. B., who was one of the trustees, paid the debts and legacies, except one annuity, and remained in possession sixteen years and died intestate:—Held (having regard to his acts, and notwithstanding he was both co-trustee and owner), that the property was reconverted into realty, and passed to his heir. Griesbach v. Freemantle, 17 Beav. 314.

A testator devised land to trustees to sell a portion as soon as conveniently might be after his death; but not until such time as his trustees should judge beneficial for his estate. The testator died in 1841, and the piece of ground had never been sold, and a sum representing the accumulated rents had been paid into court:—Held, that there was no conversion by force of the will, and that if there was there had been sufficient election to take as realty. Glover v. Heelis, 32 L. T. 534; 23 W. R. 677.

—— Real Estate in Lease.]—A testator devised all his real and personal estate (including a freehold estate called Bank Hall) to trustees, to sell and convert the same, and, after payment of debts and legacies, "to pay, divide, and distribute the principal money to be raised from my real and personal estate and effects, to and equally among all my children, share and share alike, when and as they shall attain the age of twenty-one, to whom I give and bequeath the same, it being my desire that each of my children shall receive and be entitled to an equal share of my property, they being all equally near and dear to me." He died in 1794, and left five children; four of them subsequently died, leaving E. the survivor, who also died in 1854. In 1805 a lease of the estate was executed by the five children, who had all attained their majority, to two persons as lessees for a term of six years, at a proper rent. At the expiration of this lease the lessees continued for a considerable time as occupants, and the rent reserved was divided by and amongst the five children. The Bank Hall estate had never been sold, but the rents and profits had been divided into fifths, and so received by the children until their respective deaths. E., upon the death of the fourth child, entered into possession of the entirety of the rents and profits up to her own death in 1854, and devised the Bank Hall estate to trustees for sale:—Held, that in the events which had happened, the children had elected to take the Bank Hall estate as freehold; that the estate had not been so dealt with as to be converted into personalty, and that the persons beneficially interested under the will of E., the survivor, were entitled to the proceeds of the estate. Symes v. Holmes, 19 L. T. 83.

A testator, after giving certain legacies, devised a freehold house to A., B. and C., in trust for sale, the proceeds to be considered part of his personal estate, and gave his residuary real and personal estate to A., B., and C. A., B. and C. paid all the legacies except two out of other parts of the testator's estate, and kept the house unsold, granting a lease of it to a tenant. The house remained unsold for fifty years, and the two legatees permitted their legacies to remain during all that time unpaid, without requiring a sale or any formal security on the house:—Held, in a suit by the personal representative of C. against the real and personal representatives of the testator for the administration of his estate, that A., B., and C. had by their conduct elected to take the house as reconverted into real estate; that the assent of the unpaid legatees might be inferred. Mutlow v. Bigg, 45 L. J., Ch. 282; 1 Ch. D. 385; 34 L. T. 273; 24 W. R. 409—C. A.

A testator by his will gave his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to trustees, on trust to sell his real estate, and to convert and get in his residuary personal estate, and to stand possessed of the moneys arising from both, on trust to invest the same, and to pay the income to his wife during her life or widowhood, and, after her death or second marriage, upon trust to divide the trust funds equally between such of his children as should be living at his death, and the issue of such of them as might be then dead. The testator died in 1869. The wife and two infant children survived him. There was no issue of any deceased child. Both the children died before the wife, unmarried and intestate, the one who died last dying in 1876. The wife did not marry again, and she died in 1885 intestate. The only real estate of the testator was a house, of which he had in 1869 agreed to grant a lease for twenty years, with an option to the tenant to purchase the reversion at any time during the term. At the death of the widow this option had not been exercised, and the house had not been sold by the trustees. After the deaths of the children the widow continued in receipt of the rent of the house.—Held, that, by reason of the tenant's option to purchase the house, the widow's continued receipt of the rent was no evidence of an election by her to take the property as real estate, and that on her death it descended as personalty to her next of kin. Gordon, In re (6 Ch. D. 531), distinguished. Lewis, In re, Foxwell v. Lewis, 55 L. J., Ch. 232; 30 Ch. D. 654; 53 L. T. 387; 34 W. R. 150.

A devise and bequest of freehold and copyhold land and personal estate to A. and B., upon trust as to the land for sale, and as to the personalty to realise the same, and to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust for M., who was his heir-at-law, absolutely. A. predeceased the testator; B. renounced probate, and died three years afterwards, not having acted as trustee, though he did not disclaim the trusts, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to M. From and after the testator's death M., through his agent, received the rent of the land but did not exercise any other act of ownership. No one was admitted tenant of the copyhold. The land was let from year to year, and there was one change of tenancy effected by the agent. On the death of M., who survived the testator nearly nine years, the question arose whether the land was to be treated as real estate:—Held, that on B. renouncing probate, the legal estate devolved on M., and that whether the legal estate was outstanding or not, M. must be taken to have elected to take the land as real estate. Gordon, In re, Roberts v. Gordon, 46 L. J., Ch. 794; 6 Ch. D. 531.

—— Real Estate in Lease—Building Scheme—Petition to Parliament.]—The H. P. estate was vested in H., D. and S., upon trust after the death of a person who died in August, 1863, to sell with all convenient speed. The proceeds of sale belonged as to one moiety to D.'s wife absolutely for her separate use subject to a charge of 500*l.* to a legatee, and as to the other moiety to S. absolutely. The property was well adapted for building purposes, but the bulk of it was subject to an old lease, of which twenty-six years were unexpired. In March, 1864, D. and wife paid off the 500*l.* In 1864 the three trustees let for three years part of the property not comprised in the old lease, and in 1867, and again in 1869, D. and S., who had survived H., granted similar leases for three years. In 1865, S., who was the acting trustee and managed the property, had plans prepared by a surveyor for laying out the property for building. In the same year a bill was brought into parliament for authorising a railway to pass through the estate, and a petition against it was presented on behalf of "the owners and trustees of the H. P. estate," which stated that it was their intention to lay out the estate for building. Mrs. D. died in 1870, in the lifetime of her husband. There was no direct evidence that she had concurred in the leases, the preparation of the plans, or the petition to parliament:—Held, that the parties had elected to take the property as real estate, and that Mrs. D.'s share went to her heir-at-law as realty, and not to her husband as personalty. Davidson, In re, Martin v. Trimmer, Davidson v. Trimmer, In re, 11 Ch. D. 341; 40 L. T. 726—C. A.

—— Possession—Instructions for Deed of Gift.]—A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees for his wife for life, and after death, as to one freehold house upon trust for one of his sons for life, as to another freehold house upon trust for his daughter for life, and as to a third freehold house upon trust for another son for life, and after their respective deaths to their issue respectively, and after the respective deaths of any without issue he directed his trustees to sell the house of such child and to pay the proceeds of sale to the survivors or the survivor of his three children, and until sale to pay the rents to the same persons or person, and he gave his residuary real and personal estate to such of his three children as should survive the widow. One of the sons predeceased the widow, a bachelor. The daughter survived her and died intestate in 1877, and all her property passed to her surviving brother as her sole next of kin. The houses were let to weekly tenants, and the surviving son, since 1877, received all the rents. He died in 1885, and shortly before his death he handed the title-deeds of the houses to a solicitor, directing that a gift of all his property should be made to a niece, but he died before a conveyance could be executed. The question then rose whether the will had effected a conversion of the realty, and, if so, whether the surviving son had elected to take the property as real estate :—Held, that there had been an out-and-out conversion, and that the son must be taken to have elected to take the houses as real estate. Potter v. Dudeney, 56 L. T. 395.

—— Reversionary Interest.]—A testator directed his residuary real and personal estate to be sold, and the proceeds to be paid, after payment of 1,000*l.*, to A., whom he appointed one of his executors. A. raised the 1,000*l.* by sale of the personal estate and a portion only of the real estate, and the remainder he reconverted into land. The residuary real estate consisted in part of a reversion in copyhold estates, which did not fall into possession until many years after the death of A. :—Held, that the reconversion of the freehold into land did not operate as a reconversion of the copyholds, and that they passed to the personal representatives of A. Meredith v. Vick, 23 Beav. 559 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 162 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1234 ; 5 W. R. 639.

Gift in lieu of Debts—Real Estate—Presumption—Disclaimer.]—Devise of residuary real estate in lieu and discharge of all debts due from testator to devisee. Devisee dies intestate three days after testator :—Held, as between the heir and personal representative of the devisee, that, it not being manifestly for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the devised estate, the court could not presume a disclaimer by the devisee, and consequently the heir was entitled to the estate, and debts claimed by the administrator as due to the devisee from the testator were discharged. Harris v. Watkins, 2 K. & J. 473.

But, semble, had it been manifestly for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the estate upon the terms proposed by the testator, the court might have presumed a disclaimer. Ib.

Gift to Charity—Impure Personalty—Presumption of Conversion.]—A., being entitled to moneys charged upon land, but primarily secured by bond and promissory notes, bequeathed all her property to her three daughters, B., C., and D., whom she appointed executrices of her will. B. died in the lifetime of A., and C. died intestate shortly after A.'s death, and D. became sole executrix of A., and alone entitled to the said moneys. The moneys were not called in during the life of D., who, by her will, gave legacies to charities :—Held, that as D. was alone entitled to the property, the court would not assume in favour of the charities a conversion into pure personalty, which she was not bound to make. Lucas v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 602 ; L. R. 4 Eq. 73 ; 15 W. R. 738.

Partition, Suit for—Decree for Sale—Consent—Married Woman—Sale.]—B., after consenting to a decree for sale in a partition suit, to which she was a party, married. The sale took place, and the purchase money was paid into court. Subsequently B. died intestate, leaving two sisters, her co-heiresses at law. Her husband took out letters of administration :—Held, that B. had elected to have the property converted, and that her husband was entitled, as her administrator, to the money in court. Fowler v. Scott, 25 L. T. 23 ; 19 W. R. 972.

Statute.]—57 & 58 Vict. c. 46, consolidates the Copyhold Acts.

The Queen as Lady of the Manor.]—A crown lessee of minerals under a crown manor entered a farm within the manor and opened the surface in search of minerals. The occupier of the farm brought an action for the trespass in the Court of Exchequer against the lessee. The crown undertook to defend the action, and afterwards filed an information and bill against the occupier and the copyhold tenant of the farm. The bill alleged that the Queen, in right of her crown, was entitled as lady of the manor to search for and win, and to grant to others the right to search for and win, minerals within the manor, and had granted this right to the lessee; the bill then prayed that those rights might be declared:—Held, that the crown, by virtue of its prerogative was entitled to maintain the bill, and that since the bill would determine all the questions raised in the action, the occupier of the farm must be restrained from proceeding with the action till the hearing of the bill. Att.-Gen. v. Barker, 41 L. J., Ex. 57; L. R. 7 Ex. 177; 26 L. T. 34; 20 W. R. 509.

The Queen remains lady of the royal manors, notwithstanding 10 Geo. 4, c. 58, whereby powers over crown lands are conferred on the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Reg. v. Powell, 4 P. & D. 719; 1 Q. B. 352.

That act, giving commissioners the management of the land revenues of the crown, does not divest the legal estate out of the crown. Ib.

Infant Tenant for Life.]—A female infant tenant for life in possession of a manor, but subject to a legal term of 1,000 years vested in trustees for securing annuities, and also subject to a provision for the receipt by the trustees of the rents during the minority, and for the application of a limited sum thereout for her maintenance, is the lady of the manor. Griggs v. Gibson, 14 W. R. 819.

Grant of Lands of.]—The demesne lands of a manor previously granted in fee do not become reunited to the manor, if purchased by the lord, as they would do if they had reverted to him by escheat. Delacherois v. Delacherois, 11 H. L. Cas. 62; 4 N. R. 501; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 886; 10 L. T. 884; 13 W. R. 24.

If the demesne lands are treated in a conveyance of them in fee, as a distinct property, as, for instance, being conveyed by the lord in fee without being accompanied by a declaration of the feoffer's title as lord, or being described as lands held of the manor, but only as lands situate, lying, and being within the manor, they are severed from the manor, and cease to form part of it, although the rents and dues may remain. Ib.

On re-purchase, by the lord, of the fee-simple, he will hold of the chief lord. Ib.

They will, on such re-purchase, again form part of the manor, so as to pass under that description made in a will dated anterior to the purchase. Ib.

The grant of a court-baron involves the grant of a manor for it implies the existence of freeholders of the manor, holding under the lord, and owing suit and service to him. Ib.

A lessee of a manor assigned all his interest in the manor to trustees, but continued nevertheless to act as lord, and made grants, and one to himself:—Held, that such grant to himself could not be considered a grant by the trustees, and was therefore void. Christchurch, Oxford (Dean and Chapter) v. Buckingham (Duke), 17 C. B. (N.S.) 391; 33 L. J., C. P. 322; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 749; 10 L. T. 575; 12 W. R. 986.

The law as to the divisibility of manors, and the consequences of a division, considered. Cattley v. Arnold, 4 K. & J. 595.

—— What passes under.]—Unascertained and undefined advantages will pass under the general words by a grant of the manor, although not in the contemplation of either party at the time. Thus, for instance, the minerals in the lord's waste would pass, although their existence was neither known to nor suspected by any of the parties to the contract; so also the advowson to a living will pass with a manor by general words, though not specifically named in the grant. Att.-Gen. v. Ewelme Hospital, 17 Beav. 366; 22 L. J., Ch. 846; 1 W. R. 523.

In 1790, an advowson appendant to a manor was sold and assigned for the residue of a term of 500 years, created in the manor and advowson in 1745, and which, except as to the advowson, ceased:—Held, that this did not sever the appendancy, and that the advowson passed by a subsequent release of the manor with general words. Rooper v. Harrison, 2 K. & J. 86.

Semble, that an office of trust under the crown cannot be annexed to a manor. Att.-Gen. v. Mathias, 4 K. & J. 579; 27 L. J., Ch. 761; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 628; 6 W. R. 780.

The Commissioners of Woods and Forests having power, under 57 Geo. 3, c. 97, to make sale of any royalties, honours, hundreds, manors, lordships, or franchises, "or any rights, members, or appurtenances thereof," belonging to the crown, within the ordering and survey of the Exchequer, contracted for the sale of the crown manor of E.. and all courts baron, courts leet, and all fines, reliefs, rents, profits, waifs, strays, deodands, and "all other rights, members, emoluments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging": —Held, that this being in effect a contract for sale by the crown, the advowson of E., which was appendant to the manor, did not pass under the contract, and, consequently, that the purchaser was bound to take a conveyance of the manor without the advowson. Semble, that if the contract had been between subject and subject, the advowson would have passed; although, at the time of the contract, it was not known by either party to be appendant to the manor, and, therefore, the sale of it was not in their contemplation. Att.-Gen. v. Sitwell, 1 Y. & C. 559; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 86.

A. B., being possessed of the K. estate and the manor of E., both in the county of M., mortgaged to S. G. the K. estate by particular description and all other the hereditaments, lands, and premises comprised in a previous mortgage of the K. estate, and all other the lands, tenements and hereditaments (if any) in the county of M., whereof or whereto A. B. was seised or entitled to for an estate of inheritance:—Held, that the manor of E. was not comprised in this mortgage under the general words of conveyance. Rooke v. Kensington (Lord), 2 K. & J. 753; 25 L. J., Ch. 795; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 4 W. R. 829.

—— Waste Lands of.]—The 51 Geo. 3, c. 115, s. 2, does not empower the lord to grant a portion of the waste land of the manor, which is a village green, freed from the parishioners' customary right to the use of it, as such. Forbes v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 42 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 15 Eq. 51; 27 L. T. 511; 21 W. R. 169.

By a grant of a manor with an exception of the wastes, they are thereby severed from the manor though the copyholders continue to have a right of common thereon by immemorial custom. Revell v. Jodrell, 2 Term Rep. 415; 1 R. R. 506.

Under a conveyance by the lord of the manor of P. of all those messuages, lands, tenements, commons, wastes, woods, underwoods, and the soil of the woods and underwoods of P., without any reservation of manorial rights, the soil of the common of P. passes. Cator v. Croydon Canal Company, 4 Y. & C. 405.

A grant of a reputed manor will not pass a freehold interest in the wastes, nor in any specific tenement possessed by the grantor. Doe d. Clayton v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 803; 12 L. J., Ex. 429.

The lord of a manor contracted to sell part of the waste, and furnished a statutory declaration that to the best of his information and belief no copyholder or free tenant had exercised any right of common for forty years and upwards, and that he did not know or believe that any copyholder or free tenant existed, and that no quit rents had been paid or services rendered or court baron held for forty, or, as the declarant believed, for sixty years and upwards. The means of knowledge of the declarant were not questioned, and he offered to add to his statutory declaration a statement negativing the existence of any commonable rights over the waste:—Held, that the title could be forced on the purchaser. Bridges and McRae's Contract, In re, 30 W. R. 539.

The lord is said to be never out of possession; and that whatever is built on the waste is his, even after sixty years' possession by the tenant. Lloyd v. Bartlett, 6 Vin. 123, pl. 1.

Sed quære, after twenty years' possession, which is a bar to an ejectment. Ib.

—— Demesne Lands.]—A bishop who had free warren, by prescription, over the demesne and tenemental lands of a manor whereof he was seised jure ecclesiæ, accepted a grant from the crown, to himself and his successors, of free warren over the demesne lands of all his manors in England:—Held, that, if the grant could have the effect of extinguishing the prescription as to the demesne lands, it could not effect it over the other lands of the manor. Carnarvon (Earl) v. Villebois, 13 M. & W. 313; 14 L. J., Ex. 233.

The term "demesne lands" properly signifies lands of a manor which the lord either has or potentially may have in propriis manibus. Att.-Gen. v. Parsons, 2 C. & J. 279; 2 Tyrw. 223; 1 L. J., Ex. 103.

—— Fishery.]—Where a private river runs through a manor, the presumption of law is, that each owner of land within the manor and on the bank of the river has the right of fishing in front of his land; and, if the lord claims a several fishery, he must make out that claim by evidence. Lamb v. Newbiggin, 1 Car. & K. 549.

From the words of a deed under which the lord claimed, it was attempted to raise a presumption that the right of several fishery within the manor passed to him by that deed as appurtenant to the manor:—Held, this presumption was rebutted by proof, that, before the date of the deed, owners of land within the manor and on the bank of the river had the right of free fishery therein. Ib.

Boundary of Manor.]—The sea-shore between high and low water may be part of the adjoining manor; and where, by an ancient grant of the manor, its limits were not defined, modern usage is admissible to shew that such sea-shore was part of the manor. Beaufort (Duke) v. Swansea (Mayor), 3 Ex. 413.

Evidence as to Boundaries.]—Dispute between a lord of a manor and a corporation as to the ownership of a piece of foreshore. The court rolls contained entries—(1) Of fines paid to the lord for salvage, for moorage, and for trespasses, in taking wreck and the like, and of sums paid to the lord by the bailiff for wreck sold by him. (2) Presentments as to wreck, porpoises, &c., coming on the soil, with no express mention of receipt of money except (in some cases) by the bailiff. (3) Presentments of wreck the payments in respect of which were partly made to the salvors and partly to the lord. (4) Presentments directing the bailiff to levy certain fines, &c. (5) Similar presentments with no express direction to the bailiff to levy. (6) Presentments of wreck with no particular entries as to value or entered as matter for future inquiry :—Held, that all the entries except the last could be safely admitted as evidence of the lord's title. Walton-cum-Trimley (Manor), In re, Tomline, Ex parte, 28 L. T. 12 ; 21 W. R. 475.

—— Decision in former Suit.]—An action of trespass by a former lord against the same corporation, and decided in his favour in 1738 and acquiesced in ever since, considered the strongest possible evidence in his favour. Ib.

In an action which turned on a question as to the boundary of two manors a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, subject to the award of an arbitrator, who was to determine for which party the verdict was to be finally entered, and to set out the boundaries. He directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant. In a subsequent action by the defendant against a third party, where also the question substantially was as to the boundary of the same manors, the verdict was received, but the award rejected as evidence of reputation. Evans v. Rees, 10 A. & E. 151 ; 2 P. & D. 626 ; 9 L. J., M. C. 83.

An ancient presentment by the homage, in the form of a book, set out the boundaries of the manor, and gave in alphabetical order the names of the several parishes within it, and of the tenants resident in each parish, but this part of the presentment contained nothing as to boundaries. Two or three sheets at the concluding part of it, where a parish should have followed in order, had been cut off, but it did not appear under what circumstances. In an action involving a question as to the boundary of the manor and the parish where it was admitted that the manor and the parish were conterminous in the direction of the locus in quo, the presentment was received in evidence of the reputed boundary, as the document, although mutilated, was perfect in that part of it which related to the subject of the boundary. Ib.

In an action by a lord for carrying away dollars claimed by him as wreck, two instruments, dated in 1639 and 1657, and purporting to be presentments or answers of a jury, partly consisting of the tenants of the manor, to questions by commissioners of survey appointed by the lord, were put in to prove the boundaries of the manor and also the lord's title to wreck, which was affirmed in particular passages :—Held, that they were only evidence of the boundaries, and could not be admitted as declarations by the tenants of the title of the lord to wreck, that being a matter of private right, derived from the crown, respecting which they could not be taken to have any peculiar knowledge, as they had no concern with it. Talbot v. Lewis, 5 Tyrw. 1 ; 1 C. M. R. 495 ; 4 L. J., Ex. 9.

—— Boundary of other Manors.]—When the boundary between two manors is formed by a ridge of hills which run beyond the manors, and on an issue as to the boundary between one of these manors and a third manor one of the parties wishes to prove that the same ridge is the boundary between the two latter manors, evidence of its being the boundary of the other two is admissible for this purpose, the three manors being contiguous. Brisco v. Lomax, 3 N. & P. 308 ; 8 A. & E. 198 ; 1 W. W. & H. 235 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 148 ; 2 Jur. 682.

—— Boundary of other Enclosure.]—The defendant was the lord of a manor, the boundary of which was the medium filum aquæ of a river. Between the river and a freehold close of the plaintiff lay a narrow uninclosed strip of land, the ownership of which was the question in dispute. At the trial of an action of trespass the plaintiff offered evidence that the owner of the inclosure adjoining his own was in the undisputed possession of a similar narrow strip of land between his fence and the river, the last-mentioned piece of land being continuous with that claimed by the plaintiff and within the same manor :—Held, that the evidence was properly admitted. Vaughan v. De Wynton, 17 L. T. 30 ; 15 W. R. 1145.

—— Adjoining Highway.]—Upon a question whether a piece of waste land, lying between a highway and the plaintiff's inclosed land, belonged to the plaintiff or to the lord :—Held, that grants by the lord of other slips of waste land on either side of the same road, abutting on inclosed lands of the lord himself and of other persons, were admissible for the purpose of showing that the locus in quo was part of the waste of the manor, without showing continuity. Dendy v. Simpson, 18 C. B. 831 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 642—Ex. Ch.

—— Declarations of Deceased Persons.]—Where a legal manor has once existed, declarations of persons deceased as to its boundary are still admissible, though the manor has ceased to exist otherwise than by reputation. Doe d. Molesworth v. Sleeman, 9 Q. B. 238 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 338 ; 10 Jur. 568.

Inclosure of Waste.]—Where waste land was, with the consent of a lord, inclosed by a former owner of the plaintiffs' property, and the plaintiffs had dug for minerals thereon, and where a subsequent lord asserted his right to the minerals, and sold them to the defendant, who thereupon entered upon the property and commenced digging for them ; on a bill to restrain the defendant :—Held, that the lord had not succeeded in establishing his claim, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the minerals. Ackroyd v. Briggs, 13 L. T. 521 ; 14 W. R. 25.

Evidence of Existence.]—It seems that reputation alone is admissible to prove the existence of a manor, without any proof of the actual exercise of any manorial rights. Steel v. Prickett, 2 Stark. 463 ; 20 R. R. 717. And see Curzon v. Lomax, 5 East, 60.

In ejectment by a party claiming to be the devisee of a manor, the facts of the devisor having held a court thirty-five years ago, and the devisee on several occasions since his death, and of appointments of gamekeepers, are primâ facie proof, both that a manor exists, and that the devisee is the lord, without the production of court-rolls, or any documentary evidence of courts having been held. Doe d. Beck v. Heakin, 6 A. & E. 495 ; 2 N. & P. 660.

An allegation in a declaration that one was seised of a manor, and that he and all those whose estates he had in the manor have immemorially appointed a sexton in the parish, is sustained by the proof of his seisin of a quondam manor, which had ceased to be a legal manor for defect of freehold tenants, and existed now only by reputation. Soane v. Ireland, 10 East, 259 ; 10 R. R. 285.

Contents of manor. as it was sixty years ago, is question for jury. Anon., Cary, 24.

Tolls.]—Bill to establish a right to tolls for carts coming into a manor, dismissed, it not appearing that the toll-bars stood within the manor. Att.-Gen. v. Ayre, Bunb. 68.

Bill for tolls for landing goods in plaintiff's manor, dismissed as proper at law. Disney v. Robertson, Bunb. 41.

Bill by the lord, claiming a prescriptive right to tolls for goods landed, and praying a discovery of the goods landed; he is not entitled to a discovery till he has established his right at law; aliter, where the title is in equity. Northleigh v. Luscombe. Amb. 612.

Copies of court rolls, purporting to be surrenders of property by a person proved to be then in possession, and admittances accordingly, are evidence of the existence of a manor, and of such property being within it, in an action by the surrenderee, in which his ownership is disputed. Standen v. Chrismas, 10 Q. B. 135; 16 L. J., Q. B. 265.

2. Validity of Customs.

General Customs.]—General customs may be reduced to certainty by agreement in manor. Anon., Cary, 31.

Fines on Admission.]—There is no general copyhold law that, in manors in which a fine is only payable on the first admittance of a tenant, a purchaser of several distinct copyhold tenements under one disposition—whether a will, or surrender, or otherwise—is entitled as of right to split his admittance, i.e. is entitled to compel the lord to admit him to any one or more of such several tenements, and to take admittance to the others at any subsequent time, as and when he pleases. A special custom in a manor, that a purchaser of several distinct copyhold tenements under one disposition, must take admittance to all at one and the same time, and pay one general fine in respect of all, is good. Such a special custom may be evidenced by a uniform course of practice or usage in the manor for a number of years, although it does not otherwise appear either on the court rolls, or in any custumal or other record of the manor. Johnstone v. Spencer (Earl), 30 Ch. D. 581; 53 L. T. 502; 34 W. R. 10.

To Work Mines without Compensation.]—A custom to work mines under houses without making compensation for any damage occasioned to such houses is bad, as being unreasonable. Hilton v. Granville (Earl), Dav. & M. 614; 5 Q. B. 701; 13 L. J., Q. B. 193.

To Fell Timber.]—A custom for copyhold tenants to fell timber or other trees upon their customary lands, and to retain the same for their own use, without licence from the lord, although such timber may not be felled for necessary repairs, is not unreasonable. Blewett v. Jenkins, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 16.

Such a custom is not the less admissible in evidence because it also professes to entitle the customary tenants to plough up meadow land and to suffer their houses to decay, which might be a bad custom, if pleaded. Ib.

To Make Bricks.]—A custom that the copyholders of inheritance may, without licence from the lord, break the surface, and dig, and get clay without limit, in, upon, and from, and out of their copyhold tenements, for the purpose of making bricks, to be sold by them off the manor, is good in law. Salisbury (Marquis) v. Gladstone, 9 H. L. Cas. 692; 34 L. J., C. P. 222; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 625; 4 L. T. 849; 9 W. R. 930.

And see Common.

Profits à Prendre.]—Sect. 1 of the Prescription Act, which relates to profits à prendre, applies only to cases where one man claims by custom, prescription, or grant, some profit or benefit to be taken or enjoyed from or upon the land of another, and has no application to the case of a right claimed by a copyholder in his own tenement, according to the custom of the manor. Hanmer v. Chance, 4 De G. J. & S. 626; 34 L. J., Ch. 413; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 12 L. T. 163; 13 W. R. 556.

Grants for Lives—Descent.]—Quære, whether it is a good and reasonable custom, that upon the death of a tenant in possession of lands holden of a manor for lives, the next life in reversion, for which the estate is holden, shall be entitled to enjoy the estate, and if such custom be good and reasonable, whether where a party takes a grant of such lands for the life of himself and his grandnephews, and dies, the grant shall operate as an advancement for the grandnephews, so as to rebut a resulting trust in favour of other parties claiming under the purchaser. Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Y. & C. 123; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 79.

—— Renewal—Fine Certain.]—Copyhold property situate in a manor in which copyholds were held for lives only, and were renewable on payment of a fine, to be ascertained and agreed on between the lord and the tenant, was surrendered by L., the surviving life, to the intent that the lord might regrant the same to M., or such other person or persons, and for such life or lives, estate or interest, as should be agreed on between the lord and M. M. was never admitted, but assigned his interest, by way of mortgage, to A. and B., who entered into possession. After the death of L., the lord took possession, whereupon A. and B. filed their bill against him, praying that he might be compelled to grant the copyholds comprised in the surrender to the plaintiffs, or one of them, for their or his lives or life, or to some other persons or person, by the direction of the plaintiffs, for their or his lives or life, or to make such other grant or grants thereof as the plaintiffs were entitled to have made according to the custom of the manor. The lord denied that there was any custom under which a tenant for life had a right to surrender in favour of any other persons to be admitted in his place:—Held, that M. was a legitimate party to the suit, and that although instances were adduced in evidence in which copyhold tenants of the manor had been admitted, in various forms, for one more life or lives, on a fine being paid, yet that the lord could not be compelled to renew the copyholds for a life or lives without remuneration, nor unless the plaintiffs could prove a custom existed within the manor to renew for life or lives on payment of a fine certain. Walker v. Abingdon (Earl), 10 L. J., Ch. 289; 5 Jur. 714.

—— Grant in Reversion—Trust.]—Custom of manor, that if tenant for life of copyhold obtains a grant in reversion in the name of a third person, unless the trust is mentioned on the rolls of the manor. such third person should be beneficially entitled thereto, and not as trustee, held good. Edwards v. Fidel, 3 Madd. 237.

The right of the equitable owner of a copyhold estate to dispose of his equitable interest by will cannot be controlled by the custom of a manor; a custom inconsistent with the doctrine of resulting trusts, as that a person named by the purchaser of a copyhold estate as the second life according to the custom shall take beneficially, is unreasonable. Lewis v. Lane, 2 Myl. & K. 449.

—— Power to dispose of Whole Interest.]—Where a father and two sons, A. and B., were successive lives in a copyhold, wherein, by custom, person first named might dispose of the whole interest, and upon marriage of A., it was agreed, that father should have power to appoint, during life of A., and widowhood of his intended wife; father having afterwards obtained a new grant for lives of C., a third son, and A. and B., by will made after death of C., in which no mention is made of copyhold, gives residue of his personal estate to B.:—Held, that B. was not thereby entitled to copyhold. Rumboll v. Rumboll, 2 Eden, 15.

According to the custom of a manor, a grant by copy of court-roll, "to A., B., & C., for their lives and the life of the longest liver of them, successively. according to the custom of the manor," gave the first taker an absolute power of disposing of the estate in his lifetime:—Held, a good custom; and that it was sufficiently proved by showing four instances of surrender and admittance of the person first named, in exclusion of the others. Phillips v. Ball, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 811; 29 L. J., C. P. 7; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 48; 7 W. R. 580.

—— Purchaser.]—A. buys a copyhold estate for his own and two lives in a manor, where the custom was, that whoever purchases in it, the estate shall go in succession; and by his will devises all his real and personal estate to his wife:—Held, that though the legal interest was according to the custom of the manor, yet A. has an equitable interest from being the sole purchaser, and it shall be construed as a trust for him, he having advanced the money. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 385.

—— Heir at Law.]—Heir-at-law of J., who was the last of three lives named in grant of copyhold, brought bill against lord, to be admitted to estate for his own life, and the lives of two other persons whom he should nominate, alleging the custom of manor to be so; defendant denied the custom by answer, and insisted he was not bound to renew; issue was directed as to the obligation to renew, but on appeal order was reversed and bill dismissed. Grafton (Duke) v. Horton, 2 Bro. P. C. 284.

Surrender to Use of Will.]—A custom that copyholds shall not be surrendered to the use of a will is bad. Pike v. White, 3 Bro. C. C. 286.

Rights of Cestuis que vie.]—A tenant of a manor having been originally admitted to a copyhold estate, to hold the same for the lives of H. D. the elder and H. D. the younger, surrendered the same into the hands of the lord, and took a re-grant of the estate for the lives of his sons, and the life of the longest liver of them successively, according to the custom of the manor, and paid a fine, the grant describing him as sole purchaser. By the custom of the manor, when a copyhold tenement is granted by copy of court-roll to any person to hold the same for the lives of two or more other persons, and the life of the longest liver of such other persons successively, and the grantee dies, during the life or lives of any one or more of such other person or persons, without having devised the tenement, such one or more of such other person or persons so surviving the grantee shall be entitled, by virtue of such grant, to take and hold the tenement successively, as they are named in the grant during his or their life or lives; but if the grantee devises the tenement, the devisee upon his death shall hold the same during the life or lives of such other person or persons so surviving. The grantee devised his copyhold estate to his eldest son, one of the cestuis que vie named in the grant, who, upon his father's death, entered into the possession:—Held, that the custom was good and valid in law, and not being inconsistent with the grant, barred the lord's right of entry. Doe d. Nepean v. Goddard, 2 D. & R. 773; 1 B. & C. 522; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 179; 25 R. R. 494.

—— Advancement.]—A. was admitted tenant of copyhold lands, to hold to him for the lives of his three sons, B., C., and D., and for the life of the longest liver of them successively:—Quære, whether a custom that the cestuis que vie should successively be entitled to admission, notwithstanding a devise by the grantee, would be good. Jeans v. Cooke, 24 Beav. 513; 27 L. J., Ch. 202; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 57; 6 W. R. 175.

Held, assuming against the validity of such a custom, that the fact of the grantee naming his three sons as cestuis que vie amounted to an advancement in favour of the sons, and that they were entitled successively for life as against his devisees; and leave was given to try at law the validity of the alleged custom. Ib.

—— Personal Representative.]—A copyhold estate granted for the lives of A., B. and C.; A. dies intestate, his administratrix shall have the estate during the lives of B. and C. Howe v. Howe, 1 Vern. 415. S. P., Withers v. Withers, Amb. 152.

A copyhold is granted to three successively, but no custom proved that the first taker had the power of disposing of the whole, nor that the first taker paid the purchase money; this shall not go to the executor of the first taker, but shall go in succession. Rundle v. Rundle, 2 Vern. 264.

Mortgages.]—Particular customs of a manor as to mortgages. Equity of redemption will follow the custom attaching on the legal estate. Not absolutely determined whether trust estates or equities of redemption in copyhold escheat to the lord. Fawcett v. Lowther, 2 Ves. 300.

General custom of copyhold; surrenderee to present at next court. Ib.

Custom for mortgagee to present at third court not void. Ib.

Custom not void for diminishing lord's profit. Ib.

Custom for copyholder in fee to waste, good; not for life. Ib.

Relief.] — Copyholders have relief against their lord for breach of custom of manor in equity, though at law they have none. Anon., Cary, 3.

The dwellers in a parish or manor cannot acquire any right to a profit à prendre; and if in laying a custom to a profit à prendre, the dwellers are included in the class alleged to have the right, the custom so laid is bad. Allgood v. Gibson, 34 L. T. 883; 25 W. R. 60.

Bill by one tenant of the manor of A., suggesting a custom for the tenants of that manor to cut turf in the manor of B. Where several persons have the same right and are disturbed, and bills are entertained to void a multiplicity of suits, since one or two determinations will establish the rights of all parties, on the footing of one common interest; but in all such bills all parties, or a determinate number, join in the name of the rest. Here only one brings a bill in the general right, and not in a distinct right. Bill dismissed. Baker v. Rogers, Select Ca. Ch. 74.

Nomination of Jury.]—An immemorial custom for the steward of a manor to nominate the jury to serve on the court leet at the election of the mayor of a borough, is good in law. Rex v. Jolliffe, 3 D. & R. 240; 2 B. & C. 54; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 232; 26 R. R. 264.

Swearing of Jurors.] — A custom to swear the jurors at one court leet to inquire and return their presentments at the next court day, is bad in law. Davidson v. Moscrop, 2 East, 56; 6 R. R. 373.

A court leet holden on 28th April was adjourned, after the jury had been sworn, till 15th December, which day was given them to make their presentments:—Held, that the adjournment (which was admitted to be according to the custom of the manor) was not unnecessarily unreasonable. Wilcock v. Windsor, 3 B. & Ad. 43.

Breaking false Measures.] — A custom in a manor for the leet jury to break and destroy measures found by them to be false, is lawful. Ib. And see Sheppard v. Hall, 3 B. & Ad. 433.

3. Evidence of Customs.

Of Similar Customs.]—The customs of one manor cannot be given in evidence to prove the existence of a particular custom in an adjoining manor, though it lies within the same parish and the same leet. Anglesey (Marquis) v. Hatherton (Lord), 10 M. & W. 218; 12 L. J., Ex. 57. S. P., Ely (Dean) v. Warren, 2 Atk. 189.

In Face of written Documents.]—Evidence sufficient in itself to establish a custom in a manor will be insufficient to establish such custom in the face of ancient documents made within the time of legal memory, and which negative the existence of any such custom. Portland (Duke) v. Hill, 35 L. J., Ch. 489; L. R. 2 Eq. 765; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 15 W. R. 88.

Presumption.]—The meaning of s. 6 of 2 & 3 Will. 3, c. 71, is, that no presumption or inference in support of the claim shall be derived from the bare fact of user or enjoyment for less than the prescribed number of years. Hanmer v. Chance, 4 De G. J. & S. 626; 34 L. J., Ch. 413; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 12 L. T., 163; 13 W. R. 556.

But where there are circumstances in addition, the statute does not take away from the fact of enjoyment for a shorter period its natural weight as evidence so as to preclude a jury from taking it, along with other circumstances, into consideration as evidence of a grant. Ib.

Customary or Prescriptive Rights.] — Customary rights of copyhold tenements differ from prescriptive rights; the former are usages which apply to a number of persons in a certain district or locality, but prescriptive rights are claimed by one or more person or persons as existing in themselves or their ancestors, or as attached to a particular estate. Ib.

The law has laid down no rule as to the extent of evidence which is required to establish a custom, or from which the presumption or inference of the fact of a custom may be rightly drawn. It is the province of a jury to draw these conclusions of fact. Ib.

Circumstances under which the court, sitting as a jury, found the existence of a custom in a copyhold manor, authorising the tenants to dig for and get sand, sandstone, gravel, and clay from their respective tenements, and to cart and carry away the same on to other lands, and to use or sell the same, either on or off the manor, without licence from the lord. Ib.

Loss by Negligence.]—There must be one rule applicable to ecclesiastical persons as well as to lay when the question is, whether rights belonging to them have or have not been lost by negligence. Ib.

Leases without Enjoyment.] — Leases, without proof of enjoyment under them, are admissible to prove a particular custom of a manor. Clarkson v. Woodhouse, 3 Dougl. 189.

Payment of Toll.]—Certain variations in old entries of accounts as to a manorial customary payment, extending over three centuries, and uniform in amount:—Held, to be no objection to the validity of the claim. Beaufort (Duke) v. Smith, 4 Ex. 450; 19 L. J., Ex. 97.

Heriot.]—To support the proof of a custom for the lord of a manor to take only one heriot from a tenant whatever the number of his holdings might be, a paper purporting to be a copy of an old decree of the Court of Chancery in a suit between a copyholder and the lord, produced by a witness who succeeded his brother as lord of the manor, and who stated that he had found it amongst his brother's papers, is admissible in evidence as against a subsequent lord, evidence having been given of an ineffectual search for the original. Price v. Woodhouse, 3 Ex. 616; 18 L. J., Ex. 271.

See also Custom and Evidence.

B. Courts.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1894, s. 82.

Recovery.] — Bill to compel lord to receive petition in nature of writ of false judgment, for reversing common recovery suffered in manor court, whereby plaintiff's remainder in tail was barred, suggesting several errors. Lord, by answer, insisted that it was the first attempt of the kind, and of dangerous consequence, and therefore would not proceed on the petition, unless compelled by law. Bill dismissed, and dismissal confirmed by Lords. Smith v. St. Paul's (Dean), Shower, P. C. 67.

Bill brought by a remainderman in fee of copyhold expectant on an estate tail which was spent, to be relieved against an erroneous common recovery in the lord's court, praying that the lord might be decreed to suffer it. Plaintiff to bring a plaint in the lord's court in nature of a writ of error to reverse this recovery, so that the court would relieve on the merits. The defendant demurred, and the demurrer was allowed. Ash v. Royle, 1 Vern. 367.

Jurisdiction of equity over judgment in copyhold court. 1 Rol. Abr. 60, 373.

Jurisdiction of manor of Woodstock, overruled. Wilkins v. Gregory, Anon., Cary, 85.

Court Baron—Jurisdiction.]—A court baron cannot be legally held without two free suitors. Rumsey v. Walton, 4 Term Rep. 446, n. And see Holroyd v. Breare, 2 B. & Ald. 473; 21 R. R. 361.

In the record of a judgment of a court baron, it was stated that the court was held "before W. R., steward of the court, and W. U. and G. M. and others, free suitors of the court":—Held, first, that it was not necessary to state that W. was steward of the manor. Brown v. Gale, 2 C. B. 861; 3 D. & L. 123; 15 L. J., C. P. 187; 10 Jur. 66.

Held, secondly, that the style of the court thus stated was correct. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it was sufficient to state the names of two of the suitors only. Ib.

Manor demised, except court baron and perquisites, &c. Tenant bound to make suit there. Anon., Cary. 18.

—— Abolition and Revival.]—By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, the old court baron of the honour of Pontefract, in the county of York, was to be terminated and a new court substituted. By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 85, and an order in council made under that act, the new court was abolished:—Held, the old court was not revived, and consequently that a replevin obtained out of that court was void. Hellawell v. Eastwood, 2 Ex. 295; 20 L. J., Ex. 154.

Court Leet—Jurisdiction.]—An amercement at a court leet for a private injury to the lord is illegal, though there be a custom to warrant it. Wood v. Lovatt, 6 Term Rep. 511.

A custom to swear the jurors at one court leet to inquire and return their presentments at the next court is bad in law. Davidson v. Moscrop, 2 East, 56; 6 R. R. 373.

Bill for suit of court to a manor, and a fee farm rent or law day silver at plaintiff's court leet, dismissed, as proper at law. Thornhagh v. Hartshorn, Bunb. 237.

Customary Court.]—A customary court cannot be held out of the manor unless there is a custom to warrant it; and if a council is so held, all that is done at it is void. Doe d. Leach v. Whitaker, 5 B. & Ad. 409; 3 N. & M. 225.

But the nullity of such court only affects such matters as are required to be done at a court. Ib.

C. COURT ROLLS.

I. ENTRIES.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1894, ss. 54, 62—64.

Reform of Entry.]—The court will not reform an entry on the court roll, unless the lord be a party to the suit or consent to such order as the court shall think fit to make; but the lord consenting to such order, the court decreed that a surrender and admission on the court rolls, which gave an interest to the wife of a mortgagor in fraud of the mortgagee, should be reformed. Elston v. Wood, 2 Myl. & K. 678.

Necessity for.]—A steward indorsing on a surrender the uses of it is sufficient without specifying them on the court rolls. Carr v. Ellison, 3 Atk. 73.

In ejectment to recover copyholds by the assignee of an insolvent it was not necessary that the conveyance and the assignment from the provisional to the general assignee should be entered on the court rolls. It was sufficient that such conveyance should be entered in the minute book of the steward. The entry on the rolls was only requisite under s. 20 of 7 Geo. 4, c. 57 (Insolvent Debtors' Act), in case of a sale of the property in question. Doe d. Brennan v. Glenfield, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 729; 1 Scott, 699; 4 L. J., C. P. 234.

Effect of]—By an indenture, dated 1598, a farm was demised for 1,000 years, with a covenant by the lessor to convey the fee simple to the lessee within five years if required. The farm was assigned as a leasehold in 1777, since which time it had been three times devised as freehold, and on the court rolls of the manor of which the farm formed part the land was called freehold:—Held, that under the circumstances, it remained leasehold as between the heir and the administrator of an intestate owner. Pickett v. Packham, L. R. 4 Ch. 190; 16 W. R. 1177.

Constructive Notice.]—The court rolls are not constructive notice of prior incumbrances to purchasers of copyholds. Bugden v. Bignold, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 377.

2. CUSTODY AND PRODUCTION.

Lord or Steward.]—The lord as of right is entitled to the custody of the court rolls, and the steward holds them only as his agent. Where he was solicitor also of the testator, under whom the parties were entitled, the court made an order for him to deliver them over to the receiver in the cause. Rawes v. Rawes, 7 Sim. 624; 5 L. J., Ch. 114.

On an application of the guardian ad litem of an infant lord of a manor, the court refused to order the steward to deliver up the court rolls to the receiver in the cause, there being no suggestion of any improper conduct on the part of the steward. Windham v. Giubilei, 40 L. J., Ch. 505; 24 L. T. 653.

The steward is bound, when called upon, to deliver up the papers of which he has the charge, in a proper condition. N. W. Ry. v. Sharp, 10 Ex. 451; 24 L. J., Ex. 44.

Inspection.]—In a suit by plaintiffs against the lord, claiming as freeholders a tract of pasture or sheep-walk with the minerals and usual incidents of the ownership in fee-simple of freehold land, and expressly denying the existence of any rights of ownership in the lord over this sheep-walk, where the defendant by his answer stated that the plaintiffs were tenants of the manor, and as such had exclusive right of pasturage over the sheep-walk, but claimed as lord to be absolutely entitled to the soil of this sheep-walk, subject only to the plaintiffs' right of pasturage :—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an inspection of the rolls of the manor. Owen v. Wynn, 9 Ch. D. 29 ; 38 L. T. 623 ; 26 W. R. 944 —C. A.

A plaintiff who claims common appurtenant over the waste of a manor is not necessarily entitled to production of documents relating to the manor, and admitted to be in the possession of the lord, where the defendant denies that they contain anything supporting the claim. Mint v. Morgan, L. R. 11 Eq. 284 ; 24 L. T. 120 ; 19 W. R. 374.

A plaintiff filed a bill in equity to establish a right of common of vicinage over a common within a manor of which the defendant was lord. By his answer the defendant denied the plaintiff's right :—Held, that he was entitled to production of the records of, and documents relating to, courts baron held within the manor, to the production of accounts and memoranda relating to the digging of gravel and cutting of turf on the common, to have a list of the documents relating to the title of the lord of the manor ; but not to have such documents produced, the defendant stating by affidavit that they related exclusively to his own title as lord of the manor, and did not in any way tend either to establish the rights claimed or to defeat the defence to the suit. Ib.

Where an order has been made in a suit for production of documents, the court will not vary such order by providing for the payment of the customary fees, payable to the steward of a manor, on inspection of court rolls. Hoare v. Wilson, L. R. 4 Eq. 1 ; 16 L. T. 112 ; 15 W. R. 548.

In a suit by the freehold tenants of a manor with respect to right of common and estover, they are entitled to see the court rolls. The lord may not seal up such parts as he swears do not relate to the matters in dispute. Warrick v. Queen's College, 36 L. J., Ch. 505 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 683.

A lord selling freehold lands of the manor subject to leases for lives granted by copy of court roll must covenant to produce the court rolls up to the date of the conveyance. Poulett (Earl) v. Hood, L. R. 5 Eq. 115.

Mandamus to Inspect.]—The demand to inspect the rolls of a manor cannot be made by the agent of a person authorised by warrant of attorney to make the demand on behalf of the tenant, although the agent's authority is in writing, so as to obtain a mandamus in case of refusal. Hutt, Ex parte, 7 D. P. C. 690 ; 3 Jur. 1105.

And see DISCOVERY.

3. EVIDENCE.

To what Extent.]—Copies of the court roll authenticated by the steward, held admissible, although not the copies delivered to the tenant. Breeze v. Hawker, 14 Sim. 350.

The court rolls, taken by themselves, are evidence only against the tenants of the manor and the lord. Att.-Gen. v. Hotham (Lord), Turn. & R. 217. Affirmed, 3 Russ. 415 ; 24 R. R. 21.

Dispute between a lord and a corporation as to the ownership of a piece of foreshore. The court rolls contained entries—(1) Of fines paid to the lord for salvage, for moorage, and for trespasses, in taking wreck and the like, and of sums paid to the lord by the bailiff for wreck sold by him. (2) Presentments as to wrecks, porpoises, &c., coming on the soil with no express mention of receipt of money except (in some cases) by the bailiff. (3) Presentments of wreck, the payments in respect of which were partly made to the salvors and partly to the lord. (4) Presentments directing the bailiff to levy certain fines, &c. (5) Similar presentments with no express direction to the bailiff to levy. (6) Presentments of wreck with no particular entries as to value or entered as matter for future enquiry :—Held, that all the entries except the last could be safely admitted as evidence of the lord's title. Tomline, Ex parte, Walton-cum-Trimley (Manor), In re, 28 L. T. 12 ; 21 W. R. 475.

An action of trespass by a former lord against the same corporation, and decided in his favour in 1738 and acquiesced in ever since, considered the strongest possible evidence in his favour. Ib.

In administering the real estate of the heir of an intestate it was discovered that a farm, part of a manor, and supposed to be freehold, had been leased in 1598 to the predecessors in title of the intestate, for a term of 1,000 years, subject to a rent and heriots. The lease contained a covenant by the lord "at all times hereafter and from time to time during the space of five years next ensuing," at the request of the lessee, to convey to him the fee. There was no direct evidence of any such conveyance. The entries in the court rolls recorded the payment of rent and heriots down to the present time, and also uniformly mentioned the farm as freehold. In 1777 the remainder of the term was assigned (for the fifth time since the lease) to L., who, for two years afterwards, devised the farm as freehold, and it subsequently passed as freehold under several devises, until it reached the intestate in the cause :—Held, that the continuance of the rent and heriots rendered the entries in the court rolls more at variance with the theory of the farm being freehold than with that of its being leasehold ; that L. having acknowledged the existence of the term two years before he devised the farm as freehold, the court could not presume that the tenure had been in the interim converted to freehold ; and that the farm must pass to the intestate's personal representatives as leasehold. Pickett v. Packham, L. R. 4 Ch. 190 ; 16 W. R. 1177.

D. STEWARD.

Appointment.]—A lord of the manor being tenant in fee, may grant by deed the stewardship of the manor, for the life of the grantee, and the steward cannot be displaced by the devisee of the lord. Bartlett v. Downes, 5 D. & R. 526 ; 3 B. & C. 616 ; 1 Car. & P. 522 : 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 90 ; 28 R. R. 436.

Court will not determine in whom is the right to appoint a steward on petition for delivery of deeds, &c., to the appointment of one of the parties. Mott v. Buxton, 7 Ves. 201.

Liability.]—The steward of a court baron is a judicial officer ; and therefore is not responsible for the acts of the regular bailiffs of the court to whom process is directed. Bradley v. Carr, 3 Scott (N.R.) 523 ; 3 Man. & G. 221.

But he is responsible where he directs the process to bailiffs specially nominated by the party who sues it out, taking an indemnity. Ib.

A steward of a manor is bound, when called upon, to deliver up the papers, of which he has the charge, in a proper condition. North-Western Ry. v. Sharp, 10 Ex. 451 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 44.

Displacement by Court.]—The court will not displace one steward without seeing that there is another to perform his functions. Windham v. Giubilei, 40 L. J., Ch. 505 ; 24 L. T. 653.

Deputy Steward Infant.] — An infant, if capable of performing the duties of the office, may be the deputy steward of a manor, and take a surrender by a married woman. Edlestone v. Collins, 22 L. J., Ch. 480 ; 17 Jur. 331 ; 1 W. R. 169.

Authority to receive Fines.]—The defendant purchased copyhold land in the plaintiff's manor, and was admitted by C., who had been appointed by the steward of the manor as his deputy, to admit the defendant. C. also acted as the defendant's attorney in completing the purchase. Nine days afterwards the defendant gave C. a cheque on his bankers for 87*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, viz. 78*l.* 15*s.* for the lord's fine, 4*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* steward's fees, 4*l.* 4*s.* C.'s own charges as the defendant's solicitor. This cheque was crossed by the defendant at the request of C. to C.'s bankers. The cheque was duly paid by the defendant's bankers to C.'s bankers, and they retained the money in discharge of a debt due to them by C., who had overdrawn his account. In an action by the lord against the defendant to obtain payment of the fine due :—Held (reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas), that there was no evidence for the jury to support a finding that the payment of the fine to C. was a valid payment to the lord. Bridges v. Garrett, 39 L. J., C. P. 251 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 451 ; 22 L. T. 448 ; 18 W. R. 815—Ex. Ch.

Fees—Preparing Deeds.]—A steward of a manor sued in the county court a copyhold tenant for solicitor's costs attending the enfranchisement of his tenement. The tenant agreed to abide by the valuation of the surveyor named by the steward, and paid over the consideration and the surveyor's fee in accordance with that valuation. The steward's claim consisted of the costs of the enfranchisement deed, which the tenant had received from the steward :—Held, that this being a voluntary enfranchisement, the Copyhold Acts, 1852 and 1858, did not apply ; therefore the steward was entitled to the charges for work done on the tenant's behalf, and the words "as steward," by which he described himself in the plaint, might be treated as surplusage. Blaker v. Wells, 28 L. T. 21.

It is a good custom in a manor that the steward or his deputy should have the sole right of preparing all the surrenders of copyhold tenements within the manor. Rex v. Rigge, 2 B. & Ald. 550 ; 21 R. R. 394. S. P., Reg. v. Bishop's Stoke, 8 D. P. C. 608 ; 4 Jur. 630.

Amount.]—A fee of 13*s.* 4*d.*, claimed in respect of special custom, would be rank. Treherne v. Gardner, 5 El. & Bl. 913 ; 25 L. J., Q. B. 201 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 394 ; 4 W. R. 281.

Where admittance is claimed on behalf of joint tenants, the steward (in the absence of special custom) is not entitled to higher fees than upon the admittance of a single tenant. Ib.

Under 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, s. 2, if copyhold lands are devised, the steward is entitled to fees as in respect of a surrender to the use of the will, though such surrender is no longer necessary, to the same amount as would have been payable for an actual surrender. Ib.

Where, by the custom of a manor, surrenders were, before the statute, sometimes made in court, and sometimes out of court, and then presented in court, registered and enrolled, the payment is still to be made, the labour of the steward having been practically the same in each case. Ib.

Where a steward refuses to admit except upon payment by the tenant of fines and fees not duly payable (as where the steward insists on payments as for four admittances where payments are due in respect of one only, or of higher fees to himself upon the admittance of joint tenants, than are due in respect of a single tenant), the tenant, if he pays the money under protest, is entitled to recover it back as money had and received. Ib.

His right to recover the full excess is not lessened by his having, on one occasion, offered to pay, upon admittance, a sum including part of such excess, the steward not having accepted such offer. Ib.

—— Under Lands Clauses Act.]—Where a steward was by custom entitled to one fee upon the surrender, and another on the admittance to copyhold lands :—Held, that under the Lands Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 95, he was entitled to one fee only on a surrender. Cooper v. Norfolk Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 94 ; 3 Ex. 546 ; 18 L. J., Ex. 176 ; 13 Jur. 195.

—— Different Tenements.]—Where a person is admitted to several distinct copyhold tenements, the steward is not entitled, as a matter of general right, to the full fees on each admission separately ; and therefore, where no custom prevails in the manor to that effect, he must stand on his quantum meruit. Everest v. Glyn, 2 Marshall, 84 ; 6 Taunt. 425 : Holt, N. P. 1 ; 16 R. R. 640.

U., a copyhold tenant, was owner of sixteen tenements, holden by sixteen separate copies of court-roll, and sixteen separate yearly quit-rents. He was admitted to these tenements at five different times, and by five different titles. An act passed, directing commissioners to allot the waste lands among the owners, in proportion to their rights and interests. The act directed that the allotted lands should be held by the allottees under the same tenures, rents, customs, and services as the lands in respect of which they were allotted would have been in case the act had not passed ; and that, where the lands were held under different titles or for different estates, the commissioners should distinguish the lands held for each of such estates and titles, and set out the allotments accordingly. The commissioners allotted to U., in respect of his sixteen copyhold tenements, five pieces of land, amounting to forty-nine acres, but did not distinguish in respect of which of the tenements, or of what particular estates, the five pieces were allotted. U. afterwards surrendered to E. the fifth allotment, and he was duly admitted to the same. Before the act passed, when any person was admitted in severalty to a part of a copyhold tenement, the steward was entitled, upon such admission, to the same amount of fees as if such person had been admitted to the whole of such tenement. In an action by the steward to recover sixteen fees in respect of the admission to the fifth allotment:—Held, that such allotment must be considered as an allotment of a portion of each of the sixteen former tenements, and that therefore the steward was entitled to recover sixteen fees. Evans v. Upsher, 16 M. & W. 675; 16 L. J., Ex. 185.

E. TENURE AND INCIDENTS.

1. In General.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1894, s. 81, imposes restraints on creation of new copyholds.

Period of Tenure.]—A copyhold must have been such time out of mind, and cannot be created within the time of legal memory. Roe d. Newman v. Newman, 2 Wils. K. B. 125.

When there is no custom for that purpose, the lord of the manor cannot make a new grant of copyhold. Rex v. Hornchurch, 2 B. & Ald. 189.

Perfecting—Regularity.]—In order to constitute the grantee of a copyhold a perfect customary tenant, where the grant is made out of court, such grant must be notified at the next customary court, or at such other subsequent court as the custom points out, and must be entered on the rolls of the court. Doe d. Leach v. Whitaker, 5 B. & Ad. 409; 3 N. & M. 225.

But it is sufficient if, having been entered on the court-rolls at a void court as at a good court, it appears on the court-rolls at a subsequent good court, and is not then objected to by the tenants. Ib.

It is no objection to a copyhold grant that it is made upon the surrender of a former grantee in remainder, whose admittance had upon such former grant been expressly respited, and of whose admittance at any subsequent time there was no entry in the court-rolls. Ib.

Nor is it an objection to the grant of several customary tenements by one copy of court-roll, that several rents are reserved, without specifying which is reserved out of each tenement, it appearing that former entire grants of the same several tenements contained similar entire reservations. Ib.

Nor is it an objection that two heriots are expressed to be reserved, where in former grants only one heriot has been reserved. Ib.

A customary court cannot be held out of the manor, unless there is a custom to warrant it; and if a court is so held, all that is done at it is void. Ib.

But the nullity of such court only affects such matters as are required to be done at a court. Ib.

A lord may grant to and admit a copyhold tenant, not only out of court but also out of the manor. Ib.

A grant by the lord in person is good, although it purports to be made at a court within the manor, which in fact was held out of the manor. Ib.

The steward of a manor may take a surrender out of court. Ib.

But a steward cannot admit out of court. Ib.

But a voluntary grant of a copyhold, made by the steward at a court held off the manor, is sufficient where such steward is also clothed with a power of attorney, which expressly authorises him to make voluntary grants. Ib.

So, although the grant purports to be made by such steward, as steward, and without any reference being made in the grant to the special authority. Ib.

Alienation by Lord.]—A lord, having only a temporary estate in his manor, may make grants of copyhold to endure after the determination of his own interest; but such grants must conform strictly to the custom of the manor. Doe d. Rayer v. Strickland, 2 Q. B. 792; 2 G. & D. 278; 11 L. J., Q. B. 305.

An alienation of the fee by a lord of a manor does not affect the rights of a copyhold tenant. Phillips v. Bull, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 811; 29 L. J., C. P. 7; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 48; 7 W. R. 580.

Therefore, where a lord had granted the inheritance of a portion of the manor to A.:—Held, that it was competent to a copyhold tenant to dispose of his interest to a grantee by an ordinary common-law conveyance; the customary mode of conveyance being rendered impossible by the act of the lord. Ib.

Void Grants by Lord.]—A lord of a manor cannot grant copyhold lands to his wife; if he does the grant is void. Fireman d. Symes v. Pennant, 2 Wils. K. B. 254.

Grants of copyhold are ineffectual and void in law, when made by the lord to himself. Christchurch, Oxford (Dean and Chapter) v. Buckingham (Duke), 17 C. B. (N.S.) 391; 33 L. J., C. P. 322; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 749; 10 L. T. 575; 12 W. R. 986.

Effect of Devise for Life.]—A., who held lands of a manor, devised them to three trustees and their heirs to the use of B. for life, with remainders over. After A.'s death B. was admitted and enjoyed the lands during his life. He died, having by his will, according to the custom of the manor, nominated his successor. He nominated a stranger. On a bill by the remaindermen under A.'s will, claiming that the power of nominating a successor was vested in B. by virtue of the will, and that therefore it must be exercised by him in reference to the limitations of the will, and not in favour of a stranger:—Held, that B. was customary tenant under the will, and also a trustee for the purposes of the will, and that every right which he had acquired by admission on the court-rolls was, beyond his own life estate, held for the benefit of the remaindermen. Allen v. Bewsey, 7 Ch. D. 453; 37 L. T. 688—C. A.

Customs.]—There is no general custom for all copyholds. Everest v. Glyn, 6 Taunt. 425; 2 Marshall, 84; Holt, N. P. 1; 16 R. R. 640.

Occupancy.]—Copyhold estates are liable to special occupancy. Doe d. Lempriere v. Martin, 2 W. Bl. 1148. And see Zouch d. Forse v. Forse, 7 East, 186; 3 Smith, 191.

There cannot be a general occupancy of copyholds. Doe d. Forster v. Scott, 7 D. & R. 190; 4 B. & C. 706; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 39.

Wastes.]—If there is a custom within a manor for a lord to grant parcels of the waste by copy of court-roll, the premises granted in that mode are well described as copyhold premises, though the date of the grant is modern. Northwick (Lord) v. Stanway, 6 East, 56; 2 Smith, 225; 3 Bos. & P. 346.

A grant of parcel of the waste of a manor to hold to B. and his heirs by way of increase to his copyhold, by such services as the copyhold was subject to, for which B. paid a fine of 10s., does not enure as copyhold, there being no custom to warrant such grant, nor as an estate in fee-simple. R. v. Wilby, 2 M. & S. 504; 15 R. R. 328.

After a grant of the soil of wastes to trustees for the use of the copyholders of free socage, the lands, when inclosed, will be freehold, and not copyhold. Revell v. Jodrell, 2 Term Rep. 415; 1 R. R. 503.

There is no general common-law right of tenants of a manor to common appendant on the waste. Dunraven (Earl) v. Llewellyn, 15 Q. B. 791; 19 L. J., Q. B. 388.

And see COMMON.

Divided Enjoyment.] — One may hold the prima tonsura of land as copyhold, and another may have the soil and every other beneficial enjoyment of it as freehold. Stammers v. Dixon, 7 East, 200; 3 Smith, 261; 8 R. R. 612.

Grant of Reversionary Estate.]—Under a grant by copy of court-roll of a reversionary estate to A. (who had before a life estate in the premises) habendum to him for the lives of B. and C., his grandsons, during the life of either of them longest living, successively, according to the custom, reserving a heriot and 6*s.* rent; A. only takes the legal estate in reversion, and not the cestuis que vie, there being no custom to enable them to take, although they were stated to be admitted tenants in reversion. Right v. Bawden, 3 East, 260.

Trusts.]—Where a lord of a manor admits a tenant upon the trusts of an indenture referred to in the surrender, he is to be considered as consenting to those trusts, and is bound by them upon the death of the trustee without an heir. Wearer v. Maule, 2 Russ. & M. 97.

But, in the absence of custom, he is not bound to make a surrender by deed burthened with trusts. Flack v. Downing College, Cambridge, 13 C. B. 945; 1 C. L. R. 692; 22 L. J., C. P. 229; 17 Jur. 697; 1 W. R. 453.

There may be such a custom. Snook v. Mattock, 5 A. & E. 239.

W., tenant by copy of court-roll for his life, took, according to the custom, a grant from the lord of the reversion to C. and D., his sons, for the term of their lives, in trust for W., as sole purchaser:—Held, that C. and D. were trustees of the reversion for W. Keats v. Hewer, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1040; 11 L. T. 290; 13 W. R. 34.

Corporation.]—A corporation cannot hold land by copy of court-roll. Att.-Gen. v. Lewin, 1 C. P. Cooper, 51; 8 Sim. 366; 6 L. J., Ch. 204; 1 Jur. 234.

Form of Tenure.]—Where lands are held by copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manor, they are copyhold within 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, although they are not held at the will of the lord. Doe d. Edmunds v. Llewellyn, 2 C. M. & R. 503; 1 Gale, 193; 5 Tyrw. 899; 5 L. J., Ex. 84.

In a manor there are customary tenures of the following nature:—The court of the manor is held twice a year; the steward, having summoned a jury of the freeholders, presides in the court. An applicant for a tenement in the manor goes through the following forms: he is asked by the steward for what purpose he attends there; he says that he seeks to be admitted as tenant of a house, as purchaser, devisee, or as the case may be. The steward inquires of the foreman of the jury if he knows of any objection to the admission of the applicant; should he not do so, the steward, after hearing the whole discussion, decides granting or refusing the application, according to his judgment. If the application is granted, the name of the outgoing tenant is struck out of the roll by the steward, who inserts the name of the applicant in its place. The applicant does not hold by copy of the manor-roll. The applicant takes the oath of fealty and pays to the steward a fee, but no fine is paid to the lord:—Held, that the holder of such a tenure, provided its yearly value amounts to 10*l.*, was entitled to vote as being seised of copyhold or other tenure, within the meaning of 2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 19. Garbutt v. Trevor, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 550; 1 H. & R. 69; 33 L. J., C. P. 73; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 131; 9 L. T. 535; 12 W. R. 471.

One who holds in fee land parcel of a manor, which by the custom of the manor is conveyed by ordinary assurance, and without any necessity for a licence from the lord, or any enrolment and admittance, is a freeholder within 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, although at the time of acquiring the estate he acknowledged to holding the land "by free deed, fealty, suit of court," &c. Passingham v. Pitty, 17 C. B. 299; 25 L. J., C. P. 4; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 4 W. R. 122.

Leases.]—A lessee for years of a copyholder may maintain ejectment, though there is no custom in the manor to lease, and no licence has been obtained from the lord, such lease being good between the parties to it, and void only as against the lord. Doe d. Tresidder v. Tresidder, 1 Q. B. 417; 1 G. & D. 70; 10 L. J., Q. B. 160; 5 Jur. 931.

Presumption as to Boundaries—Occupancy.]—In ejectment between the purchasers of copyhold and leasehold properties adjoining, the question being as to the limits of the garden ground of each, a portion of the garden of one having been thrown into the garden of the other forty years ago by the then common proprietor, and the boundary-line being left doubtful on the plans:—Held, that the fact that the piece in question had actually been occupied with the leasehold property for more than twenty years, was conclusive. Tear v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 480.

2. DESCENT OF COPYHOLD.

Effect of Entry.]—A copyhold is devised by A. to B. for life, remainder to C. in fee. B. is admitted, and dies. C. has, before entry, a descendible estate; and, upon the death of C., his customary heir, and not the customary heir of A., is entitled to the copyhold. Doe d. Parker v. Thomas, 3 Man. & G. 815; 4 Scott (N.S.) 449; 11 L. J., C. P. 124.

Equitable Estates.]—According to the custom of the manor of Heathfield, upon the death intestate of a tenant seised of an estate of inheritance, his younger son is his customary heir. Trash v. Wood, 4 Myl. & Cr. 324; 9 L. J., Ch. 105; 4 Jur. 669.

T., an equitable tenant in tail of copyhold, received the rents during his life, but, having an equitable estate only, was not admitted tenant of the copyhold, and died, leaving several sons. The custom proved, with respect to the descent of copyholds within the manor, was that upon the death intestate of a tenant, seised of an estate of inheritance, his younger son was his customary heir:—Held, that the youngest son of T., and not the eldest, became entitled, on his father's death, to call for a conveyance of the copyhold, as tenant in tail under the devise. Ib.

The descent of an estate tail, or an equitable estate, in copyholds, is governed by the same customs as descents of estates in fee. Ib.

C., after desiring that all his just debts, &c., should be in the first place paid, devised to three trustees, and the heirs of the survivor, a copyhold estate, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof, in equal moieties, to his two daughters, for their separate use for life; and after the decease of either, upon trust to pay the whole of such rents, &c., to the survivor for life; and after the decease of the survivor, C. devised the estate, in equal moieties, to the heirs of the bodies of his daughters respectively; and in default of issue of either daughter, he gave the entirety of the estate to the heirs of the body of such daughter who should leave such issue: and in default of issue of both daughters, he gave the estate to the right heirs of the surviving daughter. The trustees were appointed executors of the will and they were duly admitted to hold to the uses of the same. Both the testator's daughters died without having ever been married. The estate was of gavelkind tenure. Both the customary co-heirs and the heir-at-law of the surviving daughter claimed the estate. On demurrer by the latter:—Held, that the general charge of debts, coupled with the legal estate devised to the trustees, made the estate of the devisee in remainder an equitable estate; and the demurrer was overruled. Creaton v. Creaton, 3 Sm. & G. 386; 26 L. J., Ch. 266; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1223; 5 W. R. 123.

Executory Devise.]—The descent of the interest possessed by a person entitled under an executory devise of customary lands is regulated by the common law and not by the custom. Mallinson v. Siddle, 39 L. J., Ch. 426; 18 W. R. 569.

A testator devised customary lands of inheritance to his brother, his heirs and assigns, but in case his brother should die without issue, he directed that the whole should be divided amongst his five sisters or their lawful representatives. The brother survived the testator, but died without issue. A person entitled under the gift over to a share in the lands, died intestate in the lifetime of the brother:—Held, that the share of the intestate descended to her common law heirs and not to her customary heir. Ib.

Custom of Jus Representationis.]—The custom of a manor was stated to be that all copyhold descended to the youngest son or daughter, brother or sister, uncle or aunt. A tenant died intestate seised of customary lands of the manor, leaving neither son, daughter, brother, sister, uncle, nor aunt; but leaving sons of deceased uncles:—Held, that the youngest son of the youngest uncle was not entitled, and that the heir-at-law was entitled to the lands. Smart, In re, Smart v. Smart, 18 Ch. D. 165; 30 W. R. 43.

According to the custom of descent in the manor of Taunton Deane, a surviving sister is not entitled to inherit in preference to the son of a deceased brother's son. Locke v. Colman, 2 Myl. & Cr. 635.

Possessio sororis, in copyhold, effect of. Anon., Cary, 5; Dyer, 291.

Possession of the mother for collateral heir. Ib. 6.

R. M., on his marriage, surrendered certain premises within the manor of Taunton to trustees upon trust, after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, and in default of issue of the marriage that should be living at the death of the survivor, to surrender the premises into the hands of the lord for the use and behoof of the right heirs of the settlor for ever, according to the custom of the manor. The only issue of the marriage was a daughter, who survived the settlor, but died in the lifetime of the widow her mother. It being admitted that the widow was, according to the custom, the heir of the settlor at the time of his death, and that his youngest sister was such heir at the time of the widow's death, it was held the youngest sister was entitled under the ultimate limitation. Bush v. Locke, 3 Cl. & F. 721; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 1. Affirming, Locke v. Southwood, 1 Myl. & Cr. 411.

—— Part Subject to.]—Devise of copyholds to A. for life, and after his death to his eldest son, and the legal customary heirs of such eldest or only son for ever, provided that if A. leave no son or issue of a son living at his death, devise to the daughters of A. as tenants in common in fee, and if A. leave no son or daughter, or issue of a son or daughter, living at his death, gift over:—Held, that A.'s daughters, during his lifetime, took contingent descendible interests as tenants in common in fee in the devised estate. Rider v. Wood, 1 K. & J. 644; 3 Eq. Rep. 1064; 24 L. J., Ch. 737.

Held, also, that the admission of A. did not enure for the benefit of his daughters, so as to bring them within the seisin. Ib.

Part of the property was copyholds, descendible according to the tenure of borough English among issue and collaterals also:—Held, that on the death of one of the daughters of the tenant for life without issue in his lifetime, her interests in the copyholds descended to her youngest sister then living, and on the subsequent birth of another sister shifted to her. Ib.

Another part of the property was copyholds not proved to be descendible according to the tenure of borough English, but by custom the descent was shown to be to the youngest son or daughter or sister of the copyholder last seised:—Held, that, on the death of one of A.'s daughters in his lifetime without issue before she became seised, her interest in these copyholds descended not according to the custom, but to all her sisters as her co-heiresses-at-law. Ib.

Evidence as to.]—A. claimed land in a manor as heir in borough English, under these circumstances:—B. was the first purchaser, on whose death the land descended to his two granddaughters as parceners, one of whom dying unmarried, her share went to her sister, who died leaving a son to whom the property descended, and died without issue, and was the person last seised. A. was the youngest son of the youngest brother of the purchaser, and his father, had he been living, would therefore have been the great-great uncle of the last person seised. In order to prove the custom of borough English in the manor, it was shown that the lands in the manor descended lineally to the youngest son of the person last seised in infinitum, and if no son, to the daughters as parceners. Instances were also proved, that if there were no lineal heirs the youngest brother took, and the youngest son of the youngest brother; and if the youngest brother died without issue the next youngest brother took; and if there were no brothers, then sisters took as parceners; also that the youngest son of an uncle took, and the youngest son of two sisters, who were co-parceners, respectively took:—Held, that this evidence did not warrant the conclusion that there existed in the manor either a customary descent to the youngest nearest male descendant of the person last seised, or a customary descent to entitle A. to recover. Muggleton v. Barnett, 1 H. & N. 282. Affirmed, 2 H. & N. 653; 27 L. J., Ex. 125; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 139; 6 W. R. 182—Ex. Ch.

The Inheritance Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106) has not taken away the customary descent in borough English. Ib.

A single admittance to copyhold is evidence to prove the custom of the manor for lands to descend to the youngest nephew. Doe d. Mason v. Mason, 3 Wils. K. B. 63.

Meaning of "Descent."]—When the custom of a manor was stated in a presentment of the homage to be that copyholds for the first descent after a surrender descend to the eldest son, and, if no surrender, to the youngest son:—Held, that the word "descent" was not used in its strict legal sense, but meant "a single step in the scale of genealogy." Bickley v. Bickley, 36 L. J., Ch. 817; L. R. 4 Eq. 216.

Where, therefore, the last surrender had been made to B. B, who devised to J. L. B., his heir according to the custom of the manor, and J. L. B. died intestate, having two sons:—Held, that the youngest son of J. L. B. was entitled to succeed him. Ib.

Line of, when Broken.]—B. conveyed customary freeholds which he had inherited from his mother, to N. absolutely, and N., after surrender and admittance, executed on the same day a deed of declaration of trusts for such person as B. should by deed or will appoint, and in default for B. and his heirs, this process being necessary according to the custom to give B. the power of devising. B. died intestate:—Held, that the descent had not been broken, and that the heir of the testator ex parte maternâ was entitled. Nanson v. Barnes, L. R. 7 Eq. 250; 20 L. T. 154; 17 W. R. 429.

One seised in fee of a copyhold of inheritance by descent ex parte maternâ, surrendered the same to the use of himself for life, remainder to such persons and for such estates as he should by deed or will, attested by three witnesses, appoint, remainder in default of appointment to himself in fee; after which he made a mortgage, and surrendered to the use of the mortgagee in fee, who, upon repayment of the principal and interest, surrendered again to the mortgagor:—Held, that the line of descent was thereby broken, and that the estate descended to the paternal heir. Doe d. Harman v. Morgan, 7 Term Rep. 103.

Devise after a tenancy for life of borough English lands for sale, and to divide the moneys amongst all the testators' sons and daughters who might then be living, and to the heir and heirs of them who might be deceased, share and share alike—Held, that, under the gift to the heirs, the common law, and not the heirs in borough English, took. Polley v. Polley, 31 Beav. 363.

Devolution—Death of Sole Trustee between Conveyancing Act, 1881, and Copyhold Act, 1887.]—The effect of s. 45 of the Copyhold Act, 1887, is to repeal entirely s 30 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, as regards copyholds, so that, if a sole trustee of copyholds had died between the commencement of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act and the passing of the Copyhold Act, the legal estate in the copyholds, which by virtue of s. 30, had on his death devolved upon his personal representatives, was on the passing of the Copyhold Act divested from them, and vested in his customary heir or devisee. But the validity of any disposition of the property made by the personal representatives before the passing of the Copyhold Act would be unaffected by that act. Mills' Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 466; 37 Ch. D. 312; 58 L. T. 620; 36 W. R. 393. Affirmed on other grounds, 40 Ch. D. 14; 60 L. T. 442; 37 W. R. 81—C. A.

3. Quasi-Tenancy by the Curtesy.

Admittance.]—A copyhold having descended to a wife as heir-at-law, who died before admittance, having first borne a child to her husband, which died an infant, the husband was held entitled to hold for his life, in the nature of a tenant by the curtesy of England, according to the custom of the manor, though the only evidence of such custom on the rolls was three instances of husbands admitted as tenants by the curtesy, according to the custom, whose respective wives had been admitted during their lives; the title of a wife claiming as heir by descent being complete without admittance, by the general law of copyhold, and the title of a tenant by the curtesy being also by the operation of law. Doe d. Milner v. Brightwen, 10 East, 583; 10 R. R. 395.

4. Freebench.

Customary Lands.]—By the custom of a manor as settled by 1 Car. 1, the widow of a copyholder is entitled to dower, but of all the customary lands of which her husband was tenant during the coverture, although he did not die tenant, such lands having been aliened during the coverture by the husband alone, without the wife having been examined in court, or having joined in the surrender. Doe d. Riddell v. Gwinnell, 1 G. & D. 180; 1 Q. B. 682; 10 L. J., Q. B. 212. S. P., Riddell v. Jenner, 10 Bing. 29; 3 M. & Sc. 673.

Equitable Interests.]—A wife is not dowable out of the trust of a customary freehold. Godwin v. Winsmore, 2 Atk. 526.

It is a dying seised of the husband and not a seisin during coverture which entitled the widow to freebench. Ib. And see Chaplin v. Chaplin, P. Wms. 229; overruling Otway v. Hudson, 2 Vern. 583, 585.

A widow shall not have freebench of a trust estate in a copyhold; the entry of the widow as guardian to the son does not prevent his having such a seisin as to convey a title to his customary heir. Forder v. Wade, 4 Bro. C. C. 521.

Estate Tail.]—A widow of a tenant in tail of copyholds is entitled to her freebench, though there is no custom as to such freebench, but only as to the freebench of tenants in fee. Doe d. Norfolk (Duke) v. Sanders, 3 Dougl. 303.

Purchaser Dying before Admittance.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, does not apply to freebench. Smith v. Adams, 5 De G. M. & G. 712; 18 Beav. 499; 24 L. J., Ch. 258; 18 Jur. 968; 2 W. R. 698.

The purchaser of a copyhold held of a manor, the custom of which entitled widows of the copyholders to freebench in one moiety of the lands of which their husbands died seised, took a surrender, but died before admittance:—Held, that his widow was not entitled to freebench at law or in equity. Ib.

When not Barred.]—Copyholds surrendered to a purchaser to uses similar to the common uses to bar dower, on which surrender the purchaser was admitted to hold as tenant in fee simple; his devisee is bound by the terms of the admittance, and is not entitled to claim as appointee under the surrender, so as to defeat the widow's right to freebench. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 407; 3 Eq. Rep. 63; 24 L. J., Ch. 123; 18 Jur. 1111; 3 W. R. 32.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, does not extend to copyholds. Ib.

A., by a settlement on his marriage with B., in order to make some provision for B. in case she should survive him, settled copyholds upon himself for life, with remainder to B. for life.—Held, that B.'s right to freebench out of other copyholds, of which A. died seised and intestate, was not barred by the settlement. Willis v. Willis, 34 L. J., Ch. 313; 13 W. R. 533.

A copyholder for life, where by the custom there is a widow's estate, agrees to sell for his own life, and the life of such widow as he shall leave at his death; his widow is not bound by this agreement. Musgrove v. Dashwood, 2 Vern. 45.

Barred by Alienation.]—If a husband became entitled to copyhold estates by copy of court roll, and granted them out again by copy of court roll, his wife was not entitled to dower of those estates Sneyd v. Sneyd, 1 Atk. 442.

Copyholder having power to bar the widow's freebench by surrender, any act by him for valuable consideration will bar her equity. Brown v. Raidle, 3 Ves. 256.

Copyholder contracts for valuable consideration to sell to his son, and dies before actual surrender; the son held entitled to performance, and to compel the widow to surrender freebench. Hinton v. Hinton, 2 Ves. 631; Amb. 277.

—— By Surrender by Wife.]—A surrender by a wife of a copyholder, with his consent, and after having been separately examined, to the use of a purchaser from the assignees of the husband, who had become bankrupt, is effectual to bar her right of freebench, if any such existed by special custom, although, at the time of such surrender, the purchase not having been completed, the purchaser had not any legal estate in the premises. Wood v. Lamburth, 1 Ph. 8; 5 Jur. 741.

—— By Devise without Surrender.]—Freebench can be barred by a mere devise without surrender to the use of the will. Lacey v. Hill, Leney v. Hill, 44 L. J., Ch. 215; L. R. 19 Eq. 346; 32 L. T. 48; 23 W. R. 285.

A testator by his will (made in 1861) devised all his real estate in trust for sale and conversion with a direction to pay an annuity out of the proceeds to his widow during her life. The testator (who had married after the Dower Act came into operation) died entitled to copyholds which he had purchased but which had not been surrendered to the uses of his will:—Held, that the widow was deprived of any right to freebench by virtue of the Wills Act, s. 3. Ib.

Husband's Debts.]—A widow's freebench is not subject to her deceased husband's debts. Spyer v. Hyatt, 20 Beav. 621; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 3 W. R. 294.

5. Mode of Barring Entails.

By Custom—Recovery or Surrender.]—A custom to bar the entails of copyhold land either by recovery suffered, or by surrender in fee to the purchaser or vendee, is good. Everall v. Smalley, 1 Wils. K. B. 26; 2 Str. 1197.

A recovery suffered to defeat an entail was valid for such purpose, although uses were declared of such discovery which were void. Doe d. Baverstock v. Rolfe, 7. L. J., Q. B. 251.

A custom to bar the entail of a copyhold, by surrender, may subsist, concurrently with a custom to bar by a recovery in the lord's court, though the instances are much less frequent. Doe d. Wightwick v. Truby, 2 W. Bl 944.

Where, therefore, it was left to the jury to say whether the custom was to bar by recovery or surrender, without stating to them that such customs might be concurrent and consistent with one another, the court granted a new trial. Doe d. Wallhead v. Ossinghrooke, 9 Moore, C. P. 68; 2 Bing. 70; 2 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 105.

A single instance of a surrender in fee by tenant in special tail of a copyhold estate is evidence to prove a custom within the manor to bar entails by surrender, though the surrenderor has not been dead twenty years, and though one instance is proved of a recovery suffered by a tenant in tail to bar the entail. Roe d. Bennett v. Jeffery, 2 M. & S. 92; 14 R. R. 597.

The presumption is that a surrender will bar an estate tail in copyholds until a contrary custom is shown. Goold v. White, Kay, 683; 2 Eq. Rep. 1100.

Copyholds were sold subject to a condition, that all statements and recitals in any of the title deeds should be considered as satisfactory evidence of the facts stated or recited. The purchaser objected, that in the first surrender on the abstract, which was by A., and J., his wife, it was stated that J. "had then lately been admitted there tenant in tail, according to the custom of that manor," and that there was nothing to show how the estate tail had been barred; and he required evidence that the custom of the manor warranted estates tail. The first surrender was dated in 1801, and was conditional only. In 1815 the same parties made an absolute surrender in fee, under which the possession had been enjoyed ever since:—Held, that the recital was conclusive evidence, under the conditions of sale, that J. had been admitted tenant in tail, but not that this was according to the custom of the manor for this was not a single fact, but a deduction from a series of facts; but, held, that the recital coupled with the conditional surrender of 1801, the absolute surrender of 1815, and the subsequent possession consistently with that title, was sufficient evidence that the custom of the manor did warrant estates tail. Ib.

Where there is no particular method in the lord's court to bar entails, a common surrender is sufficient, though the entail is of a legal estate. Otway v. Hudson, 2 Vern. 585.

Copyholds may be entailed, and surrenders or plaints in nature of fines and recoveries, may bar the entails as well in court baron as at common law. Anon., Cary. 22.

Two tenants in common of a copyhold estate in tail, agree upon a partition; each surrenders the part allotted to the other:—Held, entail was barred only as to moiety. Oakley v. Smith, Amb. 368; 1 Eden, 261.

Fine by Married Woman.]—The interest of a married woman in copyhold estates will not pass by a fine. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddall, 3 De G. F. & J. 58; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 785; 4 L. T. 311; 9 W. R. 541.

By Will.]—A., being tenant in tail of the trust of a copyhold estate, with remainder over, and trustees refusing to surrender the legal estate to him, he brought his bill for that purpose, and, pending that suit, went to the lord's court and offered to surrender, but was refused, not having the legal estate; and thereupon he made his will, and gave the estate to his wife and children:—Held, the estate to go according to the will, the court conceiving the will sufficient to bar the entail of a trust. Ib.

Where copyholder, seised of an estate tail, surrenders to use of his will, if entails by custom of manor are not barrable by recovery or fine, but by surrender; in such cases the surrender to the use of his will not only effectuates the will, but operates as a bar to the entail. Moore v. Moore, Amb. 279.

Entails of copyhold held barred by surrender to use of will, where no custom, by recovery, or surrender, by three judges against Willis, Ch. J., who thought it might be by recovery, without a custom, and therefore not by surrender. Carr v. Singer, 2 Ves. 603.

Tenant for life of a copyhold, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, took a conveyance in fee from the lord. The premises descended upon his eldest son, who, by will, charged all his real estate with debts and legacies, and devised it to his brother for life, with various remainders; the estates in the copyhold are barred. Challoner v. Murhall, 2. Ves. 524; 3 R. R. 1. S. P., Dunn v. Green, 3 P. Wms. 9.

A. devised copyhold lands to John J. for the term of his life, and after his death to "James J., son of John J., and the heirs male of his body, provided always, that in case James J. shall happen to depart this life without leaving issue male of his body lawfully begotten him surviving," then to George J. in fee:—Held, that unless there were a custom to entail, John J. took an estate for life, James J. a fee simple conditional, and George J. a good executory devise. Hardcastle v. Dennison, 4 L. T. 707.

Held, also, that the evidence adduced in support of the custom to entail did not afford proof of the existence of such a custom within the manor. Ib.

Surrender by Joint Tenants.]—S. and J. being joint tenants in tail, remainder, after the death of M., tenant for life in freebench, of descendible copyhold lands, S. and her husband, without the concurrence of M., surrendered their estate to such uses as the husband should by will appoint. S. died in the lifetime of her husband and of J.; the husband died, having by his will appointed the surrendered share to his executors:—Held, that the quasi estate tail of S. was not barred, and that whether the life estate of M. was under the same instrument as that under which S. and J. derived their title, or whether M.'s tenancy was under her paramount title of freebench, her concurrence was necessary in order effectually to bar the estate tail in remainder. Edwards v. Champion, 3 De G. M. & G. 202; 23 L. J., Ch. 123; 1 W. R. 497.

Held, also, that there was, under the circumstances, no severance of the joint tenancy. Ib.

Quære, whether the surrender by a joint tenant to the use of his will would per se effect a severance of the joint tenancy. Ib.

Disentailing Deed—Disposition—Entry on Court Rolls.]—A deed intended to operate as a disentailing assurance of copyholds must, in order to be operative, be a disposition and not a mere declaration of trust, and must be entered on the court rolls of the manor within six months of its execution. Green v. Paterson, 56 L. J., Ch. 181; 32 Ch. D. 95; 54 L. T. 738; 34 W. R. 724—C. A. S. P., Honeywood v. Forster, 30 Beav. 1; 30 L. J., Ch. 930; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1264; 4 L. T. 785; 9 W. R. 855.

So in order to bar an equitable estate tail in copyholds by deed, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, such deed must be entered on the court rolls within six months after its execution. Gibbons v. Snape, 1 De G., J. & S. 621; 2 N. R. 563; 33 L. J., Ch. 103; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1096; 9 L. T. 132; 11 W. R. 1087.

An indorsement by the steward of the manor on a disentailing deed that it was produced before him at his residence is not a sufficient enrolment. Boyd v. Pawle, 14 L. T. 753; 14 W. R. 1009.

A. being seised, according to the custom of a manor, and admitted on the court roll as tenant in tail, of copyholds, by an indenture of settlement, inrolled under the act, which operated as a disentailing deed, in consideration of natural love and affection, covenanted to surrender the same to a trustee, in trust for the defendant, her grandnephew, for life, with remainders over. A. also covenanted with the trustee for further assurance, "at the costs of the thereby settled estates and property." Afterwards, by her will, she bequeathed all her residuary estate, after payment of her just debts, to the plaintiff, and made the defendant her executor. After her death the defendant, at the instance of the trustee, procured himself to be admitted on the court roll, and surrendered to the trustee, who was thereupon admitted as tenant:—Held, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the defendant was entitled to be allowed all expenses properly incurred in the surrender, and in the execution and registration of the deed of surrender, but was not entitled to anything in respect of the fine payable to the lord upon the admission of the tenant, and which was necessary in order to effectuate the disentail. Clarke v. Twyford, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 564; 7 W. R. 538.

Effect of Enfranchisement in barring Entail.]—The tenant in tail in possession of copyhold land (held of a manor by the custom of which an entail could be created) devised all the real estate of or to which he should be seised or entitled at the time of his death to two trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts declared by the will. After the death of the testator the trustees were, as such devisees, admitted tenants of the copyhold land, to hold the same to them, their heirs and assigns, upon the trusts of the will. The lord afterwards executed an enfranchisement (not under the Copyhold Acts) to the trustees, and they executed a conveyance to the only daughter of the testator (who was his heiress in tail) in fee. Under the trusts of the will the daughter had become solely beneficially entitled to the real estate which passed under the devise to the trustees:—Held, on the authority of Challoner v. Murhall (2 Ves. 524), and Dunn v. Green (3 P. Wms. 9), that the effect of the enfranchisement, and the subsequent conveyance by the trustees, was to bar the entail, and make the daughter owner of the land in fee simple. London School Board, Ex parte, Hart, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 752; 41 Ch. D. 547; 60 L. T. 817; 38 W. R. 61.

6. Contingent Remainders.

Estate to Support.]—To support a contingent remainder in a freehold, there must be a tenant to the præcipe; yet not so of a copyhold; for there no præcipe can be brought, being parcel of the manor only and the freehold in the lord. Lovell v. Lovell, 3 Atk. 12.

The estate of the lord will preserve contingent remainders of copyhold estate. Stanfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 282.

Contingent remainders of copyhold will be preserved against a forfeiture, by the estate of the lord; not where the preceding estates are expired. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 209; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Tenant for life of a copyhold, with a contingent remainder to his first son in tail, takes a conveyance of the reversion in fee of the copyhold before the birth of the son; the contingent remainder is not destroyed, the freehold being in the lord. Mildmay v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 243.

Freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds for lives were devised in 1838 to A. for life, with divers contingent remainders over, with an ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs. There were no trustees to support the contingent remainders. A., who was the heir-at-law of the testator, executed a release, by which he purported to resettle the estates discharged from the contingent limitations created by the testator:—Held, that the contingent remainders in the copyholds were not destroyed, as they were supported by the estate of the lord of the manor. Pickersgill v. Grey, 30 Beav. 352; 31 L. J., Ch. 394; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 632; 5 L. T. 706; 10 W. R. 207.

7. Extinguishment of Tenure.

Effect of.]—Lord of manor being seised of it in fee, subject to an executory devise over, purchased an estate, partly freehold and partly copyhold of manor, and afterwards, under inclosure act, carried in two claims, one in respect of devised and the other in respect of purchased estate, and obtained two allotments accordingly. He afterwards died, and the executory devise took effect:—Held, that copyhold part of purchased estate being extinguished in manor, passed with it to executory devisee, who was also entitled to so much of allotment obtained in respect of purchased estate as was proportionate to value of copyhold part; and it was referred to the master to apportion allotment accordingly. King v. Moody, 2 Sim. & S. 579; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 227; 25 R. R. 267.

Merger.]—Copyhold purchased by the lord, tenant for life of the manor, with remainders over, taking the surrender to him and his heirs, merge, and as parcel are subject to the limitations of the manor; and though under a covenant by the purchaser to surrender them by way of mortgage to the mortgagee and his heirs, he could compel a re-grant by the remainderman, no re-grant having been made, the general devisees of the purchaser have no equity. St. Paul v. Dudley and Ward, 15 Ves. 167; 10 R. R. 57.

If a lord mortgages the manor in fee to A., and afterwards purchases copyholds held of the manor, and takes surrenders of them to himself in fee, they will accrue to the benefit of the mortgagee; and a settlement by the lord of all his estate mortgaged to A. will pass the equity of redemption of such surrendered copyholds. Doe d. Gibbon v. Pott, 2 Dougl. 710.

A., seised in fee of twelve twenty-fourth parts of a manor held by several as tenants in common, purchased lands holden of the manor, which were thereupon surrendered to trustee for him, and afterwards to himself, in fee, and he was admitted tenant of the entirety by the act of all the lords:—Held, that twelve twenty-fourth parts of his copyhold interest in the lands merged in his freehold estate therein as lord of the manor. Cattley v. Arnold, 4 K. & J. 595.

The lord, where by the custom he has the cut of the woods growing on the lands, grants all the woods and underwoods on the copyhold to the copyholder in fee. This shall not merge in the copyhold. Faulkner v. Faulkner, 1 Vern. 21.

Entail barred.]—Tenant for life of a copyhold, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, took a conveyance in fee from the lord. The premises descended upon his eldest son, who by will charged all his real estate with debts and legacies, and devised it to his brother for life, with various remainders: the estates in the copyhold are barred. Challoner v. Murhall, 2 Ves. 524; 3 R. R. 1.

A. is a copyholder in tail, the lord grants the freehold of the copyhold to him in fee; the copyhold, though entailed, is extinct. Dunn v. Green, 3 P. W. 9.

Copyholder in tail takes a conveyance of the freehold in fee, the copyhold is merged. Parker v. Turner, 1 Vern. 458.

B. purchases a copyhold for lives of the lord, who makes a lease of the freehold of soil to A., reserving rent, and afterwards levies fine of manor to B., who accepts rent from A. Quære whether B.'s copyhold is gone. Compton v. Brent, 1 Dyer 30, a. pl. 207.

Suspension of Tenure.]—Where a customary tenement is freehold, and the lord, being only tenant for life of the manor, purchases the fee of the customary tenement, the seignory is suspended during the life of the lord, but revives at his death, and the customary tenement descends to his heir. Where the custom of a manor requires a bargain and sale, as well as a surrender and admittance, to pass the customary tenement, the freehold is in the tenant, and not in the lord. Bingham v. Woodgate, 1 Russ. & M. 32; Tam. 183; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 46.

Allotments.]—A manor was vested in trustees upon such trusts as E. B., a married woman, should by will appoint; before any will was made, a piece of copyhold land was, under an inclosure act, allotted to the trustees of the settlement as lords of the manor by way of compensation, and two copyhold allotments were made to two other persons in respect of copyhold interests; the trustees bought the two last-mentioned allotments, and held them upon the same trusts as the manor; in 1807, E. B. made her will, devising the manor with its appurtenances to the father of the plaintiff for life with remainder to his first son in tail, with remainder to his second son, the plaintiff, and devising the residue of her property to trustees in trust to sell. E. B. died in 1813, and the copyhold allotment made to the trustees and the two allotments purchased by them were then treated by the trustees of the will as part of the residue, and in 1814 were sold to a person from whom the defendant subsequently purchased. The plaintiff, while an infant, became entitled in 1831, by the deaths of his father and elder brother, to the manor under the devise; he attained twenty-one in 1849, and soon afterwards filed a bill, claiming the three allotments as part of the manor:—Held, that as to each allotment there had been, under the circumstances, an extinguishment of the copyhold in the manor, and that they all passed to the plaintiff under the devise of the manor. Hicks v. Sallitt, 3 De G. M. & G. 782; 23 L. J., Ch. 571; 18 Jur. 915; 2 W. R. 173.

Tenure Revived.]—The right of a reversioner or remainderman to grant copyhold lands, according to the custom of the manor, is not extinguished by the severance of the demesne lands from the manor by the lord farmer, or other person who has a limited interest in the same, but on the determination of such interest the right to re-grant is again vested in the lord. Henley (Lord), Ex parte, 29 Beav. 311; 31 L. J., Ch. 54; 9 W. R. 350.

The letting of such lands by the lord farmer from year to year will create a severance so far as his interest is concerned, and will destroy his right afterwards to grant the same by copy of court roll, according to the custom of the manor. Ib.

If at the time of such lettings by the lord farmer the legal estate is not in him, but in his mortgagee, the tenancies are as against the mortgagee mere tenancies at will and do not work severance, so as to deprive him of the right of re-granting the same subsequently, according to the custom of the manor. Ib.

F. LORD OF MANOR (RIGHTS OF).

1. ALIENATION.

Leases by Lord.—A manor was appendant to a rectory, and by the custom of the manor the tenements might be granted for lives in possession and in reversion; by one of the customs it was declared that "if any man has taken a reversion, and the lord dies that granted the same, and the reversion being out of possession the next lord may lawfully set again":—Held, that the meaning of the custom was, that where a reversion happens not to have come into possession at the time of the death of the lord granting it, the succeeding lord may treat the reversion as a nullity and lease again, and that such custom was not unreasonable. Reg. v. Venn, 44 L. J., Q. B. 158; L. R. 10 Q. B. 310; 23 W. R. 909.

Conveyance by Rector—Land Tax Acts.]—A rector and lord of a manor, by one grant, demised for three lives, at one aggregate holding, and at one undivided rent, three ancient tenements, originally held of the manor under distinct grants, and at distinct rents. The rector afterwards disposed of the reversion in fee under the Land Tax Act, 42 Geo. 3, c. 116:—Held, that though the grant for lives might be void unless sanctioned by special custom in the manor, yet the purchaser of the reversion had a good title, the sale being approved of by the land tax commissioners. Doe d. Strickland v. Woodward, 1 Ex. 273; 17 L. J., Ex. 1.

What Passes by Conveyance.]—When a deed executed by the lord purports to convey a copyhold tenement in fee, nothing but the copyhold tenement will pass by the deed, although the parcels contain a description of something which does not form part of the copyhold tenement. Hext v. Gill, 41 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 7 Ch. 699; 27 L. T. 291; 20 W. R. 957.

Mortgage.]—The equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee of copyholds is made legal assets by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. Burrell, In re, Burrell v. Smith, 39 L. J., Ch. 544; L. R. 9 Eq. 443; 22 L. T. 263.

A custom of a copyhold manor to grant the demesne lands by copy for lives is destroyed by a grant by the owners in fee of a lease from year to year as to such lands, and they will thereby become severed from the manor, and thenceforth cease to be part of the demesne. But such a grant, by a person having a limited interest as by a lord farmer, has that operation only during the continuance of his estate. The creation of a tenancy at will will not effect such a severance, and, therefore, where a lord farmer created a tenancy from year to year, without the concurrence of his mortgagee:—Held, that, as against the mortgagee, the tenant held only at will, and that therefore no severance had thereby been created. Henley (Lord), Ex parte, 29 Beav. 311; 31 L. J., Ch. 54; 9 W. R. 350.

Void Grants by Lord.]—Alienations by lord of the fee do not affect the rights of a copyhold tenant. Phillips v. Ball, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 811; 29 L. J., C. P. 7; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 48; 7 W. R. 580.

A lord cannot grant copyholds to himself or his wife. Firebrass d. Symes v. Pennant, 2 Wils. K. B. 255. S. P., Christchurch, Oxford v. Buckingham (Duke), 17 C. B. (N.S.) 391; 33 L. J., C. P. 322; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 749; 10 L. T. 575; 12 W. R. 986.

2. MINES AND MINERALS.

Property in.]—In an ordinary estate of copyhold the property in the trees and minerals is in the lord, the possession in the copyholder. If a stranger or the copyholder cuts trees or takes minerals, the lord can bring trover; if a stranger or the lord cuts trees or takes minerals, the copyholder can maintain trespass. Eardley v. Granville, 45 L. J., Ch. 669; 3 Ch. D. 826; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528.

When the trees are cut or the minerals taken, the copyholder becomes entitled to the possession of the space where the trees or minerals were, and is entitled to use of it at his will and pleasure. Ib.

On the other hand, if a freeholder grants lands excepting mines, he severs his estate vertically, i.e. he grants out his estate in parallel vertical layers, and the grantee only gets the parallel layer granted to him. The freeholder retains the reserved stratum as part of his ownership, and whether or not he takes the minerals out of the stratum such stratum still belongs to him as part of the vertical section of the land. Ib.

G. was lessee of manorial mines, with right to work them and enter on the surface of the copyhold; these mines were worked from the deep pits. Between the deep pits and the North Staffordshire Railway lay, first, copyhold of A.; next, freehold of S.; next, freehold of A. G. took a lease of the S. mines, and, ten days after, a lease of part of A.'s freehold for the purpose of completing a railway then in course of construction over A.'s copyhold from the deep pits to the North Staffordshire Railway. This lease provided for the carriage over A.'s freehold by G. of the produce of mines belonging to or occupied by G. or belonging to S. Shortly afterwards G. drove a crut from the S. mines under A.'s copyhold to the deep pits, and so carried the S. minerals to the deep pits, and thence by the railway over A.'s copyhold to the North Staffordshire Railway:—Held, that A.'s successors in title were entitled to an injunction to restrain G. from carrying the S. minerals under or over A.'s copyhold, and that there had been no acquiescence on A.'s part to disentitle them. Ib.

In copyhold lands, although the property in mines is in the lord, the possession of them is in the tenant. The latter, therefore, may maintain an action against the owner of an adjoining colliery, for breaking and entering the sub-soil and taking coal therein, although no trespass is committed on the surface. Lewis v. Branthwaite, 2 B. & Ad. 437; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 263.

The lord of a manor as such, has no right, without a custom, to enter upon the copyholds within his manor, under which there are mines and veins of coal, in order to bore for and work the same; and the copyholder may maintain trespass against him for so doing. Bourne v. Taylor, 10 East, 189; 10 R. R. 267.

A lord may drive carriages along a tramway under copyholds of the manor, for the purpose of working mines within the manor, but not of working mines beyond its limits. Bowser v. Maclean, 2 De G. F. & J. 415; 30 L. J., Ch. 273; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1220; 3 L. T. 456; 9 W. R. 112.

A prescription or a custom in a manor to work mines under houses without making compensation for any damage occasioned to such houses is bad, as being unreasonable. Hilton v. Granville (Earl) Dav. & M. 614; 5 Q. B. 701; 13 L. J., Q. B. 193.

—— In Customary Freeholds.]—Customary freeholds, held by copy of court roll, but not at the will of the lord, and passing by surrender and admittance, are copyholds by tenure, and the freehold of them is in the lord, and he is entitled to the minerals. Portland (Duke) v. Hill, 35 L. J., Ch. 439; L. R. 2 Eq. 785; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 15 W. R. 38.

Remedies.]—Injunction by a copyholder restraining the lord preparing to open a mine. Distinction as to a mine opened and working. Grey v. Northumberland (Duke), 13 Ves. 236.

Injunction in the case of trespass by the lord digging for coal on the premises of a copyhold tenant, from the nature of the subject and the consequences, such an injunction not to be continued without securing the means of a speedy trial. S. C., 17 Ves. 281.

Lord may bring a bill for an account of ore dug or timber cut by defendant's testator; otherwise of ploughing up meadows or ancient pasture, or such torts as die with the person. Winchester v. Knight, 1 P. Wms. 406.

Where the lord, who claims against the tenants the mines within the manor, has stood by for a long period and allowed the tenants to work the mines and to expend large sums of money, a court of equity will not give him an injunction or account against the tenants, but will leave him to his legal remedy. Parrott v. Palmer, 3 Myl. & K. 632.

The plaintiffs stated on their bill that certain lands were copyhold, but did not allege circumstances sufficient to prove that they were so, and that B., the tenant, had never worked mines. B., by answer, said the lands were freehold. Injunction granted to restrain B. from working mines till the hearing. Greenwich Hospital Commissioners v. Blackett, 12 Jur. 151.

Suit by lord against a tenant of lands within the manor, to restrain the defendant from taking stone from lands in his occupation. The defendant, by his answer, alleged that it was and had been a common practice in the manor to remove the stone which lay immediately under the surface, for the benefit of cultivation. At the hearing, the court made a decree for a perpetual injunction, the defendant declining to try his right to take the stone in an action at law, to be brought against him by the plaintiff. Cudden v. Morley, 7 Hare, 202.

Where waste land was, with the consent of a lord, inclosed by a former owner of the plaintiff's property, and the plaintiff had dug for minerals thereon, and where a subsequent lord asserted his right to the minerals, and sold them to the defendant, who thereupon entered upon the property and commenced digging for them; on a bill to restrain the defendant:—Held, that the lord had not succeeded in establishing his claim, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the minerals. Ackroyd v. Briggs, 13 L. T. 521; 14 W. R. 25.

China Clay.]—By a deed executed in 1799, the lord granted copyholds in fee, reserving all mines and minerals within and under the premises, with full liberty of ingress, egress, and regress to and for the grantor, his heirs and assigns, to dig and search for, and to take, use, and work the excepted mines and minerals:—Held, that the grantor was not entitled to get the china clay, inasmuch as it could be got only in a manner utterly destructive of the surface, and as the deed did not clearly reserve to him power to destroy the surface, and did not contain any provision for making compensation for injury done to the surface. Hext v. Gill, 41 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 7 Ch. 699; 27 L. T. 291; 20 W. R. 957.

The lord granted a licence to certain persons to get china clay under the premises comprised in the deed of 1799, and under the adjoining waste land, and the licensees had entered on the premises, but the grantor asserted that they had done so by mistake, and that neither he nor they had any present intention of getting china clay on the premises, though he claimed to be entitled to do so:—Held, that this was such a threat as to empower the court to grant an injunction to restrain the grantor and his licensees from getting china clay from the premises comprised in the deed of grant. Ib.

Shingle.]—In an action by the lord for taking shell-fish and shingle on the foreshore of the manor, between high and low-water mark, his title being under a royal grant of the manor, with anchorage and groundage, but with no express mention of the shore:—Held, that this grant afforded of itself a presumption that it included the soil of the shore; and the jury was directed that, upon matters of that nature, they would properly be guided by the opinion of a judge. Le Strange v. Rowe, 4 F. & F. 1048.

An earlier grant from the crown to a corporation of rights of anchorage, groundage, and ballast over the shore of the locus in quo would not weigh much against positive evidence of the exercise of rights of ownership over the shore by the plaintiff's ancestors, under the grant of the manor. Ib.

Evidence of such acts of ownership as licences to take shingle, sand, and seaweed, is receivable to support the presumption of a grant of the soil of the shore. Ib.

It is the duty of the crown to protect the realm from the inroads of the sea by maintaining the natural barriers, or by raising artificial barriers; and therefore no subject is entitled to destroy a natural barrier against the sea. And if the destruction of such natural barrier would cause an injury to a neighbouring landowner, he is entitled to an injunction to restrain it. In an action by the owner of a piece of land adjoining the foreshore, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant, the owner of the foreshore, from removing shingle therefrom, so as to expose the plaintiff's land to the inroads of the sea, although the shingle was removed for sale in a natural and ordinary user of the land. Att.-Gen. v. Tomline, 49 L. J., Ch. 377; 14 Ch. D. 58; 42 L. T. 880; 28 W. R. 870; 44 J. P. 617.

Loose Stones.]—In an action by a lord of a manor against his copyholder, for removing from the land loose stones, which had been thrown upon it by the shivering of certain neighbouring rocks, there being no evidence to show that the stones, the subject of the action, had come down upon the land during the tenancy of the copyholder:—Held, that they must be taken, primâ facie, to form part of the soil of the copyhold, and that the copyholder could not remove them for his own profit. Dearden v. Evans, 5 M. & W. 11; 2 H. & H. 7; 8 L. J., Ex. 171; 3 Jur. 703.

Semble, that a copyholder has a right to remove from off his land stones or other matters which by any convulsion of nature are thrown upon it during his tenancy. Ib.

A copyholder, or any other tenant, may remove stones from off his land when they impede the necessary progress of agriculture. Ib.

Coprolites.]—Coprolites beneath the surface of a copyhold tenement are minerals, and the property in them is in the lord, though in the absence of a special custom he cannot dig for them without the permission of the tenant. Att.-Gen. v. Tomline, 46 L. J., Ch. 654; 5 Ch. D. 750; 36 L. T. 684; 25 W. R. 802.

The lord of a manor, in which there was no custom authorising him to do so, entered without permission on the land of a copyhold tenant, which was in the occupation of a tenant, and dug for and carried away coprolites. A large trench was dug, which at the time when the copyhold tenant commenced a suit against the lord to restrain the trespass was not filled up, though it was filled up and the surface restored before the suit came to a hearing. The digging was continued after the filing of the bill, and until the coprolites were exhausted:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the copyholder, though only a reversioner, could maintain a suit against the lord for an injunction and damages. Ib.

Held, also, that the proper measure of damage was the gross amount produced by the sale of the coprolites, less the expense of the working, and such a sum by way of profit as would have induced a stranger to undertake the working. Ib.

As evidence of an alleged custom authorising the lord of a manor, with the consent of the homage, to grant portions of the waste as copyhold, two admittances in pursuance of such grants, made respectively in 1849 and 1857, were produced:—Held, that in the absence of any contradictory evidence the custom was sufficiently proved. Ib. But see S. C. in C. A., 15 Ch. D. 150; 43 L. T. 486.

And see COMMON, and MINES AND MINERALS.

3. TREES AND TIMBER.

Extent of Rights of Lord and Tenant.]—The lord of a manor has not by law, independently of custom, any such property or interest in the timber growing on the copyhold premises of a tenant as entitles him to enter and cut. Whitechurch v. Holworthy, 19 Ves. 213; 4 M. & S. 344; 16 R. R. 481.

Generally, if there is no custom for the tenants of a manor to cut timber it belongs to the lord. Ib.

A copyholder may by custom have such an interest in the timber that he may himself cut; so he may have a special interest to prevent the lord's cutting, but such a custom ought to be proved by extremely strong evidence. Ib.

The lord has no right to enter on a copyhold of inheritance and cut timber for his own use, leaving sufficient for botes and estovers, if there is no custom in the manor. Ib.

Where a copyhold estate is granted for three lives to a man and his heirs, and he has no power of compelling the lord to renew on the falling in of the lives, he cannot cut timber growing on the estate. Mardiner v. Elliott, 2 Term Rep. 746; 1 R. R. 609. And see Blewett v. Jenkins, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 16.

Where by agreement, dated 1656, between the lord and certain tenants of customary tenements within a manor, the tenants covenanted that they,

their heirs or assigns would not cut down sell or dispose of any wood standing or growing or thereafter to stand or grow without the licence of the lord and the lord covenanted to set out yearly, upon request of the tenants sufficient for the repairing of their houses and other necessary uses in and about the tenements and that in case any of the tenants their heirs or assigns should plant any wood upon the tenements it should be lawful for them to cut down use or dispose of all or any such wood for repairing their houses or for any other necessary uses without disturbance of the lord—Held that a tenant of one of the customary tenements comprised in the agreement was not entitled without the licence of the lord to cut down and sell wood which had been planted on the tenement by another tenant since the agreement and that having so done the lord might maintain trover against her for the wood Blacklett v Lucas, 2 M & S 494 15 R R 324

Inclosure of Woods]—In a manor where there were certain commonable rights a question was raised whether the owner of the woods was entitled to inclose the coppices and woods from time to time cut down and exclude therefrom all the commonable cattle for seven successive years for the preservation of the wood and underwood—Held that the owner of the woods was not so entitled 22 Ldw 4 c 7 does not apply to woods wherein rights of common exist and 35 Hen 8 c 17 s 8 which provides that the space where the wood is intended to be cut may be inclosed and kept in severalty for seven years only applies to woods in which immemorial rights of common exist and not to rights of common claimed by grant Dibdin v Anglesey (Marquis) 2 C & M 722 4 Tyrw 926, 4 L J Ex 278

Forfeiture for Cutting]—Where a copyholder for life cut trees though none were applied to the repair of the premises till several months after and after ejectment brought as for a forfeiture, and most of them still remained unapplied, but parts of the premises were still out of repair, it is a question for the jury whether they were cut bonâ fide for the purpose of repair and were in course of application for that purpose and there being no evidence that they were to be applied to any other purpose the court refused to set aside a verdict for the defendant Doe d Foley v Wilson, 11 East, 56

Where a copyholder of inheritance having power by custom to cut timber, surrendered to the use of his will and devised to A for life without impeachment of waste with remainders over though there was no instance in fact of a copyholder for life in the manor cutting timber yet the right being annexed to the fee and inheritance, the copyholder in fee in carving out his estate, may make a tenant for life dispunishable of waste and at any rate the lord cannot enter upon the copyholder for life's estate as for a forfeiture upon his cutting timber, for the injury if any is to the remainderman of the inheritance Denn d Jodrell v Johnson, 10 East, 267

And see Eardley v Granville supra

4 HERIOTS

Heriot Service—Heriot Custom—Copyholder and Customary Freeholder.] — Heriot service may attach to copyholds, and is not confined to the customary freeholds of a manor Weston v Bailey 65 L J Q B 641, [1896] 2 Q B. 234, 75 L T 210 See S C in C A infra

Homage — Presentment that Tenement is Heriotable—Evidence]—Presentments by the homage that a heriot is due in respect of a particular tenement are evidence of the fact where the liability to a heriot arises by heriot custom, but not where it arises by heriot service Ib

Customary Heriot—Right of Lord to take Heriot outside Manor]—Where upon the death of the tenant of a copyhold tenement a customary heriot of the best beast of the tenant is due to the lord of the manor, the property in the beast vests in the lord upon the death of the tenant and the lord has a right to seize it wherever it be found, whether in or out of the manor and a right of action against any person misappropriating it Weston v Bailey, 66 L J, Q B 45 [1897] 1 Q B 86 75 L T 470, 45 W R 115—C A Affirming S C supra

Statute of Limitations]—To an action for trespass by seizing two horses of the plaintiff the defendant pleaded that they were taken as customary heriots, and the plaintiff replied a discontinuance of taking heriots for more than twenty years and that the right to heriots then, at the time of such discontinuance first accrued to the lord within 3 and 4 Will 4 c 27 — Held on demurrer that inasmuch as the seizure was neither making an entry or distress nor bringing an action to recover rent, within 3 & 4 Will 4, c 27 ss 2, 3 or 34, the title of the defendant to the heriots was not barred by the statute notwithstanding that more than twenty years had elapsed since the last previous seizure of a heriot and that therefore the replication was bad Zouche v Dalbiac, 44 L J, Ex 109, L R 10 Ex 172, 33 L T 221, 23 W R 964

When Due]—When a copyhold estate in the possession of one owner, paid but one heriot but several heriots if divided among several owners, if it afterwards becomes united in the person of a single owner one heriot only is payable Garland v Jekyll, 2 Bing 273 9 Moore C P 502 2 L J (o s) C P 227 27 R R 630

It had been before held, that devisees of a copyhold, holding as tenants in common had several estates to which they must be severally admitted, and for which several services were due to the lord and several heriots in the death of each tenant and the multiplication of heriots and fees on admission still continued, notwithstanding the re-union of the same land afterwards in one person, the estates or interests in the land, once divided into severalty continuing several Attree v Scutt, 6 East, 476, 2 Smith, 449

Where a copyhold tenement holden by heriot custom becomes the property of several as tenants in common the lord is entitled to a heriot from each of them, but if the several portions are re united in one person, one heriot only is payable Hollaway v Berkeley, 6 B & C 2 9 D & R 83, 5 L J (o s) K B 1, 30 R R 228

Where a plea of justification for taking two horses, as heriots, stated a custom in the manor, that the lord from time immemorial, until the division of a certain tenement into moieties, had been accustomed to take a heriot upon the death of every tenant dying seised and since the division the lord had taken and been accustomed to take on the death of every tenant dying seised of either of the moieties, a heriot for each moiety this must be taken to be one entire custom and not two distinct customs the one applicable to the tenement before and the other after the division of it and being laid to be an immemorial custom, it is disproved by evidence that the division was made within memory Kingsmill v Bull 9 East, 185

A heriot may be due by custom upon the death of a free tenant holding an estate in fee simple Damerell v Protheroe, 10 Q B 20, 16 L J Q B 170, 11 Jur 331

Where there are four joint tenants of a copyhold estate and all join in alienation, one heriot only is due, if the custom of the manor shews only that a heriot is due from every tenant on alienation Padwick v Fyndale, 1 El & Bl 184, 28 L J, Q B 90, 5 Jur (N S), 676 7 W R 53

The lord's claim for compensation upon a valuation or an enfranchisement under 15 & 16 Vict c 51, s 16 is to be estimated accordingly Ib

A heriot is not due upon the death of cestui que trust but of him that has the legal estate Trinity College, Cambridge v Browne 1 Vern 441

A heriot service before the 12 Car 2, when the feudal system was established was this where the tenant held of the lord by service, the instant the tenant died the property of the best beast vested in the lord and he might seize for it, or distrain for it at his election But there, though the tenant died the tenure continued and, therefore it was not unreasonable to say that the lord might distrain for his heriot because the tenure was a continuing tenure in the heir, however it was doubted in Osborne v Steward (3 Mod 230) whether in the case of a reservation of an heriot it could be distrained for after the expiration of the term and it does not appear how that case was eventually determined Inchiquin v Burnell, 3 Ridgw 426

A decree for confirming an agreement between lord and his tenants for settling heriot and stinting common revived by bill brought by purchaser who did not come in in privity and confirmed though lord and tenants were tenants for life Dunn v Allen, 1 Vern 427

Property in, Vesting]—Where a customary heriot of the best beast is due on the death of a tenant to the lord of a manor no property in any specified beast vests in the lord before selection by him of the beast Abingdon v Lapscombe 1 G & D 230, 1 Q B 776, 10 L J, Q B 330 6 Jur 257

A selection of seven beasts as heriots when the lord is entitled to five only will not be sufficient to vest in the lord the property in any five of them Ib

Seizing, in different Rights — Trespass ab initio]—Action for breaking and entering a close, and seizing and taking two horses The defendant pleaded as to breaking and entering the close, and seizing and taking one of the horses, a justification of the seizure of that horse as a heriot due in respect of a customary tenement, whereof the plaintiff's testator died seised The defendant also pleaded as to the breaking and entering the close and seizing and taking the other horse a justification of the seizure of that horse as a heriot due in respect of another customary tenement whereof the plaintiff's testator died seised Separate replications to each of the pleas that the defendant at the same time place and occasion when he took the horse in the introductory part of that plea mentioned also seized and took the other horse under colour and pretence of the heriot custom, and under an assertion and a claim of right to seize and take the same other horse as and for the heriot custom are good inasmuch as the seizure of the other horse rendered the defendant a trespasser ab initio as to the entry, as well as to the seizure Price v Woodhouse 1 Ex 559 And see S C 3 Ex 616 18 L J, Ex 271

—— Land on Lease]—By the 7th custom of a manor the lord is to have for a heriot, on every descent, the best quick cattle for every yard and half yard of land By the 17th if any tenant shall let his land and at his decease the lord not answered the best beast for his heriot which did commonly manure the premises, the person to whom the land ought to come shall pay to the lord within six weeks after the death of the tenant 3*l* for every yard of land and 40*s* for every half yard instead of a heriot —Held that where the tenant died after having let his land the lord could not seize the best beast for his heriot and was entitled only to the pecuniary payment in lieu thereof Croome v Grise, 4 Bing (N C) 145, 5 Scott, 493 3 Hodges, 277

Where freehold tenants of manor made long leases to deprive the lord of his heriots court would not assist the lord, no trust appearing Wisly v Pemberton 2 Eq Ca Abr 279

Custom as to Compensation]—It seems that a custom for the homage to assess a compensation in lieu of a heriot to be paid by an incoming copyholder on surrender or alienation is not good Parker v Ratcliffe, 1 Bos & P 282, 4 R R 797

Evidence that the homage has been accustomed to assess a certain sum of money as a heriot upon alienation and that such assessment has always been made with reference to the best chattel of the tenant will not support an avowry for a heriot in kind upon alienation Ib

—— Commuting]—Where a money payment is due in lieu of heriots and relief by the custom, there must be also a custom of distress and the custom must be alleged positively, and not merely by inference Basingstoke Corporation v Bolton 1 Drew 270, 22 L J, Ch 30, 17 Jur 57, 1 W R 76

Commissioners of inclosure have no powers, in exchanging freehold land subject to heriots and reliefs to make the allotted lands so subject S C, 3 Drew 50

Apportionment]—A copyholder contracted for the sale of his tenement which was subject to a heriot and to quit-rent and fines The heriot was supplied by severance of the copyhold — Held on the construction of the contract, that the vendor was not entitled to have the remaining part of his copyhold discharged from the heriot, and that he could not refuse to execute the conveyance on the ground that the company had not apportioned the rent and fines, but must proceed himself under the Railway Consolidation Act. Parker v. S. E. Ry., 1 W. R. 316.

—— Pleading.]—Where a lord justified under a custom to have the best beast on the tenant's death, and the custom proved was that the lord should have the best beast or goods :—Held, a variance. Adderley v. Hart, 1 Bos. & P. 394, n.; 4 R. R. 800, n.

5. Quit Rents.

Evidence.]—Payment of an unvaried rent for a long series of years to the lord of a manor, is evidence of a title to the rent only, and not to the land in respect of which the rent is paid. Doe d. Whittick v. Johnson, Gow, 173 ; 21 R. R. 826.

The presumption is, that the rent is a quit rent. Ib.

And see Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Parr, 63 L. J., Q. B. 784 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 420 ; 71 L. T. 65 ; 42 W. R. 561—C. A.

Mere length of time short of the period fixed by the statute of limitations, and unaccompanied with any circumstances, is not of itself a sufficient ground to presume a release or an extinguishment of a quit rent. Eldridge v. Knott, Cowp. 214.

Lord of manor of A. brings a bill for rent of 8*s.*, payable out of copyhold held of manor of B. ; and though it appeared by rolls of manor of B. from Hen. 8 to Car. 1, that copyhold was held of manor of B. at rent of 8*s.*, and though it was admitted by plaintiff that copyhold was held of manor of B., and he had no other evidence of his title to rent, but that it had been paid him near twenty years, yet the court decreed him the arrears and growing rent, and denied defendant trial at law. By the rules of the law in cases of encroachment of rent, if tenant makes but one payment of more than is due, he shall never go back from it. Steward v. Bridger, 2 Vern. 516.

Bill would not lie against several tenants of a manor for quit rents, the plaintiff's remedy being at law, and the suit also multifarious as to the different tenants. Bouverie v. Prentice, 1 Bro. C. C. 200.

Election.]—Where customary tenants hold under a corn rent, or an annual sum of money in lieu thereof, in the absence of a custom to the contrary the election is with the tenant to pay either in money or in corn. Blewett v. Jenkins, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 16.

Altering.]—A lord, on a grant of a copyhold tenement, can neither add to nor diminish the ancient rent. Doe d. Rayer v. Strickland, 2 G. & D. 278 ; 2 Q. B. 792 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 305.

Where a lord, having a life interest only in the manor, granted at a new rent of 2*s.* a portion of an entire tenement, the ancient rent for which entire tenement had been 10*s.* and two hens :—Held, an invalid grant against his successor. Ib.

6. Fines.

Right to.]—Custom that general fine is payable on death of lord is good, even where manor has been alienated by lord in lifetime. Lowther v. Raw, 2 Bro. P. C. 451.

Tenant shall not pay fines on alienation of lord : but on death only, and on alienation, etc., by his own act. Thwaites Manor, In re, Cary, 6.

Due only on Admittance.]—The fine due to the lord is to be assessed after the admission. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Dimes, 15 Sim. 402 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 206 ; 12 Jur. 886.

Reasonableness.]—Where a fine arbitrary is imposed it is due to the lord of common right, and the tenant must show that it is unreasonable. Doe d. Twining v. Muscott, 12 M. & W. 832 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 185.

A lord of a manor cannot recover a fine not certain, unless it is reasonable, and assessed and demanded. Hayward v. Raw, 6 H. & N. 308 ; 30 L. J., Ex. 178 ; 4 L. T. 519.

An entry by a steward of a manor in his book of the admission of a surrenderee of copyhold premises is a mere memorandum, and not such an admittance as will entitle the lord to claim a fine. Ib.

A single copyholder is not relievable in equity for an excessive fine, because this is determinable at law. But to avoid multiplicity of suits, several copyholders may join to be relieved against a general fine that is excessive. Cowper v. Clerk, 3 P. Wms. 155.

The rent reserved in a lease of copyhold premises, is not conclusive as to the amount of a fine payable to the lord, for the tenant may show that the actual value of the premises demised is less than the rent reserved ; and the fine must be estimated according to the improved value. Verulam (Earl) v. Howard, 5 M. & P. 148 ; 7 Bing. 327 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 69.

A tenant for life and several remaindermen in their order were all admitted at the same court, and the fines assessed upon them were calculated on the same principle as those imposed upon joint tenants :—Held, that this was not an unreasonable mode of calculation. Richardson v. Kensit, 5 Man. & G. 485 ; 6 Scott (N.R.) 419 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 154 ; 7 Jur. 856.

Assessment of.]—The mode of assessing a fine proportionably upon the clear annual value of copyhold lands is to consider such annual value so much as it would yield to the copyholder if he occupied it himself, i.e. if he were to let it and repair it himself ; and therefore the annual charge for repairs should enter into the calculation. Ib.

If an assessment of a copyhold fine is entered in the court rolls, as of 100*l.*, but that out of especial favour the lord remitted 40*l.*, and thereby reduced it to 60*l.*, and the lord sued for the fine, and the jury finding the annual value of the premises 30*l.* give a verdict for 60*l.*, the lord cannot retain the verdict for the sum actually due, but must make a new assessment ; the old assessment, notwithstanding the remitter, being in law an assessment as of 100*l.* Northwick (Lord) v. Stanway, 3 Bos. & P. 346 ; 6 East, 56.

The lord may recover from a copyholder the fine assessed by him on admittance, not exceeding two years' value of the tenement, although there is no entry of the assessment of such fine on the court rolls, but only a demand of such a sum for a fine after the value of the tenement had been found by the homage. Ib.

—— Two Years' Rule].—The lord can never be entitled to more than two years' intrinsic value of the estate, as a fine upon admission ; therefore, a custom to take 10 per cent. on the purchase-money, be it of ever so long continuance, cannot bind. Leake v. Pigot (Lord), 1 Selw. N. P. 87.

And an action will lie to recover the overplus above two years' value, if it was paid upon compulsion. Ib.

—— Improved Annual Value.]—A lord, who is entitled by the custom of the manor to a reasonable fine upon admission to a copyhold tenement, may demand and recover such fine by the description of the improved annual value for a certain number of years of the tenement to which the admittance relates, and without stating in money the precise amount of the fine. Fraser v. Mason, 52 L. J., Q. B. 643; 11 Q. B. D. 574; 49 L. T. 761; 32 W. R. 421—C. A.

—— Double Fine—Sale under Settled Land Act.]—A copyholder who had been admitted to the copyhold, to him and his heirs, died, leaving a will by which he devised it to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to his widow for life. Shortly after his death the widow sold the property under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The trustees had not been admitted. The lord claimed to be paid, in addition to the fine payable by a purchaser on admittance, the fine which would have been payable if the trustees had been admitted:—Held (dissentiente Fry, L.J.), that the lord could only claim one fine. Naylor and Spendla's Contract. In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 453; 34 Ch. D. 217; 56 L. T. 132; 35 W. R. 219—C. A.

—— Several Admitted.]—The fine payable according to the custom of a manor on the admittance of a single tenant in fee was two years' improved value; and where several persons had been admitted they had paid fines assessed two years for the first life, half of that for the second, and half again for the third:—Held, that that was the proper mode of calculating the fine in the present case. Sheppard v. Woodford, 5 M. & W. 608; 9 L. J., Ex. 90.

A copyhold estate was vested in fourteen trustees, and by a decree of the Court of Chancery, made in a suit to which the lord and the trustees for the time being were parties, it was ordered, that when the number of the trustees should be reduced to five, the lord should, with the approbation of the master in chancery, nominate nine others to be added to the five, to whose use a new surrender should be made, and that the lord should admit them on paying a reasonable fine. The annual value of the estate was 1,000*l.*:—Held, that 5,657*l.* 19*s.* was an unreasonable fine, on the admission of fourteen trustees; and that the proper mode of assessing the fine was to take, for the first life, two years' improved value; for the second life, one half of the sum taken from the first; and for the third life, one half of the sum taken from the second; and so on. Wilson v. Hoare, 2 B. & Ad. 350; 9 L. J. (O S.) K. B. 253.

A lord claimed double the admitted yearly value on the first life, half of that sum on the second life, half of the last amount of the third, and so on in a descending series:—Held, that a fine calculated on this principle was a reasonable fine. Wilson v. Hoare, 2 P. & D. 659; 10 A. & E. 236.

Held, in the exchequer chamber, that the principle of assessment laid down in Wilson v. Hoare, 2 B. & Ad. 350, was inapplicable, and that a deduction should be made on account of the right to take a new fine on the failure of nine lives out of fourteen, instead of absolutely. Hoare v. Wilson, 10 A. & E. 245, n.

On Licence to Demise.]—On February 8, 1810, a licence was granted by a lord to a copyholder, to demise part of his copyhold premises to A. for seventy-one years, saving all fines to the lord. On April 4, 1810, a second licence was granted to him to demise the remainder of his copyhold, excepting the part previously demised to A. with this condition, that, in consequence of his engagement to improve the premises, it was agreed, that during the seventy-one years the fine on all future admissions should be at the rate of 37*l.* per year for the whole, and so in proportion for any less quantity of land:—Held, that the words "the whole" meant the whole of the residue which had not been demised to A., and that the executors of the copyholder were bound to pay on their admission to the whole of the premises not only the two years' improved value at 37*l.* per annum of the residue of the premises occupied by the copyholder, but also two years' improved value of the premises demised to A. Curtis v. Scales, 14 M. & W. 447; 14 L. J., Ex. 318.

Unreasonable Custom.]—A custom that the lord, in assessing a fine upon admittance of one not being a copyhold tenant on the court rolls (except a customary heir claiming admittance as such), is not restricted in amount to any number of years' value of the tenement to which such admittance is made is unreasonable and bad. Douglas v. Dysart (Earl), 10 C. B. (N.S.) 688; 6 L. T. 327.

Instruments—Stamps.]—Copyhold land was devised to A. for life, remainder to five persons as tenants in common; A. was admitted. After his death the five, having contracted to sell to B., severally surrendered to the use of B. in fee, which surrender was accepted by the lord:—Held that B, on claiming admittance, must pay five fees, and that the admittance would require five stamps. Reg. v. Eton College, 8 Q. B. 526; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Evesdon Manor, 16 L. J., Q. B. 18.

If a copyhold tenant conveys his tenement in several parcels to different parties, and some only of those parcels afterwards devolve upon a single person, such person (in the absence of special custom) is not entitled to be admitted by a single admittance; but the lord may insist upon several admittances (whether in a single instrument or not) in respect of each parcel which has so devolved, and there must be several stamps in respect of each. Traherne v. Gardner, 5 El. & Bl. 913; 25 L. J., Q. B. 201; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 394; 4 W. R. 281.

Co-parceners.]—Semble, that co-parceners are entitled to be admitted to copyhold tenements as one heir, and upon the payment of one set of fees. Rex v. Bonsall, 4 D. & R. 825; 3 B. & C. 173; 27 R. R. 319.

Trustees.]—A. devised real estates to three trustees, upon certain trusts, and directed, that, in the event of any of the trustees dying or ceasing to act, others should be appointed, so that there might always be three trustees for carrying the trusts into execution; and he also directed a transfer of the estates upon every such new appointment. In execution of the trusts, several copyhold estates were purchased, and subsequently, one of the trustees having died, and another having declined to act, the third surrendered the copyhold estates to himself and two new trustees, and the three were duly admitted by the lord:—Held, that, although one of the surrenderees was also surrenderor, this was an admittance of the three to a new estate; and that the fine, being payable in respect of that new estate, was correctly assessed as upon an admission de novo of three tenants as joint tenants of the estate. Sheppard v. Woodford, 5 M. & W. 608; 9 L. J., Ex. 90.

A devise of a copyhold estate to four as joint tenants:—Held, that any of them was entitled to be admitted as tenant, without the payment of three fines as a condition. Reg. v. Wanstead Manor, 2 El. & Bl. 924; 23 L. J., Q. B. 67; 18 Jur. 310. And see Wilson v. Hoare, supra.

Devise of copyholds to three trustees upon trust, to permit A. to occupy the same or receive the rents and profits thereof for his life; and after the death of A., upon trust, to sell the estate, and divide the proceeds amongst the children of A.; and gift of the testator's residuary estate to the trustees upon other trusts, but charged with debts and "the costs and charges of proving and executing" the will:—Held, that the fines payable on the admission of the devisees in trust were not part of the costs and charges of executing the will to be borne by the residuary estate, but that such expenses of admission were a charge upon the copyholds so devised. Cole v. Jealous, 5 Hare, 31.

Covenant by A. B., a husband, with trustees that he would at his proper costs and charges surrender to the lord, according to the custom, the copyhold hereditaments to which his wife was entitled, to the use of the trustees, to the intent that they might, at the costs and charges of A. B., be admitted tenants upon trust to pay the rents to the wife for her separate use:—Held, that the act of admittance was complete before the fine became payable, and that A. B. was not bound to provide for the fine under the words "costs and charges." Barrow v. Barrow, 3 W. R. 587.

Disclaimer by Devisee of Trustee.]—A trustee of copyholds devised them and died. The devisee disclaimed. A new trustee was appointed by the court, and a vesting order made in the ordinary form. The lord of the manor refused to admit the trustee without payment of a double fine—one as for the admission of the customary heir, and one for that of the trustee:—Held, that the order was right, and that the lord could not have been served with the petition on which the order was made. Paterson v. Paterson, 35 Beav. 506; 35 L. J., Ch. 518; L. R. 2 Eq. 31; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 408; 14 L. T. 320; 14 W. R. 601.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—The fines, fees, and expenses of the admission of new trustees to copyholds must be borne by the tenant for life, and those in remainder, in proportion to their respective interests. Cater or Carter v. Sebright, 26 Beav. 374; 28 L. J., Ch. 411; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 259; 7 W. R. 225.

When a testator provides a fund for the payment of fines on admission to copyholds, or renewals of leases, the manner of raising the fines, and the question of contribution between the tenant for life and the remainderman, must depend upon the intention of the testator, to be collected from the whole will. Playters v. Abbott, 2 Myl. & K. 97; 3 L. J., Ch. 57.

Equitable tenant for life of copyholds under a will, which contained no special provision for the payment of expenses on admission, died without having paid the fines and fees incurred on the admission of a trustee in her lifetime. By her will she bequeathed her personal estate to her daughter for life for her separate use, and after her decease to her children. The daughter and her husband and children took estates in remainder in the copyholds:—Held, that having regard to the frame of the will, under which the tenant for life was entitled, and to the interest which the parties entitled to the copyhold estates took in the personal estate of the tenant for life, one-third of the fees was properly payable out of the corpus of her personal estate, the husband of the daughter consenting to pay the residue. Bull v. Birkbeck, 2 Y. & C., C. C. 447.

Fines for admission received by the trustees of a manor upon grants of parts of the waste belong to the tenant for life. Cowley (Earl) v. Wellesley, 35 Beav. 640.

Preliminary fines received on enfranchising copyholds by reason of the admission having taken place before July, 1853, as is mentioned in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, belong to the tenant for life. Ib.

Expenses of fencing waste lands of a manor, granted to a trustee for the benefit of the estate, are payable out of corpus. Ib.

Where moneys are paid into court by a railway company, in respect of copyholds enfranchised under the Lands Clauses Act, the tenant for life of the manor is not entitled to any portion of such moneys as fines payable to him under the provisions for enfranchisement contained in the Copyhold Acts, 1852 and 1858. Wilson's Estate, In re, 3 De G. J. & S. 410; 32 L. J., Ch. 191; 7 L. T. 722; 11 W. R. 294.

—— Renewal of Copyholds.]—Property held upon lives was in settlement, and the surviving life being advanced in years, a renewal was obtained under which two new lives were added, the tenant for life advancing the money necessary to pay fines on such renewal. The tenant for life afterwards died in the lifetime of the surviving life:—Held, that as he had obtained no benefit from the renewal, the estate of the tenant for life was not bound to contribute towards the expenses of the renewal, but was entitled to be recouped out of the corpus of the settled property the amount paid for the fines on the renewal. Harris v. Harris, 11 W. R. 451.

Where a tenant for life of copyholds and leaseholds for lives has renewed the lives, the proportions of the fines and expenses of the renewals payable as between his estate and that of the remainderman entitled to the property, are to be estimated with regard to the actual enjoyment of the property; and compound interest at 4 per cent. per annum with annual rests upon the amount payable by the remainderman will be allowed to the estate of the tenant for life for the period between the renewal and his death; simple interest only after that event, and simple interest from that time till the time of actual enjoyment. Bradford v. Brownjohn, 38 L. J., Ch. 10; L. R. 3 Ch. 711; 18 L. T. 388; 16 W. R. 1178.

Remaindermen.]—A lord who has been paid a full fine on the admission of a tenant for life has no right, on the death of the latter, to another full fine from the remainderman for his admission, unless a special custom of the manor justifies the claim. Reg. v. Woodham Walter Manor (Lord), 10 B. & S. 439.

The custom must be proved by affirmative evidence; and entries on the court rolls of the admission of a tenant for life and payment of a fine by him, and after his death the admission of the tenant in remainder and payment of a fine by him without mentioning any amount, are not of themselves evidence of the custom, since such entries are consistent with an apportionment of the full fine between the tenant for life and the remainderman. Ib.

The same principle applies where the entries mentioned the amount of the fines. Ib.

The lord having taken a full fine on the admittance of a tenant for life, is not entitled to another full fine upon the admittance of the remainderman as tenant in fee unless the imposition of such latter fine is authorised by a special custom. Ely (Dean) v. Calderott, 1 M. & Sc. 633; 8 Bing. 439; 1 L. J., C. P. 131.

A devisee in fee of a copyhold tenement on his admittance paid the lord the full fine due by the custom of the manor; he afterwards made a surrender of the premises to the use of himself and his assigns for life, with divers remainders over; and on being admitted tenant for life of the surrendered premises he paid a fine of 1*s.* to the lord:—Held, that in the absence of a custom within the manor to sanction it, no fine was payable on the admission of the remainderman, the admission of a tenant for life being the admission of the remainderman. Phippers v. Eburn, 3 Scott, 634; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 250; 2 Hodges, 230; 6 L. J., C. P. 20.

Where a person becomes entitled under a will to copyholds, whether by remainder, originally vested, or by contingent remainder or executory devise which has become vested by the happening of the contingency, he comes in directly under the will, and therefore as between himself and the lord, he is entitled to the benefit of the admittance of the first devisee under the will. Randfield v. Randfield, 1 Dr. & Sm. 310; 30 L. J., Ch. 18; 3 L. T. 284; 9 W. R. 70.

The admission of a tenant for life to a copyhold is the admission of all in remainder, and the lord may assess the whole fine. Kensington (Lord) v. Mansell, 13 Ves. 246.

Vendor of Manor.]—A vendor of a manor is entitled to the fines paid for the admission of any new tenants in the room of the tenants described in the particulars of sale who may happen to die after the contract, but before the day fixed for the completion of the purchase, although the fines are not in fact paid till after that day. Cuddon v. Tite, 1 Giff. 395; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 579; 6 W. R. 606. S. P., Hardwicke (Earl) v. Sandys (Lord), 12 M. & W. 761; 13 L. J., Ex. 233.

A manor was sold under the decree of the court as part of the real estate of the testator, and an order was made on the 13th of March that the purchaser should, on or before the 17th of May, pay his purchase money into court, and be let into possession of the profits from Lady-day, several deaths and admissions taking place prior to Lady-day, but the fines due thereon had not been paid or assessed until after that time, no court having been holden; these fines belong to the vendors, and not to the purchaser. Garrick v. Camden (Earl), 2 Cox 231; 2 R. R. 37.

Purchasers of Copyholds.]—A copyhold estate of the testator in a cause was sold under a decree of the Court of Chancery. After the sale, and before the surrender, the tenant on the court rolls, who was the surviving trustee, died intestate. There had been no improper delay or neglect on the part of either the trustee or purchasers:—Held, that the fine and fees paid on the admission of the trustee's heir must be paid out of the fund belonging to the cestuis que trust. Paramore v. Greenslade, 1 Sm. & G. 541; 23 L. J., Ch. 34; 17 Jur. 1064.

A condition of sale that "the purchasers should have proper surrenders, conveyances, and assignments of the premises at their own expense," did not bind them to bear the expense of procuring the concurrence of all proper parties. Where, therefore, it was necessary for the heir of a trustee to be admitted on the court rolls, the fine and fees on that admission were ordered to be paid by the vendors. Ib.

The purchaser of a copyhold estate (devised subject to payment of debts, in trust for sale, and sold during the infancy of the heir, under the usual decree) is not entitled to have a portion of the purchase money retained in court, as a provision for defraying the expense of the fine which would become payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swanst. 558; 1 J. & W. 604 n.; 19 R. R. 277.

A railway company having taken copyholds, an order was made for the reinvestment of the purchase money in other copyholds, and for the payment by the company of the costs, charges, and expenses property incurred of and relating to the purchase, and of the application, and consequent thereon:—Held, that under this order the company was not liable to pay the fine on admission. Eastern Counties Ry., In re, Sawston, Ex parte, 27 L. J., Ch. 755; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 473; 6 W. R. 492.

Several Tenements.]—One fine cannot be assessed on the admission to several copyhold tenements. Grant v. Astle, 2 Dougl. 722.

Surrender of Intermediate Estate.]—A surrenderee of a remainder in a copyhold estate having died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held, that on the decease of the tenant for life the heir of such surrenderee was entitled to be admitted on payment of a single fine. Garland v. Alston, 3 H. & N. 390; 27 L. J., Ex. 438; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 539; 6 W. R. 689.

—— Custom as to.]—Where a copyholder in fee, who had paid a fine on his original admittance, surrendered to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder over; on which surrender and re-admittance no new fine was paid, and by the custom a remainderman coming into possession on the death of tenant for life must be admitted and pay a fine:—Held, that such a custom is good. Doe d. Whitbread v. Jenney, 5 East, 522; 2 Smith, 116.

Surrender by Heir.]—Where a devisee for life on admittance has paid a full fine as on admittance in fee, and the heir of the devisor has surrendered his reversion, the surrenderee cannot compel the lord to accept and enrol the surrender without payment of the fine payable in respect of the descent upon the heir. Reg. v. Dulling- ham (Manor), 1 P. & D. 172; 8 A. & E. 858; 1 W. W. & H. 865; 8 L. J., Q. B. 37.

Devise by one not Admitted.]—Where a person entitled to copyhold tenements in fee, who had never been admitted and never sought admission to them, died, having devised all his property to his eldest son and heir:—Held, first, that on the admission of the son the lord was entitled to two fines, one for the tenant's own admission, and the other as if his father had been admitted. Londesborough (Lord) v. Foster, 3 B. & S. 805; 32 L. J., Q. B. 225; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 8 L. T. 240; 11 W. R. 593.

Held, secondly, that the lord was not estopped from claiming this on the ground that the property was held in trust, and that he had admitted some of the cestuis que trust on payment of the accustomed fines. Ib. And see Right d. Taylor v. Banks, 3 B. & Ad. 664; 1 L. J., K. B. 254.

Executory Devisees.]—Where by the custom of a manor it was necessary for a copyhold tenant in remainder to be admitted and pay a fine on becoming entitled in possession, notwithstanding the admission of the tenant for life:—Held, that the same rule ought to be applied to an executory devisee who became entitled on the defeasance of an estate in fee, although no custom applicable to that case was established. Randfield v. Randfield, 3 De G., F. & J. 766; 31 L. J., Ch. 113; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 161; 5 L. T. 698.

Disclaimer of Trustees.]—Devise of a copyhold to three persons in fee who were also appointed executors of the will. The three proved the will. Two of them, by deed, released their interest and estate in the copyhold to the third, to the intent that such third person might be admitted alone. The lord claimed a treble fine, and had not admitted:—Held, that he was entitled to a single fine only, the deed operating as a disclaimer, and the fact that all three had proved the will not preventing any of them from disclaiming the devise under it. Wellesley v. Withers, 4 El. & Bl. 750; 24 L. J., Q. B. 134; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 706; 3 C. L. R. 1187.

The Court of Chancery has power under the Trustee Acts of 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60) s. 32, and 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 55), s. 9, to make an order appointing a trustee in substitution for a deceased trustee of a copyhold tenement, and vesting such tenement in him; and the trustee is entitled to be admitted on payment of one fine only, as claiming under such order and not through the customary heir to whom the estate had descended. Bristow v. Booth, 39 L. J., C. P. 47; L. R., 5 C. P. 80; 21 L. T. 427; 18 W. R. 138.

A disclaimer by two out of three joint tenants, surrenderees of copyhold lands belonging to a manor, executed before the admittance of the remaining tenant, but after the exercise by all three of various acts of ownership over the estate, is void, and the lord is entitled to a fine as upon the admittance of all. Bence v. Gilpin, 37 L. J., Ex. 36; L. R. 3 Ex. 76; 17 L. T. 655; 16 W. R. 705.

Surrender — Assignment of Equitable Interest.]—The lord is entitled to a fine in respect only of a transmission of the legal estate in copyholds, and cannot claim a fine in respect of any devolution of the equitable title where the legal estate remains in the person who has been already admitted tenant on the roll. E., as customary heir of M., was in 1848 admitted tenant on the rolls, in respect of copyholds which by M.'s will the trustees thereof were directed to sell. The trustees contracted to sell the copyholds to A., but before completion A. was married to X. In 1849 the copyholds were conveyed to the trustees of A.'s marriage settlement. E. joined in the conveyance and covenanted to surrender to the uses of the settlement, and in pursuance of his covenant surrendered in 1850 to such uses as the trustees of the settlement should appoint. Upon the death of X., A. became absolutely entitled to the copyholds, and by deed of 1853, which recited incorrectly that no surrender had been made by E., the trustees of the settlement granted, bargained, and sold the copyholds to A., and E. joined in this deed and covenanted to surrender to the use of A. The surrender was not acted upon, and by a settlement of 1854 on the second marriage of A. she purported to assign her equitable interest in the copyholds to E., F., and G. on trust for sale. A. died in 1856, leaving E., who had remained tenant on the rolls, her customary heir. E. survived F. and G., leaving executors on whom, under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 30, his estate in the copyholds devolved; and they had been admitted. Three fines were claimed by the lord; 1. In respect of the quasi admittance of A.; 2. In respect of the quasi admittance of E., her customary heir; 3. In respect of the legal estate which devolved upon E.'s executors:—Held, that the deed of 1853 was a mere assignment of the equitable interest in the copyholds to A., and could not be construed as operating by appointment to transfer the legal estate from E. to A.; and accordingly that as the legal estate of E., the tenant on the roll, remained unaffected by the equitable devolutions of title, the only fine payable was in respect of the admittance of the statutory heirs of E.:—Held, also, that a covenant for value to surrender, though binding as between surrenderor and surrenderee, cannot be enforced by the lord, so as to enable him to compel a new admittance and a fine in respect thereof. Hall v. Bromley, 56 L. J., Ch. 722; 35 Ch. D. 642; 56 L. T. 683; 35 W. R. 659—C. A.

Death pending Proceedings to Enfranchise.]—A copyhold tenant died after proceedings instituted by him for a compulsory enfranchisement under the Copyhold Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 94), and before the confirmation of the award by the commissioners:—Held, that the lord was entitled to have a new tenant on the roll and to a fine on his admittance. Myers v. Hodgson, 45 L. J., C. P. 603; 1 C. P. D. 609; 34 L. T. 881; 24 W. R. 827.

Held, also, that the proceedings did not abate by the death of the first tenant. Ib.

Covenant to Assure.]—A covenant to surrender a copyhold to a purchaser, and to make and do all acts, deeds, &c., for the perfect surrendering and assuring the premises at the costs and charges of the seller, is not broken by non-payment of the fine to the lord on the admission of the purchaser; for the title is perfected by the admittance of the tenant, and the fine is not due till after the admittance. Graham v. Sime, 1 East, 632; 6 R. R. 356.

—— To Assign.]—A covenant by a copyholder with a stranger to assign and surrender his copyhold to him, which covenant is afterwards presented by the homage, does not give the lord any right to a fine. Rex v. Hendon, 2 Term Rep. 484; 1 R. R. 527. And see Garland v. Jekyll, 2 Bing. 273; 9 Moore, C. P. 502; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 227; 27 R. R. 630.

Under Lands Clauses Act.]—A lord, entitled by custom to fines on surrender and admittance to copyholds, is not entitled to the payment of any fine upon the execution of a conveyance by a copyholder to a company, under the Lands Clauses Act, 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 95, or upon the enrolment of such conveyance; nor to any compensation for the loss thereof. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. L. & S.-W. Ry., 14 C. B. 743; 2 C. L. R. 1797; 23 L. J., C. P. 177; 18 Jur. 911; 2 W. R. 560.

—— On Enfranchisement.]—Where copyhold lands are taken by a railway company, such fines for admittance as would, upon a compulsory enfranchisement under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, s. 6, be payable by the tenants requiring enfranchisement, are not claimable by the lord against the company. Wilson, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 191; 7 L. T. 772; 11 W. R. 294.

And see ENFRANCHISEMENT, infra.

On Renewal of Leases.]—A custom to renew copyholds for lives can only be on payment of certain fines. Wharton v. King, 3 Anst. 659. S. P., Abergavenny (Lord) v. Thomas, 3 Anst. 668, n.; 4 R. R. 833.

Equitable Jurisdiction over.]—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to direct a fine in respect of copyholds to which an infant has become entitled as customary heir of an intestate to be raised by a mortgage of the copyholds. Harbroe v. Combes, 43 L. J., Ch. 336.

Right of Steward to Receive.]—See STEWARD, infra.

Action for.]—Indebitatus assumpsit lies for copyhold tolls and fines. Wakefield v. Hunt, 2 Dougl. 727.

7. FORFEITURE.

Seizure Quousque—Pro defectu.]—Although the lord of the manor proceeds in the first instance on his right to enter and seize quousque pro defectu tenentis, if that be answered, he may nevertheless recover on a right of entry and seizure quousque the fine is satisfied. Doe d. Twining v. Muscott, 12 M. & W. 832; 14 L. J., Ex. 185.

The right of entry quousque is not affected by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 9. Ib.

A lord cannot seize a copyhold estate, as forfeited pro defectu tenentis, without a custom. Doe d. Tarrant v. Hellier, 3 Term Rep. 162; 1 R. R. 680.

If one of several co-heirs of a copyholder is a feme covert at the time of the ancestor's death, and the lord seizes the whole estate (in default of the heir's not coming in to be admitted after three proclamations), without first appointing an attorney or a guardian for the feme covert, according to 9 Geo. 1, c. 29, a seizure of the whole estate is irregular, though not known to the lord that one of the heirs is a feme covert. Ib.

A forfeiture of a copyhold estate can only be taken advantage of by him who is lord at the time of the forfeiture, except where the act of forfeiture destroys the estate. Ib.

If copyholders do not come in to be admitted, after proclamations, on so many court days, the lord may seize their lands. Clayton v. Cookes, 2 Atk. 449.

If the tenants be infants, the statute 9 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 1, shows the method how to proceed.

—— In what Right.]—A lord may seize copyhold land quousque, in virtue of a right which accrued to the preceding lord, on default of the heir's coming in to be admitted; and that although he is the devisee, and not the heir of the preceding lord; but to entitle the lord to make such seizure, there must be three proclamations made, at three consecutive courts. Doe d. Bover v. Truman, 1 B. & Ad. 736; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 119.

—— Implied Admittance—Statute of Limitations.]—The persons entitled to be tenants of a manor paid quit rents for over twenty years, though they had not been formally admitted. On proof that the money was paid as quit rents and so received by the lord with the knowledge of the death of the preceding tenant, it was held that there had been an admittance in law, by necessary implication, so as to bar the lord's right to seize quousque. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Parr, 63 L. J., Q. B. 784; [1894] 2 Q. B. 420; 9 R. 542; 71 L. T. 65; 42 W. R. 561—C. A.

The right to seize quousque does not accrue until the lord has with due notice or proclamation called upon the tenant to come in and the latter has refused; the Statute of Limitations runs only from such refusal. Ib.

And see Beighton v. Beighton, 64 L. J., Ch. 796; 13 R. 743; 73 L. T. 86; 43 W. R. 685.

The lord is barred by the Statute of Limitations from entering for a forfeiture after twenty years. Whitton v. Peacock, 3 Myl. & K. 325.

—— Against Heir—Jus tertii.]—The heir of copyhold lands not appearing on proclamations, the lord seized quousque; afterwards the heir claimed, and, the lord declining to admit him, on the supposition that another party had obtained title, it was ordered by the court by consent of the heir and lord (no other party appearing), that an ejectment should be brought to try the right, the heir being lessor of the plaintiff, and the lord defendant on the trial. The heir proved title, and the defendant put in a will of the ancestor, devising the lands to the London Annuity Society. No further evidence being given for the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, for that the lord, though he had seized quousque, could not hold against the heir on the mere proof of a devise to parties who had not claimed admittance, and of whom nothing was known. Doe d. Le Keux v. Harrison, 6 Q. B. 631; 14 L. J., Q. B. 77; 9 Jur. 104.

Waste.]—On a mandamus to the lord to admit trustees of a building society, interested as mortgagees, the return setting up a forfeiture for permissive waste, but the tenement having since been rebuilt:—Held, that the question was, whether the lord had a right to seize, and it was left to the jury whether, when the tenant who had mortgaged was admitted, the premises were in such a ruinous state as not to be fairly repair-able; or whether he had delayed repairing for an unreasonable time. Reg. v. Dare, 2 F. & F. 355.

A lord may enter for waste committed by a copyholder for life, though there is an intermediate estate in remainder between the estate of copyholder for life and the lord's reversion. Doe d. Foulkes v. Clements, 2 M. & S. 68; 14 R. R. 590.

If in ejectment by a lord against a copyholder, for a forfeiture by waste, the jury find there has been no damage, there is no waste and no forfeiture. Doe d. Grubb v. Burlington (Earl), 2 N. & M. 534; 5 B. & Ad. 507; 3 L. J., K. B. 26.

Forfeiture of copyhold for waste during minority. Litton's Case, Cary, 6.

Copyholder in fenny lands may be entitled to dig up the lord's soil for turf. Ely (Dean) v. Warren, 2 Atk. 189.

Semble, that the summoning a copyholder known to be in India to attend a court baron in a fortnight is an inequitable act whereon to found a forfeiture by the copyholder. Andrews v. Hulse. 4 K. & J. 372; 27 L. J., Ch. 655; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 581; 6 W. R. 508.

Relief in Equity.]—The Court of Chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law over copyholds. Ib.

The jurisdiction can be exercised in favour of a copyholder as against the lord, and is not limited to compelling the lord to do right as between two persons claiming to be copyholders. Ib.

The circumstance of the copyhold lands being subject to a demise by the copyholder is such a circumstance as renders it the more proper course to seek relief in equity. Ib.

In suits by creditors and legatees a receiver was appointed of the rents and profits of real estate, part of which was copyhold. The death of the last tenant having been duly presented at the court baron of the manor, proclamations were made for the next tenant to come in and be admitted, and no person appearing, the bailiff of the manor was ordered to seize the lands quousque. Declaration in ejectment at the suit of the lord was afterwards served on the terre-tenant; but on the motion of the receiver, the lord was restrained by injunction from prosecuting the action. Evelyn v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 472.

The court would not, upon an interlocutory application at the suit of a copyhold tenant, in a bill to establish certain customs disputed by the lord, restrain the lord from prosecuting his legal rights against one of such tenants in respect of an alleged forfeiture. Sefton (Lord) v. Salisbury (Lord), 7 W. R. 272.

No relief will be given against a voluntary forfeiture of copyhold. Peachy v. Somerset (Duke), 1 Str. 447.

The Court of Equity will not assist a copyholder against a forfeiture which is found such at law, unless in cases where a compensation can be made. S. C., Pre. Ch. 568.

A copyhold is forfeited for not repairing; quære, whether equity will relieve. Cox v. Higford, 2 Vern. 664.

Mortgagee of a copyhold may pull down ruinous houses, and build better to prevent a forfeiture. Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 483.

There are many acts which may be void as against another, and yet a forfeiture as to the person; as a lease made by a copyhold tenant is certainly void as against the lord, and yet is a forfeiture as to himself. Smith v. Packhurst, 3 Atk. 141.

Plaintiff sold defendant copyhold estate of 16*l.* per annum value (on which was timber of 150*l.* value) for 630*l.*, and covenanted to surrender on or before Michaelmas then next. Defendant paid 10*l.* earnest, entered on premises and cut down timber, stocked land, and acted as owner. On bill for specific performance of covenants, plaintiff proved he gave notice that he would surrender next court day, which does not appear to have been before Michaelmas, and attended accordingly. On defendant's part it was proved that he was disordered in his senses; and though there be proof of timber's value, yet, as no custom is alleged of tenants having power to cut it down, it must be according to common law, by which tenant has no power over it, and therefore a plain imposition. Lord Chancellor was of opinion that it was a great over-value, and that his cutting down timber was a proof of his folly, being a direct forfeiture, but said it is a matter merely at law. If surrender had been made, action would have lain at law. Bill dismissed. Edwards v. Heather, Select Ca. Ch. 3.

A., having two copyholds, held of the manor of B., cuts timber on one and employs it in repairing the other; after a verdict on an ejectment by the lord for the forfeiture, A. brings in a bill and is relieved, but ordered to pay costs at law and in equity. Nash v. Derby, 2 Vern. 537. And see Durham (Bishop) v. Rippon, 4 L. J. (O S.) Ch. 32.

Compulsory Sale—Against Infant.]—The 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 9, enacting that no infant shall forfeit copyhold land for his neglect or refusal to be admitted, does not prevent the lord from seizing quousque. Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 9 Q. B. 469; 5 Railw. Cas. 34; 16 L. J., Q. B. 107; 11 Jur. 429—Ex. Ch. See S. C., in the House of Lords, 3 H. L. Cas. 794; 17 Jur. 73.

A canal company was authorised by statute to purchase land on voluntary or compulsory sale by the persons interested (at prices to be agreed upon or ascertained by commissioners or a jury), and a form of conveyance was prescribed purporting that the party granted all his "right, title and interest to and in the same, and every part thereof, to hold to the company for ever." The company was authorised to enter upon payment of the price or tender, and was made liable to render compensation for damage done by their works, if claimed within six months. A copyholder in fee executed a conveyance in the statutory form to the company, who paid him the price and entered:—Held, that the conveyance passed only such interest as the copyholder could convey without the lord, and that on the copyholder's death, no other person having been admitted, the lord might seize quousque for want of a tenant, and maintain ejectment and an action for mesne profits against the company. Ib.

By Conviction for Felony.]—There cannot be a forfeiture of copyhold by a conviction of felony before attainder, unless there is a special custom in the manor to the contrary. Rex v. Willes, 3 B. & Ald. 510.

Where there is a remainder to the use of one who is convicted of felony and hanged before admittance, the lands were not forfeited to the lord, but descended to the heir of the surrenderor. Roe d. Jeffreys v. Hicks, 2 Wils. K. B. 13.

A copyholder in fee surrendered to the use of another person, and afterwards, and before the admittance of the surrenderee, was convicted of simple felony: there being a custom in the manor that any tenant of customary tenements, who should commit and be convicted of felony, should forfeit his tenements to the lord:—Held, that the surrenderor, before admittance, was still tenant for the purpose of forfeiture, and that his estate was forfeited to the lord, and the surrenderee not entitled to be admitted. Rex v. Mildmay, 5 B. & Ad. 254; 2 N. & M. 778.

Where a copyholder was convicted of a capital felony, but pardoned upon condition of remaining two years in prison, and the lord did not do any act towards securing the copyhold:—Held, that, at the expiration of the two years, the copyholder might maintain an ejectment for the land against one who had ousted him, inasmuch as the pardon restored his competency, and the estate would not vest in the lord without any act done by him. Doe d. Evans v. Evans, 5 B. & C. 584; 8 D. & R. 399; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 322.

Estoppel of Tenant.]—A copyholder who has been admitted to a tenement, and done fealty to the lord, is estopped, in an action by the latter for a forfeiture, from showing that the legal estate was not in the lord at the time of admittance. Doe d. Nepean v. Budden, 1 D. & R. 243; 5 B. & Ald. 626; 24 R. R. 504.

Forfeiture for Cutting Timber.]—See cases, supra, as to TIMBER.

8. ESCHEAT.

Crown.]—Copyhold cannot escheat to the crown. Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. 169; 2 R. R. 185.

Equitable Estate.]—Before the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (17 & 48 Vict. c. 71), there could be no escheat of an equitable estate. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 123; 1 Eden, 177.

Mortgaged Estate.]—Where a copyhold was surrendered to a mortgagee and his heirs, and no condition was expressed in the surrender, and the mortgagee died intestate and without an heir:—Held, that the lord was entitled to it as an escheat. Att.-Gen. v. Leeds, 2 Myl. & K. 343.

The lord, taking by escheat on the death of a tenant without heirs the fee simple of lands holden of the manor, but subject to a demise by way of mortgage for a term of years, created by the tenant, is entitled in equity, as against the mortgagee, to redeem the term. Downe (Viscount) v. Morris, 3 Hare, 394; 13 L. J., Ch. 337; 8 Jur. 486.

A. B. makes a mortgage in fee, and dies without heirs:—Held, that the equity of redemption does not escheat, but belongs to the mortgagee, subject to the debts. Beale v. Symonds, 16 Beav. 406; 22 L. J., Ch. 708; 1 W. R. 137.

Debts.]—The lord takes an escheat subject to the payment of debts. Evans v. Brown, 5 Beav. 114; 11 L. J., Ch. 349; 6 Jur. 380. S. P., Hughes v. Wells, 9 Hare, 749; 16 Jur. 927.

Devise Subject to Charity.]—Devise of copyhold land in fee, on condition to pay 1,000*l.* to charity. Testator having left no next of kin, nor any customary heir, and gift of charity being void, devisee held entitled to 1,000*l.*, and not the crown or lord of the manor. Henchman v. Att.-Gen., 3 Myl. & K. 485. Reversing 2 Sim. & S. 498; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 155; 25 R. R. 255.

Trust Estate—Customary Heiress of Devisee of Surviving Trustee.]—A testatrix who died in 1851 devised her copyhold property to a trustee in trust to pay the rents and profits to J. King for life, and after her death to certain charitable purposes which were void under the mortmain acts. The testatrix died without heirs. The trustee named in the will refused the trust, and two trustees were appointed by order of the court in 1853, who were admitted upon the court rolls to hold upon the trusts of the will. One trustee died in 1873, and the surviving trustee, who died in 1877, devised his trust estate to two trustees, neither of whom was admitted to the copyholds. The survivor of these trustees made no devise of his trust estates, and died leaving his youngest daughter, Janet Hawkins, his customary heiress according to the custom of the manor. The tenant for life under the will died in 1883:—Held, that Janet Hawkins who claimed by escheat and under a resulting trust was entitled to be admitted as tenant to the copyhold property for her own benefit as against the lord. Gallard v. Hawkins, 53 L. J., Ch. 834; 27 Ch. D. 298; 51 L. T. 689; 33 W. R. 31.

Where a lord admits a tenant upon the trusts of an indenture referred to in the surrender, he is to be considered as consenting to those trusts, and is bound by them, upon the death of the trustee without an heir. Weaver v. Maule, 2 Russ. & M. 97.

Felony before 1870.]—Upon felony committed by the surrenderor before admittance of the surrenderee, the copyhold escheats to the lord. Rex v. Mildmay, 2 N. & M. 778.

So, although the surrender is by way of mortgage. Ib.

A. covenanted on marriage, that, within a month, he would surrender his copyhold to his wife for life, remainder over, and if he neglected, then that he would leave his wife 500*l.* at his death. The husband made no surrender, but died after the month without assets. Decreed the heir to surrender. Wood v. Pesey, 5 Vin. Abr. 547, pl. 36.

Mother gave bond to son conditioned to surrender copyhold to him, of which she was the heiress:—Held, she became a trustee for son. Alison's Case, 9 Mod. 62.

Upon a voluntary covenant to surrender copyholds, and in the meanwhile to stand possessed of them for trustees for the volunteers, though the covenant to surrender per se cannot be enforced, yet a valid trust is constituted for the volunteers. Steele v. Waller, 28 Beav. 466; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1004; 3 L. T. 74.

A copyhold was devised to trustees for certain persons, who, after the testatrix's death, sold it, and the purchaser was admitted on the surrender of the customary heir:— Held, that although the purchaser had thus obtained both the legal and equitable title, still, to make a good title, there must be a release from the trustees of their bare right to be admitted. Ib.

Bill to have execution of articles for the sale of some copyhold lands to plaintiff, on payment of 538*l.* to defendant R., a guinea being paid in part; and to compel the lord of the manor to admit plaintiff in fee according to the agreement, which was decreed; but there being no tender of a surrender to the lord, and consequently no refusal, he was to have his costs. Sayle v. Reeves, Gilb. 188.

Decree of foreclosure, mortgagor to surrender mortgaged premises, which were copyhold, at expense of mortgagee. Hill v. Price, 9 Dick. 344.

If A., for valuable consideration, undertakes to surrender a copyhold to B., and B., on borrowing money from C., enters into a written agreement with C., that he, B., will surrender the same copyhold to C., by way of mortgage security; A. is not justified in refusing to surrender the copyhold to B., because he, A., has received notice from C. of the agreement between him and B. The surrender by A. to B. does not prejudice, but promotes that agreement. —— v. Walford, 4 Russ. 372.

Bond executed on marriage of obligor, conditioned to settle lands, "if he should become seised in possession," affects copyhold as well as freehold. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swanst. 580.

Covenants for Title.]—A. sold copyholds in fee simple to B., and covenanted to surrender, which he did the next day, and entered into the the usual covenants for title. Shortly afterwards, the copyholds were again sold:—Held, that the covenants for title either ran with the land for the benefit of the second purchaser, or that he was entitled to sue on them in the name of the first. Riddell v. Riddell, 7 Sim. 529; 5 L. J., Ch. 102.

Quære, whether covenants for the title of copyholds run with the land. Ib.

Copyhold lands mortgaged in fee by lease and release as freehold, the customary heir is bound by a covenant by further assurance; but during his infancy the court refused to foreclose, and would go no further than directing the account, and that in default of payment, the plaintiffs should be let into possession, and enjoy till the heir should attain twenty-one, at which time he should surrender, and a day was given to show cause against the decree. Spencer v. Boyes, 4 Ves. 370.

b. Construction.

Same Construction as at Law.]—The same construction takes place in copyholds as in other law conveyances. Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101.

Before admittance, mortgagee may bring bill of foreclosure, and after decree an ejectment for possession of the premises. Ib.

The surrender of copyhold must have the same construction with feoffments at law, and other conveyances, and not as a will; and if the limitations of a copyhold are so framed as that by the rules of law they are void, they must take their fate, and no intention can make them good. Lovell v. Lovell, 3 Atk. 11.

Life Estate.]—Surrender of copyhold to the use of surrenderor for life, remainder to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of the child or children of A., and for want of such issue, to the use of B. Semble, A. takes an estate for life. Widdowson v. Harrington (Earl), 1 J. & W. 532.

Tenant for life of a copyhold sold his estate, and surrendered it, that the lord might admit A. the purchaser; the copyholder in reversion entered, and recovered at law: A. was relieved in equity. Anon., 2 Free. C. C. 118.

Land surrendered to lord is not vested in him as a trustee. George v. ——, Amb. 627.

Effect of surrender, "to the intent, that the lord might regrant it to the surrenderor, or such other person or persons, and for such life or lives, estate or interest, as should be agreed upon between the lord and the surrenderor." Walker v. Abingdon (Earl), 10 L. J., Ch. 289; 5 Jur. 714.

Joint Tenancy.]—A dormant surrender operates as a severance of a joint tenancy, though it is revocable during the lifetime of the surrenderor. Gale v. Gale, 2 Cox, 136.

A dormant surrender of a copyhold (that is, a surrender to A. on condition to perform the will of the surrenderor) will vest an estate in the dormant surrenderee sufficient to support the contingent remainders of the surrenderor's will without the interposition of trustees for the purpose. Ib.

Quære, whether the surrender by a joint tenant to the use of his will would per se effect a severance of the joint tenancy. Edwards v. Champion, 3 De G. M. & G. 202; 23 L. J., Ch. 123. And see Lee, Ex parte, 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 290.

Intended Marriage.]—In consideration of a marriage intended to be had betwixt two copyholders, the man surrenders his copyhold to the use of him and his intended wife, and the survivor of them; and the woman, in like manner, surrenders her copyhold to the like uses: the man dies before any marriage had; the woman enters and enjoys for thirty years. Declared a trust, and a resurrender and account of profits decreed. Hammond v. Hicks, 1 Vern. 434.

Husband and Wife.]—A copyhold was surrendered to the use of husband and wife for their lives, and the life of the longer liver of them, and, from and after the decease of the survivor, to the right heirs of the survivor for ever:—Held, that the husband and wife took a vested estate for their joint lives, as well as for the life of the survivor, with a contingent remainder in fee to such survivor. Doe d. Dormer v. Wilson, 4 B. & Ald. 303; 23 R. R. 275.

A surrender of a copyhold to husband and wife, and the survivor, and after the death of the survivor, to the right heirs of both, vests an immediate fee-simple in the husband and wife by entireties, and the husband cannot alien or devise any part of it, but on his death the whole survives to his wife. Green d. Crew v. King, 2 W. Bl. 1211.

A. purchases copyhold estate, and takes the surrender to himself and his wife and daughter, and their heirs: the husband and wife (as one person) take a moiety by entireties, and the daughter the other moiety: the husband mortgages it and dies: void for the whole, and no relief in equity. Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120; Pre. Ch. 1.

Surrender to the use of C. T. during life, and after his decease to the use of such one or more of his children as he should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the use of his son D. T. and the heirs of his body. C. T. appointed to D. T. for life, and after his death to K. T. and E. T. for life, as tenants in common; and after their respective deaths to the use of grandchildren:—Held, that the latter limitation being void as an excess of the power, the estate limited in the surrender to D. T. and the heirs of his body, was a valid remainder in tail, expectant on the estate for life of K. T. and E. T. as tenants in common. Doe d. Nicholson v. Welford, 12 Ad. & E. 61; 9 L. J., Q. B. 334.

Surrender of a copyhold to the use of baron and feme for their lives, and heirs and assigns of the said baron and feme, and for default of such issue to the right heirs of the surrenderors. This is an estate in fee, and not an entail in the baron and feme; otherwise had it been the case of a will. Idle v. Cook, 1 P. W. 70.

Fee Simple Conditional.]—Copyhold lands, which by custom of manor are incapable of being entailed, are yet capable of such limitations as make them a fee simple conditional. Pullen v. Middleton (Lord), 9 Mod. 483.

Equitable Estate Tail.]—Equitable estate tail in copyhold does not merge by accession of the legal fee. Mercst v. James, 6 Madd. 118.

Assignee of Reversion.]—The surrenderee of a copyhold is an assignee of a reversion within the statute of 32 H. 8, c. 34, and may maintain an action of covenant upon a lease made by his surrenderor, and the defendant in such action cannot protect himself by alleging the invalidity of the lease. Whitton v. Peacock, 3 Myl. & K. 325.

As to construction of a surrender creating a rent. See Spindler v. Wilford, 2 Vern. 16.

"Or" meaning "And."]—In order to effectuate the intention of the parties, the court will construe the word "or" to mean "and," as well in a surrender of copyhold premises as in a will. Wright v. Kemp, 3 Term Rep. 470; 1 R. R. 748.

Similar Names.]—John Lealand surrendered a copyhold in his occupation to the use of Joseph Lealand and John Lealand, his son, for their lives and the life of the survivor; remainder to the heirs of the body of the said John Lealand, son of Joseph L.; remainder to the right heirs of the said John Lealand:—Held, that the ultimate remainder was meant for the right heirs of John the surrenderor, as well because John the surrenderee was before described with the addition of the son of Joseph, as of the manifest futility of giving John the surrenderee an estate in tail, and afterwards a fee in succession. Though, if the construction had been left doubtful, the ultimate remainder would have continued in the surrenderor. Roe d. Hucknall v. Foster, 9 East, 405.

A surrender was made in 1816 to the use of John G., of S., and Elizabeth, his wife, for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them. After the death of the survivor, the property was to be sold, and the proceeds divided among the children or other issue then living of "the said Elizabeth G." and another person. There never was such a person as Elizabeth, the wife of John G., of S., but there was an Elizabeth G., the wife of W. G., of B., a niece of the surrenderor, for whom he had a great regard. The wife of John G., of S., was named Hannah. Upon a conflict of claims between the children of Elizabeth G. and of Hannah G.:—Held, that the surrenderor intended his niece, Elizabeth G., and that her children were entitled to the property. Garner v. Garner, 3 L. T. 396.

Description.]—A steward is not bound to accept a general surrender of tenements without describing particularly what the tenements are, although the proposed surrender refers to a previous surrender, in which there was a description of the tenements. Reg. v. Bishop's Stoke, 8 D. P. C. 608; 4 Jur. 630.

A surrender to the lord, in the absence of any custom to the contrary, should contain an accurate and a specific description of the tenements surrendered, as they have been previously described at the time of admission. Ib.

A copyholder surrendered his copyhold cottage with a croft adjoining, and a common right, belonging to the same, "all which premises (as the surrenderor described them) were then in his own possession;" and on the same day he devised "all his copyhold cottage and premises then in his own possession." In fact, the croft, between which and the cottage and garden there was only a gooseberry hedge, was in the actual occupation of a tenant at the time; yet held, that the whole passed under the description of "all his copyhold cottage and premises;" the words, "then in his own possession," being merely a mistaken description, following the mistake of the surrender, which mentioned the croft with the rest as then being in his possession. Goodright d. Lamb v. Pears, 11 East, 58.

A surrenderee of copyhold premises has a right to have in his admittance a description of the premises corresponding with that in the surrender. Hayward v. Raw, 6 H. & N. 308; 30 L. J., Ex. 178; 4 L. T. 519.

Admissions on the court-rolls of a manor "pro pasturâ bosci et subbosci," and for "the pasture, wood, and underwood of," &c., are sufficient to pass the land. Doe d. Kinglake v. Beviss, 7 C. B. 456; 18 L. J., C. P. 128.

Ancient admissions of a copyholder and those under whom he claims the land, by the description of tres acras patri, may be construed only to carry the prima tonsura, if, in fact, they have enjoyed no more under such admissions, while another has had the after-crop, and has cut the trees and fences, scoured the ditches, repaired the fences, and kept the drains, though the copyholder may have paid all the rates and taxes which was in his own wrong. Stammers v. Dixon, 7 East, 200; 3 Smith, 261; 8 R. R. 612.

A. being tenant of copyhold premises at Clondall, under four several admissions to the use of himself for life and of such person as he should appoint, and in default of appointment, to the use of himself in fee, subject to certain quit-rents, and being seised and possessed of other real estates in Great Britain and Ireland, and of a leasehold estate held under two leases at Blansby, devised his whole real estate in lands in Great Britain or Ireland, to his wife for life, and after her death to be divided between his two nephews and their issue, and in default of such issue, to be divided between the children of his nieces; and by a codicil reciting that he had ordered all his estate in Great Britain and Ireland, after the decease of his nephews without issue, to be divided, he revoked the same; and before that division devised his whole real estate to B. and his heirs male, and devised his two leases with the quit-rents of his lands in Clondall and in Blansby to B. after his wife's decease:—Held, that B., after the wife's death, took a fee in the copyhold premises. Cuthbert v. Lempriere, 3 M. & S. 139.

Rent "Compounded for."]—Where there is a grant of a particular thing once sufficiently ascertained by some circumstance belonging to it, the addition of an allegation, mistaken or false, respecting it, will not frustrate the grant; but where a grant is in general terms, there the addition of a particular circumstance will operate by way of restriction and modification of such grant: therefore, where one having customary tenements, compounded and uncompounded, surrendered to the use of his will "all and singular the lands, tenements, &c., whatsoever, in the manor which he held of the lord by copy of court-roll, in whose tenure or occupation soever the same were, being of the yearly rent to the lord in the whole of 4*l*. 10*s*. 8½*d*., and compounded for":—Held, that the words, "and compounded for," restrained the operation of the surrender to that description of copyholds then belonging to the surrenderor. And that the words, "being of the yearly rent, &c., of 4*l*. 10*s*. 8½*d*.," which were not referable to any actual amount of his rents, either compounded or uncompounded, though much nearer to the whole than to the compounded only, could not qualify or impugn that restriction. Roe d. Conolly v. Vernon, 5 East, 51; 1 Smith, 318.

Surrender to Uses.]—A surrender to uses, reserving a power of revoking them, may be maintained. Boddington v. Abernethy, 5 B. & C. 776; 8 D. & R. 626; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 181.

Surrender not Voluntary.]—A. surrenders the reversion in fee of copyhold lands to his son to lessen the fine he must have paid in case it had come to him by descent; after his son's treaty of marriage, the father tells the wife's friends that this copyhold was so settled, in consideration of which, and of some leasehold lands, a marriage was had and 2,000*l*. portion paid: this surrender of the copyhold held not to be voluntary or fraudulent. Kirk v. Clarke, Pre. Ch. 276.

Voluntary Conveyance.]—An assignment of personal property for a consideration clearly inadequate is fraudulent as against creditors, under the 13th Eliz. But copyholds not being naturally subject to debts, a conveyance of them could not be fraudulent against creditors. Mathews v. Feaver, 1 Cox, 278; 1 R. R. 39.

Mortgages.]—Copyholds being mortgaged together with freeholds, mortgagee could not, by any act of his, defeat creditors having only the freehold to resort to. Copyhold estate not assets for specialty debts to the Crown. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382, 393; 7 R. R. 86.

A mortgagee of a copyhold could not tack a judgment to his mortgage, because no judgment could before 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 affect that estate. Cannon v. Pack, 6 Vin. 222, pl. 6; 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 226, pl. 6.

The equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee of copyholds is made legal assets by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. Burrell, In re, Burrell v. Smith, 39 L. J., Ch. 544; L. R. 9 Eq. 443; 22 L. T. 263.

Payment of creditors out of a copyhold forfeited by mortgage. Anon., Cary, 7.

Charge of Debts.]—The Act 1 Will. 4, c. 47, enabling a tenant for life under a will to sell lands for payment of the debts of any testator whose estate "by law shall be liable to the payment of any of his debts" is prospective, and now extends to copyholds, although they were not liable to the payment of debts when the act passed. Branch v. Browne, 2 De G. & Sm. 299; 17 L. J., Ch. 435; 12 Jur. 768.

Introductory words, referable to all testator's worldly estate, amounting to a charge, copyhold lands are liable as well as freehold. In this case there was also a copyhold which had not been surrendered, this was also declared liable. Coombes v. Gibson, 1 Bro. C. C. 273. S. P., Kentish v. Kentish, 3 Bro. C. C. 257.

Where a testator, having both freehold and copyhold estates, charges his real estate with payment of his debts, if he has surrendered the copyhold to the use of his will, the freehold and copyhold shall be applied ratably; but if he has not surrendered the copyhold, it shall not be applied until the freehold is exhausted. Growcock v. Smith, 2 Cox, 397.

Under a devise, that all testator's debts "should be first paid and satisfied":—Held, that a customary estate surrendered in trust for several persons, and for the use of such as the testator should appoint, was subject to the testator's debts; the first disposition running over all. Godolphin v. Penneck, 2 Ves. sen. 271. S. P., Ronalds v. Feltham, Turn. & R. 418.

Devise of all the testator's "real" and personal estate, "subject to debts;" affects copyhold lands unsurrendered for the benefit of the creditors, there being no freehold lands; if there had been, it would have been otherwise. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. sen. 215; 1 Dick, 132.

By a marriage settlement, a freehold estate was settled on husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the first, &c., son in tail, remainder to trustees for 500 years to raise portions for daughters, remainders over; covenant from the husband to settle his copyhold estate, to the same uses. A surrender was made, but no term, was limited. The freehold estate not being sufficient to raise the daughters' portions; decreed the copyhold estate should be charged, and liable to raise the portions. Shouldham v. Shouldham, 2 Vern. 321.

Quære, whether copyhold lands are subject to sequestration. Carmarthen (Marquis) v. Hawson, 3 Swanst. 294.

c. Operation.

Barred by Lapse of Time.]—A suit to compel the lord to admit a tenant according to the custom of the manor is a suit to recover land within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3. Walters v. Webb, 39 L. J., Ch. 677; L. R. 5 Ch. 531; 18 W. R. 587.

When the lord has seized quousque for non-payment of fines, the right of the tenant to recover the land cannot be deemed to have first accrued at the time when he pays or tenders the fines. Ib.

Copyhold lands, of which W.'s ancestor was tenant, were seized by the lord quousque for non-payment of fines:—Held, that after twenty years' discontinuance of possession W. was barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, from bringing a suit to compel the lord to admit him as tenant. Ib. S. P., Rex v. Agarsdley, 5 D. P. C. 19; Phillips, Ex parte, 1 H. & W. 660.

Legality of Lord's Title.]—The legality of the title of the lord or steward who admits a copyholder is immaterial, provided the admission is in pursuance of a surrender, and not of a voluntary grant from the lord. Doe d. Burgess v. Thompson, 1 N. & P. 215; 5 A. & E. 532; 2 H. & W. 451; 6 L. J., K. B. 57.

Relation back to Surrender.]—The title to copyhold lands relates back from the time of the admittance to the surrender as against all persons but the lord, so that the surrenderee may recover in ejectment against the surrenderor on a demise laid between the times of surrender and admittance. Holdfast d. Woollams v. Clapham, 4 Burr. 1952; 1 Term Rep. 600; 1 R. R. 309. S. P., Smith v. Adams, 18 Beav. 499; 23 L. J., Ch. 525; 2 Eq. Rep. 517; 2 W. R. 381. See 5 De G., M. & G. 712; 24 L. J., Ch. 258; 18 Jur. 968; 2 W. R. 698.

An admittance of the surrenderee before trial will maintain ejectment brought by him before admittance, upon a demise laid between the time of surrender and admittance. Doe d. Bennington v. Hall, 16 East, 208. And see King v. Turner, 1 Myl. & K. 456; 2 L. J., Ch. 188.

A devisee of a copyhold or customary estate, which had been surrendered to the use of the will, having died before admittance, her devisee, though afterwards admitted, cannot recover in ejectment; for his admittance has no relation to the last legal surrender, but the legal title remains in the heir of the surrenderor. Doe d. Vernon v. Vernon, 7 East, 8; 3 Smith, 6.

The customary heir of a copyhold tenement cannot maintain trespass without entry, but after entry there is a relation back to the actual title, as against a wrongdoer, and he may maintain an action for trespasses committed prior to his entry. Barnett v. Guildford (Earl), 11 Ex. 19; 24 L. J., Ex. 281; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1142; 3 W. R. 406.

Admittance on Trusts.]—Where a lord admits a tenant upon the trusts of an indenture referred to in the surrender, he is to be considered as consenting to those trusts, and is bound by them upon the death of the trustee without an heir. Weaver v. Maule, 2 Russ. & M. 97.

Rights of Administrator.]—One who is admitted tenant, upon a claim as an administrator de bonis non to the grantee of a copyhold pur autre vie, having no title in such character, cannot recover in ejectment by virtue of such admission, as upon a new and substantive grant of the lord. Zouche d. Forse v. Forse, 7 East, 186; 3 Smith, 191.

Remaindermen.]—Devisees of contingent remainders in a copyhold, not being in the seisin, cannot make a surrender of their interest; nor will such a surrender operate by estoppel against the parties or their heirs. Doe d. Blacksell v. Tomkins, 11 East, 185; 10 R. R. 467. And see Doe d. Lushington v. Landaff, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 491; 9 R. R. 682.

A., a copyholder for life, remainder to B., surrendered his own and B.'s estate (over which latter he had no control, and by which he let in B.'s remainder), and took a new copy for the lives of himself, C. and B. successively; and on A.'s death, after twenty years had run against B., B. entered on the possession then vacant:—Held, that as against C., who had no possession and no title, B. might defend his legal title, coupled with possession, in ejectment, however twenty years' adverse possession by A. might have barred B.'s possessory right as against him, or might have disabled B., if he had continued out of possession, from recovering in ejectment. Doe d. Burrough v. Reade, 8 East, 353.

Heir-Apparent.]—If the heir-apparent of a copyholder in fee surrenders in the lifetime of his ancestor, and survives him, the heir of such surrenderor is not estopped by that surrender of his ancestor from claiming against the surrenderee. Goodtitle d. Faulkner v. Morse, 3 Term Rep. 365; 1 R. R. 719.

To Uses of Will.]—A surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a will only operates on the estate which the surrenderor has at the time of the surrender. Doe d. Ibbot v. Cowling, 6 Term Rep. 63. And see Prankerd v. Prankerd, 1 Sim. & S. 1.

The effect of the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3, is to enable a copyholder to devise his estate in every case, dispensing with a surrender to the use of the will, but leaving the estate in the customary heir till the admittance of the devisee. Garland v. Mead, 40 L. J., Q. B. 179; L. R. 6 Q. B. 441; 24 L. T. 421; 19 W. R. 1156.

Where, therefore, a copyholder devised his estate to two trustees, appointing them guardians of his customary heir who was an infant, and the devisee was entered on the court-rolls, and after proclamations the trustees, who had not disclaimed the devise, did not come in to be admitted, but tendered the infant heir for admittance, and the lord refused to admit him on the ground of the devise:—Held, that the lord could not seize quousque for want of a tenant. Ib.

A copyholder has a right to surrender to the use of his will, though there is no instance of it upon the records of the manor. Church v. Mundy, 15 Ves. 403.

Bl. 1046.

—— Relief against Merger.]—A tenant who by the custom of a manor had no power of devising his estate, except by creating two long terms therein, which were devisable, granted such terms to A., who was his tenant from year to year, and devised the estate. The Court of King's Bench having decided that the terms had merged in the estate from year to year:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, on demurrer, that the devisee had no equity against the customary heir, to be relieved against the merger, though effected by mistake. Woodman v. Tilby, 4 L. J., Ch. 169.

And see 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3, repealing 55 Geo. 3, c. 192.

—— Several Devisees.]—Where a copyhold surrendered to the use of a will was devised to six persons, of whom one offered to be admitted, but the lord refused to admit him:—Held, that the lord ought to have admitted him, and could not seize quousque. Roe d. Ashton v. Hutton, 2 Wils. K. B. 162.

—— Want of Surrender Supplied—In Favour of Relations.]—The want of a surrender of copyhold estate to the use of the will was supplied in favour of a widow, against co-heiresses, daughters of the devisor, married, and infant granddaughters by deceased daughters. The Lord Chancellor was of opinion, that in supplying a surrender the court was to look only to the object, not to the circumstances of the parties, as whether the heir has a provision or not. Hills v. Downton, 5 Ves. 557.

The want of surrender supplied for a widow against collateral heir, viz., a sister, whether provided for or not. As to a son, quære. Fielding v. Winwood, 16 Ves. 90.

Feme covert (heiress-at-law) and her husband being drawn in to enter into articles for supplying the defect of a surrender of copyholds to the use of a will, whereby they were devised to the plaintiff; the plaintiff not allowed to carry these articles into execution, in respect of the fraud, and against feme covert. Preston v. Wasey, Pre. Ch. 76.

A surrender supplied for a limited interest (a wife for life), though the devisees over (nephews and nieces) were not entitled to have it supplied for them. Marston v. Gowan, 3 Bro. C. C. 170.

Testator seised of freehold and copyhold estates in certain counties devised all his lands and hereditaments in those counties to his wife for life, remainder to his first and second sons in tail, remainder to his wife in fee, the court would not supply the want of a surrender, there being freehold estates to answer the words of the devise. Milbourne v. Milbourne, 1 Cox, 247; 2 Bro. C. C. 64.

A., having made a surrender of copyhold, left it in the hands of tenant, who took it in order to be presented; A. afterwards devised the estate to his children, but the tenant neglected to present the surrender:—Held, that the surrender ought to be made good, and decreed that estate should be enjoyed according to the will. Lloyd v. Burton, 2 Bro. P. C. 281.

It made no difference in supplying a surrender, that the custom required a surrender to trustees to the uses of the will, or that the only provision was an annuity issuing out of the copyhold itself. Braddick v. Mattock, 6 Madd. 361.

Where the owner of a freehold and copyhold estate (the latter of which could not be devised, but by conveyance to a trustee, and declaring uses by will), devised to his youngest son all his messuages and tenements, the court would not supply a surrender, or put the heir to election, though the devise was to a younger child. Hodgson v. Merest, 9 Price, 556.

Surrender not supplied for a child under a devise in general terms, not mentioning copyhold estate, and not executed to pass the freehold. Sampson v. Sampson, 2 V. & B. 337.

Surrender not supplied for a child against a grandchild unprovided for. Want of surrender supplied in the case of a deed, as well as a will, but upon the same principle as in the case of a will, or the execution of a power, i.e., for and against the same person. Rogers v. Marshall, 17 Ves. 294.

Surrender supplied for younger children, the heir having a provision under the will or otherwise, without regard to the amount. Garn v. Garn, 16 Ves. 268. S. P., Macey v. Shurmer, 1 Atk. 389; Pike v. White, 3 Bro. C. C. 286; Hardham v. Roberts, 1 Vern. 132.

Where a testator devised his copyhold, being borough English, to his eldest son, and houses to his youngest son, the houses being soon afterwards burnt, and never having been entered upon by the younger son, the court would not supply the want of a surrender. Cooper v. Cooper, 2 Vern. 265.

A testator devised all his cottages, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whatsoever, to his daughter B., and the heirs of her body, to enter upon at the age of twenty-one. B. married the plaintiff, and upon a bill to have the defect of surrender supplied and transferred, it was held, that the copyhold passed to B. by the general words. Andrews v. Waller, 6 Vin. Abr. 287, pl. 12.

Equity would supply the want of a surrender as well for an elder son as a younger, in case of gavelkind copyhold, if it appeared to be the intent of the will that the eldest son shall have the copyhold, paying a legacy thereout to the younger son. Bradley v. Bradley, 2 Vern. 163.

Defective surrender of copyhold could not be supplied for grandchildren. Perry v. Whitehead, 6 Ves. 544.

Equity would not supply the want of a surrender in behalf of a natural child. Fursaker v. Robinson, Pre. Ch. 475; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 139. But if it had a legacy from the father, payable at twenty-one, would allow maintenance. Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 12.

Testator, by his will, taking notice that he had not surrendered copyhold estates which he devised, but directing his son to convey them, and devising to the son other estates, though the copy-holds were not devisable by custom, the surrenders were decreed to be made. Wardell v. Wardell, 3 Bro. C. C. 116.

Quære whether, after forty years' possession of a copyhold under a will, a surrender to the use of the will should not be presumed. Lyford v. Coward, 1 Vern. 195; 2 Ch. Ca. 150.

Devise in general terms of all the residue, and remainder of real and personal estate, to nephews and nieces, not being for creditors, wife, or children, was not sufficient to raise a case of election, or for supplying the want of surrender of copyhold land, contiguous and intermixed with freehold against the heir. Judd v. Pratt, 15 Ves. 390.

A testator being entitled in reversion to copyholds and in possession to freeholds by his will in 1804, devised his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates, to his wife for life, with remainder to his three younger children. In 1807 he made another will, commencing with the words, "This is the last will and testament," and thereby he gave all his real and personal estates to his wife for life, and after her death, all his "property" and effects to all his children equally, except his eldest son. The testator died in 1807. In 1851 the reversion of the copyholds fell into possession: —Held, that the court would, if necessary, supply a surrender in favour of the objects to whom the first will expressly devised the copyholds. Freeman v. Freeman, Kay, 479. Affirmed, 23 L. J., Ch. 838; 2 W. R. 658.

Held, also, that, as there was freehold property upon which the general devise in the second will could operate, there was no ground for deciding that it revoked the intended devise of the copyholds by the former will. Ib.

Quære, whether, in the absence of a special custom, it was necessary to surrender a reversion or remainder in copyholds to the use of a will. Ib.

A will, so called, of copyholds, does not operate strictly as a devise, but rather as a designation of the person to take under the previous surrender; analogous, in some respects, to the appointment of a use under a power created by deed. Ib.

A father is a judge of the quantum, and also of the time when his daughter's provision shall take place; and a limitation to a daughter, on failure of issue male of an eldest son or sons, is not too remote, but shall be considered as a provision. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 191.

A father limited a copyhold estate to a first son in tail, and to a second, third, fourth, and fifth son; but not having surrendered it, the second son brought his bill to have the want of the surrender supplied. The court decreed it to all the sons, in the same order that the father left it; for where it did not introduce a hardship, or leave other children in distress, the court would always decree the provision made for one child to be as extensive as he intended. Ib.

Construction of a residuary devise as including under the general words "estate and effects" a copyhold, not surrendered in favour of a younger son, subject to debts, the will reciting that the eldest son was provided for, and no freehold estate. Pennington v. Pennington, 1 V. & B. 406.

A devise of "all my real estate" would carry copyhold surrendered, and, if no freehold, (for favoured objects) copyhold not surrendered. Wentworth v. Cox, 6 Madd. 363.

Customary heir was bound to elect, claiming copyhold not duly surrendered to use of will. Ib.

Copyholds held to pass under a will by the words "moneys, property, and effects," aided by the context. Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338.

Devise of a house as leasehold, which afterwards turned out to be partly leasehold and partly copyhold:—Held, to be a valid gift of the whole of the property. Bush v. Culloway, 7 W. R. 638.

—— In Favour of Creditors.]—Defect in surrender of copyhold to use of will supplied in favour of creditors. Ithell v. Beane, Dick. 132; 1 Ves. sen. 215.

If copyhold estate was devised for debts. Holmes v. Coghill, 12 Ves. 216; 8 R. R. 323. S. P., Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136.

Surrender supplied for creditors, though there was freehold specifically devised by the same will. Bixby v. Exley, 2 Bro. C. C. 325; Dick. 698.

Where a man devised his real estate to be sold to pay debts and pecuniary legacies, and subject to his debts and legacies devised his personal estate to his sister, the court would not supply the defect of a surrender of the copyhold to the use of the wife, if the other estates sufficed to pay the debts. Mallabar v. Mallabar, Forrest, 78. S. P., Drake v. Robinson, 1 P. Wms. 443.

Equity would supply the want of a surrender of a copyhold when it was devised for the provision for younger children, or in favour of creditors, or a purchaser. Bradley v. Bradley, 2 Vern. 163.

—— In favour of Charity.]—Surrender of a copyhold not supplied to substantiate a devise to a charity, where there were prior limitations to strangers. Att.-Gen. v. Downing, Amb. 571.

Tenant for Life.] — The admittance of a tenant for life upon a surrender to the use of a will, enures as to the admittance of those in remainder, so as to vest the estate in them. Smith v. Glasscock, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 357; 27 L. J., C. P. 192; 6 W. R. 487.

Where a testator devised a copyhold to his wife for life, and at her death, equal shares to her six children as tenants in common, and the widow after his death was admitted; and after the death of three of the children, the eldest son got himself admitted after proclamation to the whole estate, as heir, but it appeared that a younger brother was alive, and there was no evidence of the decease of one of the sisters: —Held, that the eldest son could not maintain ejectment for more than four-sixths of the whole estate. Ib.

Feme Covert.]—Feme covert cannot, at law, make will of copyhold lands surrendered by her before marriage to the use of her will; nor can she declare the use of the surrender. George d. Thornbury v. ——, Amb. 627.

Such a surrender becomes void or suspended by marriage. Ib.

A custom for feme sole to bar without surrender and private examination is bad. Ib.

A feme covert having power, under articles of separation, to dispose of her estate. Quære, whether her surrender of the copyright is good. Compton v. Collinson, 2 Bro. C. C. 377 ; 1 H. Bl. 334 ; 2 R. R. 786.

If a copyhold is surrendered to such uses as a feme covert shall by will or codicil appoint, a paper, purporting to be a will, though made by her living with her husband, is a good execution. Driver d. Berry v. Thompson, 4 Taunt. 294 ; 13 R. R. 592.

Effect of 55 Geo. 3, c. 192.]—The 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, extended only to supply surrenders in form, but not surrenders in substance : therefore, where a feme covert omitted to surrender to the use of her will :—Held, that the case was not within that statute. Doe d. Nethercote v. Bartle, 1 D. & R. 81 ; 5 B. & Ald. 492.

Since 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, a copyhold estate will pass under a general devise of all the testator's real estate, although there was no previous surrender to the use of his will. Doe d. Clarke, v. Ludlam, 5 M. & P. 48 ; 7 Bing. 275 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 74.

But copyholds which have been surrendered to the use of the will do not pass by a general devise of the real estate, where the will was made before 55 Geo. 3, c. 192. Doe d. Smith v. Bird, 5 B. & Ad. 695 ; 2 N. & M. 679 ; 3 L. J., K. B. 78.

A copyhold was surrendered to the use of A. for life ; remainder to such person or persons, and for such estate or estates as A. should appoint by will, executed in the presence of and attested by three witnesses ; remainder, in default of such appointment, to the use of A. in fee. After 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, A. devised to B. by a will executed in the presence of two witnesses only :—Held, a good devise of the remainder in fee, and that the want of a surrender to the use of this will was aided by the statute. Doe d. Hickman v. Hickman, 1 N. & M. 780 ; 4 B. & Ad. 56 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 238.

Equitable Interest — Devise before the Statute.]—Before 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, general words of devise included a legal estate in copyholds surrendered to the uses of the will by force of the intention shown by the surrender that such general words should include it ; and when the question is of an equitable estate, some intention must be shown that such general words should include it ultra the words themselves. Torre v. Browne, 5 H. L. Cas. 555 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 757.

d. Mode of Surrender and Admittance.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1894, s. 84.

By Steward out of the Manor.]—Previously to 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, an admittance to a copyhold by the steward, as such, out of the manor, was bad ; but it might have been good if made in virtue of a special authority given by the lord, or such admittance might have been validated by the ratification and adoption of the lord, and notification to the homage. Doe d. Gutteridge v. Sowerby, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 599 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 291 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 870 ; 2 L. T. 150 ; 8 W. R. 393.

By Lord.]—A grant by the lord in person is good, though it purports to be made at a court within the manor, which is, in fact, out of the manor. Doe d. Leach v. Whitaker, 5 B. & Ad. 409 ; 3 N. & M. 225.

Refusal by Steward out of Court.]—A person claiming to be admitted as heir to a copyhold need not tender himself to be admitted at the lord's court, if the steward, upon application to him out of court, has refused to admit him. Doe d. Burrell v. Bellamy, 2 M. & S. 87 ; 14 R. R. 595.

Married Woman.]—A feme covert who surrenders copyhold lands, ought previously to be examined separately from her husband by the steward of the manor. Driver d. Berry v. Thompson, 4 Taunt. 294 ; 13 R. R. 592.

But by special custom she may be separately examined before two customary tenants. Ib.

A feme covert entitled to a copyhold surrendered it, after secret examination by the steward, to the use of her husband with his assent, testified by his immediate admittance :—Held, that this surrender was valid. Seaman v. Maw, 3 Bing. 378 ; 11 Moore, C. P. 243 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 97.

As to a surrender of copyhold estate by feme covert, with her husband's privity and consent, but without his having actually joined in the act. Taylor v. Philips, 2 Ves. sen. 23.

Husband and wife surrendered the wife's copyholds to the mortgagee in fee, reserving the power to redeem to the husband and his heirs ; the husband afterwards released his equity of redemption to the mortgagee ; the mortgagee entered into the possession, and the husband afterwards died :—Held, that the wife was entitled to redeem. Reeve v. Hicks, 2 Sim. & S. 403 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 85.

A woman seised of copyholds executed a surrender, jointly with her husband, to such uses as her husband should appoint, and in default of appointment, to him in fee, but no admittance was entered. The husband then executed a conveyance of the copyholds to a purchaser, but still there was no admittance. The plaintiff, who claimed under the purchaser, filed a bill to restrain an action of ejectment by the copyhold heir of the wife, and to compel a surrender to complete his title :—Held, that the husband had no power to make perfect the title which he, as a volunteer, took imperfectly, and no person claiming under him could ask that his defective title should be made complete ; and the bill was dismissed. Sowerby v. Gutteridge, 18 L. J., Ch. 9.

—— Freebench.]—A surrender by a wife of a copyholder with his consent, and after having been separately examined, to the use of a purchaser from the assignees of the husband, who had become bankrupt, is effectual to bar her right of freebench, if any such existed by special custom, although, at the time of such surrender, the purchase not having been completed, the purchaser had not any legal estate in the premises. Wood v. Lambirth, 1 Ph. 8 ; 5 Jur. 741.

Freebench can be barred by a mere devise without a surrender to the use of the will. Lacey v. Hill, 44 L. J., Ch. 215 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 346 ; 32 L. T. 48 ; 23 W. R. 285.

—— Assent of Husband.]—A custom for a feme covert to surrender her copyhold lands, without the assent of her husband, is bad. Stevens d. Wise v. Tyrrell, 2 Wils. K. B. 1.

A custom in a manor required that the consent of the husband to a surrender by his wife should be expressed in the surrender and admission: a surrender was made by the wife at a general court, and the husband was present at that court, but in the surrender his consent was not expressed:—Held, that the surrender was inoperative. Doe d. Shelton v. Shelton, 4 N. & M. 857; 3 A. & E. 265; 1 H. & W. 287; 4 L. J., K. B. 167.

Copyhold property may be conveyed by a married woman without the concurrence of her husband, under certain circumstances, notwithstanding the proviso in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 77, as to copyholds. Shirley, Ex parte, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 226; 7 D. P. C. 258; 3 Jur. 125.

—— Infant Deputy Steward.]—A surrender by husband and wife of her copyhold estate, taken out of court by a deputy steward who was under age, and by whom the wife was separately examined, is valid, the infancy of the deputy steward forming no ground of objection. Eddleston v. Collins, 3 De G., M. & G. 1; 22 L. J., Ch. 480; 17 Jur. 331; 1 W. R. 169.

By Clerk of Castle.]—A castle, being parcel of a manor, a custom of the manor for the clerk of the castle, who was appointed by the lord, to take surrenders of copyholds in the castle concurrently with the stewards of the manor, is a legal custom. Doe d. Stillwell v. Mellish, or Mellersh, 1 N. & P. 30; 5 A. & E. 540; 2 H. & W. 341; 6 L. J., K. B. 41.

To Use of Will out of Court.]—A surrender out of court to the use of his will, made by the surrenderee of a copyhold before his admittance, is absolutely void and of no effect, and cannot be made good by his subsequent admittance. Doe d. Tofield v. Tofield, 11 East, 246; 10 R. R. 496.

Surrender to Trusts.]—In the absence of any special custom to that effect, the lord cannot be compelled to take a surrender by deed burdened with trusts. Flack v. Downing College, Cambridge, 13 C. B. 945; 1 C. L. R. 692; 22 L. J., C. P. 229; 17 Jur. 697; 1 W. R. 453.

There may be an immemorial custom in a manor to surrender lands in trust. Snook v. Mattock, 5 A. & E. 239; 6 N. & M. 783; 5 L. J., K. B. 206.

Private Act as to Trusts.]—Copyholds were surrendered to the use of a will whereby they were devised to trustees for sixty years, with a proviso for cesser, and subject thereto to B. for life, remainder to his first son in tail. On the death of the testator the trustees were admitted and a fine was paid: the trusts of the term became satisfied. By a private act new trustees therein named were empowered to sell the copyholds, discharged from the limitations of the will, and by any surrender by them made, according to the custom of the manor, and in the same manner as if they were the copyhold tenants, to surrender them to the use of the purchaser in fee. No estate was given to the new trustees by the act; it contained a clause saving the rights of all persons except those interested under the will. The new trustees sold the copyholds, and tendered a surrender to the steward, which was refused, on the grounds that they must first be admitted tenants of the manor, and that the estate tail could only be barred by a surrender, on which, by the custom of the manor, a fine was payable to the lord:—Held, that inasmuch as under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 50, the tenant for life and remainderman in tail might, by one surrender, bar the entail and convey to a purchaser, and they had already been admitted by the operation of the admittance of the original trustees, the lord was not prejudiced by the private act substituting the new trustees as surrenderors, in lieu of the tenant for life and remainderman in tail, and was therefore bound to accept their surrender. Reg. v. Weedon Beck Manor, 13 Q. B. 808; 18 L. J., Q. B. 289; 13 Jur. 1121. And see Dixon v. Wilkinson, 1 W. R. 513.

An act incorporated certain persons as a company for the purpose of making a canal, and gave them powers to purchase and hold lands; it authorized persons to "contract for, sell, and convey their lands," gave a form of conveyance "of all the estate, right, title, and interest" of the person conveying, and enacted that all such contracts, agreements, sales, conveyances, and assurances should be valid to all intents, &c. S., a tenant of copyhold land, a portion of which was wanted for the canal, sold it to the company, and executed a conveyance according to the form given by the act. On the death of S., the lord made a proclamation for his heir to come in and be admitted. No one appearing, the lord seized the land quousque. He afterwards brought ejectment against the canal proprietors, and obtained judgment against them on the ground that the conveyance under the Canal Act had only vested in them an equitable estate in the copyhold land (a corporation not being entitled to be admitted). He then interfered to stop the navigation. The canal proprietors filed a bill against him, praying that the customary heir of S., or such other person as the plaintiffs might appoint, might be admitted to the copyholds, the plaintiffs undertaking to pay the fine and fees upon such admission; and further praying for a perpetual injunction. The Vice-Chancellor made a decree, that the customary heir of S. (who had been made a party to the suit) should be admitted tenant, and when admitted should hold the same as trustee for the plaintiffs in the suit, and the amount of the fine was referred to the Master, and an injunction was granted as prayed:—Held, that the decree of the Vice-Chancellor was right. Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 3 H. L. Cas. 794; 17 Jur. 73.

Three Years' Term—Waiver.]—By the written customs of a manor (confirmed by an act), every person to whose use lands are surrendered ought to come within three years after the surrender is presented, and be admitted:—Held, that this custom was only for the benefit of the lord, who might waive it, and grant a valid admittance after the expiration of the three years. Doe d. Warwick v. Coombs or Combes, 6 Q. B. 535; 14 L. J., Q. B. 37; 8 Jur. 1166.

Under Power of Attorney — Authority.] — Where copyholds are surrendered by attorney, and the attorney exceeds his power, the admittance is cut down to the limits of the surrender authorised by the power. Carter v. Carter, 3 K. & J. 617; 27 L. J., Ch. 74.

A power of attorney by husband and wife, severally and respectively appointing an attorney to surrender the wife's customary tenement into the lord's hands, is a nullity. Graham v. Jackson, 6 Q. B. 811; 14 L. J., Q. B. 129; 9 Jur. 275.

The death of the wife is a revocation of such a power, and a surrender subsequently made by the attorney is inoperative and void. Ib.

Purchaser of copyhold not obliged to accept of surrender by letter of attorney. A custom that it must be in person is not contrary to law. Mitchel v. Neal, 2 Ves. sen. 679.

Upon sale in court of copyhold, vendor coming for aid is compelled to surrender in person, if it can be done conveniently. Noel v. Weston, 6 Madd. 50; 22 R. R. 235.

—— Evidence of.]—A court-roll, stating that a surrender was by power of attorney, would be secondary evidence of such power of attorney, if the same cannot be found after a sufficient search. Doe d. Counsell v. Caperton, 9 Car. & P. 112.

The steward of a manor proved, that, where a surrender was by a power of attorney, the practice was, to keep the power of attorney within the court-rolls. The power in question, which was for a surrender in 1814, could not be found either with the court-roll or anywhere in the office in which the court-rolls had been kept ever since 1814, both by the present steward and his predecessor, who was steward in 1814:—Held, sufficient to let in secondary evidence. Ib.

Implied Admittance.]—Admittance to copyholds may take place by implication, though what is done is done out of court and the tenant's name is not placed on the rolls of the manor. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Parr, 63 L. J., Q. B. 784; [1894] 2 Q. B. 420; 9 R. 542; 71 L. T. 65; 42 W. R. 561—C. A.

After Proclamations.]—If copyholders do not come in to be admitted, after proclamations, on so many court days, the lord may seize their lands. Clayton v. Cookes, 2 Atk. 449.

Two Proclamations — Failure to be admitted — Presumed Enfranchisement.] — The right of a lord of a manor to seize quousque does not accrue until after three proclamations to the tenant to come in and be admitted, or until after the latter has refused; but such refusal must be deliberate, and not a mere failure to be admitted. Consequently where a tenant came in, but was not admitted through some defect in his title, the right did not accrue to the lord. Until such right accrues the Statute of Limitations does not run against the lord. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Parr ([1894] 2 Q. B. 420), applied and explained. Beighton v. Beighton, 64 L. J., Ch. 796; 13 R. 743; 73 L. T. 86; 43 W. R. 685.

Remainders.]—Where the reversion in fee of a copyhold, expectant on a life estate, vests by devise in the tenant for life, who has been admitted as tenant for life, the life estate is merged, and another admittance in respect of the estate devised is necessary. Doe d. Winder v. Lawes, 2 N. & P. 195; 7 A. & E. 195; W. W. & D. 484; 7 L. J., Q. B. 97.

The admittance of the particular tenant of a copyhold is an admittance of the remainderman. Church v. Mundy, 12 Ves. 426.

If tenant for life, remainders over, is admitted, it holds to all remainders without new admission fee. Barnes v. Cooke, 3 Lev. 308.

If wife tenant for term, dies before expiration, husband continues in without new admission or fine. Ib.

A testator devised a copyhold estate, of which he was seised in fee, to his wife for life; and after her decease he directed his executors to sell the estate and divide the proceeds. The widow was admitted for life, and after her decease the executors sold the estate and executed a bargain and sale to the purchaser. The purchaser made his will in 1837, before he had been admitted tenant of the copyhold estate, and devised it to his wife. He was subsequently admitted to the copyhold estate and died:—Held, that the admission of the wife of the first testator enured for the benefit of the purchaser under the executors; that the customary heir of the purchaser took no estate in the copyholds, but that they passed to the wife as devisee. Seaman v. Woods, 24 Beav. 372; 27 L. J., Ch. 538; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 725.

Where the lord, by copy of court-roll, granted to A. the reversion of certain premises then in his tenure, to have and to hold to B. for his life, immediately after the death of A.:—Held, that B. might, on the death of A., maintain an ejectment, although he had never been admitted, he having acquired a perfect legal title by the grant, without admittance. Roe d. Cosh v Loveless, 2 B. & Ald. 453; 21 R. R. 352.

A., who held lands of a manor, devised them to three trustees and their heirs to the use of B. for life, with remainders over. After A.'s death B. was admitted and enjoyed the lands during his life. He died, having by his will, according to the custom of the manor, nominated his successor, who was a stranger. On a bill by the remaindermen under A.'s will, claiming that the power of nominating a successor was vested in B. by virtue of the will, and that therefore it must be exercised by him in reference to the limitations of the will, and not in favour of a stranger:—Held, that B. was customary tenant under the will, and also a trustee for the purposes of the will, and that every right which he had acquired by admission on the court-rolls was, beyond his own life estate, held for the benefit of the remaindermen. Allen v. Bewsey, 7 Ch. D. 453; 37 L. T. 688—C. A.

Trustees after Admittance of Remainderman.]—A copyholder in fee devised his estate to trustees for a term of years, and subject to the term, to A. in fee. A., who was an infant, was admitted, and paid a full fine. After his admittance the lord made proclamations, and the trustees refusing to be admitted he seized quousque:—Held, that, as by the form of the admittance A. was admitted in presenti and not merely to the remainder, the lord had both a tenant on the roll and a full fine, and therefore could not force the trustees to come in and be admitted. Everingham v. Ivatt, 42 L. J., Q. B. 203; L. R. 8 Q. B. 388; 28 L. T. 672; 21 W. R. 952—Ex. Ch.

Settlement—Married Woman—Declaration of Trust by Deed acknowledged — Validity of, against Heir — "Disposition."]—A voluntary declaration of trust of copyholds made by a married woman, the tenant on the rolls, by deed acknowledged, with the concurrence of her husband, is a valid "disposition" in equity of the copyholds under s. 77 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, and the customary heir of the married woman will be bound by the trusts. Pride v. Bubb (41 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 7 Ch. 64) applied. Carter v. Carter, 65 L. J., Ch. 86;

Previous Surrender Presumed.]—Semble, after long enjoyment under an admittance to a copyhold, a previous surrender (not entered on the rolls), may be presumed. Wilson v. Allen, 1 J. & W. 611: 21 R. R. 255. And see Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. sen. 234.

After forty-five years' possession, a perpetual injunction was granted. Knight v. Adamson, 2 Free. C. C. 106.

Devisees.]—The devisee of a copyhold estate has no title until admittance, and such a right cannot be forfeited to the lord, but continues in the heirs of the surrenderor. —— d. Jefferies v. ——, 1 Ken. 110.

Devise of a copyhold duly surrendered to A. and his heirs in trust for B. and his heirs; upon the death of B. without heirs, the heir of the trustee has no equity to compel the lord to admit him, and his bill was dismissed without costs. Williams v. Lonsdale (Lord), 3 Ves. 752.

A surrenderee (for a valuable consideration) of a copyhold tenement, who had never been admitted thereto, devised it to A.:—Held, that A., although admitted, gained no legal title to the premises. Matthew v. Osborne, 13 C. B. 919; 22 L. J., C. P. 241; 17 Jur. 696; 1 W. R. 151.

Mortgage.]—Till admittance of the surrenderee of a copyhold upon mortgage, the surrenderor continues the legal tenant, and he could not, before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3, devise the equity of redemption, even after the surrender made, without a new surrender to the use of his will; but the legal estate, which, on his death, descended to his heir-at-law, carried the equity of redemption also to the heir in respect of the mortgage. Doe d. Shewen v. Wroot, 5 East, 132; 1 Smith, 363. S. P., Kenebel v. Scrafton, 8 Ves. 30.

An equity of redemption in copyholds passed by will without surrender. M'Namara v. Jones, 1 Bro. C. C. 481.

A trust or equity of redemption of a copyhold could not pass by a will, unless attested by three witnesses. Wagstaffe v. Wagstaffe, 2 P. Wms. 258. Appleyard v. Wood, Select Ca. Ch. 42.

A mortgagee of copyhold premises, who has not been admitted by the lord of the manor, cannot maintain ejectment against the tenant of the mortgagor, unless the relation of landlord and tenant has been established aliunde. Rayson v. Adcock, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 800; 7 L. T. 747.

A., being owner of a copyhold, made a conditional surrender of it, in 1826, to W., to secure money lent. In 1832, A. sold the copyhold to G., and made a surrender of it to him absolutely. In 1833, G. was admitted tenant; and, in 1834, W. was also admitted tenant:—Held, that, on ejectment brought by W., he was entitled to recover. Doe d. Wheeler v. Gibbons, 7 Car. & P. 161.

As to the right of the surrenderee under a mortgage deed containing a power of sale to enter for the purposes of such sale without admittance. See Watson v. Waltham, 2 A. & E. 485; 4 N. & M. 537; 4 L. J., K. B. 98.

Where a surrender is made referring to a deed which states that the surrender was made as a security for money, and provides, that, after twelve months more the surrenderee may sell, and pay himself, such deed and surrender are a mortgage, and the court will compel the lord, upon the death of the surrenderor, to admit his heirs on payment of the fines, according to the custom of the manor. Weaver v. Kinglake, 9 L. J., (O.S.) Ch. 20.

Copyholder in fee makes a conditional surrender for securing a sum of money at the end of six months. Money not being paid, and mortgagee willing to continue his money, they desire the lord that the old surrender might be taken up, and a new one made for six months longer; but the lord insisted the mortgagee should come in and be admitted, and pay a fine of two years' value. Equity will not relieve against the lord. Tredway v Fotherley, 2 Vern. 367.

The omission of the assignees of an insolvent debtor to sell or take possession of the copyhold estate of the insolvent, or to cause an entry of the assignment or copy of the appointment of the assignees to be made on the court rolls, or to possess themselves of the copies of court roll for a period of nineteen years after the insolvency, whereby the insolvent is enabled to retain the property and hold himself out as the owner, and mortgage it for value to a person who had no actual knowledge of the insolvency, does not constitute an equitable ground for giving such mortgagee a charge in priority to the title of the assignees. Cole v. Coles, 6 Hare, 517.

Copyhold mortgaged in fee, by lease and release as freehold, the customary heir is bound by a covenant for further assurance; but during his infancy, the court refused to foreclose, and would go no further than directing the account, and that in default of payment the plaintiffs should be let into possession and hold and enjoy till the heir should attain twenty-one, at which time he should surrender, and a day was given to show cause against the decree. Spencer v. Boyes, 4 Ves. 370; 4 R. R. 215.

—— Deposit of Copies of Court Roll.]—An equitable lien or mortgage may be created of copyholds by the mere deposit of the copy of court roll. Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Y. & C. 303; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 38.

And see Lewis v. John, 9 Sim. 366; C. P. Cooper, 8; 7 L. J., Ch. 242; Warner, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 202.

It is, therefore, not sufficient for the protection of a purchaser or mortgagee of copyholds, that he should search the court rolls for incumbrances; he ought to require the vendor or mortgagor to produce an abstract of his title, and copy of his admission to the copyhold premises; and if the latter document is not forthcoming its non-production must be reasonably accounted for. Ib.

—— Costs of Admission.]—B., tenant in common of copyholds, joins in deposit of deeds on an equitable mortgage, and a foreclosure bill is dismissed as against him. Upon the question of costs of admission:—Held, that a surrender of copyholds stands on the same footing as a conveyance of freeholds, and a decree cannot be varied as to costs of admission. Pryce v. Bury, 2 Drew. 41; 2 Eq. Rep. 8; 17 Jur. 1173; 2 W. R. 87.

—— Right to Tack.]—Since 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, a mortgagee of copyholds may tack a simple contract debt to his mortgage debt, as against the customary heir or devisee, but not as against specialty creditors. Bolfe v. Chester, 20 Beav. 610; 25 L. J., Ch. 244.

Where copyhold is twice mortgaged, by surrender before the same steward, a third mortgage to the steward, who buys in the first, shall not postpone the second. Brothers v. Bence, Fitzg. 118.

A. and B. (A. owning one-third of a freehold estate and a copyhold estate, and B. the other two-thirds of the freehold estate) mortgaged the entire freehold estate and the copyhold to C., to secure 6,000*l.* A. subsequently mortgaged his one-third to D. to secure 12,000*l.*; and B., subsequently to that, mortgaged his two-thirds to C. to secure 2,000*l.* C. filed his bill to foreclose:—Held, that he was not entitled to tack his second mortgage; but that upon D. paying off plaintiff's first mortgage, the entire estate should be conveyed to him, which he should hold both for that which he paid plaintiff and his own mortgage for 12,000*l.*, D. thereby being allowed to tack, although C., being plaintiff, was not allowed to tack under precisely similar circumstances. Thorneycroft v. Crockett, 7 Jur. 712. Affirmed 2 H. L. Cas. 239.

—— Defective Surrender made Good.]—A. mortgages copyhold lands to B., but the surrender not being presented within the time limited by the custom became void. Afterwards A. becomes bankrupt. On a bill by B. against the assignees, this defective surrender was made good. Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Vern. 565. And see Finch v. Winchelsea, 1 P. Wms. 280.

Defective surrender for securing a sum of money which was become void by not being presented in due time, made good against subsequent purchasers with notice. Blenkarne v. Jennens, 2 Bro. P. C. 278. S. P.. Jennings v. Moore, 2 Vern. 609.

Where, by the custom of a manor, no time is limited for presenting surrenders, an incumbrancer whose security had not been enrolled until long after a subsequent incumbrance, will not be postponed, although the subsequent incumbrancer had no notice of the prior charge. Horlock v. Priestley, 2 Sim. 73; 29 R. R. 58.

—— Locke King's Act.]—The Act 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, for rendering mortgaged estates primarily liable for payment of the mortgage debt in exoneration of the personal and other estates of the deceased mortgagor applies to copyholds. Piper v. Piper, 1 J. & H. 91; 29 L. J., Ch. 719; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 2 L. T. 458; 8 W. R. 543.

Partition.]—A. & B., joint tenants of a copyhold, made partition by parol without the assent of the lord, and afterwards occupied in severalty. A. surrendered to C. by general words; C. was not entitled to be admitted to the parcels occupied by A. in severalty. Rex v. Southwood, 5 M. & Ry. 414. And see Lee, Ex parte, 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 290.

Appointees.]—A. surrenders a copyhold to such uses as B. shall appoint, and in default of it and until appointment, to B. in fee; B. appoints to C. The lord is bound to admit C. without requiring the previous admission of B. Rex v. Oundle (Manor), 3 N. & M. 484; 1 A. & E. 283; 3 L. J., K. B. 117.

Donees of Power of Sale.]—Where by the custom of a manor one of three donees of a power of sale is admitted as tenant until the execution of the power of sale by them, if the lands so given by the power are purchased by the donee so admitted, he cannot call upon the lord to admit his surrender until he has been himself admitted as bargainee of the land. Reg. v. Copthall, 1 W. R. 306.

Surrender for Sale to Trustees.]—According to the custom of a manor, when a power was given by the will of a copyhold tenant to his executors to sell lands, the lord, after the death of the tenant had been presented, and after three proclamations, might seize the same, until admission of the customary heir or some other person claiming to be admitted; and the heir or such other person might be admitted to hold the same for the purposes declared by and subject to the powers contained in the will; and upon such admission, the lord was entitled to the same fine as upon an admittance to a fee-simple; and when, after such admission, the executors appointed the lands to a purchaser, and the appointment was enrolled, the purchaser was entitled to be admitted, whether before such enrolment the heir or such other person had or had not been admitted:—Held, that although the person admitted to the lands devised before the execution of the power was himself the heir, and had paid the same fine as upon an admittance to a fee-simple, and although the power was afterwards executed in his favour, he must be admitted again, and pay a fine before he could surrender the lands, inasmuch as the execution of the power destroyed the effect of the first admittance, and caused a vacancy on the roll. Reg. v. Corbett, 1 El. & Bl. 836; 22 L. J., Q. B. 335; 17 Jur. 1024; 1 W. R. 306.

Where a copyholder surrendered to the use of his will, and thereby ordered two persons to sell and apply the money for the purposes of the will: Held, that they might sell without being admitted; and that the lord was bound to admit the vendee, upon the payment of only one fine. Holder d. Sulyard v. Preston, 2 Wils. K. B. 400.

A testator devised copyholds to such uses as A. and B., or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators, should appoint, and subject thereto, to the use of A. and B., their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts; and he directed his trustees to sell the copyholds as soon as conveniently might be:—Held, that the trustees could make a good title to a purchaser without being admitted. Glass v. Richardson, 2 De G., M. & G. 658; 22 L. J., Ch. 105; 17 Jur. 926.

A copyholder by will authorised his executor to sell the copyholds and to convey the same to the purchaser:—Held, that the executor had power to sell and to convey to the purchaser, who thereupon was entitled to be admitted, and that it was not necessary that the trustee conveying should be previously admitted. Reg. v. Wilson, 3 B. & S. 201; 32 L. J., Q. B. 9; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 439; 7 L. T. 326; 11 W. R. 70.

A copyhold was devised to trustees for certain persons, who, after the testatrix's death, sold it, and the purchaser was admitted on the surrender of the customary heir:—Held, that although the purchaser had thus obtained both the legal and equitable title, still, to make a good title, there must be a release from the trustees of their bare right to be admitted. Steele v. Waller, 28 Beav. 466; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1004; 3 L. T. 74.

Heir-at-law.]—An heir-at-law may devise a copyhold descending to him, although he has neither been admitted to it nor has paid the lord's fine upon the descent. Doe d. Perry v.

Wilson, 6 N. & M. 809 ; 5 A. & E. 321. S. P., King v. Turner, 1 Myl. & K. 456 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 188. And see Right d. Taylor v. Banks, 3 B. & Ad. 664 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 254.

So he may devise his reversion without admittance. Doe d. Winder v. Lawes, 2 N. & P. 195 ; 7 A. & E. 195 ; W. W. & D. 484 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 97.

A testator, who was seised of a copyhold, died in 1808, leaving T. his heir-at-law and devisee of the fee in reversion. T. died intestate, never having entered or been admitted to the copyhold, nor having dealt with the reversion in any way :—Held, that the heir-at-law might maintain ejectment without admittance. Doe d. Taylor v. Crisp, 1 P. & D. 37 ; 8 A. & E. 779 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 41.

A mandamus to the steward of a manor, to admit a copyholder claiming by descent, refused, on the ground of descent giving a complete title without admittance. Rex v. Rennet, 2 Term Rep. 128.

Heir-at-law of J., who was the last of three lives named in grant of copyhold, brought bill against lord to be admitted for his own life, and the lives of two other persons whom he should nominate, alleging the custom of manor to be so ; defendant denied the custom by answer, and insisted he was not bound to renew. Issue was directed as to the obligation to renew, but on appeal, order was reversed, and bill dismissed. Grafton (Duke) v. Horton, 2 Bro. P. C. 284.

In copyholds the lord is a trustee for the heir, and is bound to admit him ; though the lord be the original grantor, yet he is only in virtue of the trust reposed in him by the law. Mason v. Day, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 77.

—— Omission of "Heirs."]—Where copyholds descendible from ancestor to heir, according to the custom, are held for the joint lives of the lord and the tenant for the time being, and the copyholder is admitted to hold to him (not saying "and his heirs") for the joint lives of himself and the lord, according to the custom, the heir of the copyholder cannot maintain ejectment before admittance. Doe d. Dand v. Thompson, 13 Q. B. 670 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 326.

Stamped Admittance.]—Estates of inheritance were held at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, subject to fines on the death of the lord or tenant, and on alienation, and to other dues. The tenant might alien by customary bargain and sale, with the licence of the lord indorsed. Courts were held twice a year, at which new tenants on death or alienation were bound to appear, and have their names entered on a roll, paying a shilling to the steward. On default made, the lord might seize quousque :—Held, that in cases of alienation, the estates passed by the conveyance licensed by the lord ; and, where the lands descended, the heir became entitled as in case of freehold ; and consequently, that a person taking as heir was not bound, on enrolment, to receive a stamped admittance from the steward. Doe d. Carlisle (Earl) v. Towns, 2 B. & Ad. 585 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 278.

Executor of Termor.]—If a copyhold is granted for a term of years, the executor of the termor is obliged to be admitted, and the lord is entitled to a fine upon such admittance. Bath (Earl) v. Abney, 1 Burr. 206 ; 1 Ken. 471 ; Dick. 263.

Disclaimer.]—A copyhold may be disclaimed by parol or by other matters without deed. Rex v. Wilson, 5 M. & Ry. 140 ; 10 B. & C. 80 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 101.

On a devise of copyhold surrendered to the use of the will, the estate descends upon the heir, subject to the contingency of being divested by the admittance of the devisee. Ib.

No disclaimer by the devisee, therefore, is necessary to vest the estate in the heir. Ib.

Where several Claimants.]—Where there are two claimants by different titles to a copyhold tenement, the lord must admit both. Rex v. Hexham (Manor), 1 N. & P. 53 ; 5 A. & E. 559 ; 2 H. & W. 397 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 33 ; Rex v. Coggan, 6 East, 431 ; 2 Smith, 417.

The lord is bound to admit the customary heir of a copyholder in fee, although there is a surrender to the use of the will, and a devise by the surrenderor, there being no claim of admittance on the part of the devisee. Rex v. Wilson, 5 M. & Ry. 143 ; 10 B. & C. 80 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 101. See Doe d. Perry v. Wilson, 6 N. & M. 809 ; 5 A. & E. 321.

So, although it appears (upon the return to a mandamus) that the non-claim of admittance on the part of the devisee is the result of a contrivance between him and the customary heir, to deprive the lord of the fine which would be payable upon the admittance of the devisee. Ib.

Surrender of Chambers in New Inn.]—A surrender of chambers in New Inn, to the treasurer and ancients of the society, made with their assent, to the intent that they might grant the chambers to a purchaser, passes the estate to such purchaser before admission ; admission is not necessary, as in the case of copyholds, to complete the grantee's estate, but is only for the purpose of signifying the assent of the society that a grantee should become a member of the inn. Doe d. Worry v. Miller, 1 Term Rep. 393.

f. Enforcing.

By Mandamus—Parties.]—A mandamus will not be granted commanding the steward of a manor to accept a surrender into the hands of the lord, according to the custom, unless the lord is made a party to the rule. Reg v. Evans, 1 Q. B. 355, n. S. C., nom. Reg v. Witchford (Steward), 7 D. P. C. 709 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 251 ; 3 Jur. 533. And see Anon. 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 93.

A mandamus to admit to a copyhold tenement must be directed to the lord as well as to the steward ; not to the steward only. Reg v. Powell, 4 P. & D. 719 ; 1 Q. B. 352. S. C., nom. Reg v. Richmond (Steward), 10 L. J., Q. B. 148 ; 5 Jur. 605.

A mandamus to admit will not issue to the steward of a manor belonging to the crown, though he may have received his appointment from the commissioners of woods and forests under 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 14. Ib.

A mandamus to admit must be directed to the lord as well as to the steward, in the case of a crown manor, the management of which only is vested in the commissioners of woods and forests, under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, and the profits of which are applied under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 2, to the public service ; and therefore a peremptory writ cannot issue. The remedy in such a case for a refusal to admit is by bill in chancery. Ib.

A mandamus lies against a steward for not admitting a devisee, under the pretence that the testator was insane. Anon., Lofft. 390.

Where a bill is brought for surrender of copyhold estate for lives, the lord must be made a party, because when the surrender is made, the estate is in the lord, and he is under no obligation to re-grant it. Contra in case of copyholders of inheritance; there the lord need not be a party. Anon., 6 Vin. Abr. 293. S. P., Anon., 2 Vin. 239, pl. 5.

On bill to compel performance of covenant to surrender to A. in trust, A. must be a party. Cope v. Parry, 2 J. & W. 538.

No general decree can be made for all copyholders, unless by agreement between lord and copyholders. Anon., Cary, 27.

Claim Barred—Lapse of Time.]—Where it is clear that by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, a claimant's title to a copyhold is barred by lapse of time, the court will not compel the lord, by mandamus, to admit him. Rex v. Agarsdley, 5 D. P. C. 19. S. P., Phillips, Ex parte, 1 H. & W. 660: Walters v. Webb, 39 L. J., Ch. 677; L. R. 5 Ch. 531; 18 W. R. 587.

Heirship.]—Where a party claims to be admitted, as heir by the custom, he is entitled to a mandamus directing the lord to admit him. Reg. v. Ham (Manor), 8 L. J., Q. B. 265.

—— Nature of Return.]—Where a person, claiming as heir-at-law of a tenant last seised of a copyhold, was refused admission by the lord, and a mandamus issued, but the lord in his return thereto did not deny the heirship, except argumentatively, the court ordered a peremptory mandamus. Rex v. Brewers' Co., 4 D. & R. 492; 3 B. & C. 172; 27 R. R. 318.

The court will grant a mandamus to compel the lord to admit a person who claims as heir of a deceased copyholder, if he has made out a primâ facie case of title by descent according to the custom of the manor, even though the lord suggests that the tenement has escheated to himself, for want of an heir. Reg. v. Dendy, 1 B. C. C. 111; 22 L. J., Q. B. 39.

Mandamus to a lord to admit P. to copyholds alleged to have descended to P. as the heiress-at-law of T., her maternal uncle, who died seised. Return, that the copyholds did not descend to P. as the heiress-at-law of T., and that P. was a stranger in blood to T., and not entitled to the estates whereof T. died seised. Pleas—first, that the copyholds did descend to P. as the heiress-at-law of T.; secondly, that P. was not a stranger in blood to T.; and, thirdly, that P. was on the death of T. entitled to the estates whereof T. died seised:—Held, that the second plea traversed an immaterial allegation in the return, and was therefore bad. Reg. v. Dendy, 1 El. & Bl. 829; 22 L. J., Q. B. 247; 17 Jur. 970.

The court refused to grant a mandamus to admit a copyholder claiming as heir of his mother, where it did not appear that he was her heir-at-law, or that he was heir-at-law according to the custom of the manor. Reg. v. Caius College, Cambridge University, 9 Jur. 411.

A mandamus to the steward, to admit a copyholder claiming by descent, refused, on the ground that descent gave a complete title without admittance. Rex v. Rennett, 2 Term Rep. 128.

—— Where Devise—Duty of Trustees.]—A person, having been admitted to copyhold, devised them in fee to two trustees for the benefit of his family, whom he also appointed guardians to his infant son, his customary heir. The trustees proved the will, but did not claim themselves to be admitted, but called upon the lord to admit the infant heir by his guardians. The lord refused on account of the devise. If the two devisees had been admitted, the lord would have been entitled to a double fine instead of a single fine on the admittance of the heir. The court refused a mandamus to compel the lord to admit the heir, on the ground, that it was a matter of discretion, and they would not grant the writ, as the effect of granting it would be to enable the trustees to evade payment of a double fine, and to commit a breach of trust by not acquiring themselves the legal estate. Reg. v. Garland, 39 L. J., Q. B. 86; L. R. 5 Q. B. 269; 22 L. T. 160; 18 W. R. 429.

Avoiding Fine.]—Where, by the custom of a manor, persons not being previously customary tenants, or not dwelling in the manor, purchasing by surrender customary lands within the manor, were liable to pay a larger fine to the lord than tenants or inhabitants; and a person, not being a tenant or inhabitant, had purchased the equity of redemption in a customary estate, and in order to save the larger fine due in respect thereof, had subsequently become the purchaser of a smaller estate; the court granted a mandamus to the lord and steward to admit him to the latter; and as the return thereto did not allege any fraud in the transaction, the mandamus was made peremptory, although the effect of admittance to the smaller estate would be to defeat the lord's claim to the fine due upon the larger estate first purchased. Rex v. Meer and Forton (Manors), 2 D. & R. 824; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 184. S. C., nom. Rex v. Boughey, 1 B. & C. 565; 25 R. R., 516.

A mandamus lies to the lord and steward, to admit one to a copyhold tenement who has a primâ facie legal title, in order to enable him to try his right; though equity has before refused to compel the lord to admit him for want of his shewing an equitable right to the property. But if there is a claim of a previous fine due to the lord in respect of the ancestor from whom the party claims, the rule will only be granted on payment of such fine or fines as shall be due. Rex v. Coggan, 6 East, 431; 2 Smith, 417; 8 R. R. 509.

A tenant in fee of copyholds devised them to A., B. and C., on certain trusts. A. demanded admittance. The steward refused admittance, except upon payment of a treble fine. The court, without deciding as to the amount of the fine, made absolute a rule for a mandamus commanding his admittance, the lord being bound to admit before payment of fine, and the right to fine accruing only by admittance. Reg. v. Wellesley (Lord), 2 El. & Bl. 924.

Person Appointed to Convey.]—Where a copyhold vested in a married woman was sold under a decree which ordered all proper parties to join, and she stated in writing that she would never surrender, a vesting order was made. Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130; 20 L. J., Ch. 436; 15 Jur. 1002.

Form of order appointing a new trustee of a copyhold estate, and appointing a person to complete the assurance of the estate to such new trustee. Hey's Will, In re, 9 Hare, 221 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 248.

The court on a petition to appoint a new trustee under the Trustee Act, 1850, directed copyholds to vest in the trustees appointed by the court, without requiring the consent of the lord. Fliteroft, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 418. And see Boyce, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 210.

A., being tenant on the rolls of copyholds held in trust, devised them to B., who disclaimed. The court having made an order, under the Trustee Act, in the absence of the lord of the manor, vesting the copyholds in a new trustee :—Held, that the order was regular in form, and that it did not prejudice the right of the lord. Paterson v. Paterson, 35 Beav. 506 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 31 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 518 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 408 ; 14 L. T. 320 ; 14 W. R. 601.

An infant, customary heir to copyholds which were mortgaged, and which the court had ordered to be sold, was never admitted. The purchaser, the infant, and the mortgagee presented a petition praying that the copyholds might (the lord being satisfied as to his fines and dues in respect of the non-admittance of the infant) be vested in the purchaser. An order as prayed was made, but the registrar having objected to draw it up unless the consent of the lord were obtained :—Held, that such consent was necessary, and that the lord must either appear and consent, or give a certificate to that effect. Cooper v. Jones, 25 L. J., Ch. 240 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 59. And see Howard, In re, 3 W. R. 605 ; Wise, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 415.

It is not necessary for the lord to appear in court to consent to a vesting order under the Trustee Act. Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 584.

After a decree for the sale of an intestate's copyhold estate in lots, but before the sale, the infant heir of the intestate was admitted :—Held, that a petition for a vesting order was properly presented by the purchaser, whose money was in court, and that the costs of the order were to be borne by the vendors, and to be paid out of the purchase money of the particular lot, and not out of the fund in court generally. Ib. And see Bradley v. Muntin, 16 Beav. 294.

A vendor covenanted to surrender copyholds to the purchaser, and the purchase money was paid. The vendor died before surrender. His customary heir was of unsound mind. The covenant contained no declaration that the vendor and his heirs would until surrender hold the premises in trust for the purchaser :—Held, that a person might be appointed under the Trustee Act, 1850, to convey to the purchaser, without a suit being instituted to have the heir declared a trustee. Cuming, In re, L. R. 5 Ch. 72 ; 21 L. T. 739 ; 18 W. R. 157.

A. covenanted to surrender copyholds to the use of B., and until surrender to stand seised of the copyholds "upon trust for, and to surrender same unto B," and then went out of the jurisdiction without making any surrender. Order made under Trustee Act, 1850, for the appointment of a person to surrender to B. Collingwood's Trusts, In re, 6 W. R. 536.

The Act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 47, does not enable an infant devisee for life only to made an effectual surrender of copyholds to a purchaser so as to bar the contingent interests under the will of unborn persons. An order under s. 29 of the Trustee Act, 1850, is necessary. Wood v. Beetlestone, 1 K. & J. 213 ; 2 Eq. Rep. 238.

A mortgagor of copyholds having refused for twenty-eight days to make a surrender in accordance with his covenant, an order was made vesting the legal estate in the mortgagee, subject to the proviso for redemption. Crowe, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 32 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 26.

The court will, by mandamus to the lord, give effect to an order of the Court of Chancery, appointing a person to convey copyholds under s. 20 of the Trustee Act, 1850. Lane, In re, 12 W. R. 710.

Where such an order has been made, the court will not look beyond it, but give effect to it according to its terms. Ib.

When a party, claiming to be heir-at-law of the last cestui que trust of a copyhold estate, petitioned the Court of Chancery under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60, who referred it to the Master to ascertain whether there was any heir-at-law of the last trustee, and, on the Master's report, made an order, stating that there was no such heir, and appointed G. to convey or surrender the legal estate to the petitioner, the Court of Queen's Bench refused to interfere by mandamus to compel the lord to accept a surrender from G., as the Court of Chancery had full jurisdiction, and was a fitter tribunal to investigate the matter. Reg. v. Pitt, 2 P. & D. 385 ; 10 A. & E. 272 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 277 ; 3 Jur. 1028. Overruled by Trustee Act.

g. Evidence of.

Original Entries.]—A surrender of, and admittance to, a copyhold, may be proved by the original entries on the court-rolls, without shewing a copy stamped. Doe d. Bennington v. Hall, 16 East, 208.

Where a surrender of copyholds is made out of court by deed of surrender, the copy of the court-rolls is still evidence of the surrender, although 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, required that the deed of surrender, or a memorandum thereof, should be stamped, and not the copy of the court-roll, as in all other cases. Doe d. Hawthorn v. Mee, 1 N. & M. 424 ; 4 B. & Ad. 617 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 104.

The provisions of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, as to stamping copies of court-rolls, only apply to such copies as are given out by the steward. Doe d. Burrows v. Freeman, 12 M. & W. 844 ; 1 Car. & K. 386 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 142.

The court-rolls, containing a presentment of an admittance upon a surrender out of court, are primary evidence of the surrender as between surrenderor and surrenderee, without producing the original surrender, or inquiring into the sufficiency of the stamp upon it. Doe d. Garrard v. Olley, 12 A. & E. 481 ; 4 P. & D. 275 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 379.

Draft Entry.]—A draft of the entry on the court-rolls of the surrender and presentment of a copyhold, is good evidence of the surrender and presentment, though it appears that the entry was never made on the rolls. Doe d. Priestly v. Calloway, 6 B. & C. 484 ; 9 D. & R. 518 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 188 ; 30 R. R. 398.

Parol evidence of the holding a manor court, and of the proceedings at it, is admissible. Ib.

Regularity of Court.]—In order to prove the admittance to a copyhold tenement, an entry was produced of an admittance which purported to be at a special court baron for the manor Evidence was given that customary tenant attended the court :—Held, that the admission must be taken to be at a customary court baron, and therefore regular. Doe d. Evans v. Walker, 15 Q. B. 28 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 293.

Existence of Manor.]—Copies of court-rolls, purporting to be surrenders of property by a person proved to be then in possession, and admittances accordingly, are evidence of the existence of a manor, and of such property being within it, in an action by the surrenderee, in which his ownership is disputed. Standen v. Chrismas, 10 Q. B. 135 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 265.

Signature of Deputy Steward.]—Copyhold rolls proved by a deputy steward, not signed by the steward, admitted, and a surrender out of court proved by entry upon such rolls. Bridger v. Huett, 2 F. & F. 35.

—— Clerk.]—In order to prove an admittance made in 1810, a book was produced by the steward, as containing the court-rolls. In this book was an entry, though not in the form of a court-roll, of the admittance of 1810, in the handwriting of the clerk of the then steward. The original draft of the entry in the handwriting of the clerk had been found and compared with the entry in the book, and corresponded, but the draft was not produced :—Held, that the entry in the book was good evidence of the admittance, and that it was not necessary to produce the original draft. Doe d. Gutteridge v. Sowerby, 7 C. B. (N.S.), 599 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 291 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 870 ; 2 L. T. 150 ; 8 W. R. 393.

Record.]—A record on the record-book of a manor, of admittance to a copyhold, reciting a surrender of the same copyhold to the use of a will, is admissible evidence of the surrender, the steward not being able to find the surrender itself on the roll or elsewhere, and the surrender being irregularly kept in the manor, although all the other surrenders were either preserved or recorded on the roll. Rex v. Thruscross, 1 A. & E. 126 ; 3 N. & M. 284.

Ownership of Waste.]—A series of admissions and surrenders to copyhold property (at one time waste of the manor) going back over 200 years, coupled with slight acts of ownership, is evidence upon which a jury may find a title to such property made out. Parrott v. Watts, 47 L. J., C. P. 79 ; 37 L. T. 755.

It is no misdirection in such a case to ask the jury whether the plaintiff has not made out his title, without telling them that he was bound to prove a grant from the crown. Ib.

To prove the identity of the property claimed with the piece of the waste of the manor mentioned in the deeds of surrender, after the vendor's death, evidence of what he said to the purchaser, when putting him into possession, is admissible. Ib.

And see Att.-Gen. v. Tomline, ante, col. 394 ; and Reg. v. Woodham Walter Manor (Lord), ante, col. 405.

Termination of Interest.]—The determination of a copyhold interest may be shown without producing the copy of the court-roll. Doe d. Welsh v. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 497.

2. LEASE.

By Copyholder—Licence.]—A copyholder demised for one year, and thence from year to year for the term of thirteen years more, if the lord would licence, and so as the same should not be liable to forfeiture :—Held, that the licence of the lord was a condition precedent to the lease of the further term of thirteen years, and the lord having given notice that he would not give such licence, the assignee of the lessor, to whom the premises were surrendered, was entitled to recover in ejectment against the tenant after six months' notice to quit ; although it appeared that such surrenderee was a trustee for the lord (the real purchaser), who had notice of the terms of the demise when he purchased, with an exception in the contract of purchase of all subsisting leases, and afterwards accepted quit-rent from the tenant, the consideration of these latter circumstances belonging to a court of equity. Doe d. Nunn v. Luffkin, 4 East, 221 ; 1 Smith, 90. And see Luffkin v. Nunn, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 168.

A mandamus will not go to compel the lord to grant a licence to a copyholder to demise his copyhold land on an alleged custom, that the tenant may demise for three years without licence ; and that for licence to demise during a longer term, the lord should have a sum certain for every year of such term. Reg. v. Hale, 9 A. & E. 339 ; 1 P. & D. 293 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 83.

Freebench.]—A lease for years by a copyholder, with the licence of the lord, where the widow, by custom, would be entitled to her freebench, if the copyholder died seised, defeats the widow of her freebench. Salisbury d. Cooke v. Hurd, Cowp. 481.

Freebench can be barred by a mere devise without a surrender to the use of the will. Lacey v. Hill, Leney v. Hill, 44 L. J., Ch. 215 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 346 ; 32 L. T. 48 ; 23 W. R. 285. And see Wood v. Lambirth, 1 Ph. 8 ; 5 Jur. 741.

Irregular—Estoppel.]—If a copyholder makes a lease for years, which is not according to the custom of the manor, the lease is good between the lessor and lessee, and all others except the lord. Doe d. Tresidder v. Tresidder, 1 G. & D. 70 ; 1 Q. B. 416 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 160 ; 5 Jur. 931.

The surrenderee of a copyhold is an assignee of a reversion within the statute of 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, and may maintain an action of covenant upon a lease made by his surrenderor, and the defendant in such action cannot protect himself by alleging the invalidity of the lease. Whitton v. Peacock, 3 Myl. & K. 325.

By a private act it was enacted, that certain copyhold property should be vested in trustees upon trust to grant building leases, and every lease was to contain certain specified covenants ; and the trustees were to sell the materials of a house already standing on the premises, and apply the proceeds in payment of the costs and charges attending the obtaining the act and incidental thereto, and the residue of such costs and expenses were to be paid out of the rents of the premises so to be demised, and were to be charged upon the premises :—Held, that the legal estate in the copyholds was vested in the trustees ; that the costs incidental to obtaining the act were a charge upon the corpus of the estate, and the court had power to direct a sale of the corpus for payment of such costs. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 22 L. J., Ch. 981; 1 W. R. 513.

An objection as to the validity of the leases was overruled, on the ground that there was no one, who, under the circumstances of the case, could challenge their validity. Ib.

Forfeiture.]—A lease by a copyhold tenant for a period longer than that warranted by the custom of the manor is not absolutely void as against a stranger, but is a ground of forfeiture, of which the lord alone may take advantage. Doe d. Robinson v. Bousfield, 6 Q. B. 492; 1 Car. & K 558; 14 L. J., Q. B. 42; 8 Jur. 1121.

Where a lease is made by a copyholder with the licence of the lord, a forfeiture committed by the copyholder does not destroy the term granted by such lease. Clarke v. Arden, 16 C. B. 227; 3 C. L. R. 781; 24 L. J., C. P. 162; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 710; 3 W. R. 444.

A person who is in receipt of the rent from the occupier is entitled to defend as landlord an ejectment by the lord, and to set up such lease as an answer, notwithstanding the copyholder has committed a forfeiture. Ib.

3. Partition.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1896, s. 87.

In General.]—Previous to 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 85, a bill in equity would not lie for a partition of copyholds. Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 11 Sim. 315; 10 L. J., Ch. 35; 4 Jur. 1179. S. P., Scott v. Fawcett, Dick. 299.

In a suit before the act for a partition of freeholds and copyholds, the court directed the copyholds to be allotted in entirety to one of the parties. Dillon v. Coppin, 6 Beav. 217, n.; 3 L. J., Ch. 201.

After the act specific performance of an agreement between joint tenants of copyhold estate for partition enforced, and a decree for mutual surrenders. Bolton v. Ward, 4 Hare, 530; 14 L. J., Ch. 361; 9 Jur. 591.

Independently of the act, the court has no jurisdiction to direct the partition of copyholds, nor of customary freeholds. Jope v. Morshead, 6 Beav. 213; 12 L. J., Ch. 190.

On a bill for a partition, where there is a small failure in proof of title, or when the shares of the parties are alone doubtful, the court will grant an inquiry, but where there is a material omission in the proof of plaintiff's title, the bill will be dismissed with costs. This course was pursued, though the plaintiff had recovered in ejectment a portion of the estate from the defendant, it not appearing what were the circumstances of that proceeding, or whether the plaintiff's title, as alleged, was therein proved. Ib.

The court will not make a decree for a partition of copyholds, without directing a commission. Bowles v. Rump, 9 W. R. 370.

H. CUSTOMARY FREEHOLDS.

Nature of.]—The customary tenements in the north of England, which are parcels of the respective manors in which they are situate, and descendible, from ancestor to heir, by the hereditary right, called tenant-right, though held of the lord, according to the custom, differ much from copyhold. Burrell v. Dodd, 3 Bos. & P. 378.

Customary estates, which are peculiar to the north of England, are not freehold, but seem to fall under the same general consideration as copyholds; alienable by bargain and sale, and admittance thereon, and not holden at the will of the lord. Doe d. Reay v. Huntington, 4 East, 270.

The difference between copyholders and customary tenants explained. Vaughan d. Atkins v. Atkins, 5 Burr. 2764.

The freehold of an estate, parcel of a manor, and demisable only by licence of the lord, passing by surrender and admittance, to which the tenant was admitted by the description of a customary tenement, to have to her and her heirs, to hold of the lord by the rod, according to the custom of the manor, by the accustomed rent, suit of court, customs and services, is in the lord, and not in the tenant, though not holden at the will of the lord. Doe d. Cook v. Danvers, 7 East, 299; 3 Smith, 291.

Where the copies of admission were anciently "to hold of the lord according to the custom of husbandry of the manor," but other copies were to "hold at the will of the lord" also, and all the modern copies were so:—Held, that this land was copyhold, and not customary freehold. Bourn v. Rawlings, 3 Smith, 405. S. C., nom. Brown v. Rawlings, 7 East, 509; 8 R. R. 652.

Where, according to the custom of a manor, the customary tenements pass by lease and release and admittance, although no surrender is required, the freehold is in the lord, and not in the tenant. Thomson v. Hardinge, 1 C. B. 940; 14 L. J., C. P. 268; 9 Jur. 927.

Customary freeholds held by copy of court-roll, but not at the will of the lord, and passing by surrender and admittance, are copyholds by tenure, and the freehold of them is in the lord. Portland (Duke) v. Hill, 35 L. J., Ch. 439; L. R. 2 Eq. 765; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 15 W. R. 38.

The right to coal under customary freeholds is the same as in the case of lands of ordinary copyhold tenure. The onus lies on the tenant of customary freeholds to prove that he has the right by custom to dig for coal under his lands of that tenure. Ib.

As to this tenure. See Warrick v. Queen's College, 40 L. J., Ch. 780; L. R. 6 Ch. 716; 25 L. T. 254; 19 W. R. 1098.

A common recovery suffered in the C. P. would not pass a copyhold, secus, in customary freeholds. Oliver v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 474.

Purchase by Lord.]—Where a customary tenement is freehold, and the lord, being only tenant for life of the manor, purchases the fee of the customary tenement, the seignory is suspended during the life of the lord, but revives at his death, and the customary tenement descends to his heir. Bingham v. Woodgate, 1 Russ. & M. 33; Tam. 183; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 46; 31 R. R. 78.

Where the custom of a manor requires a bargain and sale, as well as a surrender and admittance, to pass the customary tenement, the freehold is in the tenant, and not in the lord. Ib.

Conveyance by Lord.]—Where a feme sole, after marriage, was admitted tenant of a manor in the north of England, of certain premises to her and her heirs, as of her own tenant right, according to the custom; and afterwards the lord executed a conveyance of the same premises to the husband in fee, and enfranchised the same from all seignory rights to which they were previously liable; it seems that this conveyance, after his death, did not operate by way of grant of the estate in fee, but as an enfeoffment of the tenant-right estate; and that the wife's estate became a tenancy in fee-simple, and descended upon her heirs; and that those who derived title from them had a right to claim as heirs ex parte materná. Doe d. Newby v. Jackson, 2 D. & R. 514; 1 B. & C. 448.

If the lord conveys a customary estate to the tenant, he cannot reserve to himself the ancient services; for the tenant, by reason of the statute of quia emptores, must then hold of the superior lord. Bradshaw v. Lawson, 4 Term Rep. 443.

A copyhold, to which a right of common was annexed, having by the custom of the manor vested in the lord by forfeiture, and been re-granted by him as a copyhold tenement with the appurtenances:—Held, that it having always continued demiseable, whilst in the hands of the lord, it was a customary tenement, and, as such, was still entitled to the right of common. Badger v. Ford, 3 B. & Ald. 153.

Renewals.]—The conventionary tenants within the assessionable manors of the duchy of Cornwall, have a perpetual indefeasible right, to them and their customary heirs and surrendrees, to renew their estates from seven years to seven years. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 361; 8 B. & C. 758.

Admission—Succession to.]—If the custom of a manor is that the customary tenements are held to a tenant and his heirs, and when a tenant dies seised, leaving sisters only, go wholly to the eldest sister, in exclusion of the other sisters, or, if such eldest sister dies during the life of such tenant, to her heir in exclusion of her younger sisters; there, if the heir of a tenant who had been admitted and died seised, enters but dies without being admitted, he nevertheless dies seised, and the custom attaches in respect of his sisters. Doe d. Hamilton v. Clift, 4 P. & D. 579; 12 A. & E. 576.

But, if the customary estate is not a customary estate of inheritance, to which the tenant is admitted to hold to him and his heirs, but one to which he is admitted to hold during the joint lives of himself and the lord, with a tenant-right of renewal binding the lord to admit the customary heir of a tenant; there, if the customary heir is not admitted in his lifetime, though he enters, he has no estate, and does not die seised, and the custom does not attach. Ib.

—— Necessary to Pass Estate.]—In a manor the custom of tenure is tenant right; the freehold of the customary tenements is in the lord. By the custom of the manor, on alienation, the tenant executes a deed of bargain and sale to the alienee, with the licence of the lord indorsed thereon, which licence is matter of course. The tenant afterwards appears in court with the deed, and states to the steward that he surrenders the premises into the hands of the lord, to the use of the alienee. The alienee is then admitted tenant, and the alienation presented by the jury. When husband and wife surrender lands out of court, they appear before the lord, his steward, or deputy, out of court, and execute the deed of bargain and sale; the wife is separately examined, and the surrenderor taken before the lord, his steward, or deputy, with the exception that there is no proclamation. There is no instance of a married woman surrendering lands within the manor by attorney. Surrenders, and also admittances by the custom of the manor, may be made out of court, and they may be made by or to the parties themselves or their attorneys:—Held, that surrender and admittance, as well as the deed of bargain and sale, were necessary to pass the lands; and where the tenant died, after executing the deed, but before surrender, that nothing passed to the alienee. Graham v. Jackson, 6 Q. B. 811; 14 L. J., Q. B. 129; 9 Jur. 275.

Husband and wife cannot, either jointly or severally, appoint an attorney to alienate the wife's land.

A power of attorney by husband and wife, severally and respectively appointing an attorney to surrender the wife's customary tenement into the lord's hands.—Held, a nullity.

Semble, the death of the wife is at all events a revocation of such a power, and a surrender, subsequently made by the attorney, is inoperative. Ib.

—— Compelling.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 53, only applies to equitable estates of tenants in tail of lands held by copy of court-roll; the court, therefore, refused a mandamus to the lord, commanding him to enter on the court-rolls an indenture touching certain customary freehold hereditaments, although it appeared that the steward was accustomed to give admittances signed by him to the grantee of such hereditaments, but did not enrol the deed by which they were granted. Reg. v. Ingleton, 8 D. P. C. 693; 4 Jur. 700.

Enfranchisement of.]—See ENFRANCHISEMENT, infra.

I. ENFRANCHISEMENT.

Statute.]—Copyhold Act, 1894, Parts I.-V.

Who may Enfranchise.]—Power to a tenant for life, lord of a manor, to enfranchise, and for that purpose to convey the freehold to the customary or copyhold tenants, authorises a conveyance of the freehold to one who is equitably entitled, and has been erroneously admitted, without a previous surrender by his trustee. Wilson v. Allen, 1 J. & W. 611; 21 R. R. 255.

The heir of a copyholder may accept an enfranchisement before admittance. Quære, whether the surrenderee or devisee can before admittance. Ib.

The lord enfranchises a copyhold with all common thereto belonging. Though the common be extinct at law yet it subsists in equity. Styant v. Staker, 2 Vern. 250.

For whose Benefit.]—Enfranchisement of a copyhold by a person having only a particular interest, is for the benefit not only of himself, but of all the persons in remainder. Recovery suffered by one not in possession had no operation. Wynne v. Cookes, 1 Bro. C. C. 515.

Copyholder in fee takes an enfranchisement of his copyhold in the name of a trustee, and devises the land to his younger son, who sells to A. The heir-at-law of the copyhold recovers in ejectment, and A. brings his bill, and is decreed to hold and enjoy against the heir. Dancer v. Evett, Parker v. Turner, 1 Vern. 392.

Lands in ancient demesne were held according to the custom of the manor, which was, that each tenant should have an estate tail, with reversion to the lord in fee, and that he might, with the lord's licence, by deed alien to any other person in tail, with remainder to the lord in fee. In 1792, T., a tenant according to such custom, executed marriage articles by which 2,000*l.* was to be raised for younger children of the marriage. No conveyance was ever made according to these articles. In 1794 T. procured an enfranchisement from the lord to himself in fee. In 1828, on the marriage of F., the eldest son of T., the same lands were conveyed to trustees, in trust for T. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder, upon the ordinary trusts of a marriage settlement, in favour of F. and his wife; and F. covenanted to settle after-acquired property on his wife. T. died in 1844, and his wife in 1850. F. became bankrupt in 1849, having previously mortgaged all his property to secure 2,000*l.* which he had received in 1839, in right of his wife: neither his wife nor the trustees had heard, until after 1854, of the articles of 1792. On a bill by the younger children of the marriage of 1792 to have their 2,000*l.* portions raised according to the articles:—Held, first, that the lands were not within the operation of the Statute De Donis; secondly, that the enfranchisement of 1794 operated as a merger; thirdly, that the wife of F. and her trustees of F.'s settlement were first of all entitled to their charge for 2,000*l.* as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice; and fourthly, that the younger children were entitled to have the benefit of their charge according to the settlement of 1792, in preference to F. and his assignees. Semble, the same result would have been arrived at, even apart from the fact of enfranchisement. Cresswell v. Hawkins, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 407.

Infant Lord of Manor.]—A female infant tenant for life in possession of a manor, but subject to a legal term of 1,000 years vested in trustees for securing annuities, and also subject to a provision for the receipt by the trustees of the rents during the minority, and for the application of a limited sum thereout for her maintenance:—Held, although the trustees had the usual power of sale that, on notice given by the tenants to apply for enfranchisement, her guardian was the proper person, and not the trustees, to appoint a valuer. Griggs v. Gibson, Maynard v. Gibson, 14 W. R. 819.

Compensation, how Determined—Customary Freeholds.]—The lord is entitled, on the enfranchisement of a customary freehold, to compensation in respect of the advantages accruing to the customary freeholder from the removal of restrictions on leasing or other disabilities attending his customary estate. The amount of the compensation is a question of fact for the valuer, and depends upon the extent to which the value of the property is in the particular case increased by the removal of such restrictions. Lingwood v. Gyde, 36 L. J., C. P. 10; L. R. 2 C. P. 72; 16 L. T. 229; 15 W. R. 311.

——Present Obstacles to Improvements.]—In assessing the amount of compensation payable to the lord on a compulsory enfranchisement of a copyhold under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 51, regard is to be had, not only to the capability of the land for future improvements, but also to any present obstacles which may stand in the way of improvements. Arden v. Wilson, 41 L. J., C. P. 273; L. R. 7 C. P. 535; 26 L. T. 887.

When, therefore, copyholds were the subject of a settlement (by will) which precluded the granting of leases for more than twenty-one years, and a portion of them was at the time of the enfranchisement held by a third person under a lease granted with the licence of the lord, and the other portion could have no frontage to a public road pending such lease:—Held, that, in assessing the compensation payable to the lord, the valuers were not bound by the mode in which the property was then enjoyed, viz., as a private residence, but might take into consideration the capacity of the land for improvement by applying it to building purposes. Ib.

Held, that they were also bound to take into consideration the impediments standing in the way of its being presently used as building land. Ib.

Statute.]—52 & 53 Vict. c. 30, transfers to the Board of Agriculture the powers and duties of the Land Commissioners for England.

Valuation by Umpire—Refusal to Amend—Determination of Value by Commissioners.]—By s. 11 of the Copyhold Act, 1887: "The valuers appointed under the provisions of the Copyhold Acts shall determine the value of the manorial and other rights and incidents, such value to be a gross sum of money, and their decision shall be in such form as the commissioners may prescribe, and they shall in every case deliver the details of the valuation to the commissioners, and if it shall appear to the commissioners that the valuation is imperfect or erroneous, they may remit it for reconsideration or correction; and if the valuers neglect or refuse to amend the same, the commissioners may, after due notice to the lord and to the tenant, and after fully considering all the circumstances brought before them, determine the value of the manorial and other rights and incidents at such a sum as they may deem just and reasonable." On a valuation of manorial rights under the act it appeared to the commissioners that the valuation was erroneous in amount, and they remitted it to the valuer, who refused to amend. The commissioners thereupon proceeded to consider the circumstances with a view to themselves determining the value. On an application for a prohibition to restrain them from proceeding to determine the value except as appeared by the award:—Held, that the commissioners were acting within their jurisdiction in proceeding to determine the value of the rights, as the authority given them by the statute applies where, in their opinion, the valuation is erroneous in amount. Reg. v. Land Commissioners of England, 58 L. J., Q. B. 313; 23 Q. B. D. 59; 37 W. R. 538; 53 J. P. 773—C. A.

Jurisdiction of Commissioners.]—When a lord, who takes proceedings under the Copyhold Acts to compel a tenant to enfranchise, sets up a special custom entitling him to one-third of the timber, if there is evidence, it is the exclusive province of the copyhold commissioners to determine whether the custom is proved, and the court will not interfere with their decision.

The valuers acting under the second part of s 8 of 21 & 22 Vict c 94, are not bound to state in their award what proportion of the rent charge should be deferred, or such particulars as might enable the commissioners to defer payment of the whole rent charge or any part, and though the pecuniary circumstances of the tenant ought not to be taken into account in determining whether there is special hardship under 15 & 16 Vict c 51, s 35 and the commissioners inquire into them, and though the court think, looking to the particular interest of the tenant, that there is hardship, yet the court is not at liberty to interfere with the decision of the commissioners that there is no such hardship Ib

Reservation of Lord's Rights]—The lord of a manor, with consent of the homage, granted a portion of the waste to be held by the grantee as copyhold upon condition that no building should thereafter be erected thereon, and reserving to certain copyholders in the grant liberty, in case of the election of any building contrary to the condition, to enter and pull down and remove the same, such reservation in favour of the copyholders being gratuitous and without consideration The estate afterwards vested in B, who was admitted tenant, and gave notice, under 4 & 5 Vict c 35, s 40, 15 & 16 Vict c 51, s 8, and 21 and 22 Vict c 94, s 10 of his desire to enfranchise the same —Held, that the effect of the enfranchisement was to give B an estate in fee simple, disencumbered of the conditions imposed upon the creation of the copyhold, and that the lord was entitled to compensation accordingly Brabant v Wilson, 6 B & S 979, 35 L J, Q B 49, L R 1 Q B 44, 12 Jur (N S) 24, 13 L T 319, 14 W. R 28

The owner of freeholds and copyholds adjoining each other surrendered the copyholds to a grantee, who covenanted for himself, his heirs and assigns, with the grantor, his heirs and assigns, that the grantor should have full power to mine under his own freeholds without paying compensation for any injury which might be sustained by the copyhold portion and buildings erected thereon, in consequence of the removal of the support Compensation was sought by the assignee of the grantee for damage resulting from the sinking of his land, in consequence of the mines excavated under the land of the assignee of the grantor —Held, that the grantee had no power to disclaim the right to compensation so as to bind the lord without his consent, and that the covenant did not run with the land Richards v Harper, 4 H & C 55 35 L J, Ex 130 L R 1 Ex 199, 12 Jur (N S) 770, 14 W R 643

The vendor of a copyhold estate enfranchised under 15 & 16 Vict c 51, is not bound to show the lord's title Kerr v Pawson, 25 Beav 394, 27 L J, Ch 594, 4 Jur (N S) 425, 6 W R 447.

After the passing of 4 & 5 Vict c 35, and 15 & 16 Vict c 51, but before 21 & 22 Vict c 94, an agreement was entered into for the sale of a copyhold estate, together with the timber and all appurtenances to the hereditaments belonging, as soon as the same should become freehold, under an agreement of the vendor to use his best endeavours to enfranchise, an enfranchisement was made under the second act, reserving the minerals to the lord —Held, that the contract had reference to the provisions in those acts relative to minerals and that the purchaser must complete, notwithstanding this reservation Ib

Where copyholds are taken by a railway company, such fines for admittance as would, upon a compulsory enfranchisement under s 6 of 21 and 22 Vict c 94 be payable by the tenants requiring enfranchisement, are not claimable by the lord against the company Wilson's Estate, In re, 3 De G J & S 410, 32 L J, Ch 191, 7 L T 772, 11 W R 295

Where a lump sum was paid as compensation by a company —Held, that no part could be retained in respect of such fines by the tenant for life, but that the whole must be treated as paid on account of the inheritance Ib

Where purchase money for copyholds is paid into court, under 5 & 6 Will 4, c 69, including the value of the lord's interest, the words, "expenses attending such purchase" include the costs of the enfranchisement S C, 11 W R 712

Forfeitures] — A college demised all lands, quit rents, waifs, and other appurtenances, and all rights and privileges, profits, emoluments, and appurtenances in respect of the game except all courts and perquisites of courts, fines, amerciaments, escheats and all profits growing and arising by virtue of the privileges of the college —Held, that in enfranchising the copyholds that part of the money representing forfeitures belonged to the college, as included in the exception in the lease Deane, Ex parte, 17 L T 100

Sale]—A sale under 23 & 24 Vict c 124, of a freehold estate devised upon trusts by a will was allowed for the purpose of enfranchising ecclesiastical leaseholds bequeathed by the will upon similar trusts Adams, In re, 20 L T 511, 17 W R 582

—— Costs]—Upon a petition for the sale of settled real estate, partly freehold and partly copyhold, the court directed the copyholds to be enfranchised, the whole to be sold as freehold, and the costs of enfranchisement to be paid out of the proceeds of sale Adair, In re, 42 L J, Ch 841, L R 16 Eq 124

Non-Admission of Mortgagee]—It is no sufficient objection to the title of a vendor of an enfranchised copyhold, that a mortgagee to whom a surrender had been made had not been admitted before the enfranchisement, the deed of enfranchisement having conveyed to the vendor all the rights of the lord Minton v Kinwood, L R 1 Eq 449, 12 Jur (N S) 86, 13 L T 743; 14 W. R. 274

An appointee under a power in a settlement was admitted to the copyholds, and obtained an enfranchisement to himself —Held, that the concurrence of the customary heir of the settlor was a question of conveyance and not of title, for that the heir clearly had no beneficial interest. S C, 37 L J, Ch 606, L R 3 Ch 614, 18 L T. 781, 16 W R 991.

Death of Tenant pending Proceedings]—A copyhold tenant died after proceedings instituted by him for a compulsory enfranchisement under the Copyhold Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c. 94), and before the confirmation of the award by the commissioners —Held, that the lord was entitled to have a new tenant on the roll and to a fine on his admittance Myers v Hodgson, 45 L J, C P 603 1 C P D 609, 34 L T 881, 24 W R 827

Held, also, that the proceedings did not abate by the death of the first tenant Ib

Investment of Purchase money on Enfranchisement]—The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s 69, authorises the application of purchase-money paid in respect of freeholds taken by a company in the enfranchisement of copyholds settled upon the same trusts Cheshunt College, In re, 3 W R 638 And see Ground's Estate, In re, 1 W R 32

—— Service of Petition for Investment]—Petitions under the Copyhold Acts for investment of moneys paid into court in respect of the enfranchisement of copyholds are not to be served on the copyhold commissioners Templer v Swete, 22 W R 837

—— Costs of Appearance of Commissioners]—Where copyholds had with the consent of the commissioners, been enfranchised under 15 & 16 Vict c 51 and the money had been paid into the bank to an account "Ex parte the Copyhold Commissioners' —Held, that the commissioners were entitled to the costs of appearance on the petition of the lord to have the money invested and the dividends paid to him Queens College, Cambridge, Ex parte, 27 L J, Ch 178, 4 Jur (N S) 19, 6 W R 9

Where the consideration money for the enfranchisement of copyholds under the Copyhold Enfranchisement Act was paid into court, and a petition was presented by the lord for the investment of the money —Held, that the commissioners had a right to appear at the hearing of the petition, and that their costs and those of the lord were payable out of the consideration money Hereford (Bishop), Ex parte, 5 De G & Sm 265, 21 L J, Ch 608

Estate tail]—As to the effect of enfranchisement in barring an entail, see London School Board, Ex parte, Hart, In re, 41 Ch D 547, &c, ante, col 387

Confusion of Boundaries—Enquiry—Liability of Tenant]—A copyhold tenant of a manor is under an obligation to keep the boundaries of his tenement distinct, and if he neglects to do so the court will direct an inquiry for ascertaining the boundaries, and, if that should be impossible, will order land of equal value to be set out in substitution If the tenement is enfranchised the obligation to preserve the boundaries ceases, but the tenant is still liable for default which had happened before the enfranchisement Searle v Cooke 59 L J, Ch 259, 43 Ch D 519, 62 L T 221—C A

The lord obtained the enfranchisement of a copyhold under the 15 & 16 Vict c 51, reserving a rent charge to himself The boundaries had become confused before the enfranchisement, but the lord did not avail himself of the power given by s 24 of the Act to have the boundaries ascertained The rent-charge having fallen into arrear, the grantee of the rent-charge brought an action to ascertain the boundaries of the land charged with the rent-charge, and, if that could not be done, to have land of equal value set out in substitution —Held, that the lord and those claiming under him did not lose their rights by reason of the lord's omission to have the boundaries ascertained under the act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed the costs of the inquiry being reserved Leeds (Duke) v. Stafford (Earl), (4 Ves 180, 4 R R 186) followed Ib

Profit a Prendre—Right of Fishing—User]—An owner of land formerly copyhold, but now enfranchised brought an action claiming on behalf of himself and other owners and occupiers of ancient copyhold tenements, and ancient tenements formerly copyhold of the manor, but now enfranchised a right of fishing in a portion of a river which formed one of the boundaries of the manor, and as incident thereto a right of way over the defendant's land which adjoined the river, and was formerly copyhold of the manor In 1845 the lords of the manor enfranchised the defendant's tenements to the intent that the copyhold tenure and all "rights of fishing" might be extinguished The plaintiff's tenements were enfranchised subsequently to 1845 The homage had for many years made a presentment of the right of copyhold tenants of the manor to fish in the river between certain points and there was evidence that from 1823 down to 1885, when the defendant had taken steps to stop the fishing from his land, the copyhold tenants and the owners of enfranchised tenements had fished in the river, and for the purpose of fishing had been accustomed to pass along the banks of the river over the defendant's land The tenants of the manor held upon leases for lives with no right of renewal It was contended that the effect of the enfranchisement deed of 1845 was only to extinguish the right of the lords to fish, and did not extend to their right to grant de novo to the tenants of the manor, or to owners of enfranchised tenements, such rights of fishing as had been previously enjoyed, and were appurtenant to their tenements, and that the intention and meaning of the deed was shown by the user —Held, that the effect of the deed of 1845 was to preclude the lords from granting as against the defendant any right of fishing, and that so far as the user was inconsistent with the deed no legal origin for it could be assumed. Tilbury v Silva, 45 Ch D 98, 63 L T 141—C A

Lunatic's Estate—Devolution]—The court on sanctioning proceedings for carrying into effect the enfranchisement of a copyhold estate belonging to a lunatic, the rules of descent as to which were different from those as to the descent of freeholds, made a declaration that, in the event of his dying intestate as to the enfranchised property, his heir at law would stand seised thereof in trust for the persons who would have been entitled thereto as his heirs according to the custom of the manor if it had not been enfranchised Ryder, In re, 20 Ch D 514, 30 W R 417—C A Presumption of]—The enfranchisement of a copyhold may, upon proper evidence, be presumed even against the crown Roe d Johnson v Ireland, 11 East, 283, 10 R R 504.

Where a surrender had been made to churchwardens and their successors in 1636, without naming any rent, but, in 1649, the parliamentary survey charged the churchwardens with

6*d* rent, under the head of freehold rents, and there was no evidence of any different rent having been paid since that time, and receipts had been given for it, as for a freehold rent by the steward of the manor —Held, that this was evidence to be submitted to a jury, on which they might presume a grant of enfranchisement although the manor had continued out in lease from before 1636 to 1804, and though a tablet of parochial benefactions at least as old as 1636, which was suspended in the parish church, noticed the gift of the copyhold by surrender, but did not notice any enfranchisement of it Ib

In the absence of evidence adverse to the rights of the lord the court will not presume enfranchisement of land, shown to have been copyhold in 1717 from mere negligence by the lord in exacting the small acknowledgments for which the fines were then commuted Turner v West Bromwich Union, 3 L T 662, 9 W R 155

—— Copyhold Land treated as Freehold for long Period—Statute of Limitations]—Land anciently copyhold was for upwards of 100 years treated as freehold without any claim being made on the part of the lord, and the only intimation that the land was copyhold was in recitals to that effect and a covenant to surrender contained in deeds of recent date to which the lord was neither party nor privy A contract having been entered into for the sale of the land as freehold —Held, that, under the circumstances, an enfranchisement must be presumed, and that the purchaser was therefore not entitled to require the vendors to obtain the enfranchisement of the land Liddard and Broadley, In re, 58 L J Ch 785, 42 Ch D 254, 61 L T 322, 37 W R 793

Semble, also, the lord's right of entry was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

Evidence]—An assignment of copyholds by a common law conveyance (without any surrender) recited a grant of the fee by the Bishop of Rochester to the releasor, in which grant the premises were described as "parcel of the manor of the prebend of Wivelscombe' Quære, whether this recital was evidence against the widow of the releasor, who continued in possession from the death of her husband down to the commencement of the ejectment —Held, that, even if it was so, it did not show an enfranchisement, inasmuch as it did not distinctly appear that the bishop was seised of the fee-simple of the manor, or seised otherwise than by right of his prebend Doe d North v Webber, 5 Scott, 189, 3 Hodges, 203

Acknowledgment of Right to production of Documents—Lands Clauses Act]—Copyhold land having been taken by a corporation under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, and a draft conveyance from the copyholder being in the course of settlement, the corporation applied to the lord, under s 96, for enfranchisement upon certain terms, which were agreed to In settling the draft enfranchisement deed, the corporation claimed to have from the lord and his trustee to uses an acknowledgment of the right of the corporation to production of the documents of title to the manor, and of the court rolls relating to the hereditaments enfranchised, and to delivery of copies thereof, and, also from both, an undertaking for the safe custody of the same —Held, that the corporation were entitled to no more than an acknowledgment by the lord and his trustee of the right of the corporation to the production of the documents of title to the manor, and of the court rolls, so far as they related to the hereditaments enfranchised, and to delivery of copies thereof, and an undertaking by the lord alone for safe custody Agg-Gardner, In re, 53 L J, Ch 347, 25 Ch D 600, 49 L T 804, 32 W R 356

Whether the corporation were entitled to so much as the above, quære Ib

J ENCROACHMENT.

On Waste by Copyhold Tenant]—An encroachment made by a copyhold tenant upon the waste of the manor becomes, at any rate in a manor in which there is a custom that the lord may grant portions of the waste as copyhold, an accretion to the original holding, and the tenant acquires by adverse possession, under the Statute of Limitations, only a copyhold title to the encroached land. Att-Gen v. Tomline, 46 L J, Ch. 654, 5 Ch. D. 750, 36 L T. 684, 25 W. R. 802

—— Mining without Consent]—A copyhold was surrendered in 1809 to a trustee for the crown for military purposes In 1808 the then lord had granted to M, the governor of an adjoining fort, a licence to inclose part of the waste adjoining the copyhold, and to occupy it at a yearly rent during his life if he so long continued governor, which he ceased to be in 1811. Nothing further was shown as to the title to the land included in the licence, except that at the commencement of this action in 1874 the crown had been in possession of such land as inclosed ground, as well as of the original copyhold, for more than forty years. Since 1811 there had been repeated admittances of trustees for the crown to the original copyhold, in which it was described by metes and bounds not including the close L comprised in the licence In 1874 the lord, without the consent of the crown, granted a licence to get coprolites out of close L at a royalty, and received 222*l* for royalties The crown brought an action for an injunction and damages. Fry, J, held, that close L had become an accretion to the copyhold tenement, and was of copyhold tenure, but the decree only granted an injunction and an inquiry as to damages, without any declaration of the rights of the parties The chief clerk having certified that the damages payable to the crown were 222*l*, and Fry, J, having approved of his finding, the lord appealed on the ground that the damages were excessive The tenant who held close L. under the crown had separately received full compensation for surface damage, and the land had been restored to its original condition — Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, assuming the doctrine that encroachments made by a lessee enure to the benefit of the landlord to be applicable to encroachments by a copyholder, the application of that doctrine was excluded by the facts that the inclosure of close L. having been made by licence from the lord was not an encroachment, and that the subsequent admittances did not treat close L as part of the copyhold tenement. Att-Gen. v. Tomline, 15 Ch D. 150; 43 L. T. 486—C. A. And see Seddon v. Smith, 36 L. T. 168.

Whether that doctrine does apply to copyholds, quære Ib —— Measure of Damages.]—Whether, if close L had been copyhold, a finding which gave to the copyholder by way of damages the whole sum received by the lord for the coprolites could have been sustained, quære Ib

Crown acquiring Freehold under Statute of Limitations]—Held, that the crown had under the Statute of Limitations acquired a freehold title to close L, and that as the coprolites, therefore, belonged to the crown, the damages were not excessive Ib.

Presumption as to.]—A tenant encroached on an adjoining waste, part of a manor belonging to her son, a minor. On his attaining his majority, the homage presented that she had encroached She thereupon applied for and obtained from her son, the lord, a grant of the piece of land so encroached on. She never paid any rent for it, nor was any service ever rendered in respect of the grant At the expiration of the tenancy, the landlord took possession, not only of the land demised, but of the piece of th waste encroached on —Held, in ejectment by the lord of the manor, that the ordinary presumption of law, that an encroachment made by a tenant is for the benefit of his landlord, was rebutted, that by the acceptance of the grant from the lord, the encroacher became his tenant, and that the lord therefore was entitled to succeed Barney v Bickmore, 8 L T 353

Waste — Rent — Presumed Grant allowing Buildings.]—In 1739 articles of agreement were entered into between the lord and freehold tenants of a manor, by the eighth clause of which it was agreed that no other part of the wastes should thereafter be enclosed or built upon, unless by the mutual consent of the lord, and of the greater part in number and value of the freehold tenants, under their hands and seals, and in case of any improvements and enclosures by such consents as aforesaid, it was agreed that the same and all profits and advantages arising therefrom should belong to and be divided between the lord and freehold tenants in the proportions therein mentioned The articles were confirmed by a private act passed in the same year Persons were appointed by the lord and freeholders to receive the rents, and books were kept showing how the rents were received and divided, in accordance with the provisions of the articles An entry appeared in one of these books in 1803, that one R paid a rent of 1*l* 1*s* in respect of premises which were there described as a stable, and it appeared from entries in the books that he continued to do so down to 1808, when the property was mentioned as held by D at a yearly rent of 2*l* 12*s* 6*d* In 1811 D was entered as holding a coal warehouse at the rent of 4*l* 10*s* "now and in future" In 1813 D paid the same rent in respect of a coal and corn warehouse, and that rent was paid by D and his successors in title until just before this action was brought In 1816 D. sold or mortgaged the property for 299*l* to B, who subsequently re conveyed it to him for the same amount In 1829 D conveyed the property by lease and release to K. for 1,000*l*. He mortgaged it to S. by feoffment for 1,000*l*, and subsequently became bankrupt, and the equity of redemption vested in his assignees In 1836 the assignees and S conveyed the property to J S for 1,440*l* In 1838 J S leased the property to R The property was described in the lease as part of the waste of the manor, and it was provided that the lessee was to pay 4*l* 10*s* per annum, and any future rent which might become payable, to the lord and freeholders New buildings were from time to time built on the property The defendant became entitled to the premises under the will of his father J S Questions having arisen as to the title to the property, the defendant claiming to be entitled in fee-simple, the lord and the freeholders brought this action to recover possession of it — Held, that (1) a consent to the enclosure of the property in question, in accordance with clause 8 of the articles, might under the circumstances be fairly assumed, but the result of possession under such consent was that a tenancy from year to year was created, (2) that the feoffment by K to S in 1829 did not tortiously pass the fee to S, (3) that there was no evidence that the tenants were under any misapprehension as to title, or had built under misapprehension, or that the lord or freeholders were aware of any such misapprehension of titles, and therefore the defendant was not entitled to equitable relief Weller v Stone, 54 L J, Ch 497, 53 L T 361, 33 W R 421—C A —— Necessary Parties — Mining Lease — Lessor]—In an action by a copyholder to restrain the working of coal under his land by A, who claimed to be entitled to do the acts complained of by virtue of a lease from B, the lord of the manor, B, was by amendment added as a defendant, on the allegation that he claimed the right by himself and his lessees to work the coal, that he justified the acts of A, and that he had received and claimed to be entitled to receive from A rents and royalties in respect of such wrongful working On summons by B under Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord XXV r 4, that the amended statement of claim might be struck out as against him on the ground that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action against him, and that the action might be dismissed as against him —Held, that the lessor had been properly added as a defendant Shafto v Bolckow, Vaughan and Co., 56 L J, Ch 735, 34 Ch D 725, 56 L T. 608, 35 W R 562

1. Rights at Common Law.

Extent of.]—The property of an author in an unpublished work exists independently of the statute. Southey v. Sherwood, 2 Mer. 435. S. P., Tonson v. Collins, 1 W. Bl. 301.

Authors have not, by common law, the sole and exclusive copyright in themselves, or their assigns, in perpetuity, after having printed and published their compositions. Miller v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303.

Copyright does not exist at common law; it is the creature of statute. Jefferys v. Boosey (in error), 4 H. L. Cas. 815; 3 C. L. R. 625; 24 L. J., Ex. 81; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 615.

An Englishman, though resident abroad, will have copyright in a work of his own first published in this country. Ib.

Copyright in works of literature and art, after they are published, exists by statute only; and there is no co-existing common-law protection during the statutable period. Reade v. Conquest, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 755; 30 L. J., C. P. 209; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 265; 3 L. T. 888; 9 W. R. 434.

2. Rights by Statute.

a. Subject Matter.

i. Unpublished Works.

Right to Withhold.]—The right and property of an author or a composer of any work, whether of literature, art or science, in such work, unpublished and kept for his private use or pleasure, entitle the owner to withhold the same altogether, or so far as he may please, from the knowledge of others; and the court of chancery will interfere to prevent the invasion of this right by the publication of a catalogue containing a description of such work. Millar (Prince) v. Strange, 1 Mac. & G. 25; 1 H. & T. 1; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

MSS.]—An injunction was granted to restrain the printing of an unpublished MS. which had been, by the representative of the author, given to a person under whom the defendant claimed, but not with the intention that he should publish it. Queensberry (Duke) v. Shebbeare, 2 Eden, 329.

Semble, unless there is a special contract, either express or implied, reserving to the author a qualified copyright, the purchaser of a manuscript is at liberty to alter and deal with it as he thinks proper. Cox v. Cox, 11 Hare, 118.

The statute 8 Anne, c. 19, did not impose upon authors as a condition precedent to their deriving any benefit under it, that the composition should be first printed; and therefore, an author did not lose his copyright by selling his work in manuscript before it was printed. White v. Geroch, 2 B. & Ald. 298; 1 Chit. 24; 22 R. R. 786.

Information supplied to Subscribers only.]—The plaintiffs, under an agreement with the committee of the Stock Exchange, were allowed to collect information as to the prices of stocks and shares:—Held, that they had a right of property at common law in the information so collected. Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, 65 L. J., Q. B. 262; [1896] 1 Q. B. 147; 74 L. T. 83; 60 J. P. 52—C. A.

A company carrying on the business of supplying information of the results of race meetings to subscribers upon the terms of a contract, regulating the use to be made of the information so supplied, has a right of property in such information, and is entitled to restrain by injunction a third party from publishing it if obtained from a subscriber with knowledge of the contract and contrary to its terms. Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory (supra), followed. Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Central News, 66 L. J., Ch. 672; [1897] 2 Ch. 48; 76 L. T. 591; 45 W. R. 595.

ii. Letters.

Right withheld.]—The sending of a letter bearing the character of a literary composition does not give the person to whom it is transmitted the right to publish it for his own benefit; otherwise, if published to vindicate his character from false imputations cast upon him by the writer. Perceval (Lord) v. Phipps, 2 Ves. & B. 19; 13 R. R. 1.

Injunction granted on application of the executor to restrain defendant from publishing letters, the property of the testator. Granard v. Dunkin, 1 Ball & B. 207; 12 R. R. 18.

Defendant moved (on putting in answer) to dissolve an injunction obtained against his selling a book of "Letters from Pope, Swift, and others." Lord Chancellor said, collection of letters, as well as other books, is within intention of Statute 8 Anne; but receiver of letter has at most but a joint property with writer, and possession does not give him licence to publish it. Injunction was continued as to letters written by Mr. Pope, but not as to those written to him. Lord Chancellor also said, that reprinting a book in England which was originally pirated and printed in Ireland will not be suffered, being a mere evasion of the Act. Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342.

Letters written by the plaintiff to the defendant, having been returned by him, with a declaration that he did not consider himself entitled to retain them, the publication of copies taken before the return, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, was restrained by injunction, though represented by the defendant as necessary for the vindication of his character. The jurisdiction to restrain the publication of letters is founded on a right of property in the writer. Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swans. 402; 19 R. R. 87.

The receiver of a letter has a sufficient property in the paper upon which it is written to entitle him to maintain an action of detinue for it against the sender, into whose hands it had come as a bailee. Oliver v. Oliver, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 139; 31 L. J., C. P. 4; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 512; 5 L. T. 287; 10 W. R. 18.

An injunction was granted to restrain the executor of the person to whom private letters were written, from publishing them without leave of the executors of the person who wrote them. Thompson v. Stanhope, Ambler, 737.

Solicitor of Company.]—When the solicitor of a company writes a letter, apparently on the behalf of the company, he has no such property in the letter as to entitle him to prevent its publication, although it was written in his private capacity. Howard v. Gunn, 32 Beav. 462.

iii. Newspapers.

Registration.]—A newspaper is within the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), and requires registration under that act in order to give the proprietor the copyright in its contents and so enable him to sue in respect of a piracy. Cox v. Land and Water Journal Co., infra, not followed. Walter v. Howe, 50 L. J., Ch. 621; 17 Ch. D. 708; 44 L. T. 727; 29 W. R. 776.

A newspaper not being within the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), requires no registration under that act; but the proprietor of a newspaper has, without registration, such a property in all its contents as will entitle him to sue in respect of a piracy. Cox v. Land and Water Journal Co., 39 L. J., Ch. 152; L. R. 9 Eq. 324; 21 L. T. 548; 18 W. R. 206.

Where the proprietor of a newspaper sought to restrain the piracy of "a list of hounds," the court was of opinion that, although the piracy might be established, the list was liable to such frequent changes, and a correct list was so easily obtained, that it was not a case for an interlocutory injunction. Ib.

Name of—Assignment.]—A suit was instituted between B. & H. as to the proprietorship of a newspaper, in which it was ultimately decided that they were entitled in equal moieties. During the progress of the suit B. assigned his share in the newspaper, and the right of publication, and in the profits, to W. The assignment contained a recital of the proceedings in the suit, and a power of sale. Afterwards B. mortgaged the same share to his partner H. to secure sums due to him in respect of that share. W. registered his assignment at Stationers' Hall, and subsequently sold the mortgaged share to the plaintiff under his power of sale. Both W. and the plaintiff permitted the newspaper to be carried on by B. and H. jointly. On a bill filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was entitled to a moiety of the newspaper:—Held, first, that there is nothing analogous to copyright in the name of a newspaper, and therefore the registration of the assignment at Stationers' Hall was futile; but that the proprietor has a right to prevent any other person from adopting the name, and that this right is a chattel capable of assignment. Kelly v. Hutton, 37 L. J., Ch. 917; L. R. 3 Ch. 703; 19 L. T. 228; 16 W. R. 1182.

Held, secondly, that as W. and the plaintiff knew of the suit between B. and H., and also permitted them to carry on the newspaper as partners, the plaintiff could only take B.'s share subject to the equities subsisting between the partners. Ib.

Prospective Series.]—That protection given by common and statute law which is called copyright is only in respect of some already published or some composed and not yet published literary production, and therefore there can be no copyright in the prospective series of a newspaper. Copyright may attach upon each successive publication; but that which has no present existence as a publication cannot be the subject of this species of property. Platt v. Walter, 17 L. T. 157.

It is open to doubt whether the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, relating to copyright in "encyclopædias, reviews, magazines, periodical works, or works published in a series of books or parts," extends to newspapers, notwithstanding the interpretation clause. But, even if it does, that section applies only to what has been already composed, merely giving the copyright of it to the proprietor of the periodical who has employed the writer of the part, essay, or article. Ib.

Articles composed at joint Expense of Proprietors of several Newspapers.]—The three several proprietors of three several periodicals jointly employed a person to compile for them lists of registered bills of sale and deeds of arrangement, on the terms that the copyright was to belong to the three proprietors. The three periodicals were registered under the Copyright Act. The compiling these lists required skill, and involved a good deal of labour and expense. The defendant association copied and circulated among their own members so much of these lists as related to their own neighbourhood, which was a very small part of the whole. The three proprietors sued to restrain this proceeding:—Held, that the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, was not to be construed as confining the copyright of a proprietor of a newspaper to articles composed on the terms that the copyright should belong to and be paid for by him alone, that each of the three proprietors had an interest in the copyright of the lists, that having registered his periodical he had a right to sue to restrain infringement, and that the defendant association could not escape on the ground that it had only copied a small portion of the lists. Trade Auxiliary Co. v. Middlesborough Tradesmen's Protection Association, 58 L. J., Ch. 293; 40 Ch. D. 425; 60 L. T. 681; 37 W. R. 337—C. A.

iv. Magazines.

Property in Articles.]—By the effect of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, the proprietor of a periodical is precluded from republishing, without the consent of the author, articles written by the latter for and published in such periodical in any other form than as reprints of the entire numbers of the periodical in which the articles appeared. Smith v. Johnson, 4 Giff. 632: 33 L. J., Ch. 137; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1223; 9 L. T. 437; 12 W. R. 122.

A republication in supplemental numbers of a selection of various tales previously published in a periodical is a separate publication within the section. Ib.

The right of an author of an article in a periodical, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, to prevent a separate publication, is not copyright within the meaning of s. 24, and it is no objection to a motion for an injunction in such a case that the author has not entered his work at Stationers' Hall. Mayhew or Murray v. Maxwell, 1 Johns. & H. 312; 3 L. T. 466; 8 W. R. 118.

The republication of the Christmas number of a periodical under a different title, form, and price, is a separate publication of an article contained in such number, which the author is entitled to restrain. Ib.

A copyright may exist in only a small portion of a serial story. Low v. Ward, 37 L. J., Ch. 841; L. R. 6 Eq. 415; 16 W. R. 1114.

A proprietor of an encyclopædia, who employs a person to write an article for publication in that work, cannot, without the writer's consent, publish an article in a separate form, or otherwise than in the encyclopædia, unless the article was written on the terms that the copyright therein should belong to the proprietor of the encyclopædia for all purposes. Hereford (Bishop) v. Griffin, 16 Sim. 190; 17 L. J., Ch. 210; 12 Jur. 255.

—— When Vesting.]—Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, actual payment for an article written for a periodical work is a condition precedent to the vesting of the copyright, in the article, in the proprietor of the work; a contract for payment is not sufficient. Richardson v. Gilbert, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 336; 20 L. J., Ch. 553; 15 Jur. 389.

To enable the proprietor of a newspaper to sue in respect of a piracy of any article therein, he must show, not merely that the author of the article has been paid for his services, but that it has been composed on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor. Walter v. Howe, 50 L. J., Ch. 621; 17 Ch. D. 708; 44 L. T. 727; 29 W. R. 776.

—— Implied Agreement as to.]—By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, when a proprietor of any periodical work shall employ any person to compose any article, and the same shall have been composed on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, the copyright shall be the property of such proprietor:—Held, that these terms need not be expressed, but may be implied. Sweet v. Benning, 16 C. B. 459; 24 L. J., C. P. 175; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 3 W. R. 519.

Where an author is employed by the proprietor of a periodical to write for it articles on certain terms as to price, but without any mention of the copyright, it is to be inferred that the copyright is to belong to such proprietor.

Position of Editor.]—The name of the editor appearing upon the title-page forms no part of the title; and a court of equity refused to restrain, by injunction, the proprietors of a journal from omitting the publication of the editor's name on the title-page, although the agreement between the proprietors and editor provided that the title of the journal should not be altered without mutual consent. Crookes v. Petter, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1131; 3 L. T. 225.

Without determining the extent to which the owners of the copyright in a journal are justified in interfering with the editor in his editorial capacity, where the remuneration of the editor depends on the success of the journal, a court of equity refused to restrain the proprietors from altering articles proposed to be inserted by the editor, or inserting others contrary to his wish, it being the province of a jury to determine the amount of damage, if any, which the editor sustained by reason of the conduct of the proprietors. Ib.

Where publishers of a magazine employ and pay an editor, and the editor employs and pays persons for writing articles in the magazine,—Semble, the copyright in such articles is not vested in the publishers under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18. Brown v. Cooke, 16 L. J., Ch. 140; 11 Jur. 77.

Registration of.]—A periodical or magazine must be registered. Henderson v. Maxwell, 46 L. J., Ch. 59; 4 Ch. D. 163, 25 W. R. 66. And see Maxwell v. Hogg, 36 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 2 Ch. 307; 16 L. T. 130; 15 W. R. 467.

A periodical or magazine is a book within the meaning of s. 24 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and its proprietor, if he has, pursuant to s. 19, registered the first number at Stationers Hall, is entitled to restrain the publication without his consent in a separate form of a serial published in successive numbers of the periodical, the copyright of which belongs to him under s. 18, although neither the serial nor the first number containing it has been separately registered. S. C., 46 L. J., Ch. 59; 4 Ch. D. 163; 25 W. R. 66.

Registration under the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict., c. 45, ss. 18 & 19, of the first number of a periodical protects articles contained in subsequent numbers. Ib.

Registration of First Number of Series—"Separately Published."]—An author who has sold to the proprietor of a periodical the right to publish a story in his paper in serial form, and who has agreed not to publish his work elsewhere until the series is completed, is not a "person employed to compose a part of any encyclopædia, review, magazine," &c., under s. 88 of the Copyright Act, 1842, and need not, in order to secure his copyright, republish his work "in a separate form" under the last proviso of that section. Johnson v. Newnes, 63 L. J., Ch. 786; [1894] 3 Ch. 663; 8 R. 500; 71 L. T. 230.

Every part of a published volume which is separate and distinguishable from the other parts and distinguished in the volume itself is a "division or part of a volume separately published" within the meaning of s. 2 of the Copyright Act, 1842. Ib.

The registration of the first number of a work published in serial parts is a sufficient registration of each of the succeeding parts. Ib.

v. Compilations and Translations.

Subject of Copyright.]—A work, partly of compilations and selections from works on the subject, and partly original matter, may be the subject of copyright; and where part is clearly pirated, the court will grant an immediate injunction, although the entire amount of the pirated parts are unascertained. Lewis v. Fullarton, 2 Beav. 6; 8 L. J. Ch. 291; 3 Jur. 669.

Copyright may be either in respect of the matter or the arrangement, but no property can be acquired in any article copied from a prior work.

The person who forms the plan of the work to be composed by the labours of various persons, who employs different writers to contribute to it, and who pays them for their contributions, is the author and proprietor of such a work within the statute of Anne. Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & S. 1; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 90.

Arrangement of questions and answers, however simple in themselves, and on subjects however common, may be the subject of copyright. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

—— Mere Corrections.]—Where a person simply makes corrections in and additions to a work in which he had originally no interest, he acquires a copyright in them, and may bring an action if they are pirated. Carey v. Longman, 1 East, 358; 3 Esp. 273; 6 R. R. 285.

—— Directory of Traders—Headings—Advertisements.]—The headings of a trade directory under which trade advertisements are classified are the subject of copyright. Semble, that the collocation and arrangement of the advertisements generally was, though each single advertisement was not, the subject of copyright. The "terms" referred to in s. 18 of the Copyright Act, 1842, upon which the copyright shall belong to the proprietor, need not be in writing or express, but might be implied from the general nature of the employment and of the business. Sweet v. Benning (16 C. B. 459) approved. Lamb v. Evans, 62 L. J., Ch. 404; [1893] 1 Ch. 218; 2 R. 189; 68 L. T. 131; 41 W. R. 405—C. A.

—— Translation.]—There may be a copyright in a translation, whether produced by personal application and expense, or by gift. Wyatt v. Barnard, 3 Ves. & B. 77; 13 R. R. 141.

Extent of Originality.]—If any person by pains and labour collects and reduces into the form of a systematic course of instruction those questions which he may find ordinary persons asking in reference to the common phenomena of life, with answers to those questions, and explanations of those phenomena, whether such explanations and answers are furnished by his own recollection of his former general reading, or out of works consulted by him for the express purpose, the reduction of questions so collected, with such answers, under certain heads and in a scientific form, is sufficient to constitute an original work, of which the copyright will be protected. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

But another person may originate another work in the same general form, provided he does so from his own resources, and makes the work he so originates a work of his own by his own labour and industry bestowed upon it. Ib.

If, instead of searching into the common sources and obtaining your subject matter thence, you avail yourself of the labours of your predecessor, adopt his arrangement and questions, or adopt them with a colourable variation, it is an illegitimate use. Ib.

Falsely to deny that you have copied or taken any idea or language from another work is a strong indication of an animus furandi. Ib.

A person may have copyright in tables calculated by himself, even though the very same tables should have been published long before his appeared. Bailey v. Taylor, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 66.

Quære, whether an injunction will be granted to protect a copyright in tables founded on the author's personal calculation of them, when they are of such a nature that the same calculation could be made within a short time by any other person. Ib.

An injunction will not be granted, where, according to the case made by the plaintiff, there has been long acquiescence under the injury against which he at length seeks protection. Ib.

—— Railway and Coach Guide—Appropriation of Independent Labour—Portion only infringed.]—The mere publication in a particular order of time-tables which are to be found in the publications of the various railway companies, is not sufficient to give rise to a claim to copyright. The right may, however, exist in a compilation of information as to coach routes, ferries, and steamers published in the form of an abstract for the use of a particular locality. Leslie v. Young, [1894] A. C. 335; 6 R. 211—H. L. (Sc.)

Although it is not to be disputed that there may be copyright in a compilation or abstract involving independent labour, yet when copyright is claimed in such a work as a compilation of railway time-tables the burden of proof is on the compiler to show clearly that there has been a substantial appropriation of his independent labour before any proceeding on the ground of copyright can be justified. Ib.

If a book depends for its value upon a particular portion, that portion may be treated as an independent work for the purpose of copyright. Ib.

vi. Catalogues and Advertisements.

Catalogues.]—There is copyright in a catalogue, unless it is a mere dry list of names. Hotten v. Arthur, 1 H. & M. 603; 32 L. J., Ch. 771; 9 L. T. 199; 11 W. R. 934.

It is no defence to say that the pirated work is not offered for sale itself, but merely used to promote the sale of the books mentioned in it. Ib.

Where a party sets up a case that his work is a fair compilation from a number of others, and not a mere copy from any one, it is of the highest importance that he should produce his original manuscript. Ib.

—— Illustrated.]—The plaintiffs, who were upholsterers, published an illustrated catalogue of articles of furniture which were duly registered under the Copyright Acts as a book. The illustrations were engraved from original drawings made by artists employed by the plaintiffs, but the book contained no letterpress of such a description as to be the subject of copyright, and it was not published for sale but was used by the plaintiffs as an advertisment. The defendants published an illustrated catalogue, many of the illustrations in which were copied from those in the plaintiffs' book:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from publishing any catalogue containing illustrations copied from the plaintiffs' book. Overruling Cobbett v. Woodward, infra Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 52 L. J., Ch. 67; 21 Ch. D. 369; 47 L. T. 589; 31 W. R. 70—C. A.

There is no copyright in a descriptive advertisement, illustrated or otherwise, of articles which any one may sell. Cobbett v. Woodward, 41 L. J., Ch. 656; L. R. 14 Eq. 407; 27 L. T. 27; 20 W. R. 963.

When an upholsterer, who had published an illustrated furnishing guide with engravings of the articles of furniture which he sold, and descriptive remarks thereon, filed a bill to restrain another upholsterer from publishing, for the purposes of his own trade, a similar work in which many of the engravings and portions of the letterpress of the first work were alleged to be copied:—Held, that he could not be restrained by injunction from so copying the illustrations or such part of his work as was not original but merely descriptive of his stock, or of common articles of furniture; but that, the latter's work being a flagrant imitation of the former's, he could be allowed no costs. Ib.

A tradesman who employs another for remuneration to compile a book of designs for him is himself entitled to copyright in the book. A book in the nature of an advertising catalogue may be the subject of copyright. Grace v. Newman, 44 L. J., Ch. 298; L. R. 19 Eq. 623; 23 W. R. 517.

A cemetery stonemason employed and remunerated a person to collect monumental designs, and published a book containing sketches of such designs, with scarcely any letterpress:—Held, that he had copyright in the book, and was entitled to an injunction to restrain the publication of designs copied from it. Ib.

vii. Maps, Lectures and Other Matter.

Maps.]—A bird's-eye view of a seat of war is a book within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, and must be registered. Stannard v. Lee, 40 L. J., Ch. 489; L. R. 6 Ch. 346; 19 W. R. 615.

C. published a book of roads of Great Britain, comprising Patterson's book (to the copyright of which he was not entitled), with improvements and additions obtained by actual survey and otherwise; an injunction to restrain a publication of an edition of Patterson, comprising C.'s improvements and additions, was refused in equity. Carey v. Fadin, 5 Ves. 24.

There is no copyright in a general subject, though from its nature the consequence may be close resemblance and considerable interference, as in the case of maps and road-books. Wilkins v. Aikin, 17 Ves. 427; 11 R. R. 118.

—— Chart or Plan—Sleeve Chart.]—A sleeve chart, which consists of a piece of cardboard in the shape of a sleeve with certain curved lines and figures printed upon it, is not the subject of copyright under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Hollinrake v. Truswell, 63 L. J., Ch. 719; [1894] 3 Ch. 420; 7 R. 568; 71 L. T. 419—C. A.

Lectures.]—Before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 1, an injunction would be granted against third persons publishing lectures orally delivered, who had procured the means of publishing those lectures from parties who had attended the oral delivery of them. Abernethy v. Hutchinson, 1 H. & T. 28; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 209.

Where the court is called upon to restrain a publication, on the ground that it is a piracy of a composition which has been substantially reduced into writing, it is the duty of the court to see that the plaintiff produces his written composition. Ib.

N., an author and a lecturer upon various scientific subjects, delivered from memory, though it was in manuscript, a lecture at the Working Men's College upon "The Dog as the Friend of Man." The audience were admitted to the room by tickets issued gratuitously by the committee of the college. P., the author of a system of shorthand writing, and the publisher of works intended for instruction in the art of shorthand writing, attended the lecture, and took notes, nearly verbatim, in shorthand, of it, and afterwards published the lecture in his monthly periodical, "The Phonographic Lecturer." On motion for an injunction to restrain the publication:—Held, that where a lecture of this kind is delivered to an audience limited and admitted by tickets, the understanding between the lecturer and the audience is that, whether the lecture has been committed to writing beforehand or not, the audience are quite at liberty to take the fullest notes for their own personal purposes, but they are not at liberty to use them afterwards for the purpose of publishing the lecture for profit; and the publication of the lecture in shorthand characters is not regarded as being different in any material sense from any other; and injunction accordingly. Abernethy v. Hutchinson (1 H. & T. 28) discussed. Nicols v. Pitman, 53 L. J., Ch. 552; 26 Ch. D. 374; 50 L. T. 254; 32 W. R. 631; 48 J. P. 549.

A professor of a university who delivers orally in his class-room lectures which are his own literary composition does not communicate such lectures to the whole world, so as to entitle any one to republish them without the permission of the author. Caird v. Sime, 57 L. J., P. C. 2; 12 App. Cas. 326; 57 L. T. 634; 36 W. R 199—H. L. (Sc.).

The appellant, a professor of a Scottish university, delivered lectures in his class-room as part of his ordinary course to students of the university, who were admitted on payment of the prescribed fees:—Held (Lord FitzGerald dissenting), that such delivery of the lectures was not equivalent to a communication of them to the public at large, and that the appellant was entitled to restrain other persons from publishing them without his consent. Ib.

Report of Engineer.]—An engineer made a report upon a mining property and handed it to a member of a syndicate for bringing out a company. It was agreed that the report should be printed and shown to the syndicate. If the company was formed, and the report published in the prospectus, the engineer was to receive 1,000*l.*, but if the company was not formed, the report was to be returned to him. The proposed company was abandoned. The defendant company took up the property, and having obtained a printed copy of the report, made use of it in the prospectus issued by them:—Held, that the property in the report belonged to the engineer, and that he was entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing it. Kenrick v. Danube Collieries Co., 39 W. R. 473.

Specifications.]—There is no copyright in the specifications of patents. Wyatt v. Barnard, 3 Ves. & B. 77; 13 R. R. 141. But see Newton v. Cowie, 12 Moore, 457; 4 Bing. 234; 29 R. R. 541; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 159.

Voyage of Discovery under Crown.]—A voyage of discovery having been executed, and a narrative of it prepared under the orders of the crown, the narrative is the property of the crown; but on a bill in equity by a publisher, authorised by the secretary of the Board of Admiralty to publish such a narrative, the profits remaining at their disposition, an injunction restraining publication by a stranger was dissolved. Nicol v. Stockdale, 3 Swans. 687.

Calendars.]—Though copyright cannot, as such, subsist in an East India calendar, as a general subject, any more than in a map, chart or series of chronology, it may in the individual work; and where it can be traced that another work upon the same subject is not an original compilation, but a mere copy with colourable variations, it will be protected by injunction. Matthewson v. Stockdale, 12 Ves. 270.

An injunction was granted against pirating a court calendar, the individual work creating a copyright, though the general subject was common. Longman v. Winchester, 16 Ves. 269.

Album.]—An album for holding photographs, with pictorial borders containing views of castles, with short descriptions attached, is not a "book" within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 1, so as to be capable of obtaining copyright for the contents. Schove v. Schmincke, 55 L. J., Ch. 892; 33 Ch. D. 546; 55 L. T. 212; 34 W. R. 700.

Barometer's Face.]—The face of a barometer, displaying special letterpress, held not to be capable of registration under the Copyright Act, 1842, as not being within s. 2, "a book separately published." Davis v. Comitti, 54 L. J., Ch. 419; 52 L. T. 539.

Reprints.]—A person may, by publishing a reprint of a work of which the copyright has expired, with notes and illustrations from other works, create a new copyright, which will be protected from piracy; and it is a piratical use of such copyright work to borrow therefrom any considerable number of the illustrations. Black v. Murray, 9 Scotch Sessions Cases, 3rd series, 341.

Right to Republish.]—The proprietor of a copyright does not lose his right of republication, although the book may have been out of print and obsolete, and of little or no value, for any number of years. Weldon v. Dicks, 48 L. J., Ch. 201; 10 Ch. D. 247; 39 L. T. 467; 27 W. R. 639.

Before 8 Anne, c. 19.]—An author whose works had been published more than twenty-eight years before the passing of 8 Anne, c. 19, was not entitled to the copyright for life. Brooke v. Clarke, 1 B. & Ald. 396.

b. Registration.

i. In general.

Before Publication.]—No copyright can be acquired by registration at Stationers' Hall until publication of the work registered. Maxwell v. Hogg, 36 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 2 Ch. 307; 16 L. T. 130; 15 W. R. 467.

The mere declaration of an intention, however public, to publish a magazine or any manufactured article bearing a particular name or mark, notwithstanding that such declaration is accompanied by expenditure in connection with the intended article, cannot create a right to the exclusive use of such name or mark as a trade mark. Ib.

H., in 1863, registered an intended new magazine to be called Belgravia. In 1866, such magazine not having appeared, M., in ignorance of what H. had done, projected a magazine with the same name, and incurred considerable expense in preparing it, and extensively advertising it in August and September as about to appear in October. H., knowing of this, made hasty preparations for bringing out his own magazine before that of M. could appear, and in the meantime accepted an order from M. for advertising M.'s magazine on the covers of his own publications, and the first day on which he informed M. that he objected to his publishing a magazine under that name was the 25th of September, on which day the first number of H.'s magazine appeared. M.'s magazine appeared in October:—Held, that M.'s advertisements and expenditure did not give him any exclusive right to the use of the name Belgravia, and that he could not restrain H. from publishing a magazine under the same name, the first number of which appeared before M. had published his. Ib.

Held, also, that H.'s registering the title of an intended publication could not give him a copyright in that name, and that he had not acquired any right to restrain M. from using the name, as being H.'s trade mark. Ib.

The proprietor of a book or periodical has no copyright therein under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, if it is not actually published at the date of its registration at Stationers' Hall. Henderson v. Maxwell, 46 L. J., Ch. 891; 5 Ch. D. 892; 25 W. R. 455.

Therefore, where the proprietor of a periodical had registered its first number at Stationers' Hall before publication, although he had then entered on the register the date of its intended publication, which was the actual date:—Held, that having regard to ss. 13 and 18, and to the form of requiring entry of proprietorship in the schedule to the act, he was not entitled to copyright in the periodical nor to an injunction to restrain its alleged infringement. Ib.

No copyright is acquired by the registration of a book before its actual publication. Correspondent Newspaper Co. v. Saunders, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 540; 12 L. T. 540; 13 W. R. 804.

After Infringement.]—The registration of a copyright under the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 24, is not necessary to the existence of the copyright, but is only necessary to perfect the right to sue; and the registration need not have been entered before the alleged infringement. Goubaud v. Wallace, 36 L. T. 704; 25 W. R. 604.

Issue of Writ on the same day as Registration.]—The issue of a writ in an action for the infringement of a copyright on the same day, but subsequently to the registration of such copyright under the Copyright Act, 1842, sufficiently complies with s. 24 of that statute, so as to enable the person making the registration to sue in respect of the infringement. Warne v. Lawrence, 54 L. T. 371; 34 W. R. 452.

Registration under Act of 1842, only.]—The proprietor of a newspaper registered as a serial publication under the Copyright Act, 1842, can sue in respect of his copyright in matter published in his paper; though neither the name of the proprietor nor the title of the paper is registered under the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881. Cate v. Devon and Exeter Constitutional Newspaper Co., 58 L. J., Ch. 288; 40 Ch. D. 500; 60 L. T. 672; 37 W. R. 487.

Magazine, First Number of—What must be Registered.]—Registration of a weekly periodical before any part of it had been published is not a good registration; but the subsequent registration of the first number of the tale was a good registration to enable the proprietor to sue in respect of infringement of copyright in the title of the tale, supposing such copyright to exist. Dicks v. Yates, 50 L. J., Ch. 809; 18 Ch. D. 76; 44 L. T. 660—C. A.

A periodical or magazine is a book within the meaning of s. 24 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and its proprietor, if he has, pursuant to s. 19, registered the first number at Stationers' Hall, is entitled to restrain the publication without his consent in a separate form of a serial published in successive numbers of the periodical, the copyright of which belongs to him under s. 18, although neither the serial nor the first number containing it has been separately registered. Henderson v. Maxwell, 46 L. J., Ch. 59; 4 Ch. D. 163; 25 W. R. 66.

When unnecessary [Parts Registered.]—An infringement of the registered copyright of the music of an opera may be committed where the opera itself has not been published, and so no copy of it could be deposited; and where that music having been made the subject of two "arrangements," one without the voice, another for the voice and piano, those arrangements having been published, the infringer has used them for his own production. In such a case the question of what was intended to be registered will be considered with reference to all the parts of the register, and if certain portions of the forms of registry are, in the particular case, unnecessary and unmeaning, the introduction of them will not affect those portions of the register which are correct. Fairlie v. Boosey, 48 L. J., Ch. 697; 4 App. Cas. 711; 41 L. T. 73; 28 W. R. 4.

Description of Author.]—The author and proprietor of copyright in a song, in the entry at Stationers' Hall, describing his place of abode as 65, Oxford Street, he being in America at the time of the publication, and having no place of abode in England, but 65, Oxford Street, being the address of his publishers, is a sufficient description. Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 182.

Rectification of Register — Person "Aggrieved."]—Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. s. 14, which gives power to make an order to vary an entry in the register of copyright under that act upon the application of any person who "shall deem himself aggrieved by any" such "entry," the court made an order varying an entry in a register of copyright upon the application of the person who had caused the entry to be made. Poulton, Ex parte, 53 L. J., Q. B. 320; 32 W. R. 648.

Expunging Entry—Persons "Aggrieved."]—Upon an application under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 14, to expunge entries in the register at Stationers' Hall, representing A. to be the proprietor of the liberty of performing certain songs published before the act, it appeared that the applicants, who were music-publishers, claimed under a general grant of the copyright in the songs made by the composer after the act, and that A. claimed under a subsequent grant by the composer which purported to convey separately the right of performing them. A., under colour of this grant, had threatened to take proceedings against persons performing the songs without his consent:—Held, that the application to expunge the entries must be granted; for the applicants were "aggrieved" by the existence of the entries, which were calculated to prejudicially affect their literary copyright in the songs by diminishing the number of copies sold. Hutchins & Romer, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Q. B. 29; 4 Q. B. D. 90; 39 L. T. 396; 27 W. R. 261. See S. C. in C. A., 48 L. J., Q. B. 505; 4 Q. B. D. 483; 41 L. T. 144; 27 W. R. 857—C. A.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 14, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 5, "if any person shall deem himself aggrieved" by any entry in the register, he may apply to one of the superior courts for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied. W. being charged under the acts, on the complaint of G., with the infringement of his copyright in a picture, a certified copy of the entry in the register of the assignment to G. was given in evidence to prove G.'s title. W. having been convicted, applied to the court to expunge the entry, on the ground that G. had not a good title to the copyright; W. did not set up any title in himself:—Held, that W. was not a person aggrieved within the meaning of the statutes. Graves, In re, L. R. 4 Q. B. 715; 20 L. T. 877; 17 W. R. 1018.

Entry for Purposes of Action.]—Before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, a plaintiff instituted proceedings in equity for an alleged infringement of his copyright, and an issue had been directed, whereupon he caused the entry to be made, and commenced an action:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to have the entry expunged; but the court discharged the rule for that purpose, on the plaintiff undertaking not to use the entry as evidence at the trial. Chappell v. Purday, 1 D. & L. 458; 12 M. & W. 303; 13 L. J., Ex. 7.

Semble, that the court has no power to restore an entry when once it has been struck out. Ib.

Upon a rule nisi to expunge three entries made in the registry on the ground that they would be primâ facie evidence in an action against the defendant for publishing the pieces of music mentioned in them, alleged to be the copyright of the plaintiff, the court (the plaintiff refusing to consent not to use the entries on the trial) declined to expunge the entries, but directed an issue whether there was a copyright in the music, and whether the plaintiff was the proprietor of the copyright, on the trial of which the entries should not be used; and ordered that the rule should be enlarged until the trial of the issue. Davidson, Ex parte, 2 El. & Bl. 577; 18 Jur. 57.

The court will not exercise its power to expunge an entry of proprietorship of copyright in the registry, unless it is clearly and unequivocally shewn that it is false, or vary it, unless satisfied by affidavit that in so doing the court would make a true entry; repudiating the power exercised by the Court of Queen's Bench in the above case. Davidson, Ex parte, 18 C. B. 297; 25 L. J., C. P. 237; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1024; 4 W. R. 593.

A., the author of a song, wishing to preserve his copyright therein in America as well as in England, caused his agents simultaneously to register it in New York and London. In the entry in the registry, the name of the London agent was inserted by mistake as the proprietor of the copyright. A., when he discovered this, procured such entry to be altered under a judge's order, by inserting his own name as proprietor in lieu of that of his agent, and he afterwards brought an action for piracy against B., who had published the song in this country before the entry had been altered. B. claimed no title in himself to the copyright, but relied on such prior publication, and also on an alleged publication in America anterior to that stated in the original registration. The court refused, on the application of B., to expunge or vary such altered entry in the registry, because it did not clearly appear that there had been a prior publication in America, or that the entry was untrue. Ib.

An entry having been improperly made on the registry the court granted a rule to vary or expunge it. Bastow, Ex parte, 14 C. B. 631.

ii. Name of Publisher.

Whose Name must be Registered.]—H. agreed with T. to edit a translation of a foreign work, and compose a biographical sketch of the author, and give notes of his own. It was intended that T. should have the sole right of multiplying copies of the work, and the work was published before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. There was no assignment of the copyright from H. to T. After T.'s death, his widow, with H.'s knowledge and assent, registered the copyright in her own name under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45:—Held, that the copyright was in T.'s widow and not in H. Hazlitt v. Templeman, 13 L. T. 593.

After H.'s assent to T.'s widow registering the copyright in her own name, she paid to him money, and he received from her books on the publication of a fresh edition on the same terms as stipulated in the agreement between H. and her husband in his lifetime. H., on three occasions, claimed remuneration on those terms, and she did not repudiate all liability, but disputed the quantum merely:—Held, evidence from which the jury might infer an agreement by the widow to remunerate H. on the same scale as in the agreement with her husband in consideration of his assenting to her registering the copyright in her own name. Ib.

In registering the copyright of a book at Stationers' Hall, it is sufficient to enter the first publisher, under the trade name of the firm, and the actual proprietor of the copyright at the time of registration, without stating who the first proprietor was, or how the copyright devolved upon the present proprietor. Weldon v. Dicks, 48 L. J., Ch. 201; 10 Ch. D. 247; 39 L. T. 467; 27 W. R. 639.

Registration of a copyright is bad, if the name entered as that of "the publisher" is not that of the first publisher. Weldon v. Dicks (10 Ch. D. 247) followed. Coote v. Judd, 23 Ch. D. 727; 48 L. T. 205; 31 W. R. 423.

In an action for infringement of copyright, where objections to the registration are not delivered within the prescribed time, the action may nevertheless be dismissed if a defect in the registration is brought out from the plaintiff's evidence. Ib.

To entitle any one but the author of a literary work to register it at Stationers' Hall, there must be an absolute assignment of the copyright. Bastow, Ex parte, 14 C. B. 631.

Where copyright belongs to A. it cannot be properly registered in the name of his nominee or agent unless the property is actually vested in such person as trustee for A. The conjunction in such a case of the unregistered proprietor as co-plaintiff with the improperly registered nominee or agent will not render an action for infringement sustainable. London Printing and Publishing Alliance v. Cox (60 L. J., Ch. 707; [1891] 3 Ch. 291) discussed and followed. Petty v. Taylor, 66 L. J., Ch. 209; [1897] 1 Ch. 465; 75 L. T. 545; 45 W. R. 299.

—— Before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45.]—An author, whose work was pirated before the expiration of 28 years (under 54 Geo. 3, c. 156) from the first publication of it, might maintain an action for damages against the offending party, although the work was not entered at Stationers' Hall, and although it was first published without the name of the author affixed. Beckford v. Hood, 7 Term Rep. 620; 4 R. R. 527. See also Fairlie v. Boosey, ante, col. 471.

iii. Date of Publication.

Rule—What Entry Sufficient.]—In registering a copyright in the registry-book of the Stationers' Company in pursuance of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 13, it is not sufficient to enter the month in which the first publication takes place; but the day of first publication must be stated. Mathieson v. Harrod, 38 L. J., Ch. 139; L. R. 7 Eq. 270; 19 L. T. 639; 17 W. R. 99.

To entitle the proprietor of a book or periodical to maintain an action for infringement of copyright, it is necessary that the entry on the register at Stationers' Hall, under s. 13 of the Copyright Act, 1842, should not only state the precise title of the work, but also the "time of first publication." It is not sufficient to enter the month and the year only; but the actual day of the month must be given, in order that it may be known when the term of forty-two years "from the first publication," allowed by s. 3 of that statute as the period of copyright, commenced and will terminate. To entitle the proprietor of a book or periodical to maintain an action for infringement of copyright in respect of articles, reports, or other contributions supplied to him by persons employed and paid by him for that purpose, he must, under s. 18 of the Act, prove that he has actually paid for such articles, reports, or other contributions. Collingridge v. Emmott, 57 L. T. 864.

Errors.]—If the date of the first publication is erroneously stated in the registration, the registration is of no effect, and no suit can be brought to restrain the infringement of the copyright. Page v. Wisden, 20 L. T. 435; 17 W. R. 483.

Where in registering the proprietorship of a copyright, either the date of the first publication or the name of the publisher, is incorrectly entered, a subsequent assignment by entry in the book of registry is invalid. Low v. Routledge, 33 L. J., Ch. 717; L. R. 1 Ch. 42; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 10 L. T. 838; 12 W. R. 1069.

In an action to restrain an infringement of copyright the statement of defence alleged undue registration, and that the registration was void by reason of the wrong date of publication having been given:—Held, that the invalidity of the registration pleaded was confined to invalidity by reason of a wrong date, and did not extend to a misstatement of the name of the publisher. Collotts v. Goode, 47 L. J., Ch. 370.

—— False Registration.]—A court of equity will afford no relief against an alleged piracy of the title of a magazine where the proprietor has made a false registration as to the date of its publication. Maxwell v. Hogg, Hogg v. Maxwell, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 916; 15 L. T. 204; 15 W. R. 84. Affirmed, 36 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 2 Ch. 307; 16 L. T. 130; 15 W. R. 467.

When a proposed magazine with a particular title has been registered, and, no number of the magazine having yet been published, the entry of date of publication is filled in with the date at which the registration is effected; and no number of the magazine is, in fact, published till some time after the date of registration, the registration is wholly ineffective, and a court of equity will not grant an injunction against another person who publishes a magazine with the same title, whether he commences publishing before or after the party who seeks the injunction. Ib.

Application of Rule.]—Offenbach composed, in Paris, the music of an opera called "Vert-Vert." S., by his permission, made two "arrangements" of the music, one for the piano without, the other for the piano with, the voice. The opera was produced at the Opera Comique, in Paris, on the 10th of March, 1869, but was never, as a whole, printed. The two arrangements were printed in a book published in Paris at 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, on the 28th of March, 1869. B. became the assignee of the music of the opera, and also of the arrangements. He sought to register them in England. He filled up the statutory forms required for that purpose. One column of those forms had, in the lower portion, the heading, "Time and place of first representation," and the words, "Théâtre Impérial de l'Opera Comique, Paris, France, 10th March, 1867," but the upper portion of the same column had the words, "Time and place of first publication," under which were the figures and words, "28th March, 1869. 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, Paris, France." The form relating to the assignment of the music of the opera was correct in the first two columns, but in the third, under the heading, "Assignee of copyright," were, first of all, the name and residence of B., and then the words, "as assignee of the copyright in the music of the said book, and also of the right of publicly performing such music." The written but unpublished music of the opera was not deposited at Stationers' Hall; the "book" containing the pianoforte arrangements was deposited there. F. produced a dramatic representation, calling it "Vert-Vert, music by Offenbach," the music being taken from the arrangements, but the words were supplied by English writers:—Held, that there had been a sufficient registration of the music of the opera, and that the registration was not affected by the reference to the "book" of the arrangements, and that F. had been guilty of an infringement of B.'s rights. Fairlie v. Boosey, 48 L. J., Ch. 697; 4 App. Cas. 711.

Evidence.]—A., being in New York, and wishing to publish a song there and in London simultaneously, entered into an agreement for an assignment of the American copyright to a publisher in New York:—Held, that a receipt for the purchase-money was no evidence of the assignment; and also that the date on the title-page (as required by the American law) was not conclusive evidence of the time of publication in New York. Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 182.

Reprint with Additions—Patent Alleged.]—Where the date of the first publication of an illustrated catalogue, being a reprint with additions of catalogues duly registered in 1880 and 1882, was given on registration as the 22nd June, 1885:—Held, that it was a correct statement as to the first publication of the new pages, and that the description in the catalogue of the articles as "patent," subsequent to the expiration of the patent, on the 31st July, 1885, did not take away the plaintiff's copyright in the part of the catalogue which was correctly stated, and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to prevent any further publication of books by the defendant, so far as they contained an infringement of the copyright of the plaintiff in his illustrated catalogue of Aug. 1880, or in the additions made to that catalogue in the edition of 1885. Hayward v. Lely, 56 L. T. 418.

Non-registration of First Edition — Registration of Subsequent Edition — Reprint of Former Edition.]—The plaintiff in an action for infringement of copyright in a book, the first edition of which was published in November, 1881, had not, before commencing such action, registered at Stationers' Hall either the first or a second edition which he had subsequently published; but he had registered a third edition which was in fact a reprint of the first edition.

describing it in the entry as a third edition, and giving the time of the first publication as the 22nd of April, 1885, which was the date at which the third edition was published :—Held, that the plaintiff had not truly stated the time of the first publication of his book within the meaning of s. 13 of the Copyright Act, 1842, and consequently had not caused entry to be made of his book pursuant to the act, and was precluded by s. 24 from maintaining and action for infringement of copyright until he had made due and correct entry pursuant to s. 13. Thomas v. Turner, 56 L. J., Ch. 56; 33 Ch. D. 292; 55 L. T. 534; 35 W. R. 177—C. A.

c. Agreements between Authors and Publishers.

Personal Nature of.]—If an author undertakes to compose a book, and dies before completing it, his executors are discharged from the contract; for the undertaking is merely personal in its nature, and by the intervention of the author's death has become impossible to be performed. Marshall v. Broadhurst, 1 Tyr. 349; 1 C. & J. 403; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 105.

So, if the author becomes a bankrupt, his assignees have no power to compel him to finish or complete the work. Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 343; 11 L. J., Ex. 138.

Not to bring out New Edition—Whether Implied.]—An authoress entered into a verbal agreement with a publisher that he should publish a work at his own expense, and pay her a royalty on the copies sold. The work was accordingly published, but, before all the copies were sold, she arranged with another publisher to bring out a second edition of the work :—Held, that no agreement could be implied on the part of the authoress not to bring out another edition until all the first edition was sold, and that a suit against her and the second publisher to restrain such publication could not be sustained. Warne v. Routledge, 43 L. J., Ch. 604; L. R. 18 Eq. 497; 30 L. T. 857; 22 W. R. 750.

Semble, that a wife, entitled to the copyright of a work for her separate use, may enter into such contract with a publisher for its publication as to bind herself during a definite period not to grant a licence to publish the work to any other person, and such a contract would be enforceable against a licensee with notice. Ib.

Right to bring out Rival Work.]—The plaintiff purchased the copyright of and the right to use the name of the defendant in the publication of a work called "Becton's Christmas Annual," and the defendant agreed to give his whole time to the service of the plaintiff, and not to engage in any other business :—Held, that the defendant must be restrained from advertising a rival work. Ward v. Beeton, L. R. 19 Eq. 207; 23 W. R. 533.

Licence to Publish, or Sale.]—R., an author, agreed with B., a publisher, that he should publish, at his own expense and risk, a work named W., and after deducting from the produce of the sale all expenses and certain allowances, the profits remaining of every edition that should be printed were to be divided equally between them; the books to be accounted for at trade price, unless it was thought advisable to dispose of any at a lower price, which was to be left to the discretion of B. :—Held, first, that this was a licence to publish, and not a parting with the copyright. Reade v. Bentley, 3 Kay & J. 271; 27 L. J., Ch. 254; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 82; 6 W. R. 240. And see 4 Kay & J. 656.

Held, secondly, that B. could at any time put an end to the agreement by refusing to publish any more. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the form, type, price, time, number, &c., of every edition were left to the sole judgment and discretion of B. Ib.

—— "Edition."]—Held, fourthly, that "edition," meant every quantity of books put forth to the bookselling trade and to the world at one time by B.; and that when the advertisements, the printing, and other well-known expenses and acts by a publisher bringing out such quantity of copies in the ordinary way are closed, that constitutes the completion of the edition, whether the copies are taken from fixed or movable plates or types, and whether the types or plates are broken up or not, and whether all the copies taken are given forth and advertised for sale, or retained and stored in the warehouse of the publisher. Ib.

—— Right to Determine.]—Held, fifthly, that on the completion of any edition, R. had a right to put an end to the agreement between himself and B., by notice given to B. before any expense had been incurred towards another edition. Ib.

Agreement for Sale of Edition—Interference by Author in Sale.]—S. entered into a contract with the author of a work, which had already passed through nine editions, to purchase from him and to sell to the public at a fixed price, a tenth edition, consisting of 2,500 copies :—Held, that he had obtained a right in the copyright of the work until he should have sold off the tenth edition; that, during such time he had bound himself to sell the book at the fixed price, and the author would be bound not to interfere in the sale. Sweet v. Cater, 11 Sim. 572; 5 Jur. 38.

Held, also, after examination by the court of the two books, that there had been such an abstraction of matter from S.'s work as exceeded the limits of fair quotation; and that, though the pirated passages might be contained in the prior editions, in which the author had the entire copyright, yet that being also incorporated in the tenth edition, S. was entitled to an injunction. Ib.

—— For Limited Period—Subsequent Sale.]—An author contracted with a printer and publisher for the copyright and sole right of sale for four years, from 15th March, 1854, of a book written by the author. The publisher printed three editions of the work previously to the expiration of the four years in March, 1858, but had printed none since :—Held, that an injunction would not lie to restrain the publisher from selling his unsold stock of copies. Howitt v. Hall, 6 L. T. 348; 10 W. R. 381.

Warranty of Copyright.] — The defendant having been applied to by the plaintiff for permission to publish a work, wrote to him as follows :—"You formerly made me an offer of 50*l.* for the exclusive right of publishing for ten years Captain M.'s work, 'Monsieur Violet,' which offer I accepted, and wrote you to that effect. I possess but few of the copyrights of the earlier portions of Captain M.'s works, and they are many of them published in a cheap edition. I will let you know, in a few days those of the works that belong to me that I feel disposed to offer to you; in the meantime I shall be glad to know if you received my last letter accepting your offer for 'Monsieur Violet,' and, if not, whether you still hold the same proposal." The sum of 50*l.* was afterwards paid for which the defendant gave a receipt to the plaintiff, expressed to be "for permission to publish Captain M.'s work, 'Monsieur Violet,' so long as the copyright may endure, that right to be exclusively his own for ten years":—Held, this amounted to an express warranty by the defendant that he had the title to the copyright in question. Sims or Simms v. Marryat, 17 Q. B. 281; 20 L. J., Q. B. 454.

Prior to this transaction, Captain M., by an instrument in writing, not sealed or attested so as to pass the legal copyright, agreed to assign the copyright in "Monsieur Violet" to B. for 300*l.*, with a stipulation that a deed of assignment of the copyright should be executed. The money was duly paid by B.:—Held, that the effect of this was to vest the equitable copyright in B., who would be entitled to a decree in equity for a specific performance of the contract. Ib.

False Representation as to Authorship.]—An author may maintain an action for an injury to his reputation against a publisher of an inaccurate edition of his work, falsely purporting to be executed by him, though the publisher is the owner of the copyright. Archbold v. Sweet, 1 M. & Rob. 62; 5 Car. & P. 219.

Breach of Agreement not to Undersell.]—A., having printed a work, sold 300 copies to B., a bookseller, at 40*s.* a copy, binding himself not to sell to others, in quires, under 48*s.*, and in single copies under 50*s.* a copy, until B.'s 300 were sold, or his consent was obtained. In his letter, which constituted the agreement, he said to B., "I do not expect you to sell under 48*s.* and 50*s.*, but do as you like." When B. had sold a part of the 300 copies, he went into partnership with C., and transferred all his stock at the cost price. He also sold some copies at 45*s.* and 46*s.* A., in contravention of his agreement, sold under the stipulated prices; but, on being threatened with proceedings by B., persuaded D., who had purchased the principal part, to consent to give them back, if it would satisfy B. D. had an interview with B., and told him this. D. said that he understood the arrangement was a settlement of the difference, and that B. went away from the interview perfectly satisfied:—Held, in an action by B. against A. for a breach of the agreement, that neither the underselling by B., nor the transfer of the stock to the partnership, were grounds of a non-suit; but that the arrangement with D. was an answer to the action, if the jury thought that it made an end of the dispute between the parties:—Held, also, that, on the question of damage, it might be considered whether B.'s own underselling had or had not contributed to affect the price of the work in the market. Benning v. Dove, 5 Car. & P. 427.

Lien of Bookseller.]—Semble, where an author agrees with a bookseller to publish his work, and to allow him interest for the money he should advance, and also a share of the profits, the bookseller has a lien on the copyright for his disbursements. Brook v. Wentworth, 3 Anst. 881.

Assignment of Agreement.] — Publishers agreed with an author to print, reprint, and publish a work by him at their own risk, on the terms of dividing equally with him any profits that there might be after payment of all expenses; and that if all the copies should be sold and another edition should be required, the author should make all necessary alterations and additions, and the publishers should print and publish a second and subsequent edition on the same terms. After the publication of the first edition, the firm of the publishers was changed, and the interest of the old firm in the work was in another publisher, with the author's concurrence, the agreement being held to be of a personal nature on both sides, and the benefit of it not assignable by either party without the other's consent. Stevens v. Benning, 6 De G., M. & G. 223; 3 Eq. Rep. 457; 24 L. J., Ch. 153; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 74; 3 W. R. 149.

The joint authors of a book (one of whom composed the letterpress, and the other sketched the drawings from which the illustrations were engraved) entered into a verbal agreement with a firm of publishers, by which the firm were to engrave the illustrations and to print and publish the book. If the publication resulted in a loss the firm were to bear the whole of it; if there was a profit, they were to pay half of it to the authors. The profits were to be ascertained after deducting the cost of the engraving, printing, and publication, but without allowing any sum to the authors for the illustrations and letterpress. The book was published, and the publication resulted in a profit:—Held, that the agreement was merely personal to the individuals then composing the publishers' firm, and that the benefit of it could not, without the consent of the authors, be assigned by the publishers' firm to a firm which had succeeded to their business, but which contained none of the partners of the original firm. The successors of the original firm were accordingly restrained from publishing the book. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673; 12 Ch. D. 886; 41 L. T. 153, 250; 28 W. R. 39.

Discontinuance — Quantum Meruit.] — An author engaging to write a treatise for a periodical publication which is afterwards, and after his work is commenced, abandoned, is entitled to a quantum meruit, without tendering or delivering the treatise. Planché v. Colburn, 1 M. & Scott, 51; 8 Bing. 14; 5 Car. & P. 58.

A. agreed to supply B. with a manuscript of a work, to be printed by the latter, the profits of which were to be equally divided between them:—Held, that B. might maintain an action against A. for refusing to supply manuscript after part of the work had been printed. Gale v. Leckie, 2 Stark. 107; 19 R. R. 692.

Second Agreement Superseding.] — On the 28th of May, 1831, A. agreed with B. for twelve months for the performance of various literary works to be thereafter indited by A., A. to receive from B. for the same, six guineas a week, and not to be at liberty during the twelve months to engage in any publication similar to The Court Journal, mentioned in the agreement. By agreement between the same parties, dated 14th October, 1831, A. agreed to take on himself the various duties of editing the publication called The Court Journal, recited to be the entire property of B., and to devote all his time and attention to the same, except the hours he had already engaged on Saturdays and Mondays, to superintend a paper named. B. was to pay A. 10*l.* a week:—Held, that the first agreement was superseded by the second, so that A. could not recover on the first after the second came into operation. Patmore v. Colburn, 4 Tyr. 840; 1 C. M. & R. 65; 3 L. J., Ex. 314.

Advertising Discontinuance.]—D., being one of the proprietors and the editor of a weekly periodical, called "Household Words," was not, on a dissolution of the partnership, justified in advertising that the publication would be discontinued; for the right to use the name must be sold for the benefit of all the partners, it being part of the partnership assets; but he might advertise the discontinuance of the publication as regarded himself. Bradbury v. Dickens, 27 Beav. 53; 28 L. J., Ch. 667.

Agreement to Report.]—The court of chancery cannot specifically perform an agreement, whereby A. agrees to compose and write reports of cases determined in a court of justice, to be printed and published by a particular individual, for a stipulated remuneration, nor interfere by an injunction to restrain the party from permitting the reports written by him to be published by another person; the remedy, if any, is at law. Clarke v. Price, 2 Wils. C. C. 157; 18 R. R. 159.

—— To Supply part of Book.]—Where the plaintiff had contracted to correct and complete, from materials to be furnished by the defendant, a book which the defendant expressed his intention to write, and agreed also to supply the legal information connected with the subject, for which the plaintiff was to be paid a certain remuneration according to the number of pages the work might contain, the court refused an injunction to restrain the defendant from printing, publishing, or selling the legal part of the work (which the plaintiff had contributed) with any material alteration or omission: and also refused an injunction to restrain the defendant from printing, publishing, or selling the work until he had paid the plaintiff the sum agreed upon for his assistance and contribution; for such payment may be enforced at law, and the title to it is not a ground for the interposition of a court of equity. Cox v. Cox, 11 Hare, 118; 1 Eq. R. 94; 1 W. R. 345.

Yearly Engagement.]—S., a proprietor of a weekly newspaper, by a letter to F., an author, agreed that he should write two tales, extending over one year, at 10*l.* per week for each number, to contain about the same quantity as was sent under a former similar engagement, and to receive the first number on the 22nd April, 1855, and to continue to receive one number weekly during one year, conditionally that he should not write for any other newspaper published at less than 6*d.* He accepted the engagement, received 20*l.* as a deposit, and wrote regularly for some weeks; then went to Paris, sent an abrupt conclusion of a current tale in a small quantity of manuscript, refused to proceed with his engagement with S. and entered into another engagement with C. S. thereupon stopped his payments to F., and employed another author to conclude the half-finished tale:—Held, first, that the engagement was a yearly engagement, and could not be terminated by F. as a weekly engagement. Stiff v. Cassell, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 348.

Held, secondly, that the condition as to F. not engaging elsewhere was valid. Ib.

Implied Agreement as to Copyright.] — By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, when the proprietor of any periodical work shall employ any person to compose any article, and the same shall have been composed on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, the copyright shall be the property of such proprietor:—Held, that these terms need not be expressed, but may be implied. Sweet v. Benning, 16 C. B. 459; 24 L. J., C. P. 175; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 3 W. R. 519.

Where an author is employed by a proprietor of a periodical work for its articles on certain terms as to remuneration, but without any mention of the copyright, it is to be inferred that the copyright is to belong to such proprietor. Ib.

Semble, unless there is a special contract, either express or implied, reserving to the author a qualified copyright, the purchaser of a manuscript is at liberty to alter and deal with it as he thinks proper. Cox v. Cox, 11 Hare, 118; 1 Eq. R. 94; 1 W. R. 345.

Restraint of Trade.]—An agreement by a publisher not to publish in future a magazine of a particular description is analogous to an agreement by a tradesman not to deal in a particular article, and is not void as a too general restraint on trade. Ainsworth v. Bentley, 14 W. R. 630.

If one undertakes to furnish a new history of a country, this is not performed by his furnishing a book, which is a translation of an entire previously existing history, with his own continuations, and some additions. Paton v. Duncan, 3 Car. & P. 336.

Account.]—Semble, a bill will lie for an account by an author against his publisher, where the publisher refuses altogether to render any account; but where a publisher renders an account, and brings an action for the balance due to him, then, in the absence of fraud or misstatement, the court will not allow a suit for an account to be instituted, but will leave the matter to be determined at law. Barry v. Stevens, 31 Beav. 258; 31 L. J., Ch. 785; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 143; 6 L. T. 568; 10 W. R. 822.

Contrary Obligations.]—Upon an action by several for piracy of copyright, it appeared that the defendant had published the work in question, pursuant to the conditions of a cognovit given by him to one of the plaintiffs and P. in an action for not performing an agreement to write the work in question:—Held, a sufficient defence. Sweet v. Archbold, 10 Bing. 133; 3 M. & Scott, 299; 2 L. J., C. P. 204.

—— Restraining Publication of Book in Mutilated Form.]—The plaintiff, an author, moved to restrain the defendant, a publisher, from publishing or selling a certain book otherwise than in the form in which it was prepared by the author, or from representing that the plaintiff was the author of the book published by the defendant. The book was originally published in its complete form in 1886. In 1892 the publisher issued an edition of the book, omitting the preface, table of contents, introduction, bibliographical notice, and index. The ground of the motion was that the publication of the book in a mutilated form caused an injury to the plaintiff's reputation as an author:—Held, that the plaintiff's remedy in law was libel. Lee v. Gibbings, 67 L. T. 263.

Bankrupt Publisher—Property in Copyright.]—A mere question of title between an author and a bankrupt publisher, as to which of them is owner of a portion of a copyright, cannot be decided in a bankruptcy matter; but, semble, where an author allowed the publisher to advertise himself as the owner of the copyright, though it had never been assigned in writing to him, it should be dealt with as the publisher's property in bankruptcy. Curry, In re, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

d. Assignment.

Form.]—An assignment of a copyright must be in writing. Leyland v. Stewart, 46 L. J., Ch. 103; 4 Ch. D. 419; 25 W. R. 225.

The court will interfere by injunction to protect the copyright of the assignee of the author (the reporter of legal decisions), though it appears that, at the time of the alleged piracy, there was not an assignment in writing, and the assignee had a merely equitable title, and that some of the cases were ex relatione; and it will disregard a permission from the author to infringe the copyright, given after he had parted with his equitable title for valuable consideration, and it had appeared upon the title-page of his work that it was printed for the equitable assignee of the copyright. Hodges v. Welsh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 266.

Where in registering the proprietorship of a copyright, pursuant to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, either the date of the first publication or the name of the publisher is incorrectly entered, a subsequent assignment by entry in the book of registry is invalid. Low v. Routledge, 33 L. J., Ch. 717; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 10 L. T. 838; 12 W. R. 1069.

Where the assignees, by entry of a copyright, the proprietorship of which was thus incorrectly entered, filed a bill to restrain infringement of the copyright, a demurrer thereto was allowed, on the ground that the assignees had no title. Ib.

Where a copyright has been assigned by the registered proprietor, otherwise than in the method provided by s. 13 of the Copyright Act, 1842—namely, by an entry of such assignment in the Registry Book of the Stationers' Company—the assignee must, before he can, as proprietor, maintain an action for infringement, be registered under s. 24. "Proprietor" in s. 24 includes not merely the original proprietor, but all persons who have taken by assignment otherwise than under s. 13. Dictum of Cockburn, C. J., in Wood v. Boosey (36 L. J., Q. B. 103, at p. 110; L. R. 2 Q. B. 340, at pp. 351, 352) not followed. Liverpool General Brokers Association v. Commercial Press Telegram Bureaux, 66 L. J., Q. B. 405; [1897] 2 Q. B. 1; 76 L. T. 292.

A. agreeing with B. "to let B. have" a particular drama in discharge of 10*l.* owing by A. to B. is a complete assignment to B. of A.'s whole property in the drama. Lacy v. Toole, 15 L. T. 512.

C., the composer of ten songs, assigned the copyright in them in 1843, by deed, to D. & M. The interest of D. & M. vested in H. & R. In 1878 C. purported to assign to A. the sole liberty of performing or singing, &c., the musical compositions. A. thereupon registered himself as the sole proprietor of the liberty of performing the compositions:—Held, upon motion by H. & R., that the entry must be expunged, for the second grant was invalid. Hutchins and Romer, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Q. B. 29, 505; 4 Q. B. D. 483; 41 L. T. 144; 27 W. R. 857—C. A.

An author assigned to trustees, subject to a life interest in himself in the present and any new editions, the copyright of certain books, and the copies then on hand, upon trust to permit his son to manage and conduct the printing, publishing, and disposing of the said printed and manuscript books, and the copies thereof:—Held, that the copies printed after the date of the deed, in the lifetime of the father, passed by the assignment. Rippon v. Norton, 2 Beav. 63.

Term of Duration.]—A committee of seven persons on behalf of a religious body compiled a hymn-book, which was registered under 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, as the property of the compilers, but was published by and sold for the benefit of the religious body. No minute of consent having been registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45:—Held, that the term of the copyright had not been extended under that act, but ceased on the death of the last survivor of the seven compilers. Marzials v. Gibbons, 43 L. J., Ch. 774; L. R. 9 Ch. 185; 30 L. T. 666; 22 W. R. 637.

—— Resulting Right.]—Where an author who had sold his copyright, by living more than fourteen years obtained the resulting right for fourteen years more, under 8 Anne, c. 19:—Held, to belong to his assignee, and not to himself. Carnan v. Bowles, 2 Bro. C. C. 80; 1 Cox, 283.

An author having given a work to a publisher, who, by the sale of it, reimbursed his expenses and made considerable profit, cannot, at the end of the first fourteen years, restrain him by injunction from continuing the publication. Rundell v. Murray, Jacob, 311; 23 R. R. 75.

Copies previously Printed.]—In the absence of a special contract to the contrary, the assignor of a copyright is entitled, after the assignment, to continue selling copies of the work printed by him before the assignment and remaining in his possession. Taylor v. Pillow, L. R. 7 Eq. 418.

Under 8 Anne, c. 19, s. 1.]—To entitle a party to maintain an action as assignee for an infringement of the copyright in a song, under 8 Anne, c. 19, s. 1, there must have been an assignment of the copyright by an instrument in writing, attested by two witnesses. Davidson v. Bohn, 6 C. B. 456; 18 L. J., C. P. 15; 12 Jur. 922. S. P., Power v. Walker, 3 M. & S. 7; 4 Camp. 8; 15 R. R. 378.

No assignment of copyright under 8 Anne, c. 19, the benefit of which was claimed by the assignee, although from a foreigner, could be good in this country, unless it was attested by two witnesses. Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815; 3 C. L. R. 625; 24 L. J., Ex. 81; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 615.

There cannot be a partial assignment of copyright. Ib.

A foreign author cannot, by assigning his copyright according to the law of his country, give the assignee a copyright which will be recognised in England so as to entitle the purchaser of it here to the right of exclusive publication. Ib.

(Overruling Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257; 18 L. J., Q. B. 174; 13 Jur. 678; Cocks v. Purday, 5 C. B. 860; 17 L. J., C. P. 273; 12 Jur. 677; and Boosey v. Jefferys, 6 Ex. 580; 20 L. J., Ex. 354; 15 Jur. 540—Ex. Ch.)

Injunction obtained by the assignee of an author, after the expiration of the two terms of years allowed by the statute of Anne, dissolved; the common law right of the author being so extremely doubtful. Osborne v. Donaldson, 2 Eden, 327.

Executory Agreement.]—A. wrote words to an old air, and got his friend D. to compose an accompaniment, and A. agreed in writing with D. to execute a proper assignment of the whole work to him or any person whom he might name. A. accordingly executed a deed of assignment to D. and C. The defendant published a copy of the whole work:—Held, that the agreement to assign was executory, and did not operate as an assignment, so as to render the subsequent deed of assignment inoperative. Leader v. Purday, 7 C. B. 4; 18 L. J., C. P. 97; 12 Jur. 1091.

Attestation.]—If a primâ facie title to the copyright in a book is rebutted, the right may be supported without the production of a formal assignment attested by two witnesses under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Kyle v. Jefferys, 3 Macq. H. L. 611.

A receipt in writing for the price of the copyright operates as an effectual assignment. Ib.

An assignment of copyright made after the 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, and before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, need not be attested. Cumberland v. Copeland, 1 H. & C. 194; 31 L. J., Ex. 353; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 253; 7 L. T. 334; 10 W. R. 581—Ex. Ch.

The 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, repealed, by s. 4, the 8 Anne, c. 19, s. 1, in this particular. Ib.

Pleading.]—Action for the copyright of a play. Plea, non assumpsit:—Held, that it could not be objected that the assignment was not in writing, but that it ought to have been specially pleaded. Barnett v. Glossop, 1 Scott, 621; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 633; 1 Hodges, 94; 4 L. J., C. P. 174.

Acquiescence.]—In an action for pirating a work, evidence that the plaintiff acquiesced in the publication six years ago is no proof of an assignment of the copyright. Latour v. Bland, 2 Stark. 382. e. Infringement.

i. Title.

Hackneyed Phrase—Registration of Part of a Book.]—The plaintiff published in numbers, in a weekly periodical called "Every Week," a tale intituled "Splendid Misery; or, East End and West End," by C. A. Hazlewood. The defendant subsequently commenced issuing in weekly parts, in a newspaper published by him, a tale by Miss Braddon, intituled "Splendid Misery." The plaintiff was registered as the proprietor of "Every Week" before the publication of it began, and after the tale had been completed he had himself registered as the proprietor of "Splendid Misery; or, East End and West End," giving the date of publication of the number of "Every Week" which contained the first number of the tale as the date of the publication of the tale. He then commenced an action to restrain the defendant from continuing his publication of Miss Braddon's tale under the title of "Splendid Misery," and moved for an injunction. Before the motion was made the defendant had altered the title of Miss Braddon's tale, and the motion was ordered to stand over till the trial, the defendant undertaking not to alter the new title in the meantime. The tale was finished under the new title before the trial. It was proved that a novel which once had a large circulation had been published in 1801 under the title of "Splendid Misery," and that second-hand copies could still be met with:—Held, that though the registration of "Every Week" being made before any part of that periodical was published was not a good registration, the subsequent registration of the first number of the tale was a good registration to enable him to sue in respect of infringement of copyright in the title of the tale, supposing such copyright to exist. Dicks v. Yates, 50 L. J., Ch. 809; 18 Ch. D. 76; 44 L. T. 660—C. A.

Semble, that, as a general rule, there cannot be any copyright in the title of a book. Weldon v. Dicks (10 Ch. D. 247), infra, considered. Ib.

But held, that the plaintiff had no copyright in the title "Splendid Misery," for that copyright can only exist in something original, and the mere adopting as a title a hackneyed phrase, which moreover had been used as the title of a novel many years before, and which for anything that appeared might have been copied from that novel, could not give any copyright in that title. Ib.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiff had no title to sue for infringement of copyright, and that as it was clear that the public could not be misled into purchasing the defendant's tale under the belief that it was the same as that of the plaintiff, so that there was no ground for the interference of the court on the principles applicable to trade-marks, the action ought to be dismissed with costs. Ib.

—— "Reason Why."]—A. published a work called "Why and Because," treating of the scientific explanations of various common phenomena of life. B. afterwards published a work on similar subjects, called "The Reason Why," of which A. complained that the name and the plan were suggested by his own work, and the arrangement and phraseology in many instances taken bodily from his work:—Held, first, that there was no such similarity or colourable imitation in the title as to support A.'s claim for an injunction. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

Held, secondly, that the method of communicating information by question and answer being of unknown antiquity, A. could not claim any originality in the plan of his work. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that many of the questions in A.'s book, being the simplest forms in which the questions could be asked, were not the subject of copyright, and could not be the privilege of A. Ib.

—— "Birthday Text Book."]—The publisher of a work which he claimed to have originated, called "The Birthday Scripture Text Book," consisting of a printed diary interleaved, with a blank space opposite each day with a text of Scripture appended, and which was designed as a record of the birthdays of friends:—Held, entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing and selling a work subsequent to the plaintiff's, called "The Children's Birthday Text Book," on the ground that it was an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in the title of his work, as well as a colourable imitation of the same. Mack v. Petter, 41 L. J., Ch. 781; L. R. 14 Eq. 431; 20 W. R. 964.

Position of Name of Author.]—The plaintiffs were the proprietors of a musical work called "Hemy's Royal Modern Tutor for the Pianoforte," but had no exclusive right to the use of the word "Hemy." The defendants, who were proprietors of a musical work called "Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," brought out a new edition of their work, and employed Hemy to revise and re-edit it, and called it "Hemy's New and Revised Edition of Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," and made the word "Hemy" the most prominent word on the title-page:—Held, that the defendants had so used the word "Hemy" on the title-page of their work as to lead the public to believe that in purchasing the defendants' work they were purchasing the plaintiffs' work, and an injunction was granted accordingly. Metzler v. Wood, 47 L. J., Ch. 625; 8 Ch. D. 606; 38 L. T. 544; 26 W. R. 577—C. A.

Difference between Works.]—Copyright in the "title" of a book, as being a material portion of a work, will be protected, although another book published under a similar title may be totally different in form and contents. Weldon v. Dicks, 48 L. J., Ch. 201; 10 Ch. D. 247; 39 L. T. 467; 27 W. R. 639.

Title Similar, but not Misleading.]—The proprietors of a long-established weekly comic periodical called "Punch" moved to restrain the publication of "Punch and Judy," a rival periodical of like character and of the same size as, and somewhat similar appearance to "Punch," but with a different illustration on the cover, and sold at a lower price. Another well-known comic periodical was published weekly under the name of "Judy":—Held, that the adoption of the title, "Punch and Judy," was no infringement of the plaintiff's right to use, and property in, the name "Punch"; and that the general public was not likely to be misled into purchasing the defendant's publication by mistake for that of the plaintiffs; and the motion for an injunction was refused. Bradbury v. Beeton, 39 L. J., Ch. 57; 21 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 33.

Title, "Post-office" Directory.]—The plaintiff was the registered proprietor under the Copyright Act of a directory entitled "The Post-office Directory of the West Riding of Yorkshire," which included the town of Bradford; and since 1852 had published directories for various other country districts, which were all entitled "Post-office" directories. The defendants being about to publish a directory for the town of Bradford, entitled "The Bradford Post-office Directory," but which bore no similarity to the work of the plaintiff in price or appearance, the plaintiff claimed to restrain the defendants from using the word "post-office" as part of the title of their directory:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right to the exclusive use of the word "post-office" as part of the title of a directory for Bradford, either under the Copyright Act, or regarding the use of the word as a property in the nature of a trade-mark, and the action was dismissed. Kelly v. Byles, 48 L. J., Ch. 569; 40 L. T. 623. Affirmed, 49 L. J., Ch. 181; 13 Ch. D. 682; 28 W. R. 585—C. A.

Fraud, whether Necessary.]—A fraudulent intention in infringing copyright is not necessary to entitle the proprietor of the copyright to relief in equity if his right of property has been invaded. Clement v. Maddick, 1 Giff. 98; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 592.

The registered proprietors of "Bell's Life in London and Sporting Chronicle," published weekly, at the price of 5*d*., filed a bill in equity against the proprietors and publishers of a newspaper, called "The Penny Bell's Life and Sporting News," which was published at the price of 1*d*. The evidence showed, that from the similarity of the two names mistakes had occurred, and were likely to occur, on the part of the public, and that inquiries had been made at the office of "Bell's Life in London" for the "Penny Bell's Life." The court granted an injunction to restrain the proprietors of the latter publication from the use of the words "Bell's Life" in the title of their newspaper. Ib.

In 1857, A., being proprietor of a weekly publication, the "London Journal," the price of which was 1*d*., assigned his copyright and interest therein to B. for value, and entered into a covenant with B. not to publish, either alone or in partnership with any other person, any weekly periodical of a nature similar to the "London Journal." In 1859, A. issued an advertisement, announcing the publication by him of a daily newspaper, to be called the "Daily London Journal," and to be sold at 1*d*. B. thereupon filed a bill in equity against A. for an injunction to restrain A. from publishing the "Daily London Journal"; and Wood, V.-C., made an order for an injunction. Upon appeal, Knight Bruce, L. J. (dissentiente Turner, L. J.), confirmed the order for an injunction, upon B. undertaking to abide by any order the court might make as to damages, and to bring an action against A. within one week. Ingram v. Stiff, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 947.

—— In First Publisher.]—To an action for infringing the copyright in a work entitled "Evening Devotions; or, the Worship of God in Spirit and in Truth, for every Day in the Year, from the German of Sturm:" a plea that Sturm was a well-known writer on religious subjects, and that the plaintiff procured H. to write the book in question, as a translation from a work in the German, by Sturm, whereas no such work existed, and, with a view to defraud the public, and obtain a profit to himself, published a title-page and preface to the work, falsely representing it to be the genuine production of Sturm:—Held, that the plea disclosed a transaction, on the part of the plaintiff, in the nature of crimen falsi; that he had no copyright in the work; and that the plea afforded a good defence to the action. Wright v. Tallis, 1 C. B. 893; 14 L. J., C. P. 283; 9 Jur. 946.

Continuations of Works.]—An injunction was granted to restrain the publication of a magazine as a continuation of the plaintiff's magazine, in numbers, and as to communications from correspondents received by the defendant while publishing for the plaintiff, not preventing the publication of an original work of the same nature, and under a similar title. Hogg v. Kirby, 8 Ves. 215; 7 R. R. 30.

The plaintiff became by purchase, in February, 1856, proprietor of a weekly newspaper called "The Britannia," which he subsequently incorporated with another weekly newspaper called "The John Bull," and issued the publication under the title of "The John Bull and Britannia." The plaintiff had not registered his name at the Stamp-office as the proprietor of either newspaper. On the 12th April a notice was inserted in "The Britannia" to the effect that that paper would be united with "The John Bull." On the 19th April the defendant, who had been the printer and publisher of "The Britannia," issued a publication called the "True Britannia," in imitation and as a continuation of "The Britannia." The bill was filed against the defendant as the proprietor of the new newspaper to restrain him from publishing it. The defendant, in his affidavit, said that A. B. was the registered proprietor of the "True Britannia," and that he was the printer and publisher only. On motion for an injunction, the court ordered the defendant to be restrained from printing and publishing, &c., the "True Britannia," or any other newspaper, as a continuation of "The Britannia." Prowett v. Mortimer, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 4 W. R. 519.

Newspaper.]—There is nothing analogous to copyright in the name of a newspaper, but the proprietor has a right to prevent any other person from adopting the name, and this is a chattel capable of assignment. Kelly v. Hutton, 37 L. J., Ch. 917; L. R. 3 Ch. 703; 19 L. T. 228; 16 W. R. 1182.

The mere declaration of an intention, however public, to publish a magazine or any manufactured article bearing a particular name or mark, notwithstanding that such declaration is accompanied by expenditure in connection with the intended article, cannot create a right to the exclusive use of such name or mark as a trademark. Maxwell v. Hogg, 36 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 2 Ch. 307; 16 L. T. 130; 15 W. R. 467.

H., in 1863, registered an intended new magazine to be called "Belgravia." In 1866, such magazine not having appeared, M., in ignorance of what H. had done, projected a magazine with the same name, and incurred considerable expense in preparing it, and extensively advertising it in August and September, as about to appear in October. H., knowing of this, made hasty preparations for bringing out his own magazine before that of M. could appear, and in the meantime accepted an order from M. for advertising M.'s magazine on the covers of his own publications, and the first day on which he informed M. that he objected to his publishing a magazine under that name was the 25th of September, on which day the first number of H.'s magazine appeared. M.'s magazine appeared in October:—Held, that M.'s advertisements and expenditure did not give him any exclusive right to the use of the name "Belgravia," and that he could not restrain H. from publishing a magazine under the same name, the first number of which appeared before M. had published his. Ib.

And see Platt v. Walter, 17 L. T. 157, ante, col. 462.

ii. Subject Matter.

Unpublished Work.]—The right and property of an author or composer of any work, whether of literature, art, or science, in such work unpublished and kept for his private use or pleasure, entitles the owner to withhold the same altogether, or so far as he may please, from the knowledge of others, and the court will interfere to prevent the invasion of this right by the publication of a catalogue containing a description of such work. Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25; 1 H. & Tw. 1; 18 L. J. Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 101.

Transcript.]—If any part of a work complained of is a transcript of another work, or with only colourable additions and variations, and prepared without any real independent literary labour, such portion of the work complained of is piratical. Jarrold v. Heywood, 18 W. R. 279.

But it is impossible to establish a charge of piracy where it is necessary to track mere passages and lines through hundreds of pages, or where the authors of a work challenged as piratical have honestly applied their labours to various sources of information. Ib.

The author of a published work cannot prohibit a subsequent writer from making use of the authorities quoted by him, even if it is proved that the latter was put on the track of these authorities by reading the earlier work; but the subsequent writer must, bonâ fide, go to the common sources, and not copy the quotations or passages from the earlier work. But the taking of a single quotation without verification, and of a single argument founded on facts stated in the earlier book, are not sufficient grounds for granting an injunction. Pike v. Nicholas, 39 L. J., Ch. 435; L. R. 5 Ch. 251; 18 W. R. 321.

Translation Re-translated.]—If a foreigner translates an English work, and then an Englishman re-translates that foreign work into English, that would be an infringement of the original copyright. Murray v. Bogue, 1 Drew. 353; 22 L. J., Ch. 457; 17 Jur. 219; 1 W. R. 109.

Grounds on which fairness or unfairness in the use of a previous work is to be determined. Ib.

Theories.]—Plagiarism does not necessarily amount to an invasion of copyright, and the author of a published book has no monopoly in the theories and speculations, or even in the results of observations therein stated; but no one, whether with or without acknowledgment, is to be permitted to take a material and substantial portion of the published work of another author for the purpose of making or improving a rival publication. Pike v. Nicholas, 38 L. J., Ch. 529; 20 L. T. 906; 17 W. R. 842.

Compilations.]—The compiler of a dictionary, or a work in which absolute originality is of necessity excluded, is entitled, without exposing himself to a charge of piracy, to make use of preceding works upon the subject, where he bestows such mental labour upon what he has taken, and subjects it to such revision and correction as to produce an original result, provided that he does not deny the use made of such preceding works, and the alterations are not merely colourably made. Spiers v. Brown, 6 W. R. 352.

An action will lie if parts of a book of chronology are servilely imitated, though other parts of the book are different. Trusler v. Murray, 1 East, 363, n.; 6 R. R. 289, n.

But not for publishing sea charts on an improved and more useful principle, with material corrections, though many of the lines are copied from old charts. Sayre v. Moore, 1 East, 361, n.; 6 R. R. 288, n.

An abstract published in an annual register or a magazine is not piracy, especially if the author himself has published extracts in a periodical paper. Dodsley v. Kinnersley, Amb. 403.

A fair abridgment is no infringement of copyright. Anon., Lofft. 775. S. P., Bell v. Walker, 1 Bro. C. C. 451; Gyles v. Wilcox, 2 Atk. 143.

Where two authors, A. and B., treat of the same subject, each being merely a compiler from various other original works, it is a fair use of A.'s work if B. examines it for the purpose of seeing what works, unprotected by copyright, were referred to by A., and B. may then himself refer to such unprotected work, and take from it whatever may be suggested by A.'s book. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

It is also a legitimate use of A.'s work if B., after having by his own labour brought his own work into shape, refers to A.'s work to supply omissions. Ib.

But it is a piratical use of A.'s work if B. takes the matter therein borrowed from authorities open to all the world, in order to save his own labour and expense of consulting the original work. Ib.

Mode in which the court exercises jurisdiction where one work of compilation, such as an encyclopædia, copies matter from a preceding work of the same description. Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385; 26 R. R. 112.

The compiler of a directory or a guide-book containing information derived from sources common to all, which must of necessity be identical in all cases if correctly given, is not entitled to spare himself the labour and expense of original inquiry by adopting and republishing the information contained in previous works on the same subject. He must obtain and work out the information independently for himself, and the only legitimate use which he can make of previous works is for the purpose of verifying the correctness of his results. Kelly v. Morris, 35 L. J., Ch. 423; L. R. 1 Eq. 697; 14 L. T. 222; 14 W. R. 496.

The plaintiff published a book of the roads of Great Britain, comprising Patterson's book, to the copyright of which the plaintiff was not entitled, with improvements and additions obtained by actual survey and otherwise. An injunction to restrain a publication of an edition of Patterson, comprising the plaintiff's improvements and additions, was refused. Cary v. Faden, 5 Ves. 24.

Selections—Bulk of Work.]—S. published a work containing an original essay on modern English poetry, biographical sketches of forty-three modern poets, and selections from their poems, amongst which were six short poems and parts of longer poems, the copyright whereof belonged to C. The selections constituted altogether the bulk of S.'s work, but were alleged to have been introduced into it for the purpose of illustrating the essay. A court of equity restrained the publication of S.'s work as being an infringement of C.'s copyright. Campbell v. Scott, 11 Sim. 31; 11 L. J., Ch. 166; 6 Jur. 186.

Injunction till hearing to restrain the publication of Milton's poems with Dr. Newton's notes, notwithstanding a small addition of original commentary. Tonson v. Walker, 3 Swans. 672.

Injunction granted and continued against the defendant, restraining the sale of a sheet almanack, containing matter pirated from a distinct part of a directory published by the plaintiff, affording information with respect to the Post Office compiled from public documents, the matter pirated forming an exceedingly small portion of the plaintiff's work, but bearing a great proportion to the other matter in the defendant's work. Kelly v. Hooper, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 197; 4 Jur. 2.

Extent of Quotations.]—The question whether one author has made a piratical use of another's work does not necessarily depend upon the quantity of that work which he has quoted or introduced in his own book. Bramwell v. Halcomb, 3 Mylne & C. 737.

When a person obtains information of the nature afforded by statistical tables, directories, road-books, and publishes the same, another person has no right to transfer into his work a considerable portion of the information so published, although it may form but a small part of such work. Scott v. Stamford, 36 L. J., Ch. 729; L. R. 3 Eq. 718; 16 L. T. 51; 15 W. R. 757.

The result, in such cases, is the true test of the act, and full acknowledgment of the original, and the absence of any dishonest intention will not excuse the appropriator where the effect of his appropriation is, of necessity, to injure and supersede the sale of the original work. Ib.

A work may be a piracy from another, though the passages copied are stated to be quotations, and are not so extensive as to render the piratical work a substitute for the original work. Bohn v. Bogue, 10 Jur. 420.

But it is otherwise, if so much is copied as to form a substitute for the original work. Roworth v. Wilkes, 1 Camp. 94; 10 R. R. 642.

The proprietors of a periodical professing to be an analytical digest of equity, common law and other cases, copying verbatim the head or marginal notes of cases from the reports, the copyright of which was in another person, without his consent, are guilty of a piracy. Maule, J., dissentiente. Sweet v. Benning, 16 C. B. 459; 24 L. J., C. P. 175; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 3 W. R. 519.

A count for pirating generally, is not supported by evidence that there are in the original work particular errors and mistakes, with which the pirated edition corresponds verbatim. Cary v. Kearsley, 4 Esp. 168; 6 R. R. 846.

But such evidence would support a count for transcribing particular matter, without consent. Ib.

It is lawful to incorporate part of the works of a contemporary writer in a new work, provided it is not a pretext for stealing the original copyright. Ib.

—— Mere Verifying.]—A rival publisher is not less liable to an injunction for piracy because he makes inquiries on his own behalf to ascertain the correctness of what he copies. Morris v. Ashbee, L. R. 7 Eq. 34; 19 L. T. 550.

Slips.]—Although the compiler of a new directory is not justified in using slips cut from one previously published for the purpose of deriving information from them for his own work; yet he may use such slips for the purpose of directing him to the parties from whom such information is to be obtained. Morris v. Wright, L. R. 5 Ch. 279; 22 L. T. 78; 18 W. R. 327.

In a trades directory, persons who chose to pay for the privilege got their names printed in capital letters, with additional descriptions of their trade or business, called "extra lines:"—Held, that such payment had not the effect of making the information common property, so as to enable the compiler of a rival directory to reprint it from slips cut from the first, even where the persons whose names were so printed had been applied to to verify the information contained in the first directory, and had not only authorized but had actually paid for the insertion of their names in the second, with the distinctive features of capital letters and extra lines. Morris v. Ashbee, supra.

Purpose—Copies not for Sale.]—It is no defence to say that a pirated work is not offered for sale itself, but merely used to promote the sale of the books mentioned in it. Hotten v. Arthur, 1 H. & M. 603; 32 L. J., Ch. 771; 9 L. T. 199; 11 W. R. 934.

Where a party sets up a case that his work is a fair compilation from a number of others, and not a mere copy from any one, it is of the highest importance that he should produce his original manuscript. Ib.

An action will lie for multiplying copies of a work, in which there is a subsisting copyright, without the consent of the proprietor, although the copies are not printed, and are made for gratuitous distribution, and not for sale or hire. Novello v. Sudlow, 12 C. B. 177; 21 L. J., C. P. 169; 16 Jur. 689. S. P., Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 21 Ch. D. 369; 31 W. R. 70—C. A., ante, col. 467.

Editions.]—The first edition of a work of compilation was published before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45; several editions of it were published after that act, and not registered:—Held, that as to so much of the matter contained in the original edition as was contained in the subsequent ones, the owner might sue, although those subsequent editions were not registered; but as to the new matter, the subsequent editions were books which ought to be registered, and the owner could not sue for an infringement on that point. Murray v. Bogue, 1 Drew. 353; 22 L. J., Ch. 457; 17 Jur. 219; 1 W. R. 109.

In a suit by a publisher for piracy of a new edition of a work it was held that, notwithstanding some of the passages alleged to have been pirated were contained in the prior editions, as well as in the new edition of the work, the plaintiff was entitled to rely upon them in aid of his title to the relief prayed. Sweet v. Cater, 11 Sim. 572; 5 Jur. 68.

Joint Copyright in Three Publications.]—An injunction was granted to three plaintiffs, the proprietors of three several serial publications registered under the Copyright Act, to restrain the infringement of their joint copyright in matter printed in all three publications, though the pirated matter was copied not from either of the three publications but from a reproduction of the same matter issued in another form by the authority of one of the plaintiffs without further registration under the Copyright Act. Cate v. Devon and Exeter Constitutional Newspaper Co., 58 L. J., Ch. 288; 40 Ch. D. 500; 60 L. T. 672; 37 W. R. 487.

Rival Publications—Partner of Covenantor—Assignee without Notice.]—If A. sells a work to B., and covenants not to do anything which may be detrimental to the sale or circulation of that work, and if afterwards A., and a partner, publish a rival work on the same subject, the partner will be restrained as well as A.

If A., having entered into such a covenant with B., sells the materials of a rival work to C., who concludes his agreement, and pays his money without any notice of the covenant, an injunction, on the ground of that covenant, cannot be maintained against C. Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & S. 1; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 90; 25 R. R. 144.

Law Reports.]—Reports of legal decisions are to be considered (as to copyright) as any other literary work. Hodges v. Welsh. 2 Ir. Eq. R. 266.

Quære, whether certain cases in the law reports may be reprinted at length in a treatise on the particular subject to which they relate. Ib.

But it is piracy to collect together, and reprint from the reports of legal decisions, all the cases upon a particular subject, though the collection and classification may be new, and with the addition of several previously unpublished decisions and notes. Ib.

Injunction against a colourable abridgment of the Term Reports among other law reports till answer or further order upon certificate of the bill filed. Butterworth v. Robinson, 5 Ves. 709.

Quære, whether it is not piracy to print at full length cases contained in the law reports, although with the addition of notes, however voluminous. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 491, 536.

Law Digest.]—A proprietor of a periodical professing to be an analytical digest of equity, common law and other cases, copying verbatim the head or marginal notes of cases from reports, the copyright of which was in another person, without his consent, is a piracy (Maule, J., dissentiente). Sweet v. Benning, 16 C. B. 459; 24 L. J., C. P. 175; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 3 W. R. 519.

Telegraphic Code for use of Agents compiled from Book of Words.]—The plaintiff published "The Standard Telegram Code," a book of words selected from eight languages, for use in telegraphic transmissions of messages, and it was accompanied by figure cyphers for reference or private interpretation. The book was registered under the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. The defendants bought a copy of the book, and compiled for their own use with its aid a new and independent work, as alleged, which was their own private telegraphic code, and they distributed copies of their book amongst their agents at home and abroad, but they had not printed their book for sale or exportation:—Held, that the defendants had infringed the copyright of the plaintiff, and that a perpetual injunction must be granted. Ager v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 53 L. J., Ch. 589; 26 Ch. D. 637; 50 L. T. 477; 33 W. R. 116.

Newspaper — Alleged Custom of Trade to Copy.]—The plaintiffs, the proprietors of the "Times," a newspaper duly registered under the Copyright Act, 1842, published on the morning of the 13th of April (among other matter) three articles which had been composed by foreign correspondents, and paid for by the plaintiffs on the terms that the copyright therein should belong to the plaintiffs. Two of the articles were signed "Our Correspondent," and the third was signed "Dalziel." The defendants. the proprietor and publisher of the "St. James's Gazette," published in their paper, about half-past twelve on the same day, a verbatim copy of these three articles, except that the words at the end, "Our Correspondent" and "Dalziel," were left out, and that, in one instance, half a dozen lines were added from some other source :—Held, that the plaintiffs had a legal right to sue to restrain the infringement of their copyright; and that the defendants could not escape on the ground that they had copied only a small part of the plaintiff's newspaper, or justify what they had done on the ground of an alleged universal practice of journalists to copy such articles from each other, without asking the permission of the proprietor of the paper copied from. Walter v. Steinkopff, 61 L. J., Ch. 521; [1892] 3 Ch. 489; 67 L. T. 184; 40 W. R. 599.

When S. had published in a provincial newspaper, of which he was proprietor, whole articles taken verbatim from a magazine, alleging in justification the custom of the trade :—Held, that the proprietor of the magazine was entitled to an injunction against S., but inasmuch as he had acted with bona fides, the court did not give either party his costs of the motion. Maxwell v. Somerton, 30 L. T. 11; 22 W. R. 313.

—— Sporting Paper — Publication of "Selections" — "Headings."]—C., the registered proprietor under the Copyright Act, 1842, of a weekly sporting paper, which he published on Monday in each week, in which appeared, under the heading "One-Horse Selections," the names of the days on which racing was to take place in that week, and opposite the name of each day was the name of the horse which in C.'s opinion was likely to win the race on that day for which it was entered. P., the proprietor of another sporting paper published on each day that racing took place, had systematically reproduced C.'s "selections" by inserting under a heading "One-Horse Final—'Specials'" C.'s name, and opposite C.'s name the name of the horse C. had selected :—Held, that P. had merely published to the world the fact that C. thought a particular horse would win a particular race; that P. had, under the circumstances, a right to do this, and that he had not infringed C.'s copyright. Chilton v. Progress Printing Co., 71 L. T. 664; 43 W. R. 136.

Perforated Picture casting a Shadow.]—The plaintiff claimed to be the proprietor of a subsisting copyright in a certain "book" with a picture or design entitled "The Christograph," which was duly registered. The so-called book was an envelope, with the title printed thereon, containing a piece of cardboard, perforated in such a way that the shadow cast by it on a wall, or otherwise, roughly imitated a well-known picture. The envelope contained also some descriptive lines, which were not claimed to be original. The plaintiff complained that the defendants were selling a similarly perforated card, accompanied by the same lines, and enclosed in an envelope bearing as a title "The Bibliroscope, or Shadowgraph," whereby the sale of the plaintiff's article had been diminished. The defendants denied the alleged copyright, and also that the plaintiff was the first inventor of the design :—Held, that the design was not original, and was not capable of being protected by the statute; that the title only was registered, and was the plaintiff's property. As, however, that had not been adopted by the defendants, the plaintiff's case wholly failed. Cable v. Marks, 52 L. J., Ch. 107; 47 L. T. 432; 31 W. R. 221.

Cartoons.]—The plaintiffs were the proprietors of the copyright of Punch, which contains cartoons and other engravings illustrative of the events of the day, and the careers of eminent persons : and caricatures of the events in the history and the adventures of Napoleon III. The defendant published a book entitled "Napoleon III., from the Popular Caricatures of the last Thirty Years," and amongst a great variety of other caricatures taken from other publications there were nine taken from Punch, with the original headings and references, but much reduced in size. Not more than one such engraving was taken from any one number of Punch, and these engravings had appeared in Punch, at intervals extending over several years. The engravings themselves had not been registered :—Held, that this was an infringement of the publishers' copyright in their publication of Punch. Bradbury v. Hotten, 42 L. J., Ex. 28; L. R. 8 Ex. 1; 27 L. T. 450; 21 W. R. 126.

Sketches.]—H., a bookseller and publisher. purchased at a sale some books, the property of T., deceased, and containing several caricatures and sketches executed by T. He purchased at the same time some separate drawings by T., and afterwards bought some more of T.'s drawings and of his books containing sketches. These books and sketches came into the possession of C. and W., who succeeded H. in his business. C. and W. published a book which contained the sketches and caricatures, as well as numerous extracts from T.'s published novels, in order to show that T. had in fact written his own biography in these novels. The copyright in the novels, and in all T.'s published and unpublished sketches, had been assigned to S. :—Held, that he had no copyright in the sketches and caricatures, but that, inasmuch as the book appeared to contain an undue amount of extracts, he was entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain its sale, on giving the usual undertaking as to damages. Smith v. Chatto, 31 L. T. 775; 23 W. R. 290.

f. Remedies. Action and Injunction.

i. Principles.

a. In General.

Common-Law Remedy.]—The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 15, which gives a remedy for piracy in certain cases, does not exclude the common-law remedy in other cases in which that statute has given a right. Novello v. Sudlow, 12 C. B. 177; 21 L. J., C. P. 169; 16 Jur. 689.

Court of Equity—Jurisdiction.]—The court will interfere to protect copyright from piracy at the suit of plaintiffs, who appear to have a good equitable title, even though it should not be quite clear that their legal title is complete. Mode in which the court exercises jurisdiction, where one work of compilation, such as an encyclopædia, copies matter from a preceding work of the same description. Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385 ; 26 R. R. 112. See also Chappel v. Purday, 4 Y. & Coll. 485 ; 10 L. J. (N.S.) Ex. Eq. 50.

Selling Knowingly—Ignorance of Nature of Imported Copies.]—The registered proprietors of an English copyright magazine brought an action against the agents in England of an American firm of publishers for an injunction to restrain them from selling or importing for sale in this country a magazine published by the American firm, and containing matter pirated from the plaintiffs' copyright. The defendants, by their statement of defence, stated that they had determined not to sell the copies complained of in consequence of a notice received by the plaintiffs shortly before the commencement of the action, and before the defendants themselves had had the opportunity of inspecting such copies : —Held, that the 17th section of the Copyright Act, 1842, mentions two offences, that of "to import for sale" and that of to "sell knowingly" unauthorised publications, and therefore that ignorance of the nature of the imported copies could not be a defence where the offence charged was "importing for sale," but only where the offence charged was "selling knowingly." Cooper v. Whittingham, 49 L. J., Ch. 752 ; 15 Ch. D. 501 ; 43 L. T. 16 ; 28 W. R. 720.

—— Injunction and Notice.]—An owner of an English copyright is entitled to an ex parte injunction against the agents of a foreign firm in respect of the offence of "importing for sale" piracies, but if it is intended to take proceedings in respect of "selling knowingly," the better course is to give the importers notice of their importations. Where an action is brought to enforce a legal right, and there is no misconduct on the part of the plaintiff, the court has no discretion to refuse him costs. Where a statute creates a new offence, and imposes a penalty, the ancillary remedy by injunction may still be claimed. Ib.

—— Knowledge.]—In an action for an infringement of copyright, by merely publishing a work printed or caused to be printed by others, knowledge of the copyright so infringed must be proved. Leader v. Strange, 2 Car. & K. 1010.

An author having sold the copyright of a work published under his own name, covenanted with the purchaser not to publish any other work to prejudice the sale of it. Semble, that another publisher, who has no notice of this covenant, will be restrained from publishing a work subsequently purchased by him from the same author, and published under his name, on the same subject but under a different title, and though there is no piracy of the first work. Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & S. 1 ; 25 R. R. 144.

Rival Works.]—Where there are two rival works, a court of equity will restrain the proprietor of one of them from advertising it in terms calculated to induce the public to believe that it is the other work, but will not restrain him from publishing an advertisement tending to disparage that other work. Seeley v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581.

A bill in equity stated, that one of the plaintiffs had composed a book, and that all the plaintiffs had caused the book to be printed and published for their joint benefit, and the book had been duly registered by the plaintiffs, as proprietors of the copyright thereof, at Stationers' Hall ; and the copyright had ever since remained in them for their joint benefit. The bill also alleged that the defendant had published a book, in which numerous passages were copied from the plaintiffs' book ; and it prayed an injunction to restrain the sale of the defendant's book :—Held, that the plaintiffs had a joint right to sue. Stevens v. Wildy, 19 L. J., Ch. 190.

Held, also, upon comparison of the two books, that in the defendant's book there had been such copying from the plaintiffs' book as would entitle them to the injunction. Ib.

See also INFRINGEMENT, supra, col. 485, &c.

Plagiarism.]—The question of minuteness in value of the original matter extracted from a work for purposes of criticism, will have great weight with the court, in influencing its decision on the application for an injunction. Bell v. Whitehead, 8 L. J., Ch. 141 ; 3 Jur. 68.

It appeared to the satisfaction of the court that B. had taken the phraseology and arrangement of many questions and answers from A.'s book although B. swore that he had not done so. This rendered it impossible for the court to obtain from B. (as in Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385) any information as to the quantum ; and the court, therefore, having been satisfied that in certain chapters of B.'s work this improper use had been made of A.'s book, restrained the publication of such chapters only, but not of the entire work ; A. to bring an action forthwith, and B. to keep an account in the meantime. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

The defendant was a vendor of a literary work published in weekly numbers, and in one of the numbers of this was contained the commencement of a work of fiction, which, with the exception of a few colourable alterations, was in all respects similar to a prior work, of which the plaintiff was the author and publisher. On a bill by the plaintiff, praying that the defendant might be restrained from publishing, selling, or otherwise disposing of the number containing the commencement of such work of fiction, or any continuation or other part thereof, and from copying or imitating, in the whole or in part, the plaintiff's book, the court granted an injunction as prayed, except as to the words "or imitating," but directed the plaintiff to bring an action within ten days against the defendant for the invasion of his alleged copyright. Dickens v. Lee, 8 Jur. 183.

If an injunction has been granted against a work, which is proposed to be published in successive numbers, on the ground of piracy in the published numbers, the injunction will not be modified, so as to permit the publication of the future numbers, while the question of piracy, as to the others, remains undetermined. Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & S. 1 ; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 90 ; 25 R. R. 144.

Works Contrary to Morality and Religion.]—

The author or a publisher of a work of a libellous or of an immoral tendency can have no legal property in it. Stockdale v. Onwhyn, 7 D. & R. 625; 5 B. & C. 173; 2 Car. & P. 163; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 122; 29 R. R. 207.

No action can be maintained for pirating a work which professes to be the amours of a courtezan, and it is no answer to the objection that the party is also a wrong-doer in publishing them, and that he therefore ought not to set up their immorality. Ib.

An injunction to restrain the infringement of the copyright in a work, as to which it appeared doubtful whether in did not tend to impugn the doctrine of the scriptures, was refused by a court of equity. Lawrence v. Smith, Jacob, 471; 23 R. R. 125.

The court of chancery will not interfere by injunction, upon the author's application, to restrain the publication of a work which is of such a nature as that an action could not be maintained upon it for damages. Southey v. Sherwood, 2 Mer. 435.

The court will not act either by granting an injunction or account, even upon submission in answer upon a publication of such nature that an action could not be maintained. Walcot v. Walker, 7 Ves. 1.

Committal for Breach of Injunction.]—The court will hesitate to commit a defendant alleged to have committed a breach of an interim injunction, when it sees that he has endeavoured to set himself right in respect to the original charge against him of infringing the plaintiff's copyright. Cornish v. Upton, 4 L. T. 862.

b. Account of Profits.

Principles upon which the court gives an account of the profits of the unlawful work in the case of piracy. Colburn v. Simms, 2 Hare, 543: 12 L. J., Ch. 388; 7 Jur. 1140.

A plaintiff who complains of a piracy of his work has no remedy in equity, unless he establish a title to an injunction, and then the account will follow. Baily v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. 73; Taml. 295; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 49.

As to the copies of a piratical edition which may have been sold, the registered owner is not entitled in equity to the gross produce of the sale thereof, but only to the profits which the party may have made by the sale thereof. Delf v. Delamotte, 3 Kay & J. 581; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 933.

To recover the pirated copies, he must proceed at law. Ib.

c. Damages.

Reference as to—When ordered.]—When the infringement complained of consists in copying a collection of facts which are easily obtained, the court will not grant an interlocutory injunction, which would be useless, but will wait till the hearing, and then, if necessary, direct a reference as to damages. Cox v. Land and Water Co., 21 L. T. 548; 18 W. R. 206.

How Assessed.]—Where a plaintiff claiming a copyright in a work of a foreigner obtained an injunction, on giving an undertaking to abide by any order the court might make respecting damages, and the law was, pending the suit, finally settled against the existence of such a copyright:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to have the damages sustained by him in consequence of the injunction assessed either by the chief clerk of the judge in Chancery, or by a jury, and paid, and that a mere dismissal of the plaintiff's bill with costs was not a sufficiently accurate assessment and award of damages. Novello v. James, 5 De G. M. & G. 876; 24 L. J., Ch. 111; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 217; 3 W. R. 127.

Damages in case of literary piracy are to be estimated as follows:—the defendant is to account for every copy of his book sold as if it had been a copy of the plaintiff's, and to pay the plaintiff the profit which he would have received from the sale of so many additional copies. Pike v. Nicholas, 38 L. J., Ch. 529; L. R. 5 Ch. 260, n.; 20 L. T. 906; 17 W. R. 842.

The registered proprietor of the copyright in a book, to whom a special action on the case against an infringer is given by section 15 of the Copyright Act, 1842, is also entitled to bring an action against him under section 23 in detinue for the copies of the book retained, and also in trover for damages arising from the wrongful conversion. The measure of damages will be the total amount realised by the sale of the books. Muddock v. Blackwood, 67 L. J., Ch. 6; [1898] 1 Ch. 58; 77 L. T. 493.

Inducing Breach of Contract — Special Damage.]—The plaintiffs entered into contracts with their own subscribers which contained a stipulation that the information supplied to them by the plaintiffs should not be sold or communicated to non-subscribers:—Held, that in order to support an action against the defendant for inducing one of the plaintiffs' subscribers to break his contract by communicating the information to him, it was not necessary to prove specific damage, but that it was enough to show that the act complained of was of such a nature that damage to the plaintiffs ought to be inferred. Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, ante, col. 460.

d. Destruction, &c., of Copies.

Destruction.]—Where a party obtains possession by purchase of impressions of etchings, the plates of which are the property of another, knowing that the vendor has obtained such impressions through a breach of trust, a court of equity will interfere by injunction, and, without giving him the right to try the question of property at law, will order the impressions to be delivered up; and the material on which the impressions are taken being substantially worthless, except for that in which the possessor had no property, viz. the impressions, the court will order their destruction. Albert (Prince) v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652; 13 Jur. 507. See S. C., 1 Mac. & G. 25; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

Forfeiture of Copies.] — Books piratically printed before registration of the proprietor of the copyright become his property after registration. Hole v. Bradbury (infra) not followed. Isaacs v. Fiddemann, 49 L. J., Ch. 412; 42 L. T. 395.

Upon motion by defendants to vary a decree as to the delivery up of unsold copies:—Held, that the plaintiffs not having been the registered proprietors of the copyright at the time the copies were printed were not entitled to have them delivered up under the 23rd section of the Copyright Act; but that the court had power under its general jurisdiction to order delivery up for destruction of all articles created in violation of the plaintiff's rights. The decree was therefore varied to this extent — that if profits had been made, then (with the assent of the defendants) the copies were to be delivered up to the plaintiffs; but if no profits, then the copies to be delivered up for destruction. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673; 12 Ch. D. 886.

—— Without Compensation.]—The registered owner of a copyright in a work is entitled to have all the unsold copies of a piratical edition delivered up to him for his own use, without making any compensation for the cost of production or publication. Delf v. Delamotte, 3 Kay & J. 581; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 933.

But as to the copies of such piratical edition which may have been sold, he is not entitled in equity to the gross produce of the sale thereof, but only to the profits which the party may have made by the sale thereof. Ib.

To recover the pirated copies, he must proceed at law. Ib.

Under 54 Geo. 3, c. 156.]—A proprietor of a book, whose copyright has been invaded by the printing of a similar work, and who is entitled to an injunction to restrain the printing and sale of the unlawful work, was not, under 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, s. 4, entitled to an order for the delivery up of the illegal copies, if the book, the copyright of which had been infringed, was not composed, and entered according to the statutes, at the time the illegal copies were printed. Colburn v. Simms, 2 Hare, 543; 12 L. J., Ch. 388; 7 Jur. 1104.

Semble, there is no common law right in the author or proprietor of a book which is pirated to the delivery up of the copies of the illegal work, and therefore, if such relief is given in equity, it must be under the provisions of the statute for the protection of literary property. Ib.

Quære whether the copies of the illegal work would in any case be ordered to be delivered up in a suit to which the person at whose expense and on whose account they had been printed was not a party. Ib.

Quære, whether a court of equity is a court of record within the meaning of the statutes 41 Geo. 3, c. 10, s. 1, or 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, s. 4. Ib.

e. Delay and Acquiescence.

Delay with Knowledge.]—Mere delay in taking proceedings after knowledge of a piracy is not in itself such acquiescence as will deprive a plaintiff of his right to an injunction at the hearing. Hogg v. Scott, 43 L. J., Ch. 705; L. R. 18 Eq. 444; 31 L. T. 73, 163; 22 W. R. 640. S. P., Weldon v. Dicks, 48 L. J., Ch. 201; 10 Ch. D. 247; 39 L. T. 467; 27 W. R. 639; and Latour v. Bland, 2 Stark. 382.

Injunction to restrain the piracy of a publication, to which the plaintiffs would have been otherwise entitled, refused on the ground of delay in making the application. Lewis v. Chapman, 3 Beav. 133.

Constructive knowledge imputed to the plaintiffs, by the court, of an infringement of their copyright by the defendants. Ib.

While Law Doubtful.]—The copyright of a work of an alien was sold to a British subject, who published it in this country in 1844. The copyright was infringed in 1849, but the state of the law then rendered it very doubtful whether the copyright was protected, and the purchaser merely protested against the infringement; but, in 1851, within a reasonable time after the decision of a case in the Exchequer Chamber had established the general question of copyright in an alien, he filed his bill and moved to restrain the publication of the pirated work:—Held, that there had been no such delay as to disentitle him to an injunction. Buxton v. James, 5 De G. & Sm. 80; 16 Jur. 15.

Acquiescence in Transcribing—Action against other Parties.]—If the owner of the copyright has, for some time past, acquiesced in different individuals transcribing cases from his works, the court will not interpose in his favour, by injunction against other parties who have subsequently transcribed the cases from the same work, until the owner of the copyright has established his legal right. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 491, 536.

Original Intention Relinquished—Publication by Assignee.]—Injunction refused to restrain publication of a work which had been left for twenty-three years by the author in the hands of a bookseller, to whom it was originally sent, with an intention of its being published; that intention being afterwards relinquished, and the work having passed into the hands of the defendants, who published it without the consent or privity of the author. Southey v. Sherwood, 2 Mer. 435.

ii. Practice.

a. Parties.

Joint Proprietors—Right of all to Sue.]—The bill stated, that one of the plaintiffs had composed a book, and that all the plaintiffs had caused the book to be printed and published for their joint benefit, and the said book had been duly registered by the plaintiffs, as proprietors of the copyright thereof, at Stationers' Hall, and the copyright had ever since remained in the plaintiffs for their joint benefit. The bill also alleged, that the defendants had published a book in which numerous passages were copied from the plaintiffs' book, and it prayed an injunction to restrain the sale of the defendants' book:—Held, upon motion for the injunction, that under the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the plaintiffs had a joint right to sue; held, also, upon comparison of the two books, that in the defendants' book there had been such copying from the plaintiffs' book as would entitle them to the injunction. Stevens v. Wildy, 19 L. J., Ch. 190.

Registered Owners—Tenants in Common—Right of One to Sue.]—Although the registered owners of a copyright take as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants—Powell v. Head (12 Ch. D. 686)—yet any one or more of them may maintain an action against a stranger for an infringement of the entire copyright. Lauri v. Renad, post, col. 549—Per Kekewich, J.

A party having, at the suit of A. and B., submitted to an injunction restraining him from publishing certain etchings, the work of A. and B. respectively, cannot object to an injunction, granted on the application of A., restraining the publication of a catalogue or description of the etchings, on the ground that it is too extensive, as not clearly identifying which of such etchings belong exclusively to A.

Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Mac. & G. 25; 1 H. & Tw. 1; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

Injunction against Printer wrongly Sued as Proprietor.]—The plaintiff became by purchase, in February, 1856, proprietor of a weekly newspaper called "The Britannia," which he subsequently incorporated with another weekly newspaper called "The John Bull," and issued the publication under the title of "The John Bull and Britannia." The plaintiff had not registered his name at the stamp-office as the proprietor of either newspaper. On the 12th April a notice was inserted in "The Britannia" to the effect that that paper would be united with "The John Bull" On the 19th April the defendant, who had been the printer and publisher of "The Britannia," issued a publication called the "True Britannia," in imitation and as a continuation of "The Britannia." The bill was filed against the defendant as the proprietor of the new newspaper to restrain him from publishing it. The defendant, in his affidavit, said that A. B. was the registered proprietor of the "True Britannia," and that he was the printer and publisher only. On motion for an injunction, the court ordered the defendant to be restrained from printing and publishing, &c., the "True Britannia," or any other newspaper as a continuation of "The Britannia." Prowett v. Mortimer, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 4 W. R. 519.

Separate Bill against each Bookseller.]—The proprietor of a copyright must file separate bills against each bookseller taking copies of a spurious edition for sale. Dilly v. Doig, 2 Ves. J. 486.

b. Pleading.

Admissions.]—The court has jurisdiction to direct admissions in an action brought by the direction of the court. Dickens v. Lee, 8 Jur. 183.

In a suit by a publisher for piracy of a new edition of a work, it was held that, notwithstanding some of the passages alleged to have been pirated were contained in the prior editions, as well as in the new edition of the work, the plaintiff was entitled to rely upon them, in aid of his title to the relief prayed. The injunction having been granted on the plaintiff undertaking to try his right at law, and the author declining to allow the plaintiff to bring the action in his name, the defendant was ordered to admit, at the trial, that the plaintiff was the legal proprietor of the pirated work. Sweet v. Cater, 11 Sim. 572; 5 Jur. 68.

What must be Pleaded.]—Where a party seeks to restrain an infringement of his copyright, it is not necessary for him to specify, either in his bill or affidavit, the parts of his work which he considers to have been pirated, although he does not claim copyright in all the passages which are the same in both works. Sweet v. Maugham, 11 Sim. 51; 9 L. J., Ch. 323; 4 Jur. 479. And see id. 456.

In a bill to restrain the infringement of a design for ornamenting lace, registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, compliance with the act is sufficiently pleaded by alleging that the design and proprietorship have been duly registered; and a bill containing those allegations is not open to a demurrer for not alleging in detail that the plaintiff has complied with the various requirements of the act; and if a defendant insists that a plaintiff has lost his copyright by non-compliance in respect of matters subsequently to registration, he must raise the defence by plea or answer. Sarazin v. Hamel, 32 L. J., Ch. 378; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 192; 7 L. T. 660; 11 W. R. 326.

In an action for damages for an alleged infringement of copyright in a song, the defendant, by his statement of defence, alleged that the song had not been registered at Stationers' Hall until the 9th of December, 1876, and added, "the defendant denies that the song has been duly registered. The time of the first publication thereof is not truly entered on the register":—Held, that under this pleading the defendant was only entitled to prove that the time of first publication had been untruly entered, and that he was not at liberty to prove that the name of the publisher had been untruly stated. Collette v. Goode, 47 L. J., Ch. 370; 7 Ch. D. 842; 38 L. T. 504.

Held, also, that leave to amend the statement of defence, so as to raise the latter point, ought not to be given, even though by the plaintiff's own evidence at the trial it for the first time appeared that the name of the publisher had been untruly entered in the register. Ib.

The proprietor of copyright in a book need not, in an action for its infringement, aver that the defendant published the plaintiff's book. The declaration states a good cause of action if it avers that the defendant published parts of the plaintiff's book. Rooney v. Kelley, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 158.

Such a cause of action is not answered by a plea in confession and avoidance, to the effect that the book of the plaintiff and the books of the defendant were composed by one and the same author, from common sources of information; and that no part of the defendant's books, or either of them, was copied or colourably altered from the book of the plaintiff. Ib.

The plaintiffs did not in their statement of claim expressly ask that the registration of the defendants as owners of the copyright might be expunged:—Held, that an order to expunge that registration could not be made at the trial, but that the plaintiffs must make a summary application for that purpose under s. 14 of the act. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673; 12 Ch. D. 886; 41 L. T. 153, 250; 28 W. R. 39.

See this case referred to in Isaacs v. Fiddemann, 49 L. J., Ch. 412; 42 L. T. 395.

What may be Pleaded.]—To an action for the infringement of a copyright in a work, the defendant was allowed to plead that the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the copyright at the time of committing the grievance, and also that he was not the proprietor of the copyright when the books were printed. Chappell v. Purday, 1 D. & L. 458; 12 M. & W. 303; 13 L. J., Ex. 7.

—— As to Printer's Name.]—A count stated that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the copyright in a certain book, and that the defendant, without his consent in writing, printed for sale copies of the work. And another count charged the defendant with "having in his possession for sale and selling" copies of the work so unlawfully, and without the plaintiff's consent, printed. He pleaded that the book was printed and published without the name and place of abode of the printer upon the first or last leaves thereof, in violation of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 12, s. 2 :—Held, no defence to either count. Chappell v. Davidson, 18 C. B. 194 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 225 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 544 ; 4 W. R. 559.

—— Joinder of Causes of Action.]—In an action for an infringement of copyright, the court refused to allow a count founded upon a common-law right to be joined with counts on the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, upon the same cause of action. Boosey v. Tolkien, 5 C. B. 476 ; 5 D. & L. 547 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 137.

Plaintiff Entitled to an Answer.]—A plaintiff in a suit to restrain breach of a copyright and for an account is entitled to an answer, not only with a view to the account, but also for the purposes of establishing his title, if the action directed by the injunction should, by mutual arrangement not have been tried. Kelly v. Hooper, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 197.

c. Notice of Objections.

Want of Title—At Trial.]—The plaintiffs in the action were the author of the letterpress and the daughter of the other joint author, who was dead. The statement of claim alleged that her father had by his will appointed her mother his sole executrix and universal legatee, and that, she having since died, the daughter had administered to her estate. But it was not alleged that the mother had assented to the bequest made to her by the father. The plaintiffs had registered themselves at Stationers' Hall as joint owners of the copyright of the book, and the defendants (the successors of the original firm of publishers) had afterwards registered themselves as the owners. At the trial the defendants objected that the daughter did not represent her father's estate. The objection had not been taken in the statement of defence, and no notice in writing of it had been given to the plaintiffs under s. 16 of the Copyright Act :—Held, that the objection could not be relied on at the trial. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673 ; 12 Ch. D. 886.

In an action by A. for the infringement of copyright in a musical composition, consisting of an air which was old and not the subject of copyright, of words which were written by B., and of an accompaniment which was composed by C. at the request and for the benefit of B. :—Held, that it was not competent to the defendant, under a notice of objections, stating merely that A. was not the owner of the copyright, and that there was no subsisting copyright in the work, to object at the trial that there had been no assignment by C., even though the point arose upon the evidence adduced on the part of the plaintiff. Leader v. Purday, 7 C. B. 4 ; 6 D. & L. 408 ; 18 L. J., C. P. 97 ; 12 Jur. 1091.

As to Publication.]—Notice of objections required by the statute is sufficiently complied with by alleging a definite publication of the disputed work at some particular place, by some definite party, either before or simultaneously with, the publication by the plaintiff, or with a publication in another place. Boosey v. Purday, 10 Jur. 1038.

In an action for the infringement of the copyright of a book, the defendant pleaded several pleas, denying that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the copyright ; that there was any copyright subsisting ; that the books were first published in England, and that the copies complained of were unlawfully printed :—Held, on an application by the plaintiff to have the notice of objections delivered with the pleas amended, that the alleged first publication having taken place abroad, and so far back as 1831, it was sufficient for the defendant to state the year of the first publication, and that it was not necessary that he should specify the day or month ; but that he was bound to state the name of the party whom he alleged to be the proprietor or first publisher, the title of the work, the place where and the time when the first publication took place. Boosey v. Davidson, 4 D. & L. 147.

Held, also, that he was not entitled to object that some person whose name was to the defendant unknown, and not the plaintiff, was the proprietor of the copyright ; nor that the plaintiff was not himself the author ; nor that the work was not first printed or published in the British dominions ; nor that the plaintiff ever acquired any title, by assignment or otherwise, to the copyright ; nor that there was no valid assignment ; nor that there is no copyright in a work first published out of the British dominions under such circumstances as the books in question were published. But that he might object that A., if anyone, and not the plaintiff, was the proprietor ; and that at the time of committing the grievances no copyright in the work was subsisting. Ib. See also Coote v. Judd, 23 Ch. D. 727 ; 48 L. T. 405 ; 31 W. R. 423.

Objections to Registration—Sufficiency of Notice—Terms.]—A plaintiff in an action to restrain the infringement of his copyright in a catalogue put in evidence the entry of his copyright on the registry before the writ in the action was issued. On the plaintiff being cross-examined as to the validity of the registration, the objection was taken that the defendant had not raised in his pleadings any objection to the registration. In answer to that the defendant said that he had suggested the objection to registration in an affidavit filed before the date of the statement of claim on a motion for an interim injunction. On trial of the action :—Held, that the affidavit was not a sufficient notice of the objection, nor a compliance with s. 16 of the Copyright Act, 1842, but that the case was one where the court would allow the defendant to raise the objection by amendment on terms. The terms were, that the defendant was not to raise any objection to the plaintiff proving the registration made since the action was brought, or raise any objection on the ground that such registration was not made before action. Hayward v. Lely, 56 L. T. 418.

—— Non-delivery within the Time prescribed.]—In an action for infringement of copyright, where objections to the registration are not delivered within the prescribed time, the action may nevertheless be dismissed if a defect in the registration is brought out from the plaintiff's evidence. Coote v. Judd, supra.

d. Issues, when Directed.

Principles.]—In cases of contested copyright, the court is disposed rather to restrict than increase the number of cases in which it interferes by injunction before the establishment of the legal title, and it will give great weight to the consideration of the questions, which side is more likely to suffer by an erroneous or hasty judgment, and the prejudicial effect the injunction may have on the trial of the action. M'Neill v. Williams. 11 Jur. 344.

The court will not grant an injunction, but will leave the plaintiff to seek his legal remedy, where the matter which is the subject of the alleged piracy forms but a very inconsiderable part of the plaintiff's work, and contains merely calculations, and when the work complained of has been published some years. Bailey v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. 73; Taml. 295; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 49.

Where Fraud or Breach of Trust.]—When the court is satisfied that a piratical imitation has been made by the defendant, the plaintiff will not be put to the terms of bringing an action to try his title at law, although the defendant cannot take any steps to bring the fact to an issue before a jury. Chappell v. Sheard, 2 Kay & J. 117; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 996; 3 W. R. 646.

In a case of alleged fraudulent imitation of a musical publication (independently of copyright), where the court did not consider the fraud clearly made out:—Held, that an injunction ought only to be continued on the terms of the plaintiff undertaking to bring an action, and to be answerable in damages. Chappell v. Davidson, 8 De G. M. & G. 1.

Where a workman intrusted with copper-plates for the purpose of taking impressions for the plaintiff of etchings made by the latter, and not intended for publication, took impressions for himself, in violation of the trust, and sold the impressions to the defendant, who published a catalogue of them, accompanied by remarks of his own:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled at the hearing to a perpetual injunction to restrain the publication of the catalogue, and to a decree ordering the impressions to be destroyed; and that the defendant was not entitled to a preliminary trial of his title at law. Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & Sm. 652. And see S. C. 1 Macn. & G. 25; 1 H. & Tw. 1; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

Upon a previous interlocutory application for an injunction, the evidence only made out a case of suspicion that a breach of confidence had been committed. On the defendant putting in his answer, denying notice of any such breach of confidence, but not fully or satisfactorily accounting for his possession of the etchings, and moving to dissolve the injunction:—Held, that there was sufficient ground for suspicion that there were equitable as well as legal grounds for interference, to make it right to continue the injunction to the hearing (on proper undertakings), without putting the plaintiff to establish a title at law. Ib.

Semble, that independently of the breach of trust, the legal right of the plaintiff to preserve the privacy of his unpublished works was so clearly infringed by the publication of the catalogue, as to entitle him to have it protected by injunction, without obtaining the decision of a court of law in its favour; and that the distribution of a few copies of the etchings to private friends did not prejudice this right. Ib.

Where Agreement to be Construed.]—Injunction against infringement of copyright, depending on effect of agreement, refused till recovery in action. Walcot v. Walker, 7 Ves. 1.

Where Acquiescence.]—Injunction refused to restrain alleged infringement of copyright before trial at law, where the conduct of the plaintiffs had been such as, in the opinion of the court, was calculated to induce the defendants to believe that the course taken by them would not be objected to by the plaintiffs. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 491, 536.

In Patentees' Action.]—Motion by the King's patentees for an injunction to stop the sale of English bibles printed beyond sea, denied till the validity of the patent had been tried at law. Anon., 1 Vern. 120. S. P., Grierson v. Jackson, 1 Ridgew. L. & S. 304.

e. Evidence and Comparison of Copies.

Evidence of Piracy.]—Where some only of the parts of the work of the defendant alleged to be piratical were produced in evidence, but they were such as to justify the presumption that the general character of the work was piratical, the court made an injunction restraining the defendant "from printing, etc., any copy of his work containing any articles copied, or taken, or colourably altered from the work of the plaintiff." Lewis v. Fullarton, 2 Beav. 6; 8 L. J., Ch. 291; 3 Jur. 669.

If A., instead of searching into the common sources, and obtaining his subject matter thence, avails himself of the labour of his predecessor, adopts his arrangement and questions, or adopts them with a colourable variation, it is an illegitimate use.

Falsely to deny that he has copied or taken any idea or language from another work is a strong indication of an animus furandi. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

Evidence of Publication.]—In an action for infringing the copyright in an opera, in order to prove a prior publication, a statement by a witness that he had seen in print, in Milan, many parts of the opera before the 10th June, 1831, is inadmissible, without accounting for the non-production of the printed copies. Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257; 18 L. J., Q. B. 174; 13 Jur. 678.

A statement by a witness of his having heard, before the 10th of June, 1831, persons in society sing parts of the opera at a piano, with printed music before them, is no evidence that the music in the printed papers was the same as that of the opera in question. Ib.

Interrogatories.]—In an action for infringement of copyright in a book, the court will permit interrogatories, as to the sale of the book for a certain period before and after the date of the alleged infringement, to be administered to the plaintiff for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damage sustained, and enabling the defendant to pay a sufficient sum into court to meet it. Wright v. Goodlake, 3 H. & C. 540; 34 L. J., Ex. 82; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 14; 13 L. T. 120; 13 W. R. 349.

Inspection.]—The court will grant an inspection of the work alleged to be pirated in an action of copyright, upon an affidavit that the defendant had no recollection of having sold copies thereof, but is desirous of refreshing his memory in order to be able to state positively if he has ever done so. Graves v. Mercer, 16 W. R. 790.

Discovery.]—A plaintiff has a right to a full and particular discovery as to the original sources from which the defendant alleges himself to have drawn his work. Kelly v. Wyman, 17 W. R. 399.

In a suit to restrain a piracy of a literary work, after interrogatories filed, the defendants, before answer, offered an injunction, and to pay costs; they then moved to stay proceedings:—Held, that their motion was premature, and that the plaintiff was entitled to discovery. Stevens v. Brett, 10 L. T. 231.

Comparison of Copies and Originals.]—On a motion for injunction, reference to master to see if two books were the same. Jeffery v. Bowles, Dick. 429.

A work alleged to be a piracy referred to the master. —— v. Leadbetter, 4 Ves. 681.

As to comparison of books in case of infringement, see Gyles v. Wilcox, 2 Atk. 143.

The court is averse to the practice of its time being occupied by applications for injunctions, to restrain infringements of copyright, in which it is difficult, if not impossible, to take an account of the loss complained of. Bell v. Whitehead 8 L. J., Ch. 141; 3 Jur. 68.

Notwithstanding Bell v. Whitehead (3 Jur. 68), if the court is led to the conclusion that there has been a piracy, it will not grudge any labour that may be requisite in order to ascertain how far the injunction should extend. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Kay & J. 708; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1051.

Form of injunction where certain distinct parts of a work are unobjectionable, and other certain piracies. Ib.

The court will itself compare and decide upon alleged piracies by inspection, where that can be easily and safely done. Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & M. 159.

f. Costs.

Principles as to.]—Where an action is brought to enforce a legal right, such an action to restrain the infringement of a very small part of the plaintiff's copyright, the court will not, as a matter of course, order the defendant to pay the costs of the action. Cooper v. Whittingham (15 Ch. D. 501) and Upmann v. Forester (24 Ch. D. 231) observed on. Walter v. Steinkopff, 61 L. J., Ch. 521; [1892] 3 Ch. 489; 67 L. T. 184; 40 W. R. 599.

Although copyright may be claimed in part only of a work, the whole of which is registered, the part in which copyright is claimed should be distinguished in the bill, otherwise the costs unnecessarily incurred must be borne by the plaintiff. Page v. Wisden, 20 L. T. 435; 17 W. R. 483.

"Full Costs."]—Where an action for alleged infringement of copyright is dismissed with "full costs," according to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 26, the costs are to be taxed in the ordinary way as between party and party. The Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 2, which enacts that where by any public Act it is provided that "either double or treble costs or any other than the usual costs between party and party" shall or may be recovered, the party theretofore entitled to such double, treble or other costs shall, instead thereof, receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to costs as shall be taxed by the proper officer, does not apply, inasmuch as "full costs" are not costs other than the usual costs as between party and party. Avery v. Wood, [1891] 3 Ch. 115; 65 L. T. 122; 39 W. R. 577—C. A.

And see Reeve v. Gibson, post, col. 528.

Plaintiff Entitled to Costs of Establishing his Title.]—In a suit to restrain the piracy of a literary work, a plaintiff who, in opposition to the defendant's denial of his title, obtains an injunction, is entitled to an answer from the defendant for the purpose of having his title admitted (in case, by arrangement between the parties, the title is not established at law), and also of having an account from the defendant of the profits made by the sale of the spurious work. The plaintiff therefore, under such circumstances, is entitled to the costs of the suit, including the answer as between party and party; and if, by the refusal of the defendant to pay those costs, the plaintiff is compelled to bring his cause to a hearing, he will be entitled to the whole costs of the suit as between party and party, although, at the hearing, he may waive the account; and the plaintiff's equity in this respect will not be affected by his having offered to waive his right to an answer with a view to obtain terms more beneficial to himself than the court would, under any circumstances, accord to him; as, for instance, with a view to receive costs as between solicitor and client. Kelly v. Hooper, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 197.

No Costs given—Bona fides of Unsuccessful Defendant.]—When S. had published in a provincial newspaper, of which he was proprietor, whole articles taken verbatim from a magazine, alleging in justification the custom of the trade:—Held, that the proprietor of the magazine was entitled to an injunction against S., but inasmuch as he had acted with bona fides, the court did not give either party his costs of the motion. Maxwell v. Somerton, 30 L. T. 11; 22 W. R. 313.

—— Mala fides of Successful Defendant.]—When an upholsterer, who had published an illustrated furnishing guide with engravings of the articles of furniture which he sold, and descriptive remarks thereon, filed a bill to restrain another upholsterer from publishing, for the purposes of his own trade, a similar work in which many of the engravings and portions of the letterpress of the first work were alleged to be copied:—Held, that he could not be restrained by injunction from so copying the illustrations or such part of his work as was not original but merely descriptive of his stock, or of common articles of furniture; but that, the latter's work being a flagrant imitation of the former's, he could be allowed no costs. Cobbett v. Woodward, 41 L. J., Ch. 656; L. R. 14 Eq. 407; 27 L. T. 27; 20 W. R. 963.

—— Of Unnecessary Proceedings.]—When, in a suit for the infringement of copyright, the chief clerk's certificate, made in pursuance of the decree, was, on the application of the plaintiff, referred back to the chief clerk, and subsequently confirmed, the court refused to make any order as to the costs of the summons and subsequent reference. Kelly v. Hodge, 29 L. T. 387.

g. Other Matters.

Penalties.]—Two penalties might be incurred on the same day, on 12 Geo. 2, c. 36, for selling books originally written and published here, and afterwards reprinted in any other country, and imported into this, if the acts of sale were distinct. Brooke v. Millikin, 3 Term Rep. 509.

Property in Blocks.]—The drawings on the blocks from which illustrations of a book were engraved were sketched by the author of the drawings himself:—Held, that, having regard to the terms of the agreement, the blocks themselves were not the property of either the plaintiffs or the defendants, but that the defendants must deliver them up to the plaintiffs. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673; 12 Ch. D. 886; 41 L. T. 250; 28 W. R. 39.

Delivery to Public Libraries.]—A single part of a work published at uncertain intervals, of which thirty copies only were printed, twenty-six of which were subscribed for, the principal costs of publication being defrayed by funds devised for that purpose, was not a periodical publication, or book, which need be entered at Stationers' Hall; nor was it demandable by the public libraries under 54 Geo. 3, c. 156. British Museum v. Payne, 2 Y. & J. 166; 1 M. & P. 415; 4 Bing. 549; 29 R. R. 617.

The 8 Anne, c. 19, s. 5, made it necessary for a printer of a book, composed after the passing of the act, and published for the first time after the composition, which book was printed and published with the consent of the proprietor of the copyright, to deliver a copy upon the best paper to the warehouse-keeper of the Company of Stationers, for the use of the library of the University of Cambridge, notwithstanding the title to the copy of such book, and the consent of the proprietor to the publication, was not entered in the registry book of the company. Cambridge University v. Bryer, 16 East, 317.

The object of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 6, was to obtain for the British Museum a copy of every book published anywhere under British rule, whether there should be copyright in the book or not. Routledge v. Low, 37 L. J., Ch. 454; L. R. 3 H. L. 100; 18 L. T. 874; 16 W. R. 1081.

Patent Presses.]—Upon a bill in equity by the king's printer to restrain the defendant from the publication of certain acts of parliament, to which the patentees for printing law books were also defendants, the court refused to interfere between the contending patents, and therefore only restrained the defendant from printing at any other than a patent press. Buskett v. Cunningham, 2 Eden, 1173.

Upon the answer to a bill by the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, of the king's printer not joining but being made defendant, an injunction restraining the sale in England of bibles, prayer-books, etc., printed by the king's printer in Scotland, was continued to the hearing. Oxford and Cambridge Universities v. Richardson, 6 Ves. 689.

Question of title in king's printer in Ireland to print Irish statutes, not proper for a court of equity. Grierson v. Eyre, 9 Ves. 341.

How far the university of Oxford's privilege of printing bibles, &c., extends. Hill v. Oxford University, 1 Vern. 275.

Motion by the king's patentees for an injunction to stop the sale of English bibles printed beyond the sea denied till the validity of the patent had been tried at law. Anon., 1 Vern. 120.

The stat. of 8 Anne, c. 19, does not extend to the Universities, Eton, Westminster, or Winchester. Donaldson v. Beckett, 2 Bro. P. C. 129.

A patentee claiming an exclusive right of printing bibles must establish his right at law before he can have an injunction in equity. Grierson v. Jackson, 1 Ridgew. L. & S. 304.

B. MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC COPYRIGHT.

1. Musical Compositions.

a. Subject Matter.

Before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45.]—The Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 (which by s. 20 incorporates 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, and extends its provisions to musical compositions), confers an exclusive right to the performance of musical compositions published within ten years before the passing of the act. Hutchins & Romer, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Q. B. 505; 4 Q. B. D. 483; 41 L. T. 144; 27 W. R. 857—C. A.

A musical composition was a work within 8 Anne, c. 19. Bach v. Longman, Cowp. 623. S. P., 1 Chit. 26; Platt v. Button, 19 Ves. 447; Coop. C. C. 303.

Though published on a single sheet of paper. Clementi v. Goulding, 11 East, 244; 2 Camp. 25. S. P., Storace v. Longman, and Hime or Hine v. Dale, 11 East, 244, n.; 2 Camp. 27, n.

Nature of Right.]—The copyright in musical compositions is more extensively protected than the copyright in dramatic pieces. Russell v. Smith, 15 Sim. 181; 15 L. J., Ch. 340.

Re-arrangements.]—A person who writes words to an old air, and procures an accompaniment and publishes them together, is entitled to the copyright in the whole work. Leader v. Purday, 7 C. B. 4; 18 L. J., C. P. 97; 12 Jur. 1091.

One who adapts words of his own to an old air, adding thereto a prelude and an accompaniment, also his own, acquires a copyright in the combination, and may, in an action for an infringement against one who has pirated the whole, properly describe himself as the proprietor of the entire composition Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 182.

Score for Piano.]—The pianoforte score of an already existing opera, whether arranged by the composer himself or by another person, is the subject of copyright within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12. Wood v. Boosey, 9 B. & S. 175; 37 L. J., Q. B. 84; L. R. 3 Q. B. 223; 18 L. T. 105; 16 W. R. 485—Ex. Ch.

In registering the pianoforte score of an opera pursuant to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 6, it is not correct to insert as the author of it the name of the composer of the opera. Ib.

Made Abroad.]—An alien resident abroad composed three musical pieces in a foreign country, and sold the copyright in this country to a British subject, who published the work in London. The work was on the same day published in Prussia. On motion in a suit instituted by the purchaser of the copyright against a person who had, without leave, published the three musical compositions in this country:—Held, that the publication was within the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45; and the court granted an injunction, restraining the unauthorised publication. Buxton v. James, 5 De G. & S. 80; 16 Jur. 15.

Title.]—In a declaration for pirating a book, an allegation that the plaintiff was the author of a book, being a musical composition called A., is well supported by showing him to be the author of a musical composition of that name, comprised in, and occupying only one page of a work with a different title, which contained several other musical compositions. White v. Geroch, 2 B. & Ald. 298; 1 Chit. 24; 22 R. R. 786.

See also cases, post, col. 517, &c.

b. Assignment.

Must be in Writing.]—An assignment of a copyright under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, must be in writing. Layland v. Stewart, 46 L. J., Ch. 103; 4 Ch. D. 419; 25 W. R. 225.

Therefore, where the author of a song agreed verbally with S. to part with his copyright, and subsequently by instrument in writing assigned it to L., who entered the song at Stationers' Hall:—Held, that the title of L. must prevail, and that he could sustain an action to restrain S. from infringing his copyright. Ib.

Assignment by Foreigner.] — The English assignee of the copyright of a foreign musical composer is within the protection of the statutes relating to copyright. D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Y. & C. 288; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 21.

Semble, that a foreigner who resides and publishes in England, is within the like protection. Ib.

—— After Publication Abroad.]—In 1830, a foreigner resident in Paris made a legal assignment of his copyright in an opera to L., resident in England, and L., in the same year, sold his interest to C., without executing any written memorandum. C. died in 1834, and in 1836 C.'s executrix obtained a legal assignment. In the meantime, copies of the full score had been imported into England, and sold in London by several tradesmen. In 1841 P. published and sold the overture of the opera in London:—Held, that C.'s executrix could not maintain an injunction against P. for piracy. Chappell v. Purday, 4 Y. & C. 485.

Quære, whether, after a foreigner has published his work in a foreign country, he can at common law assign his copyright, limited to Great Britain, to a British subject, so as to give the assignee the benefit of the statutes relating to copyright. Ib.

Liberty to Perform.]—Within ten years before the passing of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, C. set to music two songs, and in 1843, after the passing of that statute, he by deed assigned to D. and M. his copyright in the two musical compositions, together with all property and benefit therein. The interest of D. and M. in the musical compositions afterwards vested in H. and R. In 1878 C. purported to assign to A. the sole liberty of performing or singing, or causing or permitting to be performed or sung, the musical compositions. A. thereupon caused entries to be made in the register at Stationers' Hall, representing him to be the sole proprietor of the liberty of performing the musical compositions:—Held, upon motion by H. and R., that the entries must be expunged; for C., by the deed made in 1843, had granted the sole liberty of performing the musical compositions to D. and M., and therefore could not, in 1878, grant it to A. Hutchins and Romer, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Q. B. 505; 4 Q. B. D. 483; 41 L. T. 144; 27 W. R. 857.

W. was engaged as musical director at a theatre on the terms that he was to find all the music and engage the performers, and provide the musical instruments, pay for the printed music, and for the paper on which the original music (if he provided any such) was written. He did, under the direction of M., his employer, compose certain original music for a stage play. After the termination of his employment, H., by the licence of M., performed the stage play, together with the music, without the permission of W.; whereupon, W. brought an action against H. for so using the music without his permission:—Held, that H., as a licensee of M., was entitled to use the music. Wallenstein v. Herbert, 16 L. T. 453; 15 W. R. 838.

2. Dramatic Compositions.

a. Subject Matter, &c.

Before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15.]—Before the statute, a proprietor of the copyright of a tragedy, which had been printed and published for sale, could not maintain an action against the manager of a theatre for publicly acting and representing such tragedy in an unabridged form for profit. Murray v. Elliston, 1 D. & R. 299; 5 B. & Ald. 657; 24 R. R. 519.

An injunction, however, had been granted in chancery to restrain the publication in a magazine of a farce occasionally suffered by the author to be acted, but never printed or published. Macklin v. Richardson, Amb. 694.

Before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s 20.]—Before this statute, the assignee of the copyright of a dramatic work, printed and published within ten years of the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, and not the author, who had assigned such copyright, was entitled to the sole right of representing the piece or causing it to be represented. Cumberland v. Planché, 3 N. & M. 537; 1 A. & E. 580; 3 L. J., K. B. 194.

So, where the work was printed and published subsequently to the act, and no reservation of the right to the exclusive representation was expressly made by the author. Ib.

Printing and Publishing—Acting.]—The publication in this country of a dramatic piece, or musical composition, as a book before it has been publicly represented or performed, does not deprive the author of such dramatic piece, or musical composition, or his assignee, of the exclusive right of representing or performing it. Chappell v. Boosey, 51 L. J., Ch. 625; 21 Ch. D. 232; 46 L. T. 854; 30 W. R. 733.

First represented Abroad.]—The author of a dramatic work which has been first represented in a foreign country is not entitled to any exclusive right of representation in this country, the representation of a dramatic work being a publication of it within 7 Vict. c. 12, s. 19. Boucicault v. Chatterton, 46 L. J., Ch. 305; 5 Ch. D. 267; 35 L. T. 745; 25 W. R. 287—C. A.

Contrà in United States.]—Every author, before publication, has a common law right of property in his productions. Palmer v. Dewitt, 23 L. T. 823—Supreme Court, New York.

A public representation of a dramatic piece at a theatre is not such a publication as to deprive the author or his assignee of such right of property. Ib.

Where, therefore, a comedy was performed at a theatre in England, but not otherwise published, and the defendant obtained the words and arrangements from persons who saw it performed in London, and printed and published it in America, on an action being brought by the author's assignee to restrain the publication and sale:—Held, that the action was maintainable, as it is not open to a spectator, on witnessing the public performance of a play, to commit it to memory and then publish it to the world. Ib.

Any surreptitious procuring of the literary property of another, no matter how obtained, if unauthorised and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, and before publication by him, is an invasion of his proprietary rights, if made use of to his injury. Ib.

In Person Employed to Write.]—One who employs another to write a play for him, and even suggests the subject, does not thereby become the proprietor of the copyright. Lery v. Rutley, 40 L. J., C. P. 244; L. R. 6 C. P. 523; 24 L. T. 621; 19 W. R. 976.

A person who employs another to adapt a foreign dramatic piece for representation upon the English stage, and who has no other share in the design or execution of the work than that of suggesting the subject, is not the author of such adaptation within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15; and therefore, when such employment is by parol, the employer has not the right of representing it without an assignment in writing from the author. Shepherd v. Conquest, 17 C. B. 427; 25 L. J., C. P. 127; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 236; 4 W. R. 283.

If a manager of a theatre, having designed to bring out an old play, with new scenery, dresses, and musical accompaniments, hires A. to compose the requisite music, who does so, and is paid for it, the sole right to the representation or performance of such musical compositions, as part of the whole, becomes thereby vested in the former, without assignment or the consent in writing of A., the terms of the contract between them being, that the compositions should become part of the entire dramatic piece, and that the manager should have the sole liberty of representing and performing the compositions with the dramatic piece. Hatton v. Kean, 7 C. B., (N.S.) 268; 29 L. J., C. P. 20; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 226; 1 L. T. 10; 8 W. R. 7.

Joint Authorship, what Constitutes.] — In order to constitute a joint authorship of a dramatic piece or other literary work, it must be the result of a preconcerted joint design. Lery v. Rutley, supra.

Mere alterations, additions, or improvements by another person, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle such other person to claim to be a joint author of the work. Ib.

A lessee of a theatre employed W. to write a play for him, suggesting the subject, and W. having completed it, the lessee and some members of his company introduced various alterations in the incidents and in the dialogue, to make the play more attractive, and one of them wrote an additional scene:—Held, that these circumstances did not make the lessee joint author of the play with W. Ib.

The play being finished, a sum of 4*l.* 15*s.* was paid to W. on account, and he signed a receipt drawn up by the lessee's attorney, as follows: "Received of Mr. L. the sum of 4*l.* 15*s.* [on] account of 15 guineas for my share, title and interest as co-author with him in the drama entitled, &c.; balance of 15 guineas to be paid on assigning my share to him." The balance was never paid, nor was any assignment executed by W.:—Held, no evidence that the lessee was either a joint author or an assignee of the author. Ib.

The adaptor of a play who introduces into his version material alterations is an "author of a dramatic piece" within the Dramatic Copyright Act, 1833. The author of such a dramatic piece, having assigned the provincial rights therein, cannot, without the concurrence of his assignee, maintain an action against an infringer of those rights. Tree v. Bowkett, 74 L. T. 77.

Song or Dramatic Entertainment.]—C. was the proprietor, by assignment with the author, with the right of singing it when and where he pleased, of the words of a comic song, called "Come to Peckham Rye," which he sang, to a well-known air, for profit, at public music-halls, dressed in character, and accompanying his singing with gesture and expression. He had never registered the song, or printed it, nor, otherwise than by singing it as before mentioned, had he ever published it. B., unknown to and without C.'s consent, printed and published, in a penny book or sheet of songs, a song called "Down at Peckham Rye," the words of which closely resembled and imitated the words of C.'s song:—Held, that C.'s song was not a book within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, but came within the definition of a dramatic piece, as a "musical or dramatic entertainment," in the same section, and consequently did not require registration under s. 24, which applied to books only. Clark v. Bishop, 25 L. T. 908.

Introduction to Pantomime.]—An introduction to a pantomime—that is, the only written part of the entertainment, is within the protection of the statute. Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871; 4 D. & L. 666; 16 L. J., C. P. 105; 11 Jur. 127.

Dramatising Novel.] — See cases, post, col. 522.

b. Assignment.

In Writing.]—Injunction granted to restrain the performance of a comedy, the copyright of which had been sold by the author, and had been afterwards assigned by writing to the plaintiffs, although it did not appear whether the original assignment was in writing. Morris v. Kelly, 1 Jac. & W. 481; 21 R. R. 216.

Effect of.]—A. agreeing with B., to "let B. have" a particular drama in discharge of 10*l.* owing by A. to B., is a complete assignment to

B. of A.'s whole property in the drama. Lacy v. Toole, 15 L. T. 512.

A deed, subsequently to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, assigning all the right, title, and interest in a dramatic piece, both copyright and acting right, does not require registration under that act, in order to entitle the assignee to the exclusive right of representation, and to all the other rights and remedies conferred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, on the author of a dramatic piece and his assignee. Lacy v. Rhys, 4 B. & S. 873; 33 L. J., Q. B. 157; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 9 L. T. 607; 12 W. R. 309.

The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22, applies only where a copyright only is assigned, and not the exclusive right of representation. Ib.

It is competent to an assignee of the sole right of representing a dramatic piece, to sue for penalties under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2, notwithstanding the assignment is not by deed, or registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Marsh v. Conquest, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 418; 33 L. J., C. P. 319; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 989; 10 L. T. 717; 12 W. R. 1006.

The assignment of the copyright of a book consisting of or containing a dramatic piece does not, in the absence of an expressed intention that it should be so, pass the right of representing or performing it. That may be the subject of a subsequent assignment to a third person. Ib.

Licence by one Part Owner.]—The part owner of a dramatic entertainment cannot grant a licence for its representation without the consent of all the other owners. Accordingly, where the registered owner of the undivided moiety of the copyright of an opera had alone granted a licence for its representation, on an action by the other owners of the other moiety to recover the penalty under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2:—Held, that, having regard to that act and the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the licence was illegally granted, and that the defendant was liable to pay to the plaintiffs one-half of the penalty of 40*s.* for each representation. Powell v. Head, 48 L. J., Ch. 731; 12 Ch. D. 686; 41 L. T. 70.

3. Infringement.

a. What is.

Piece Represented, but Not Published.]—Injunction to restrain the publishing in a magazine a farce occasionally suffered by the author to be acted, but never printed or published. Macklin v. Richardson, Ambl. 694.

An infringement of the registered copyright of the music of an opera may be committed where the opera itself has not been published, and so no copy of it could be deposited; and where that music having been made the subject of two "arrangements," one without the voice, another for the voice and piano, those arrangements having been published, the infringer had used them for his own production. In such a case the question of what was intended to be registered will be considered with reference to all the parts of the register, and if certain portions of the forms of registry are, in the particular case, unnecessary and unmeaning, the introduction of them will not affect those portions of the register which are correct. Fairlie v. Boosey, 48 L. J., Ch. 697; 4 App. Cas. 711.

Offenbach composed, in Paris, the music of an opera called "Vert-Vert." S., by his permission, made two "arrangements" of the music, one for the piano without, the other for the piano with, the voice. The opera was produced at the Opera Comique, in Paris, on the 10th of March, 1869, but was never, as a whole, printed. The two arrangements were printed in a book published in Paris at 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, on the 28th of March, 1869. B. became the assignee of the music of the opera, and also of the "arrangements." He sought to register them in England. He filled up the statutory forms required for that purpose. One column of those forms had, in the lower portion, the heading, "Time and place of first representation," and the words, "Théâtre Impérial de l'Opera Comique, Paris, France, 10th March, 1867," but the upper portion of the same column had the words, "Time and place of first publication," under which were the figures and words, "28th March, 1869. 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, Paris, France." The form relating to the assignment of the music of the opera was correct in the first two columns, but in the third, under the heading, "Assignee of copyright," were, first of all, the name and residence of B., and then the words, "as assignee of the copyright in the music of the said book, and also of the right of publicly performing such music." The written but unpublished music of the opera was not deposited at Stationers' Hall; the "book" containing the pianoforte arrangements was deposited there. F. produced a dramatic representation, calling it "Vert-Vert, music by Offenbach," the music being taken from the "arrangements," but the words were supplied by English writers:—Held, that there had been a sufficient registration of the music of the opera, and that the registration was not affected by the reference to the "book" of the arrangements, and that F. had been guilty of an infringement of B.'s rights. Ib.

—— Published, but not Represented.]—The publication in this country of a dramatic piece, or musical composition, as a book before it has been publicly represented or performed does not deprive the author of such dramatic piece, or musical composition, or his assignee, of the exclusive right of representing or performing it. Chappell v. Boosey, 51 L. J., Ch. 625; 21 Ch. D. 232; 46 L. T. 851; 30 W. R. 733.

Substantial Part.]—To support an action for infringement of dramatic copyright under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2, it must be proved that the defendant had taken a substantial and material part of the plaintiff's production. Chatterton v. Cave, 47 L. J., C. P. 545; 3 App. Cas. 483; 38 L. T. 397; 26 W. R. 498.

A. had produced a drama on the tale as written, and the play as acted, of "The Wandering Jew," the authorship of M. Eugène Sue, but had introduced two scenic representations into his production not to be found in the French original; and B. afterwards produced a drama on the same subject, in which these two scenic representations were also introduced; an arbitrator had found "that two scenes or points had been taken direct from the drama of the plaintiff, but that the drama of the defendant is not, except in these respects, a copy from or a colourable imitation of the drama of the plaintiff," and had directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant:—Held, that the finding was conclusive. Ib.

The words in the statute, "production or any part thereof," must receive a reasonable construction, and are to be treated as implying some part that is substantial and material. Ib.

At the trial the cause had been withdrawn from the jury and submitted to the decision of the judge. On a motion that the verdict should be entered for the plaintiffs, or a new trial granted, on the ground that the representation by the defendant of part of the plaintiff's play had been found as a fact, the judge (who was a member of the court where the case was pending) explained to his brethren on the bench what was the meaning he intended to convey by the finding:—Held, that it was competent for him to do so. Ib.

It is a question of fact, and not of law, whether there has been a representation of a part of a dramatic entertainment. Planché v. Braham, 8 Car. & P. 68; 5 Scott, 242; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 17; 3 Hodges, 288; 7 L. J., C. P. 25; 1 Jur. 823.

Where the jury found that the singing the words of a song taken from an opera written by the plaintiff amounted to such a representation, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Ib.

In Work of Criticism.]—The defendant having, in two numbers of a periodical work of theatrical criticism, inserted detached extracts, to the extent of six or seven pages, from a farce the property of the plaintiffs, containing forty pages, interspersed with criticisms, a bill for a perpetual injunction, and an account of the profits of the number, which amounted not to 3*l.*, was dismissed, with costs. Whittingham v. Wooler, 2 Swans. 428.

Under Different Form.]—To publish, in the form of quadrilles and waltzes, the airs of an opera of which there exists an exclusive copyright, is an act of piracy. D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Y. & C. 289.

Description on Title-Page—Fraud on Public—Song.]—Certain music publishers having adapted original words to an old American air, which was rearranged for them, gave to the song so composed the name of "Minnie," and procured it to be sung by Madame Anna Thillon, a popular singer, at M. Julien's concerts in London; and when it had by that means become a favourite song, they published it with a title-page containing a picture of the singer who had brought the song into notice, and the words "Minnie, sung by Madame Anna Thillon and Miss Dolby at Julien's Concerts, written by George Linley":—Held, that the publishers had by these means obtained a right of property in that name and description of their song, which a court of equity would restrain any person from infringing. Chappell v. Sheard, 2 Kay & J. 117; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 996; 3 W. R. 646.

Another music publisher subsequently published the same melody with different words, and upon the title-page they placed a similar portrait of Madame Anna Thillon, with the words "Minnie Dale, sung at Julien's Concerts (and always encored) by Madame Anna Thillon; the music composed by H. S. Thompson;" this song having never, in truth, been sung by Madame Anna Thillon, at Julien's concerts:—Held, that this was a palpable attempt to induce the public to believe that the song so published was the same as that of the first publishers; and an injunction was granted to restrain this or any other similar infringement of their right to the name and description of their song. Ib.

There are four indicia in the title of a song, the imitation of which by another party may be restrained by injunction, viz., the name of the song, the name of the singer, of the composer, and of the publisher. Ib.

There cannot be a copyright claimed for a part of a book and disclaimed for another part, as in a patent; and the plaintiffs were entitled to protection, although they had simply registered their song, without mentioning that they claimed no copyright in the tune. Ib.

The statement in the title-page, "written by L.," when the music was not, although the words were composed by L., is not such a misrepresentation as to disentitle the plaintiffs to protection. Ib.

C. having published a song, on the title-page of which was a portrait of Madame Anna Thillon, and the words "Minnie, sung by Madame Anna Thillon and Miss Dolby at Julien's Concerts, written by George Linley," and this song having become very popular, D. subsequently published another song, consisting of different words to the same air (in which there was no copyright), with a title-page on which was a different portrait of Madame Anna Thillon, copied from an American publication, and the words "Minnie, dear Minnie. Madame Anna Thillon":—Held, that this was an obvious attempt to pass off D.'s publication for that of C., which had obtained the public favour; and this attempt was restrained by an interlocutory injunction, without imposing upon the parties the necessity of trying the right at law. Chappell v. Davidson, 2 Kay & J. 123.

Held, also, that the words "Written by George Linley," who was chiefly known as a musical composer, on the title-page of the plaintiffs' song, did not so clearly manifest an intention to mislead the public into the belief that the music was composed by him as to deprive the plaintiffs of their right to the injunction. Ib.

Nor did the entry at Stationers' Hall of the music as well as the words of the song, although the plaintiffs might have entered only those parts of the publication to which they had an exclusive right. Ib.

The defendant could not escape his liability by cautioning his shopmen to explain to purchasers that his song was not the same as the plaintiffs', because he could not secure that retail dealers purchasing from him would give the same information to their customers. Ib.

—— Hemy's Pianoforte Tutor.]—The plaintiffs were the proprietors of an elementary musical work, called "Hemy's Royal Modern Tutor for the Pianoforte." The defendant, who had purchased the plates of an old pianoforte tutor, called "Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," employed Mr. Hemy, the editor of the plaintiff's work, to re-edit it, and called the new edition, "Hemy's New and Revised Edition of Jousse's Royal Standard Pianoforte Tutor," the name "Hemy" being at the head of the title-page, and in characters much more conspicuous than the word "Jousse's":—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, on the ground that the title-page of the defendant's work was a fraudulent imitation of that of the plaintiff, and calculated to deceive the public. Metzler v. Wood, 47 L. J., Ch. 625; 8 Ch. D. 606; 38 L. T. 544; 26 W. R. 577.

Gratuitous Distribution.]—The publication of a piece of music, not for sale or hire, but by the gratuitous distribution of lithographed copies amongst the members of a musical society, is a publication for which a party is liable as for an invasion of the property of the proprietor therein, independently of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 15. Novello v. Ludlow, 12 C. B. 177; 21 L. J., C. P. 169; 16 Jur. 689.

Author—Original Play—Sole Liberty of Representation.]—By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 1, the author, or his assignee, of any play, composed and not printed or published by the author thereof or his assignee, shall have as his own property the sole liberty of representing such play at any place of dramatic entertainment whatsoever in any part of the United Kingdom, and shall be deemed and taken to be the proprietor thereof.—In an action for the infringement of the plaintiffs' sole liberty of representing a play of which they were the joint authors, it was proved that the plaintiffs commenced to write the play in the autumn of 1889, and, having finished it in March, 1892, it was publicly performed at a theatre on June 30. 1892; that the defendants wrote a play in many respects similar to the plaintiffs' play, and that the defendants' play was written and completely finished between the end of 1889 and the early part of 1890, and was publicly performed at a theatre on July 4. 1892. The defendants' play was, as between the parties to the action, in every respect an original play, and in no way copied from or suggested by the plaintiffs, and there was no direct evidence that both plays came from a common source:—Held, that, assuming the two plays to be substantially alike either wholly or in material parts, the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain their action, because the defendants, having written and finished their play before the plaintiffs had written and finished theirs, were entitled to the sole liberty of representation thereof under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 1, and, their right having vested, there was nothing in any subsequent legislation to deprive them of it. Reichardt v. Sapte, [1893] 2 Q. B. 308.

Necessary Consent of Author.]—By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15. s. 2, a penalty is imposed on any one who shall represent any dramatic piece without the consent in writing of the author or other proprietor first had and obtained:—Held, that this consent need not be in the handwriting of, or signed by, the author or other proprietor, and that the statute is satisfied if it is in writing, though given only by the agent of the author. Morton v. Copeland, 16 C. B. 517; 24 L. J., C. P. 169; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 979; 3 W. R. 593.

In an action by a dramatic author for a penalty under the statute, it appeared that he was a member of a society of dramatic authors, the secretary of which had given the defendant a consent in writing to play dramas belonging to the authors forming such society, upon his punctual transmission of the monthly bills, and payment of the prices for the performance of such dramas. The society published a prospectus, showing the terms on which permission might be obtained from the secretary for the performance of pieces, the property of its members, and that supplementary lists would be annually published of the plays of its members which should from time to time be added to the stock of the society:—Held, that such consent exempted the defendant from any penalty under the act for the performance of dramas of the plaintiff which had been composed by him subsequently to such consent, and belonged to the stock of the society, although the same had not been published by the society in any supplementary list, and although the defendant had not complied with the terms of transmitting monthly bills and paying the prices for such performances. Ib.

But a licence cannot be granted by one part owner of a dramatic entertainment without the consent of the other owners. Powell v. Head, 48 L. J., Ch. 731; 12 Ch. D. 686; 41 L. T. 70.

Absence of Consent in Writing.]—By 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 15, ss. 1 and 2, it is in substance provided that the author of any dramatic piece or entertainment, or the assignee of such author, shall have, as his own property, the sole liberty of representing such production, or causing it to be represented, at any place of dramatic entertainment during certain periods mentioned in the act, and shall be deemed the sole proprietor thereof, and that, if any person shall, during the continuance of such sole liberty as aforesaid, "contrary to the intent of this act, or right of the author or his assignee," represent such production, or cause it to be represented, without the consent in writing of the author or other proprietor, at any place of dramatic entertainment, every such offender shall be liable for each and every such representation (among other alternatives) to the payment of an amount not less than 40*s.* to the author or other proprietor. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20 and 21, the above provisions are extended to musical compositions, and it is provided that the sole liberty of representing dramatic pieces and musical compositions shall endure and be the property of the author and his assigns for the term in the act provided for the duration of copyright in books.—The plaintiff was employed by the defendant, the proprietor of a music-hall, as the conductor of the orchestra, at a weekly salary, and had been in the habit of composing the music for ballets performed there, receiving payments of varying amounts from the defendant in respect of such compositions. The plaintiff composed the music for a Christmas ballet, to be performed at the defendant's music-hall, but while the piece was running he threw up his engagement as conductor, and took away the musical score and band-parts necessary for the performance of the music. It was subsequently arranged orally between the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should give up the score and band-parts to the defendant in consideration of a payment of 20*l.* by the defendant. The defendant afterwards continued to perform the piece with the plaintiff's music, and the plaintiff brought an action to recover penalties in respect of such subsequent performances. The jury found that the music composed for the ballet by the plaintiff was a substantial, independent, musical composition, and that the plaintiff had not sold his rights therein to the defendant:—Held, that, in the absence of any assignment or consent to the representation of the composition in writing given by the plaintiff, the performances were contrary to the right of the author, and the action was maintainable. Shepherd v. Conquest (17 C. B. 427) followed. Eaton v. Lake, 57 L. J., Q. B. 227; 20 Q. B. D. 378; 59 L. T. 100; 36 W. R. 277—C. A.

Dramatising Novel.]—Any person may dramatise a published novel, even though the author of the novel has dramatised his own work. Tyole v. Yorke, 43 L. J., Q. B. 170; L. R. 9 Q. B. 523 30 L. T. 729; 22 W. R. 694.

H. wrote and published a novel which he afterwards dramatised. He assigned the drama to the plaintiff, but it was never printed, published, or represented upon the stage. G., in ignorance of H.'s drama, also dramatised the novel in a different form, and assigned his drama to the defendant, who represented it on the stage:—Held, that, H. having published his novel, anyone might dramatise it, and, although the two dramas were founded upon the novel written by him, the representation upon the stage of the drama written by G. was not a representation of the drama written by H.; and that the plaintiff could, therefore, not recover penalties from the defendant under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, ss. 1 and 2. Ib.

A. published a play, and afterwards published a novel founded upon it, into which he introduced many scenes and passages from the play. B. afterwards published a play, compiled from A.'s novel, without (as was alleged) any knowledge of A.'s play. B.'s play contained scenes and passages substantially identical with scenes and passages which were common to both A.'s play and novel:—Held, that even if B.'s play was a fair adaptation of the novel, and not an infringement of the copyright therein, it was an infringement of the copyright in A.'s play. Reade v. Lacy, 1 Johns. & H. 524; 30 L. J., Ch. 655; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 463; 4 L. T. 354; 9 W. R. 531.

An author of a drama called "Gold," which had been printed and represented on the stage, published a novel founded upon it, called "It is never too late to Mend," to which novel he transferred some of the scenes from the drama. The defendant caused another drama to be constructed from the novel, which he called "Never too late to Mend," taking many of the scenes from the novel which had been imported into the novel from the original drama, and produced it at his theatre:—Held, that this was an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in his drama. Reade v. Conquest, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 479; 31 L. J., C. P. 153; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 764; 5 L. T. 677; 10 W. R. 271. And see 9 C. B. (N.S.) 755; 30 L. J., C. P. 209; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 265; 3 L. T. 888; 9 W. R. 434.

It is no infringement of copyright to represent a play dramatised from a novel written by another author; but it is an infringement to print and publish a play so constructed. Tinsley v. Lacy, 1 H. & M. 747; 2 N. R. 438; 32 L. J., Ch. 535; 11 W. R. 876.

—— Novel published before Drama.]—An action was brought by the executors of A. to restrain the defendant from representing a certain drama in infringement of the plaintiffs' stage copyright. A. had first published a novel and afterwards had published a dramatised version of his own novel. The defendant's drama was dramatised directly from the novel, after the publication of the dramatised version by A., but not with the help of it:—Held, that A. having published the novel before the drama, any person had a right to dramatise the novel and represent the drama; and that therefore the action failed. Schlesinger v. Bedford, 63 L. T. 762.

—— Drama published before Novel.]—An action was brought by the executors of A. to restrain the defendant from representing a certain drama in infringement of the plaintiffs' stage copyright. A. had first published a drama and afterwards a novel founded on it. The defendant's drama was dramatised directly from the novel, and not with the help of A.'s drama:—Held, that A. having published the drama before the novel, no person had a right to infringe the stage copyright in the drama, even though the passages complained of were taken from the novel and not from the drama of the author, and, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction. Schlesinger v. Turner, 63 L. T. 764.

—— Multiplying Copies.]—The defendant dramatised the novel, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and caused his play to be performed on the stage. The infringement of copyright complained of was that, for the purpose of producing the play, the defendant made four copies of it, one for the Lord Chamberlain and three for the use of the performers, either in MS. or by the aid of a typewriter. Very considerable passages in the play were extracted almost verbatim from the novel. The defendant claimed the right to make more copies if it should be necessary to enable him to give further representations of the play in London and elsewhere:—Held, that what had been done by the defendant constituted an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright, and that they were entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from printing or otherwise multiplying copies of this play containing any passages from the plaintiff's book:—Held, also, that all passages from the plaintiff's book in the four copies must be cancelled. Warne v. Seebohm, 57 L. J., Ch. 689; 39 Ch. D. 73; 58 L. T. 928; 36 W. R. 686.

Place of Dramatic Entertainment.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 1, gives the author of a dramatic piece not printed or published the sole liberty of representing it at any place of dramatic entertainment; and s. 2 enacts, that if any person shall, during the continuance of such sole liberty, without the consent of the author, represent such piece at any place of dramatic entertainment, "every such offender" shall be liable for each and every such representation to the payment of not less than 40*s.* or to the full amount of the benefit arising from such representation or the loss sustained therefrom, whichever shall be the greater damages. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, by s. 20, enacts that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, shall apply to musical compositions, and that the sole liberty of representing any dramatic piece or musical composition shall be the property of the author and his assigns for the term then mentioned; and by s. 21 enacts that the person who shall have such sole liberty of representing such dramatic piece or musical composition, "shall have and enjoy the remedies given and provided by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, as if the same were re-enacted" in that act:—Held, that the person whose right under s. 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, to such sole liberty of representing a musical composition, has been infringed, is entitled to recover the penalty of 40*s.* given by s. 2 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, although such musical composition has not been represented at a place of dramatic entertainment. Wall v. Taylor, 52 L. J., Q. B. 558; 11 Q. B. D. 102; 31 W. R. 712—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Q. B. 547; 9 Q. B. D. 727; 47 L. T. 47; 30 W. R. 948; 46 J. P. 679.

An amateur dramatic club gave a performance of a copyright play at a hospital for the entertainment of the inmates. Admission was free; the governors of the hospital paid for the seats and costumes; tickets were given to members of the dramatic club to distribute among their friends, and some reporters for the theatrical newspapers attended:—Held, that the performance was not a performance in a "place of dramatic entertainment" within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, or 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20, and that the performers were not liable to pay penalties to the owners of the copyright. Duck v. Bates, 53 L. J., Q. B. 338; 13 Q. B. D. 843; 50 L. T. 778; 32 W. R. 813; 48 J. P. 501—C. A.

A. was the composer of a musical composition of a representative character, called "The Ship on Fire;" B. sang it at a vocal entertainment, announced by bills, with the price of tickets of admission, and giving a programme of the two parts of the performance. The performance was at Crosby Hall, which was licensed for musical entertainments, and was prepared with seats for the audience, and a stage for the performer; and B., without scenes or appropriate dresses, accompanied his singing with a piano, and gave considerable expression to the matters described:—Held, first, that "The Ship on Fire" was a dramatic piece within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20. Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217; 17 L. J., Q. B. 225; 12 Jur. 723.

Held, secondly, that Crosby Hall was, on the occasion of the performance, a place of dramatic entertainment, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 1, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it was not necessary that A.'s right should be registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 24. Ib.

Letting Rooms for.]—No one can be considered as an offender against the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, so as to be liable to an action at the suit of the author or a proprietor, unless he, by himself or his agent, actually takes part in the representation, which is a violation of the copyright. Russell v. Briant, 8 C. B. 836; 19 L. J., C. P. 33; 14 Jur. 201.

Therefore, one who merely lets a room to the offender is not liable, even though he supplies the benches and lights, or sells a ticket of admission, himself deriving no other profit than that arising from the letting of the room. Ib.

Letting Theatre.]—A proprietor of a theatre let it for one night for the benefit of one of his performers, who was to pay him 30*l.* for the use of it for that night, together with the services of the corps dramatique, band, lights and accessories. The performer who so had the use of the theatre represented therein a dramatic piece the sole right of representing which had been assigned to the plaintiff:—Held, that the proprietor of the theatre caused the piece to be represented, and consequently was guilty of an infringement of the plaintiff's right, and liable to the penalty imposed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2. Marsh v. Conquest, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 418; 33 L. J., C. P. 319; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 989; 10 L. T. 717; 12 W. R. 1006.

The licensed proprietor of a theatre entered into an arrangement with D., whereby he had the use of the theatre for dramatic entertainments. D. provided the company, had the selection of the pieces to be represented, together with the entire management of their representation, and exclusive control over the persons employed in the theatre. The proprietor of the theatre on his part paid for printing and advertising, furnished the lighting, door-keepers, scene-shifters, and supernumeraries, and hired the band, music being a necessary part of the performance. The money taken at the door was taken by the servants of the proprietor, who retained one-half of the gross receipts as his remuneration for the use of the theatre, and handed the other half to D. Among the pieces represented were two which L. had the sole liberty of representing, as assignee of the author, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45:—Held, that no action under those statutes was maintainable by L. against the proprietor of the theatre, as the facts did not show that those pieces had been represented by him, or that there was a partnership between D. and him so as to render him liable for the representation of them by D. Lyon v. Knowles, 3 B. & S. 556; 32 L. J., Q. B. 71; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 774; 7 L. T. 670; 11 W. R. 266. Affirmed on appeal, 5 B. & S. 751; 10 L. T. 876; 12 W. R. 1083—Ex. Ch.

b. Remedies.

Injunction—Action at Law.]—Copyright in music not asserted against violations by several persons for fifteen years, not protected by injunction until established at law. Platt v. Button, 19 Ves. 447.

An interim injunction having been granted, the defendant, instead of submitting, insisted on his right to continue the publication of his song:—Held, that he must pay the costs of a motion against him to continue the injunction, although it appeared that no application had been made to him by the plaintiffs previously to the filing of the bill.

Another part of the plaintiff's case being, that the defendant had printed two bars of music which had been added by the plaintiffs to the original air, the court refused to extend the injunction to restrain such piracy until the fact had been established by a trial at law. Chappell v. Davidson, 2 Kay & J. 123.

Right of Author after Assignment.]—The author of a drama entered into the following agreement with R. & E.:—"Received of Messrs. R. & E. the sum of 75*l.* in part payment of 150*l.* for the London right of a piece to be called 'Ticket of Leave,' the residue to be paid at 2*l.* per night, after the first twenty-five nights of the representation of the same." In an action against the defendant for representing the piece without licence, the judge at the trial having held that the term "London right" meant the whole of the author's right of representation in London, and that the licence was to R. & E. and their assigns:—Held, that he could bring no action for penalties under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, in respect of representations in London, except as trustee for R. & E. or their assigns. Taylor v. Neville, 47 L. J., Q. B. 254; 38 L. T. 50; 26 W. R. 255—C. A.

—— Of Administrator.]—After 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the administrator of the author of a dramatic piece first acted in 1843, by deed, dated the 14th of April, 1859, in consideration of 100*l.*, assigned to the plaintiff the copyright and acting right in all dramatic pieces written by the author; no entry of the assignment to the plaintiff had been made in the registry book in pursuance of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22. The letters of administration were not stamped until March, 1863:—

Held, first, that the administrator might maintain an action for penalties under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, against the defendant for representing the piece without his licence within twenty-eight years of its publication, the period for which the sole liberty of representation is given by that statute, although the deed was not registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22. Lacy v. Rhys, 4 B. & S. 873; 33 L. J., Q. B. 157; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 9 L. T. 607; 12 W. R. 309.

Held, also, that the defendant could not object to the admissibility of the letters of administration in evidence, on the ground that they had not been stamped within six months after the discovery of the mistake in omitting to get them stamped, and the penalty had not been paid, in pursuance of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 43. Ib.

Pleading.]—A count stated that a song, of which the plaintiff was the proprietor, had been sung by an eminent singer at public concerts, and had acquired great popularity, and became in great demand; that he published it with a likeness of the singer on the outside leaf, and that the defendant, after such publication, deceitfully and fraudulently, and without his consent, caused to be printed another song, the music, melody and words whereof closely resembled the music, melody and words of the plaintiff's song, and with an outside leaf bearing the likeness of the same singer, and similar words to those of the plaintiff's song, with the fraudulent intention of representing and inducing a belief that it was the song of the plaintiff, and deceitfully and fraudulently, and without his consent, offered for sale and sold great numbers, under the false colour and pretence that it was the song so published by the plaintiff, whereby he was injured in the sale of his song. A second count was substantially the same, but limited to the piratical use of the title-page and devices on the outside leaf of the plaintiff's song. A third count stated that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the copyright in a certain book, and that the defendant, without his consent in writing, wrongfully and injuriously printed for sale divers copies of the work, whereby his profits were lessened. A fourth count charged the defendant with having in his possession for sale, and selling, copies of the work so unlawfully, and without the consent of the plaintiff, printed. He pleaded to these counts, that the song was printed and published without the name and place of abode of the printer upon the first or last leaves thereof, in violation of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 12:—Held, that the plea disclosed no defence as to the charges contained in the third and fourth counts; and semble, that it could not be taken distributively. Chappell v. Davidson, 18 C. B. 194; 25 L. J., C. P. 225; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 544; 4 W. R. 559.

—— Description of Offence.]—In an action upon the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2, for penalties for the representation of a dramatic piece at a place of dramatic entertainment, without the author's consent, it is sufficient to describe the offence in the words of the act. Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871; 4 D. & L. 666; 16 L. J., C. P. 105; 11 Jur. 127.

To constitute the offence, it is not necessary to show, nor need the declaration aver, that the defendant knowingly invaded the right. Ib.

—— Of Right.]—Declaration upon s. 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, that the plaintiff had the sole liberty of representing and performing a musical composition; yet the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiff, at a place of dramatic entertainment, wrongfully represented and performed the musical composition. Upon motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the right of the plaintiff was stated too largely:—Held, that it was sufficient, inasmuch as it followed the words of the statute. Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217; 17 L. J., Q. B. 225; 12 Jur. 723.

Costs.]—The provisions of the Judicature Act and Order LXV. r. 1, do not apply to costs which are specially given by statute to a particular individual as a matter of right, and therefore in an action brought to recover penalties for infringement of dramatic copyright under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2, a successful plaintiff is entitled, as a matter of right, to the full and reasonable indemnity as to costs, substituted by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 2, for the double costs given by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2. Hasker v. Wood (54 L. J., Q. B. 419) followed. Reeve v. Gibson, 60 L. J., Q. B. 451; [1891] 1 Q. B. 652; 39 W. R. 420—C. A. Affirming 64 L. T. 141.

C. DESIGNS.

1. Subject Matter.

Statutes.] — Distinction between the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65. The first applies to new designs for the ornamentation of articles, the second to new designs of articles of utility. Windover v. Smith, 32 Beav. 200; 1 N. R. 349; 32 L. J., Ch. 561; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 7 L. T. 776; 11 W. R. 323.

Quære, whether the nine months' copyright given by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, in designs ornamenting manufactures, dates from the publication of the manufacture, or from the publication of the design. Dalglish v. Jarvie, 2 Mac. & G. 231; 2 H. & Tw. 437; 20 L. J. Ch. 475; 14 Jur. 945.

New and Original Design.]—The portrait of a well-known public character, copied from a photograph and applied as a design upon earthenware, is not a new and original design within the meaning of the Copyright of Designs Act. Adams v. Clementson, 12 Ch. D. 714; 27 W. R. 379.

Perforated Picture Casting a Shadow.]—The plaintiff claimed to be the proprietor of a subsisting copyright in a certain "book" with a picture or design entitled "The Christograph," which was duly registered. The so-called book was an envelope, with the title printed thereon, containing a piece of cardboard, perforated in such a way that the shadow cast by it on a wall, or otherwise, roughly imitated a well-known picture. The envelope contained also some descriptive lines, which were not claimed to be original. The plaintiff complained that the defendants were selling a similarly perforated card, accompanied by the same lines, and enclosed in an envelope bearing as a title "The Biblioscope, or Shadowgraph," whereby the sale of the plaintiff's article had been diminished. The defendants denied the alleged copyright, and also that the plaintiff was the first inventor of the design:—Held, that the design was not original, and was not capable of being protected by the statute; that the title only was registered, and was the plaintiff's property. As, however, that had not been adopted by the defendants, the plaintiff's case wholly failed. Cable v. Marks, 52 L. J., Ch. 107; 47 L. T. 432; 31 W. R. 221.

Combinations.]—A new combination of old patterns may be a new and an original design, so as to be susceptible of registration under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100. Harrison v. Taylor, 4 H. & N. 815; 29 L. J., Ex. 3; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1219—Ex. Ch.

The question is solely for the jury. Ib.

There is little or no analogy between a patent and a design. Ib.

A. registered, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, a design for ornamenting woven fabrics. The design was applied to a fabric woven in cells, called "The Honeycomb Pattern," and it consisted of a combination of the large and small honeycomb, so as to form a large honeycomb stripe on a small honeycomb ground. The large honeycomb was not new, but they had never been used in combination before A. registered his design. Other fabrics had been woven with a similar combination of a large and small pattern:—Held, that the design was a new and an original design within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100. Ib.

A new combination of several old and known designs may constitute a new design, capable of being protected under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100; but such combination must, in order to be so protected, constitute one design, and not a multiplicity of designs. Norton v. Nicholls, 1 E. & E. 761; 28 L. J., Q. B. 225; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1203; 7 W. R. 420.

An article of manufacture to which a new design is applied (whether such design is single or the result of a new combination of old and known designs) is not itself a design within the meaning of the statute, and cannot be protected by registration. Ib. See Holdsworth v. M'Crea, post, col. 531.

A combination of known things may produce a new and original design. The defendant was convicted before a magistrate under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, for having, after notice from the proprietor of a new and original design for a regulation button, and without his consent, sold a button, which was a fraudulent imitation of it. On a case stated it appeared that the original design consisted of the royal arms surrounded by a garter, the garter bearing the inscription, "The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company":—Held, that as a new and original combination might be the result of applying two old and known designs to the ornamenting of a button, the conviction must be affirmed. Reg. v. Firmin, 3 H. & N. 304, n.; 15 J. P. 570.

—— How Made.] — Four old designs were respectively applied to three ribbons, and to a button; and the three ribbons were then united by the button, so as to form a badge. The badge was registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100:—Held, that this union did not amount to a new design within the statute. Mulloney v. Stevens, 10 L. T. 190.

Useful Purpose.]—The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, applies only to new designs having reference to some purpose of utility; and in order to obtain the benefit of the act, the purpose must be specified in the description supplied for registration. Windover v. Smith, 32 Beav. 200: 32 L. J., Ch. 561; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 397; 7 L. T. 776; 11 W. R. 323; 1 N. R. 349.

A coachmaker caused to be registered a design for a dog-cart, specifying as the purpose of utility, that higher front wheels could be used or closer coupling effected. The designs consisted of parts 1, 2, 3, 4, of which 1, 2 and 3 had nothing to do with front wheels or closer coupling, and No. 4 was not new:—Held, that no exclusive privilege was gained by the registration. Ib.

Mode of User.]—D. registered a design under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, for ventilation by opening a hinged pane of window by means of a screw; and it was stated that the parts of the design which were not new or original were all the parts, if taken per se, and apart from the purposes thereof, and that what was claimed as new was the general configuration and combination of the parts. The utility of the design was, in fact, not produced by the shape of any of the parts, but only by the mode of putting them together:—"Held, not a proper subject of registration, the statute not applying to designs which have reference to a purpose of utility through the combination of parts, independently of their shape and configuration. And the court quashed a conviction for pirating such design for want of jurisdiction. Reg. v. Bessell, 16 Q. B. 810; 20 L. J., M. C. 177; 15 Jur. 773. See Bessell v. Wilson, 1 E. & B. 489.

Bricks.]—A newly-invented brick, the utility of which consisted in its being so shaped, that when several bricks were laid together in building, a series of apertures were left in the wall, by which the air was admitted to circulate, and a saving in the number of bricks required was effected, is a design capable of being registered under 6 and 7 Vict. c. 65. Rogers v. Driver, 16 Q. B. 102; 20 L. J., Q. B. 31.

Labels.]—The protection granted by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, to any new or original design for any article of manufacture, having reference to some purpose of utility, so far as such design shall be for the shape or configuration of such article, is not clearly applicable to the design of a protector label, which consisted in making in the label an eyelet-hole, and lining it with a ring of a metallic substance, through which a string attached to the packages passed. Margetson v. Wright, 2 De G. & S. 420.

Calico—Date of Publishing.]—In an action on 34 Geo. 3, c. 23, for pirating a pattern for printing calico, the omission of an averment in the declaration, "that the day of first publishing the pattern was printed at each end of the piece of calico" (which, together with the name of the proprietor, is required by that statute, the monopoly being limited for three months from the first day of publishing the pattern), was aided by verdict; it being stated in the declaration that the defendant pirated the pattern within the term of three months from the day of the first publishing thereof, and while the plaintiff was entitled to have the sole right of printing the same. Macmurdo v. Smith, 7 Term Rep. 518.

2. REGISTRATION.

Statutes.]—Quære, whether in the condition of copyright, mentioned in s. 4 of the Designs Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100), that the design has, before publication been registered, the term "publication" is limited to publication after the design has been embodied and introduced into some fabric. Dalglish v. Jarvie, 2 Mac. & G. 231; 2 Hall & Tw. 437; 20 L. J., Ch. 475; 14 Jur. 945.

Marks.]—The provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, are to be construed strictly. Pierce v. Worth, 18 L. T. 710.

Therefore, where a plaintiff who had filed a bill to restrain the sale of certain articles of improved furniture, was shown to have sold similar articles without having the word "registered" and the date of registration notified on such articles, his bill was dismissed with costs. Ib.

The proprietors of a registered design for ornamenting paper-hangings, sold as patterns small pieces containing the whole design, which were not marked with the letters "Rd.," nor had they the letter corresponding with the date of the registration, as directed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 4. Paper-hangings were sold in lengths of twelve yards; and it was a general practice in the trade to send out patterns stamped with the marks of registration:—Held, that the pattern was an article of manufacture within s. 4. Heywood v. Potter, 1 E. & B. 439; 22 L. J., Q. B. 133; 17 Jur. 528; 1 W. R. 127.

A proprietor of a design duly registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 73, whether he is a British subject or a foreigner, forfeits the benefit of the acts unless the proper registration marks are attached to all articles and substances to which the design is applied, whether the same are sold abroad or in the British dominions. Sarazin v. Hamel, 32 Beav. 151; 32 L. J., Ch. 378; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 192; 7 L. T. 660; 11 W. R. 326.

Article in two Parts—Mark on one Part only.]—A butter-dish consisting of a dish and a cover is one "article of manufacture" within the Copyright (Designs) Act, 1842, and it is a sufficient compliance with the act to stamp the registration mark upon the dish alone, though the cover was separate from, and not in any way attached to the dish, and though the entire design was upon the cover. Fielding v. Hawley, 48 L. T. 639; 47 J. P. 582.

Semble, if during the process of manufacture of the article part of the registration mark thereon becomes illegible, the proprietor of the registered design is not thereby deprived of the protection of the statute. Ib.

Mode of Description — Combination.]—The same nicety is not required in registering patterns or designs as in describing inventions sought to be protected under the patent laws. Holdsworth v. M'Crea, 36 L. J., Q. B. 297; L. R. 2 H. L. 380; 16 W. R. 226.

The provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 73, are complied with by a person who leaves with the registrar copies of his design, though without any written description specifying precisely what is the extent of his claim. Ib.

If what he claims as his design consists, according to the pattern, of different parts, any one of which might be deemed a design, his registration of the whole pattern amounts to a claim of the combination, and not of any of the parts thus combined, any one of which, therefore, taken separately, is not protected by the registration. Ib.

A. registered as a design, within class 12, s. 3, of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, a pattern of a woven fabric. He gave no written description of his claim. The design consisted of six pointed stars on an albert chain, arranged in a particular manner, and shaded; and he claimed, in his particulars in the action, "the particular collocation of the shaded and bordered stars upon the ornamented chain surface, as shown in the registered pattern, thus forming together the ornamentation of the woven fabric":—Held, that the design in respect of the combination had been duly registered, and that the pattern, as a combination, was protected. Ib.

Registration with particular Thing.]—Semble, that where a man chooses to register his design with a particular thing, he cannot afterwards be heard to say that he claims the design as distinguished from the thing. Barron v. Lomas, 28 W. R. 973.

Delivery to Registrar.]—The provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 15 relative to furnishing the registrar of designs with copies, drawings, or prints of the design to be registered, prior to obtaining registration, held to be complied with by furnishing him with a specimen of the article to which the design was applied. Norton v. Nichols, 4 Kay & J. 475; 6 W. R. 764.

It is not a sufficient registration of a design applied to the manufacture of an article comprised in class 8 of s. 3 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, to leave with the registrar the article so manufactured, with an intimation that it is to be applied to class 8. Norton v. Nichols, 1 E. & E. 761; 28 L. J., Q. B. 225; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1023; 7 W. R. 420.

A statement, in a notice, that if the parties to whom the notice is given either apply the design to an article of manufacture, or sell or expose for sale an article of manufacture with the design applied to it, the proprietor will sue them, is not a sufficient statement that he has not given his consent to the application of his design to the manufactured article. Ib.

By Importer from Abroad.]—A person registered, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, a design consisting of a double card basket, formed of a combination of two baskets, admitted to be separately old in design. He was not the designer, but had contracted to purchase the articles in Germany, and imported them to England:—Held, that the articles were not new or original within the meaning of the act, and that the importer, not being the designer, and not having purchased the design for value, was not entitled to the protection of the statute. Lazarus v. Charles, 42 L. J., Ch. 507; L. R. 16 Eq. 117.

3. Assignment.

In Writing.]—A partial assignment of, or licence to use, a design under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 6, must be in writing, and can only be made by a registered proprietor. Jewitt v. Eckhardt, 8 Ch. D. 404; 26 W. R. 415.

By a verbal contract made in July, 1877, C., an American manufacturer, purported to sell to the plaintiff the exclusive right to sell in England an article newly designed and then about to be manufactured, and also to obtain such protection for the same as he could do under English law, it being stipulated that the plaintiff should obtain the article exclusively from C.: by the same contract C. agreed to sell to the plaintiff the first twenty cases of the article for the price agreed upon, which was to cover both the right and the goods. In September, 1877, the cases were delivered in England to the plaintiff, who paid the money due under the contract. Meanwhile, in August, 1877, the plaintiff had obtained registration of the design under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and the copyright therein was granted to him for the term of three years. In an action to restrain the alleged infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff's copyright:—Held, that the plaintiff had not acquired under the contract the right to apply the design to a manufactured article, so as to entitle him to register it in his own name under the act. Ib.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's right (if any) to protection could not have accrued till the completion of the purchase. Ib.

4. Infringement.

Fraudulent Imitation—What is.]—The plaintiffs registered and sold a design in braid, applied to a boy's jacket The defendants sold jackets with a design in braid applied to them, which jackets were substantially of the same shape as the plaintiffs'. The designer of the defendants' ornamental jackets had previously seen the plaintiffs' article:—Held, that the defendants had made a "fraudulent imitation" of the plaintiffs' design within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 7. Barron v. Lomas, 28 W. R. 973.

A fair imitation of a design is not prohibited by s. 7; but under the words "any such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof," there may be a case where, although there are slight variations, the "design" itself has been applied. "Fraudulent imitation" is equivalent to conscious imitation—where, that is, a man having the design before him, knowingly imitates, and that imitation is not sufficiently original to be protected as a fair imitation. Ib.

A. registered as a design a pattern consisting of a combination of distinct designs. B. slightly altered the combination, but not so as to affect the general appearance of the pattern:—Held, that this was an infringement of the copyright in the pattern. M'Crea v. Holdsworth, L. R. 6 Ch. 418; 23 L. T. 444; 19 W. R. 36.

When a sample of a pattern has been registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 70. s. 5, the design will not be infringed by an article produced upon the same principle, if different in style. Thom v. Syddall, 26 L. T. 15; 20 W. R. 291.

An action will lie for falsely representing a pattern under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, s. 7, whereby the party is damnified. Barley v. Walford, 9 Q. B. 197; 15 L. J., Q. B. 369. See Rodgers v. Nowell, 5 C. B. 109.

Sale and Manufacture.]—Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, the design protected by the act is entitled to an injunction, restraining not merely the sale but the manufacture of any article to which the design is applied during the period of the protection. M'Crae v. Holdsworth, 2 De G. & S. 496; 12 Jur. 820.

Injunction—Equitable Jurisdiction.]—Equitable jurisdiction upon the 34 Geo. 3, c. 23, is not excluded by the special remedy thereby provided. Independent of that remedy, the statute vests in the inventor a right of property, which, though only of three months' duration, equity will protect by injunction, if the title be satisfactorily established. In this case the evidence as to title not being conclusive, the injunction was dissolved, and an issue directed, the defendants keeping an account. The court will, itself, compare and decide upon alleged piracies by inspection where that can be easily and safely done. Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & M. 159.

Defendants' Right to Trial at Law—Effect of Delay.]—In a suit to restrain an alleged infringement of a copyright in a design registered under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, the defendant does not lose his right to require the plaintiff to establish his title in an action at law, although he delays doing so until the hearing of the cause, and has previously moved to dissolve upon a ground which cannot be maintained. Ib.

But the defendant ordered to pay the costs of motion to dissolve, that motion being useless, whatever might be the result of the cause. Norton v. Nichols, 4 Kay & J. 475; 6 W. R. 764.

Publication no Waiver.]—An inventor of new designs, publishing and selling them in a book, registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and containing a notice that persons wishing to manufacture them for the purpose of sale must have the inventor's permission, does not amount to a licence to sell articles to which the designs have been applied. Branchardiere v. Elvery, 4 Ex. 380; 18 L. J., Ex. 381.

The book does not require to be stamped with the letters mentioned in s. 4. Ib.

Pleading.]—A plea that the plaintiff was not before or at the time of registration, the inventor or proprietor of the design mentioned in the declaration to have been registered under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, does not put in issue the question whether the design was the subject of a certificate of registration under that act. Millengen v. Picken, 1 C. B. 799; 14 L. J., C. P. 254; 9 Jur. 714.

D. Engravings, Pictures, Photographs, &c.

1. Engravings and Prints.

Statute.]—The Act 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, is not confined to works of invention only, but means the designing or engraving anything that is already in nature. Blackwell v. Harper, 2 Atk. 93.

A print published of any building, house, or garden, falls within this act. Ib.

The property in the print vests absolutely in the engraver, though the day of publication is not mentioned in it. Ib.

Inscription of Name and Date.]—In order to sustain an action for pirating prints the proprietor's name, and the date of the publication, must appear on the original print, pursuant to 8 Geo. 2, c. 13; but it is not necessary that the designation of proprietor should be added to the name. Newton v. Cowie, 12 Moore, 457; 4 Bing. 234; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 159; 29 R. R. 541.

No action can be maintained for pirating a print, where the date of the first publication has not been engraved on the plate, according to 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 1; the performance of the direction precedent to the right of property vesting in the proprietor. Brooks v. Cock, 4 N. & M. 652; 3 A. & E. 138; 1 H. & W. 129; 4 L. J., K. B. 144.

The assignee of a print may maintain an action on 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, against any person who pirates it. Thompson v. Symonds, 5 Term Rep. 41; 2 R. R. 526.

In such an action, it is not necessary to produce the plate itself in evidence; one of the prints taken from the original plate is good evidence. Ib.

The date must always appear on the print. Ib.

In order to avail himself, by his plea, of the provisions of the 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, s 1, and 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, prohibiting persons from engraving any print, without the consent of the proprietor first had in writing, it is necessary for a defendant to aver that the date and name of the proprietor were truly engraven on each plate, and printed on every such print, according to the provisions of that statute. Colnaghi v. Ward, 12 L. J., Q. B. 1; 6 Jur. 969. And see Graves v. Ashford, infra.

Illustrated Catalogue—Book of Engravings.]—The plaintiffs, who were upholsterers, published an illustrated catalogue of articles of furniture, which was duly registered under the Copyright Acts as a book. The illustrations were engraved from original drawings made by artists employed by the plaintiffs, but the book contained no letterpress of such a description as to be the subject of copyright, and it was not published for sale, but was used by the plaintiffs as an advertisement. The defendants published an illustrated catalogue, many of the illustrations in which were copied from those in the plaintiffs' book.—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from publishing any catalogue containing illustrations copied from the plaintiffs' book. Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 52 L. J., Ch. 67; 21 Ch. D. 369; 47 L. T. 589; 31 W. R. 70—C. A.

A collection of prints published together in a volume is a book within the meaning of the Copyright Acts, and the proper subject of copyright, though it contains no such letterpress as could be the subject of copyright, and it makes no difference that the book is not published for sale but only used as an advertisement. Cobbett v. Woodward (L. R. 14 Eq. 407) overruled. Ib.

B. published a book containing letterpress, illustrated by wood engravings, printed on the same paper at the same time. A. published a similar book, with different letterpress, but containing pirated copies of the wood engravings. B., upon motion for an injunction, proved that he had complied with the requisitions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, but he had not complied with the 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, by printing the date of publication and the name of the proprietor on each copy:—Held, that the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, extended to the wood engravings equally with the letterpress, and the court granted an injunction. Bogue v. Houlston, 5 De G. & S. 267; 21 L. J., Ch. 470; 16 Jur. 372.

Illustrations to Book.]—Copyright in a book of which A. is the proprietor registered under the Copyright Act, 1842, will not protect drawings the art copyright of which is not vested in him, though such drawings furnish the illustrations of the book. Grace v. Newman (44 L. J., Ch. 298; L. R. 19 Eq. 623) distinguished. Petty v. Taylor, 66 L. J., Ch. 209 [1897] 1 Ch. 465; 75 L. T. 545; 45 W. R. 299.

Under the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, no agreement in writing is required to be made or entered on the register in order to vest the copyright in the person "for or on whose behalf" a drawing is made. Ib.

Infringement of.]—It is no piracy of one engraving, to make another from the original picture. Berenger v. Wheble, 2 Stark. 548.

Diorama of.]—A. made a copy of a print invented by B. in colours, and of large dimensions, and exhibited it as a diorama. A court of equity refused to restrain the exhibition until the right had been established by law. Martin v. Wright, 6 Sim. 297.

Photographing—Registration.] — Copying a print by the process of photography is within 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, and the proprietor of such print, who has a copyright therein by 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, and 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, can therefore maintain an action, under 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, against anyone who publishes such photographic copy contrary to that statute. Graves v. Ashford, 36 L. J., C. P. 139; L. R. 2 C. P. 410; 16 L. T. 98; 15 W. R. 498—Ex. Ch.

It is sufficient compliance with 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, as to printing the name of the proprietor on each print, for the name of the proprietor to be on the publication line of the print, without an express statement there that he is such proprietor. Ib.

Where the statement on the print was, "Published by Henry Graves & Company, May 1, 1861, Printsellers to the Queen, 6, Pall Mall," and it was proved that Henry Graves was, in fact, the sole proprietor:—Held, that the name of the proprietor was sufficiently shown to satisfy 8 Geo. 2, c. 13. Ib.

The piracy of a picture or an engraving by the process of photography, or by any other process, mechanical or otherwise, whereby copies may be indefinitely multiplied, is within 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, and 17 Geo. 3, c. 57. Gambart v. Ball, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 306; 32 L. J., C. P. 166; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1059; 8 L. T. 426; 11 W. R. 699.

Wool Pattern taken from Engraving.]—D., the proprietor of a periodical, published with his Christmas number a pattern for wool-work, consisting of the figures in Millais' picture, "The Huguenot," with a different background. The pattern appeared not to have been taken from the original picture, but to have been made by help of a fine engraving published in 1857. The pattern, as usual in patterns of this kind, was a mosaic built up of small coloured squares. B., who was the owner of the copyright in the engraving, but was not owner of the picture, issued a circular: "We give you notice that if you sell, &c. any copy of our subject 'The Huguenot' without the stamp or imprint of our firm, in whom the sole subsisting copyright exists, that all such unstamped copies are imitations and unlawfully made." D. thereupon brought an action against B. for damages, and an injunction in respect of the alleged slander of his title. B., by counterclaim, claimed an injunction against the sale of the pattern, and penalties in respect of the infringement of his copyright:—Held, by Bacon, V.-C., that the pattern was an infringement of B.'s copyright, and that he was entitled to the statutory penalty of 5*s.* for every copy sold by D. But held, on appeal, that a pattern of this description was not a copy of the engraving within the meaning of 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, and 17 Geo. 3. c. 57, as it did not copy or imitate anything which constituted the work of the engraver; and that the counter-claim ought, therefore, to have been dismissed. Dicks v. Brooks, 49 L. J., Ch. 812; 15 Ch. D. 22; 43 L. T. 71; 29 W. R. 87—C. A.

Held, also, that, as the circular might reasonably be understood to allege as a matter of fact that B. had such a right to the design, as distinguished from the engraving of "The Huguenot," as to make any reproduction of it in any form an infringement of his right, D. could have maintained his action if any appreciable injury to his trade from the circular had been proved. Ib. See also Lucas v. Cooke, post, col. 540.

Prints from Lawful Plate.]—A. being employed by B. to engrave plates from drawings belonging to B., took off from the plates so engraved by him a number of proof impressions, which he retained for his own use. A. afterwards became bankrupt, and the proofs of which he had so possessed himself were advertised by his assignees for sale:—Held, that neither he was nor were his assignees liable to an action for having disposed of pirated prints without the consent of the proprietor, inasmuch as the 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, applied to impressions of engravings pirated from other engravings, and not prints taken from a lawful plate. Murray v. Heath, 1 B. & Ad. 804; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 111.

Property in Blocks.]—The drawings on the blocks from which illustrations of a book were engraved were sketched by the author of the drawings himself:—Held, that having regard to the terms of the agreement, the blocks themselves were not the property of either the authors (one of whom sketched the drawings) nor of the publishing firm, but that the successors of the latter were not entitled to hold them against, but must deliver them up to, the former. Hole v. Bradbury, 48 L. J., Ch. 673; 12 Ch. D. 886; 41 L. T. 250; 28 W. R. 39.

Question for Jury.]—In an action for pirating an engraving, brought under 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, which gives a right of action against any one who shall copy any print in the whole or in part, by varying, adding to, or diminishing from, the main design, the judge directed the jury to consider whether the defendant's engraving was substantially a copy of the plaintiff's:—Held, that this direction was correct. Moore v. Clarke, 9 M. & W. 622; 6 Jur. 648.

Who Liable.]—The mere seller or publisher of a pirated copy of a print, is liable to an action under 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, although not an exact copy of the original, and though the seller did not know it to be a copy. West v. Francis, 1 D. & R. 400; 5 B. & Ald. 737; 24 R. R. 541.

A person having a copyright in a print or an engraving may maintain an action against a person for selling pirated copies of it, though such person has no knowledge that the prints are piracies. Gambart v. Sumner, 5 H. & N. 5; 29 L. J., Ex. 98; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1109; 8 W. R. 27.

Limitation of Action.]—The limitation of three months to any action on suit brought under 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, does not apply to the action for damages given by 17 Geo. 3, c. 57. Graves v. Mercer, 16 W. R. 790.

2. Pictures and Photographs.

Common Law Right—Publication.]—At common law, a painter has, before publication of his picture, a right to prevent any person from copying it. Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 121. Affirmed on appeal, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 510.

The owner of the picture who has purchased it from the painter has the same right. Ib.

The publication of a wood engraving in a magazine, with an article describing the picture, is not a publication of the picture itself. Ib.

The exhibition of a picture at a public exhibition or gallery, where copying it would not be permitted, is not a publication of the picture, nor is the exhibition of the picture for the purpose of obtaining subscribers to an engraving of it. Ib.

One employing a painter to draw a drawing is not entitled to the protection of stat. 8 Geo. 2, c. 13. Jefferys v. Baldwin, Ambl. 164.

What Drawings may be the subject of—Absence of Artistic Merit.]—The plaintiffs were a firm of printers. J., a member of the firm, conceived the idea of printing and publishing cards bearing a representation of a hand holding a pencil in the act of completing a cross within a square, with a view to such cards being used at parliamentary and other elections for the guidance and instruction of illiterate voters in the marking of their ballot papers. J., being unable to draw, employed an artist in the service of the firm to make, under his directions, a drawing of the representation above described. The plaintiffs registered the drawing under the Copyright (Works of Art) Act, 1862, and in the memorandum stated J. to be the author of the drawing. Subsequently the defendants published similar cards with a hand holding a pencil in the act of completing a cross in a particular square of a voting paper. The hand on the defendants' cards was in a slightly different position, but the idea was taken from the plaintiffs' cards. Neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants' drawings were of any artistic merit:—Held, that an action for infringement of copyright could not be maintained, on the grounds: 1. That the plaintiffs' drawing was so far not the subject of copyright that it was not entitled to protection against an imitation which was not an exact reproduction. 2. That J. was not the author of the drawing, and that the registration was consequently void. Kenrick v. Lawrence, 25 Q. B. D. 99; 38 W. R. 779.

Landscapes.]—A party may be the designer and inventor of a plan within the 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, although he may not himself be able to execute it; and a bird's-eye view of a locality is a landscape within that act, and as such does not require to be registered at Stationers' Hall under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Stannard v. Harrison, 24 L. T. 570; 19 W. R. 811.

A bird's-eye view of a seat of war is a book within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, and no copyright can be acquired in it unless it is registered at Stationers' Hall under the protection of that act. Stannard v. Lee, 40 L. J., Ch. 489; L. R. 6 Ch. 346; 24 L. T. 459; 19 W. R. 615.

"Book"—"Sheet of Letter-Press"—Painted Card.]—A motion was made by the plaintiffs to restrain the infringement of their copyright in a certain picture or publication which consisted of a gloved hand painted on a card cut to the exact size, and showing the back and palm of the hand. The card opened book-wise, and on the inside was represented on the palm of the hand the lines of life of palmistry, and on the back of the hand some verses. The picture had been painted and the verses written by different persons. It was registered in February, 1891, under the Copyright Acts, 1842 (books) and 1862 (works of art). The defendants had issued a similar card with advertisements of their goods printed on it:—Held, that the defendants' card was a copy of the plaintiffs'; that the plaintiffs' work was well registered under the Act of 1842 as a "sheet of letterpress," and under the Act of 1862 as a painting; and that the certificates of registration were prima facie proof that the plaintiffs were proprietors, and, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction. Hildesheimer v. Dunn, 64 L. T. 452.

Photographing similar Groups.]—A, the painter of a picture, sold it to B., who, for a valuable consideration, agreed to sell to C. the sole right to make and publish an engraving of the picture, and to exhibit it for short periods at any of the principal towns either in Great Britain or Ireland, in order that C. might obtain subscribers, and otherwise derive a full advantage in the publication and sale of the engraving. The picture having been exhibited for that purpose, D. arranged in his own studio a group, which bore an exact resemblance to the picture, and took photographs for the stereoscope (coloured so as to correspond with the picture), which he published and sold:—Held, that C. was entitled to an injunction to restrain the publication and sale of the photographs, if the picture had not previously been published.

But it appearing that the picture had been previously exhibited at the Royal Academy, London, and at the Manchester Exhibition of 1857, the court referred it to the master to inquire whether there were rules, resolutions, bye-laws or regulations to prevent the taking of copies, sketches or drawings of paintings or works of art sent there for exhibition. Turner v. Robinson, supra.

Copy of Central Figure of Picture — Sentiment of Picture.]—Where a picture contains a direct copy of a substantial portion of a copyright word, that substantial portion constitutes an infringement if it is a copy in the ordinary sense, and particularly where the sentiment expressed in the copyright picture has also been embodied. Brooks v. Religious Tract Society, 45 W. R. 476.

Painting — Tableau Vivant — Infringement.]—To constitute an infringement of the copyright of a painting under section 1 of the Copyright Act, 1862, the reproduction must be something which is itself in the nature of a picture, and accordingly a tableau vivant after a painting, so far as it consists of a merely temporary arrangement of living figures, is not a reproduction of the painting or the design thereof within the prohibition of the section. Hanfstaengl v. Empire Palace (No. 1). 63 L. J., Ch. 417; [1894] 2 Ch. 1; 7 R. 375; 70 L. T. 459; 42 W. R. 454—C. A.

—— Tableau Vivant — Rough Sketch in Newspaper.]—A sketch in a daily illustrated newspaper of a tableau vivant representing a picture may, though the tableau does not, constitute an infringement of the copyright of the picture, within the meaning of section 1 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862; but whether it does or does not is a question of fact, and depends upon whether or not the sketch can fairly and reasonably, and as it would be judged by a jury, be considered a copy or reproduction of the picture or of the design thereof. Hanfstaengl v. Empire Palace (No 2), 63 L. J., Ch. 681; 7 R. 385; [1894] 3 Ch. 109; 70 L. T. 854; 42 W. R. 681—C. A. Affirmed in H. L., 64 L. J., Ch. 81; 11 R. 88.

Owner assigning for Purpose of Engraving.]—When the owner of the copyright of a painting assigns the copyright for the purpose of producing an engraving of one size, the right of producing copies of the painting in other ways, or by engravings of other sizes, remains in him and can be assigned by him to any other person. Lucas v. Cooke, 13 Ch. D. 872; 42 L. T. 180; 28 W. R. 439.

Infringement by Assignee for particular Purpose.]—And, if the assignee of the right of copying a painting in a particular way alleges that some other publication is an infringement of his copyright, the onus is on him to show that that publication has been taken from his copy, and not from the original painting. Ib.

Licence to reproduce Imitation.]—The assignees, duly registered, of the copyright in a picture sold to the plaintiff the sole right to reproduce it in chromo for two years. This agreement of sale was not registered. While it was in force the defendant published the same subject by chromo-lithography, independently, not directly copying plaintiff's chromo-lithograph. The plaintiff's chromo-lithograph plate was not engraved with the name of the proprietor or date of publication, as required by the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, s. 11. It was objected, that the plaintiff could not recover damages from the defendant for piracy of his copyright, because, first, the plaintiff's chromo was not duly engraved; and secondly, there was no registration of the assignment to the plaintiff within 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. But, held, on the first point, that the copyright in the original picture had been violated by the production of the defendant's chromo-lithograph, which was not simply an imitation of the plaintiff's chromo-lithograph; and on the second point, that the plaintiff was not an assignee of the copyright within the meaning of the act, but a licensee to reproduce an imitation of the picture, as to whose license no registration is required. Tuck v. Canton, 51 L. J., Q. B. 363.

Picture—Licence to Copy.]—The author of a picture wrote a letter to the art critic of the "Queen," an illustrated paper belonging to the defendant, in which, after stating that a sketch of the picture had appeared in another newspaper, she said, "I do not know if that would prevent the 'Queen' people liking to have it.

The original picture is all but sold to another newspaper for a Christmas number." She went on to say that she was only selling the colour copyright, and retained the right to reproduce in monochrome, and that K. & Co. had the picture in their possession, and had undertaken all negotiations. A sketch and photograph of the picture were enclosed. The author shortly afterwards sold the entire copyright to K. & Co., without notice of the letter:—Held, that the letter did not operate as a license to the defendant to reproduce the picture in monochrome. London Printing Alliance v. Cox, 60 L. J., Ch. 707; [1891] 3 Ch. 291; 65 L. T. 60—C. A.

Registration—Assignment.]—K & Co., after the assignment to them, wrote a letter to A. accepting a proposal that they should produce for A. a large number of copies of the picture at a price per thousand, "which price includes sole and entire copyright"; the copies to be delivered some within five and the rest within seven months; payment to be by bills of five, six, and seven months from delivery of goods, a further price to be paid for the picture, K. & Co. to insure it and take all risks during the progress of the work. K. & Co. were subsequently registered as proprietors. In an action by A. and K. & Co. for infringement of the copyright:—Held, that A., not being registered as proprietor, could not maintain the action, and (diss. Lindley, L.J.), that the letter of K. & Co. to A. operated as an assignment of the copyright to A., and that K. & Co. having thus ceased to be proprietors, their subsequent registration as such was invalid, and that they likewise could not maintain the action. London Printing Alliance v. Cox, supra.

—— Description.]—The object of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, is that enough should be stated in the register of copyright to identify the picture, &c., and whether the description of the subject matter is sufficient for this purpose is a question of fact for the tribunal. Graves v. Beal, Beal, Ex parte, 9 B. & S. 395; 37 L. J., Q. B. 161; L. R. 3 Q. B. 387; 18 L. T. 285; 16 W. R. 852.

It is no defence that the copy was made or sold under a bonâ fide belief that the consent of the proprietor had been obtained, though it is ground for the infliction of a merely nominal penalty. Ib.

It is immaterial whether the copy of a painting, drawing, or photograph, as the case may be, is made by means of a painting, or of a drawing, or of a photograph. Ib.

If the design of a picture is made in violation of the statute, it is immaterial whether this is done directly from the original, or indirectly through the medium of a copy. Ib.

Registration of the proprietorship of the copyright of a painting is only primâ facie evidence of title, and may be rebutted by the terms of the assignment of the copyright to the person who has made the registration. Lucas v. Cooke, supra.

—— Expunging Entries.]—An information was laid by G. against W., charging that he, not being the proprietor of copyright in certain paintings and photographs mentioned in the information, had unlawfully sold copies thereof. At the hearing, certified copies of entries in the register kept under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, were produced as proof that G. was the proprietor of the paintings and photographs. The photographs were copies of engravings made for G. from engravings of which he was the proprietor. The description of one of the paintings in the register was, "A piper and a pair of nutcrackers," with the name of the painter, Sir E. Landseer, R.A. W. was convicted, and G. subsequently applied under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 14, to have the entries expunged:—Held, first, that G. was not a person who could deem himself "aggrieved" within the meaning of that section. Walker, Ex parte, Graves, In re, 39 L. J., Q. B. 31.

Held, secondly, that the entries were not invalid by reason of their not showing that the author or former proprietor had registered in addition to G. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the description—"A piper and a pair of nutcrackers"—was not so uncertain as that the court would upon the application of G. expunge the entry. Ib.

There may be copyright in a photograph taken from an engraving of a painting. Ib.

—— Right of Action before Plaintiff's Registration.]—The act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, provides for registration of proprietorship and assignments of copyright in paintings, and enacts that no proprietor of any such copyright shall be entitled to the benefit of the act until registration, and no action shall be sustainable, nor any penalty be recoverable, in respect of anything done before registration.—Semble, a registered proprietor cannot sue for offences under the act committed when an earlier proprietor was on the register. Dupuy v. Dilkes, 48 L. J., Ch. 682.

In an action under the above act seeking penalties, an injunction and other relief in respect of unlawful repetitions of a picture, the main object of the suit being the recovery of penalties:—Held, that the plaintiffs ought not to be permitted, upon the facts appearing at the trial, to raise a claim for relief under the same statute in respect of unlawful sales, that case not being made by their pleadings. Ib.

—— Sale, after Registration, of Copies made before Registration.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a drawing which they entrusted in confidence to the defendant in Germany to produce certain copies. The defendant executed the work, and also made other copies for himself and sent them to England. Subsequently the plaintiffs registered their copyright in the drawing under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. After such registration the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiffs, sold the copies which he had made for himself and sent to England before the registration. In an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction and to recover penalties and damages, under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, ss. 6 and 11:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction and damages for breach of contract and good faith, and (diss. Lopes, L.J.) to an injunction, damages, and delivery of pirated copies under the statute, notwithstanding that by s. 4 no proprietor was to be entitled to the benefit of the act until registration, and no action was to be sustainable in respect of anything done before registration; but were not entitled to penalties, on the ground that production abroad is not unlawful within the meaning of s. 6. Tuck v. Priester, 56 L. J., Q. B. 553; 19 Q. B. D. 629; 36 W. R. 93; 52 J. P. 213—C. A. Reversing 57 L. T. 110.

—— Designation of Firm.]—Where prints, engravings, and similar articles are the property of a trading firm, the proprietorship is sufficiently designated for the purpose of obtaining the protection of the Copyright of Designs Act (8 Geo. 2, c. 13), s. 1, by printing upon them the trading name of the firm, even though it does not contain the names of all the partners in the business. Rock v Lazarus, 42 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 15 Eq. 104; 27 L. T. 744; 21 W. R. 215.

—— Foreign Painting—English Copyright—Right to Sue for Infringement.]—In order to entitle the owner of the English copyright in a foreign painting to sue in this country in respect of an infringement of such copyright, it is not necessary for him to have registered his ownership under the International Copyright Acts, but he must have previously registered himself as proprietor of the copyright under s. 4 of the Copyright Act, 1862. Fishburn v. Hollingshead, 60 L. J., Ch. 768; [1891] 2 Ch. 371; 64 L. T. 647.

Photographs—Engravings from—Licence.]—A., the proprietor and publisher of a magazine, agreed verbally with B. to purchase from him the right to engrave photographs to illustate a series of articles in the magazine. A. afterwards commenced publishing these articles in a separate form, illustrated by engravings from the same photographs. B. brought an action, and claimed a writ of injunction, and A. filed a bill for a declaration that under the verbal agreement, he was entitled to republish the engravings taken from B.'s photographs; for specific performance of the agreement, by his granting him a licence in writing to use the photographs for the purpose of engraving and publishing in the magazine, or in any republication of the articles which they illustrated, and that the action might be restrained:—Held, that the verbal agreement extended to the use of the photographs in the magazine only, that there was no part performance by B. of a contract or a licence to publish in a separate form, and that there had been no acquiescence. Strahan v. Graham, 16 L. T. 87; 15 W. R. 487. Affirmed on appeal, 17 L. T. 457.

Photograph—Copy of Different Size—Publication in Illustrated Paper.]—One of the defendants made a drawing on a larger scale of an original photograph, of the copyright in which the plaintiff was the owner, and sold it to the other defendants, who reproduced the drawing as a full-page illustration in an illustrated newspaper of which they were the proprietors:—Held in an action for an injunction restraining the defendants from making and publishing copies of the photograph, and for penalties under the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, and for damages, that the drawing was a copy of the photograph within the meaning of the Act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction and to penalties and damages. Bolton v. Aldin, 65 L. J., Q. B. 120.

See also Walker, Ex parte, ante, col. 541.

—— "Author"—Joint Authors.]—A. and B. carried on business in co-partnership as photographers under the firm of the L. Company. They did not take photographs themselves, but employed managers and a large staff of photographic artists and assistants. One of their managers, thinking that the photograph of the Australian cricketers would sell well, arranged for the photographs to be taken without any payment being made for taking them, and sent one of the artists in the employ of the firm to take the negative. From this negative the photograph was in the usual way produced and sold by the firm in the ordinary course of business; and A. and B. registered themselves under the Copyright Act, 1862, in their individual names as the proprietors and authors of the photograph. In an action by the firm to restrain the pirating of their copyright in the photograph:—Held, that A. and B. were not the authors of the photograph. Nottage v. Jackson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 760; 11 Q. B. D. 627; 49 L. T. 339; 32 W. R. 106—C. A.

Semble, that the person who took the negative was the author. Two or more persons may be registered under the Act as the "authors" of a painting, or a drawing, or a photograph; but in such a case, quære, whether the copyright would subsist for the joint lives of the authors, and seven years afterwards, or for the lives and life of the survivors and survivor and seven years afterwards. Ib.

A person to whom the copyright in a picture has been assigned by the author, of which assignment a memorandum has been duly registered, has a good title under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 1, although the original copyright of the author has not been registered. Ib.

—— Negative made "for or on behalf of another person for a good or valuable consideration."]—The principal person under whose immediate direction a photograph is taken is the "author" of the photograph within s. 1 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, notwithstanding that another person acting under his direction poses the subject and performs the other manual operations. Nottage v. Jackson, supra, distinguished. Melville v. "Mirror of Life" Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 41; [1895] 2 Ch. 531; 13 R. 852; 73 L. T. 334.

Where a photograph of a person is taken without payment by him, but on the terms that the photographer shall keep the negative, with the right of selling copies, the case is not within the proviso contained in s. 1 requiring an agreement in writing, since the negative is not made "for or on behalf of another person." Ib.

The words "any other person" in s. 6 mean any person other than the author of the photograph, and will therefore include the subject of the photograph himself. Ib.

—— Implied Contract—Breach of Faith.]—A photographer, who had taken a negative likeness of a lady to supply her with copies for money, was restrained from selling or exhibiting copies, both on the ground that there was an implied contract not to use the negative for such purposes, and also on the ground that such sale or exhibition was a breach of confidence. Pollard v. Photographic Co., 58 L. J., Ch. 251; 40 Ch. D. 345; 60 L. T. 418; 37 W. R. 266.

Action for Copies.]—A person lending prints or photographs to another, who, with his consent, takes and sells copies, can not only sue in detinue for the originals, but also for the copies, and can likewise sustain an injunction to prevent the sale of any copies remaining, and this quite apart from copyright, and although there has been a publication. Mayall v. Higbey, 1 H. & C. 148; 31 L. J., Ex. 329; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 622; 6 L. T. 362; 10 W. R. 631.

Sculpture—Casts of Fruit and Leaves.]—54 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 1, which provides that every person who makes or causes to be made any new and original sculpture, model, copy, or cast of the human figure, or of any animal, or of any animal combined with the human figure, or of "any subject being matter of invention in sculpture," is to have the sole right and property in such sculpture, model, copy, or cast for a term of fourteen years, includes new and original casts of fruit and leaves. Caproni v. Alberti, 65 L. T. 785; 40 W. R. 235.

Injunction, when Granted.]—In an action for infringement of copyright in a painting to recover damages and penalties under ss. 6 and 11 of the Copyright Act, 1862, and for an injunction, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for nominal damages, stating that they found that the defendant had acted innocently. There was no threat of repetition of the infringement:—Held, that the judge had jurisdiction to grant an injunction. Lucas v Williams, 61 L. J., Q. B. 595; [1892] 2 Q. B. 113; 66 L. T. 706—C. A.

Evidence—Proof that Picture Sold is Copy of Original Painting—Production of Original.]—In an action for infringement of copyright in a painting, evidence of persons who have seen the original painting is admissible to prove that a picture sold by the defendants and produced in court is a copy of the original, without the production of the original. Ib.

Penalties for Infringement]—A penalty recovered for an offence against the provisions of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, is in the nature of a punishment for a criminal offence, and a person sentenced to pay such a penalty cannot, by executing a deed of arrangement with his creditors under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, escape from the liability to pay the penalty, nor from the imprisonment consequent on a failure to pay it. Graves, Ex parte, L. R. 3 Ch. 642; 19 L. T. 241; 16 W. R. 993.

The sale of every photographic copy made in violation of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, is the subject of a distinct penalty, although there is only one sale. Graves v. Beal, Beal, Ex parte, 9 B. & S. 395; 37 L. J., Q. B. 161; L. R. 3 Q. B. 387; 18 L. T. 285; 16 W. R. 852.

A penalty with costs inflicted by summary proceeding before a magistrate for infringement of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, followed by commitment to the house of correction for a time certain, unless the penalty shall be sooner paid, constitutes a debt provable within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, and is barred by a deed duly executed under sect. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to entertain an application for the release of the debtor from custody under the commitment, and will order such release, unless good cause is shown to the contrary. Johnson, Ex parte and In re, 15 L. T. 163; 15 W. R. 160.

E. INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Rights of Foreigners—Books.]—Before the statutes the court would not protect a foreigner's copyright. Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237.

The privileges conferred by 54 Geo. 3, c. 150, did not extend to books printed abroad. Clementi v. Walker, 4 D. & R. 598; 2 B. & C. 861; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 176; 26 R. R. 596.

—— Where Resident—Publication.]—The object of the 8 Anne, c. 19, was to encourage literature among British subjects, which description includes such foreigners as, by residence here, owe the crown a temporary allegiance; and any such foreigner, first publishing his work here, is an author within the meaning of the statute, no matter where his work was composed, or whether he came here solely with a view to its publication. Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815; 3 C. L. R. 625; 24 L. J., Ex. 81; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 615 (overruling Boosey v. Jefferys, 6 Ex. 580; 20 L. J., Ex. 354; 15 Jur. 540—Ex. Ch.; Cocks v. Purday, 5 C. B. 860; 17 L. J., C. P. 273; 12 Jur. 677; Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257; 18 L. J., Q. B. 174; 13 Jur. 678; and Ollendorf v. Black, 4 De G. & S. 209; 20 L. J., Ch. 165; 14 Jur. 1080. And affirming Boosey v. Purday, 4 Ex. 145; 18 L. J., Ex. 378; 13 Jur. 918; and Chappell v. Purday, 14 M. & W. 303; 14 L. J., Ex. 258; 9 Jur. 495).

Copyright commences by publication; if at that time a foreign author is not in this country, he is not a person whom the statute meant to protect. Ib.

B., a foreigner, resident at Milan, composed a musical work, and, according to the law of Milan, assigned his copyright to R., also a foreigner, who, coming to London, assigned his interest therein to an Englishman, but for publication in Great Britain and Ireland only, and thereupon the first publication took place in England:—Held, that B. had no copyright in the publication. Ib.

—— "Author."]—The word "author" is used in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, without limitation or restriction, and is therefore equally applicable to foreigners as to British subjects. Routledge v. Low, 37 L. J., Ch. 454; L. R. 3 H. L. 100; 18 L. T. 874; 16 W. R. 1081.

Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the first publication of a book must, to secure British copyright to its author, be made in the United Kingdom. Ib.

British copyright, when once it exists, extends, under s. 29, over every part of the British dominions. Ib.

The protection of the statute is given to every author who first publishes in the United Kingdom, wheresoever he may then be resident, or of whatever state he may be the subject.—Per Lord Cairns, C., and Lord Westbury. Ib.

—— Serial Tale.]—An alien author of a serial tale, in course of publication in a foreign periodical magazine, by residing in British territory at the date of the publication in England of the last few chapters of the tale, which were first published here, acquires all the rights of a British subject in respect of the copyright of such chapters. Low v. Ward, 37 L. J., Ch. 841; L. R. 6 Eq. 415; 16 W. R. 1114.

Re-translation.]—If a foreigner translates an English work, and then an Englishman re-translates the foreign work into English, that would be an infringement of the original copyright. Murray v. Bogue, 1 Drew. 353; 22 L. J., Ch. 457; 17 Jur. 219; 1 W. R. 109.

Sale of Imported Copies.]—Where an English copyright is subsisting in a book first published in a foreign country, it is unlawful for any one, without the consent of the proprietor of the English copyright, to import into England for sale copies of the book published abroad, though lawfully printed by the owner of the original copyright in the country where the book was first published. So held by Lindley, L.J., and Rigby, L.J. (dissentiente Lopes, L.J.). Pitts v. George, 66 L. J., Ch. 1; [1896] 2 Ch. 866; 75 L. T. 320; 45 W. R. 164—C. A.

Held by Lindley, L.J.—That s. 3 of the International Copyright Act, 1844, incorporates with that act the provisions of the Copyright Act, 1842, and gives to the owner of the copyright in England of a book first published abroad the same protection against importation into England for sale or hire of reprints of the book made without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright, as is given by ss. 15 & 17 of the act of 1842 to the owner of the copyright in a book first published in the United Kingdom; and the provisions of those sections can be applied in the case of the importation for sale of copies printed in the country where the book was first published, though such importation is excepted from the prohibition against importation contained in s. 10 of the act of 1844. Ib.

Held by Rigby, L.J.—That s. 3 of the act of 1844 makes provision, by means of the incorporation into that act of the provisions of s. 15 of the act of 1842, against importations for sale or hire; while s. 10 contains an absolute prohibition of importations, even for private use—copies made in the country where the book was first published, which are excepted from the prohibition contained in s. 10, being included in that contained in s. 3. Ib.

Held by Lopes, L.J.—That ss. 3 & 10 of the act of 1844 must be read together—s. 3 as dealing with foreign countries not being the country where the book was first published, and s. 10 as excepting that country. Ib.

The registered proprietors of an English copyright magazine brought an action against the agents in England of an American firm of publishers for an injunction to restrain them from selling or importing for sale in this country a magazine published by the American firm, and containing matter pirated from the plaintiffs' copyright. The defendants, by their statement of defence, stated that they had determined not to sell the copies complained of, in consequence of a notice received from the plaintiffs shortly before the commencement of the action, and before the defendants themselves had had the opportunity of inspecting such copies:—Held, that s. 17 of the Copyright Act, 1842, mentions two offences, that of "to import for sale" and that of to "sell knowingly" unauthorised publications, and therefore that ignorance of the nature of the imported copies could not be a defence where the offence charged was "importing for sale," but only where the offence charged was "selling knowingly." Cooper v. Whittingham, 49 L. J., Ch. 752; 15 Ch. D. 501; 43 L. T. 16; 28 W. R. 720.

An owner of an English copyright is entitled to an ex parte injunction against the agents of a foreign firm in respect of the offence of "importing for sale" piracies, but if it is intended to take proceedings in respect of "selling knowingly," the better course is to give the importers notice of their importations. Where an action is brought to enforce a legal right, and there is no misconduct on the part of the plaintiff, the court has no discretion to refuse him costs. Where a statute creates a new offence and imposes a penalty, the ancillary remedy by injunction may still be claimed. Ib.

—— Subsequent Publication by Others.]—A book is published in a foreign country, copies of which are bought and then published in this country:—Held, that persons who purchase a part of such work and publish it here, have no copyright therein. Guichard v. Mori, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 227.

Registration.]—The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, and the convention with France and order in council made thereunder, do not exempt authors of works in France claiming copyright in this country from the conditions affecting authors of works in this country. Cassell v. Stiff, 2 Kay & J. 279.

The order in council of the 10th of January, 1852, providing that French works must be registered at Stationers' Hall within three months after the first publication thereof in France, "or, if such works be published in parts, then within three months after the publication of the last part thereof":—Held, that a French newspaper, published weekly, and not intended to be completed in any definite number of parts, must be registered within three months after the commencement, or, if it had commenced before 1852, within three months after the date of the order in council. Ib.

Neglect to register on the part of the officials at Stationers' Hall prevents an author having the benefit of the statute as against the public. Ib.

Dramatic Work—Where First Published or Represented.]—A naturalised American was the author of a drama which had been first represented in America, and subsequently, with his consent, at the defendant's theatre in England. The drama had not been printed for publication. The defendant afterwards having proposed to represent the play again in London without the consent of the plaintiff, the plaintiff brought an action against him to restrain him from so doing:—Held, that the drama had, within 7 Vict. c. 12, s. 19, been first published out of her Majesty's dominions, and that the plaintiff had no exclusive right of representing it in England. Boucicault v. Chatterton, 35 L. T. 541. Affirmed, 46 L. J., Ch. 305; 5 Ch. D. 267; 35 L. T. 745; 25 W. R. 287.

—— Where no Treaty.]—The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 19, applies to British subjects first publishing in a country with which no international convention exists. Boucicault v. Delafield, 1 H. & M. 597; 33 L. J., Ch. 38; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1282; 9 L. T. 709; 12 W. R. 101.

Where a British subject caused a dramatic piece, of which he was the author, to be first publicly represented in a foreign country:—Held, that as he had not complied with the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, he was, by reason of the 19th section, not entitled in this country to any copyright in his drama, nor to the exclusive right to the representation thereof, though he could not by any possibility have complied with such provisions, no regulation having been made according to the course pointed out in the act as to international copyright between the two countries.

Registration of Translation.]—The assignee of a foreign dramatic work, in order to entitle himself to the exclusive right to represent it on the stage in English, must register a translation. Such translation must be sufficiently literal to enable an Englishman to see from it the character of the original work. Wood v. Chart, 39 L. J., Ch. 641; L. R. 10 Eq. 193; 22 L. T. 432; 18 W. R. 822.

When the original work sought to be protected was a French comedy entitled "Frou-frou," and the version sanctioned by the foreign authors and published in England was entitled "Like to Like," the names of the characters and the scenery were changed from French to English; in some instances English manners were substituted for French; and considerable omissions of speeches and alterations of passages were made:—Held, that the version was not a translation within the meaning of the 15 Vict. c. 2, International Copyright Act, such as to entitle the foreign authors and their assignee to the benefit of the statute. Ib.

Translation not Literal.]—Section 6 of the International Copyright Act, 1886, does not revive a right of preventing unauthorised translations of a foreign work in England which under the previously existing law had expired before the passing of the act. Lauri v. Renad, 61 L. J., Ch. 580; [1892] 3 Ch. 402; 67 L. T. 275; 40 W. R. 679—C. A.

A "translation" of a foreign play, in order that it may be protected under the law of International Copyright, does not necessarily require to be an absolutely literal translation; it is sufficient if it is substantially a translation. Ib.—Per Kekewich, J.

Opera—Airs Republished as Dance Music.]—To publish in the form of quadrilles and waltzes, the airs of an opera, of which there exists an exclusive copyright, is an act of piracy. The English assignee of the copyright of a foreign musical composer is within the protection of the statutes relating to copyright. Semble, that a foreigner who resides and publishes in England is within the same protection. D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Y. & Coll. 288; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 21.

—— Assignee in England—Importation before Publication.]—In 1830 a foreigner resident in Paris made a legal assignment of his copyright in an opera to L., resident in England, and L., in the same year, sold his interest to C., without executing any written memorandum. C. died in 1834, and in 1836 C.'s executrix obtained a legal assignment. In the meantime copies of the full score had been imported into England, and sold in London by several tradesmen. In 1841 P. published and sold the overture of the opera in London:—Held, that C.'s executrix could not maintain an injunction against P. for piracy. Chappell v. Purday, 4 Y. & Coll. 485; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 50.

Quære, whether, after a foreigner has published his work in a foreign country, he can at common law assign his copyright, limited to Great Britain, to a British subject, so as to give the assignee the benefit of the statutes relating to copyright. Ib.

Registration—Date of Publication.]—By s. 6 of the International Copyright Act, 7 Vict. c. 12, no author of any musical composition, first published in a foreign country, or his assigns, shall be entitled to the benefit of the act, unless, within the time mentioned in the order of council applying to that country, the musical composition shall have been registered, together with the title, the name and abode of the author, the name and abode of the proprietor of the copyright, the time and place of the first publication, representation, or performance, and, in case of publication, accompanied by the deposit of a printed copy of such publication. B., the assign of an opera composed by O., made an entry in pursuance of the above section, stating correctly the title of the opera (which at the date of such entry had not been published), the name of the author, and of the proprietor of the copyright, and the date of its first representation, but went on to give, as the date of its first publication, the date of the publication of a pianoforte arrangement by S., and deposited a copy of such arrangement:—Held, that the requirements of the statute necessary to protect the opera having been complied with, the superfluous entry as to the publication of the pianoforte arrangement, and the deposit of the same, did not invalidate the registration as a registration of the opera. Boosey v. Fairlie, 48 L. J., Ch. D. 697: 4 App. Cas. 711.

Semble, that where an opera is protected under the act, an adaptation of an unprotected pianoforte arrangement into an opera by independent labour is an infringement of the right to the opera. Ib.

Musical Compositions.]—N. composed and published an opera in full score at Berlin, and after his death, B. arranged the score of the whole opera for the pianoforte; in registering this arrangement in England, N.'s name was inserted as composer:—Held, that the arrangement for the pianoforte was an independent musical composition, of which B., not N., was the composer; and the entry made under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 6, was invalid, and gave no title to the assignee of the registered composition. Wood v. Boosey, 7 B. & S. 869; 36 L. J., Q. B. 103; L. R. 2 Q. B. 340; 15 L. T. 530; 15 W. R. 309. Affirmed, 9 B. & S. 175; 37 L. J., Q. B. 84; L. R. 3 Q. B. 223; 18 L. T. 105; 16 W. R. 485—Ex. Ch.

Act of 1886—Saving of Rights and Interests Previously Acquired.]—The International Copyright Act, 1886, by s. 6, provides that, upon an order in council being made, foreign composers shall be entitled to copyright in the United Kingdom in respect of works first produced before such order comes into operation, "provided that where any person has, before the date of the publication of an order in council, lawfully produced any work in the United Kingdom, nothing in this section shall diminish or prejudice any rights or interests arising from or in connection with such production which are subsisting and valuable at the said date." An order in council was made applying the act to French subjects. The plaintiff, a French subject, had composed and first produced in France a musical composition called the "Caprice Polka" before the order came into operation, but had not acquired copyright in the United Kingdom. Before the date of the publication of the order, an English publisher had printed and published this work in England, and the defendant, a bandmaster, had purchased a copy for 5*s.* for the use of his band, and had played it by his band both before and after such date. In an action for damages for the infringement of copyright and for an injunction:—Held, that there was evidence to warrant the finding that the defendant had an interest arising from or in connection with the lawful production of the work in the United Kingdom, which was subsisting and valuable when the order in council was published, and that he was, therefore, protected by the proviso to s. 6. Moul v Groenings, 60 L. J., Q. B. 715; [1891] 2 Q. B. 443; 65 L. T. 327; 39 W. R. 691—C. A.

Trade-mark—Interest in Advertising—"Subsisting and valuable Interests"]—A foreigner registered under the International Copyright Act, 1886, a picture painted abroad that had previously been used by the defendants as a trade-mark, and also for advertising purposes. In an action to restrain infringement of copyright:—Held, that the defendants as proprietors of the trade-mark had an interest in advertising it, that such interest was arising from or in connection with the trade-mark, and was subsisting and valuable within the proviso to s. 6 of the above act, and that therefore the user by them of the picture for advertising purposes was consequently protected Moul v. Groenings ([1891] 2 Q. B. 443), explained. Schauer v. Field, 62 L. J., Ch. 72; [1893] 1 Ch. 35; 3 R. 78; 68 L. T. 81; 41 W. R. 201.

"Interest" arising from Production of Work in this Country.]—The proviso in s. 6 of the International Copyright Act, 1886, does not protect infringers unless their "interest" is shown to be direct, subsisting and pecuniary. Hanfstaengl Art Publishing Co. v. Holloway, 62 L. J., Q. B. 347; [1893] 2 Q. B. 1; 5 R. 358; 68 L. T. 676; 57 J. P. 407.

Artistic Works—Registration by Foreigner in this Country—Retrospective Effect of Statute.]—The provisions of s. 6 of the International Copyright Act, 1886, are retrospective and apply to all literary and artistic works produced before the date of the Order in Council of 28th November, 1887, whether such works were produced before or after the passing of the act. It is not necessary for the copyright to be registered in this country under the act of 1862, to entitle the owner to sue for an infringement under the International Copyright Act, 1886. Ib.

Prints.]—Prints engraved and struck off abroad, but published here, were not protected from piracy. Page v. Townsend, 5 Sim. 395.

A proprietor of a foreign print cannot claim copyright therein, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, unless the date of publication and name of the proprietor are engraved on the plate, and printed on the print, as required by 8 Geo. 3, c. 13. Avanzo v. Mudie, 10 Ex. 203.

1. ELECTION AND APPOINTMENT.

Qualification.]—A freeholder of the county, having a place in the county where he has a right to reside, is capable of being elected coroner. Nottingham, Coroner, In re, 7 L. J., Ch. (O.S.) 61.

Such a person, being elected coroner, will not be removed from the office, because he has also a residence in a town comprised within the ambit of the county, but not being part of the county, which has been his more usual place of abode. Ib.

Qualification of Electors.]—The qualification of a voter for coroner is the possession of a legal freehold, and equitable freeholds have not a right to vote in the election of a coroner. Reg. v. Day, 3 El. & Bl. 859; 2 C. L. R. 1685; 23 L. J., Q. B. 317; 1 Jur. (N S.) 107; 2 W. R. 515.

Validity of Votes.]—In holding a court for the election of a coroner, and making a return to the writ for his election, the sheriff exercises judicial functions; and therefore a quo warranto does not lie to inquire into the validity of votes given at the election, notwithstanding the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 10, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 2, do not allow time for a scrutiny before the sheriff before the close of the poll. Reg. v. Diplock, 10 B. & S. 613; 38 L. J., Q. B. 297; L. R. 4 Q. B. 549; 21 L. T. 24; 17 W. R. 823.

At Adjourned County Court.]—A sheriff having received a writ for the election of a coroner for the county more than six days before the next county court, did not, on the day when the next county court was held, proceed to the election, but gave notice that the election would take place at a county court to be held by adjournment fourteen days afterwards: an election at that adjourned county court was void, as not being in conformity to 58 Geo. 3, c. 95, s. 1. Stafford Coroner, In re, 2 Russ. 475; 5 L. J., Ch. (o.s.) 26.

After Judgment of Ouster.]—After judgment of ouster upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto against a person returned by the sheriff as duly elected to the office of coroner, a new writ de coronatore eligendo issues as of course. Hemel Hempstead Coroner, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 228; 3 W. R. 192.

It is no ground for withholding the writ, that the judgment of ouster was founded upon the fact that the votes constituting the majority for the person returned were bad, and though it is alleged on oath that the result of a scrutiny would be to place the opposing candidate in a majority. Ib.

Semble, that the sheriff cannot, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 13, enter into the question of scrutiny. Ib.

—— Amending Return.]—D. was returned duly elected as coroner by the sheriff, but judgment of ouster was given against him by the court of queen's bench, on the ground that certain persons who voted for him were not entitled to vote; and thereupon a new writ de coronatore eligendo issued. On the application of P., the only other candidate, liberty was given to the sheriff to amend his return, and the execution of the new writ was suspended. Pope, Ex parte, Hemel Hempstead Coroner, In re, 2 W. R. 630.

Application for Postponement.]—Certain freeholders of a county presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor, praying that a writ issued for the election of a coroner might be set aside, or its execution stayed until after a meeting of the sessions, at which the magistrates of the county intended to propose a division of the office. The Lord Chancellor, in the absence of any authority in support of the application, refused to interfere. Salop County Coroner, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 377.

In Boroughs.]—Quære, whether a coroner in a borough, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 62, can regularly be appointed before the grant of a court of quarter sessions has passed the great seal, though within ten days after her Majesty's pleasure to make the grant has been notified to the council. But a coroner having acted under such appointment, and been recognised in his office by the council for several years:—Held, that the office was full, and that a quo warranto information lay to oust a subsequently appointed coroner. Reg. v. Grimshaw, 10 Q. B. 747; 16 L. J., Q. B. 385; 11 Jur. 965.

A coroner cannot be elected at a meeting of the council held by adjournment from a quarterly meeting, no summons or notice having been previously served upon the members of the council stating that such business was to be transacted. Ib.

A coroner appointed under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 62, is not a corporate officer within 9 Anne, c. 20, and therefore the relator in a quo warranto, in which judgment has been given for the crown against the defendant for exercising such office of coroner, is not entitled to his costs from the defendant under the latter act. Reg. v. Grimshaw, 2 B. C. Rep. 146; 5 D. & L. 249; 12 Jur. 134.

In Duchy of Lancaster.]—By a charter of Edw. 3, the king granted to the earl (afterwards duke) of Lancaster, that he might have the return of all writs of the king and his heirs, and summons of the exchequer, and the attachment as well of pleas of the crown as of other pleas whatsoever, in all his lands and fees, so that no sheriff or other bailiff or minister of the king, or his heirs, might enter those lands or fees to execute the same writs and summons, or to make attachment of pleas of the crown, or other pleas aforesaid, or to do any other office there, unless in default of the earl and his bailiffs and ministers:—Held, that thereby the right to appoint coroners within the duchy of Lancaster was granted, and that such right was an exclusive one; that, therefore, notwithstanding modern usage to the contrary, the county coroner had no authority to exercise the office within any of the possessions of the duchy, concurrently with the duchy coroners, nor unless in default of their performance of the office. Jewison v. Dyson, 9 M. & W. 540; 11 L. J., Ex. 401.

Upon a question whether the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster had the exclusive right, under this grant, of appointing a coroner within the honour of Pontefract, evidence of appointments of coroners, and of their acting in other parts of the duchy out of the honour of Pontefract, was admissible. Ib.

By an ancient order by the chancellor and council of the duchy, after reciting that the court was informed that the coroners within the honour of Pontefract, parcel of the duchy, had usually returned their inquests to the crown-office without taking notice therein that they arose within the liberties of the duchy, it was ordered that the coroners should thenceforward specify in their returns when and where the inquest was held:—Held, admissible, although no proof was given of anything done under it. Ib.

The coroner for such part of the duchy of Lancaster as is within the county of Middlesex is not entitled to be appointed coroner of one of the districts of the county under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 27. Payne, Ex parte, 6 L. T. 536.

Additional Coroner—Death.]—Order that a writ should be issued for the election of an additional coroner for the county of Salop. Proceedings on the death of a coroner for the election of a successor. Salop Coroner, In re, 3 Swan. 181.

By County Council—Coroner of the Liberty of the Tower.]—The appointment of franchise coroners, not being within the administrative business of counties formerly carried on by the justices in quarter sessions, is not transferred by the Local Government Act, 1888, to the county councils; nor is the power of appointing any coroners other than those formerly elected by the freeholders given by s. 5 or any other sections of that act. London County Council, Ex parte, 61 L. J., Q. B. 27; [1892] 1 Q. B. 33; 65 L. T. 614; 56 J. P. 279.

The merger of the liberty of the Tower of London in the administrative county of London, under the provisions of s. 48 of the Local Government Act, 1888, "for all the purposes of that act," will not, therefore, include the appointment of a coroner for that liberty under the terms of its charter, so as to transfer the power of appointment to the London County Council. Ib.

New Writ.]—The under-sheriff, under pretence of administering the oath, swears a candidate coroner. The court ordered him to show cause why he should not be committed, and not to file a return to the writ without leave of the court. But this is not a good cause to direct the new writ to the other coroner. Jones, Ex parte, Mos. 254.

Disqualification—Justice of the Peace.]—A justice of the peace does not become disqualified from acting as such by reason of his being elected coroner for the county or division for which he so acts as justice. Davis v. Pembrokeshire JJ., 7 Q. B. D. 513.

2. Deputy.

Reasonable Cause for Absence of Coroner.]—By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, coroners are empowered to appoint deputies, provided that no deputy shall act "except during the illness of the coroner, or his absence from any lawful or reasonable cause." By s. 2, no inquisition shall be quashed by reason of such inquisition having been taken before any deputy instead of the coroner himself. A person being indicted for perjury committed upon an inquest held before a deputy-coroner, and the objection having been taken that there was no lawful or reasonable cause for the absence of the coroner:—Held, first, that the question of lawful or reasonable cause was one for the judge, not for the jury. Reg. v. Johnson, 42 L. J., M. C. 41; L. R. 2 C. C. 15; 27 L. T. 801; 12 Cox, C. C. 264.

Held, secondly, that whatever the cause of absence, by s. 2 a valid inquisition might have been founded upon the inquest, and therefore the deputy had jurisdiction, and perjury was committed. Ib.

Under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, it is a lawful or reasonable cause for the absence of the coroner, and the acting of his deputy on an inquest, that the coroner was engaged in holding another inquest. Reg. v. Perkin, 7 Q. B. 165; 14 L. J., M. C. 87; 9 Jur. 686.

Where the jury is sworn, and the inquest commences properly before a deputy, he should continue holding the inquest to its conclusion, although in the course of it the principal coroner may be accidentally present. Ib.

An inquisition held by a deputy is properly described as taken before the principal coroner. Ib.

It is properly signed in the name of the principal coroner by his deputy. Ib.

Before 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83.]—A coroner, who is a judicial as well as a ministerial officer, could not appoint a deputy to hold an inquest. Rex v. Ferrand, 3 B. & Ald. 260; 1 Chit. 745; 22 R. R. 373.

Where a coroner's clerk, in the absence of his principal, summoned a jury, and charged the jury super visum corporis, and examined witnesses, and, after sitting several days, the coroner himself proceeded in person with the inquest, and afterwards had a view of the body without the presence of the jury, and then proceeded with the inquest without re-swearing the jury or the witnesses previously examined:—Held, that the proceedings were altogether illegal, and that an inquisition found under such circumstances might be quashed. Ib.

An inquest was held on a person deceased, in the coroner's absence, by C. A., his clerk, who signed the inquisition, "C. A.," coroner; and other irregularities took place in the proceedings, but they did not appear on the face of the inquisition. On an application by the father of the deceased, eight months after the inquest, to have the inquisition brought up by certiorari to be quashed, that a new inquest might be held, on affidavit of the facts, and on a suggestion that the cause of death had not been properly investigated, the court refused to interfere. Davies, In re, 8 A. & E. 930; 1 P. & D. 116.

Where an inquisition was signed "A., deputy steward and coroner," the court refused to quash it in toto as necessarily void for want of authority, as it might mean coroner and deputy steward. Carruthers, Ex parte, 2 Man. & Ry. 397.

Privilege from Arrest.]—See infra.

3. Jurisdiction.

In what Cases.]—A coroner has power to hold an inquest where he has reasonable suspicion that death is due to other causes than common illness. Reg. v. Stephenson, 53 L. J., M. C. 176; 13 Q. B. D. 331; 52 L. T. 267; 33 W. R. 44; 15 Cox, C. C. 679; 49 J. P. 486—C. C. R.

Prison for County—Inquest on Prisoner.]—Notwithstanding the transfer of prisons to the Secretary of State by the Prison Act, 1877, a prison, as to which no rules have been made under s. 30 of the act, and which at the commencement of the Prison Act, 1865, was a prison belonging to a county, is still the county prison, although locally situate within the limits of a city, and therefore the jurisdiction to hold inquests on prisoners dying in such prisons is in the coroner for the city, and such jurisdiction is not affected by s. 171, sub-s. 1, of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. Reg. v. Robinson, 19 Q. B. D. 322; 57 L. T. 275; 35 W. R. 843; 16 Cox, C. C. 287; 52 J. P. 22.

Where Death Occurred.]—Where a death occurred in the county of W., from an injury received in the county of S., the coroner's inquest was rightly held in the county of W. Reg. v. Grand Junction Ry., 3 P. & D. 57; 11 A. & E. 128, n.

Where Body Found.]—By an inquisition taken by a coroner of a borough upon a body lying dead there, it appeared that the death was caused accidentally by the deceased falling, in the county, from a carriage, and that he died in the borough, and the jury found the death to have happened accidentally, and laid a deodand on the carriage. The court (before 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12) quashed the inquisition, as the coroner of the borough had no jurisdiction to inquire in the case of death occasioned by an accident happening out of the borough. Reg. v. G. W. Ry., 3 Q. B. 333; 3 Railw. Cas. 161; 2 G. & D. 773; 11 L. J., M. C. 86; 6 Jur. 823.

If a person is found drowned in a river within the concurrent jurisdiction, exclusive of all others, of the coroner for a city and the admiralty, and the body is taken to a place on shore beyond the city limits, the coroner and jury of the city cannot view the body at such place for the purpose of an inquest; and an inquisition taken on such view will be quashed:—So held on an inquisition taken after 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12. Reg. v. Hinde, 5 Q. B. 944; 13 L. J., M. C. 150; 8 Jur. 927.

In a case of manslaughter, the cause of the death and the death occurred in a county, and the body, after death, was removed to a city; the coroner of the city held the inquest, and E. was tried for the manslaughter on the inquisition:—Semble, that the inquest was properly held, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12, although that statute is a little obscurely worded. Reg. v. Ellis. 2 Car. & K. 470.

An inquest taken by a coroner for a liberty of an honour must show on the face of it that it was taken within such honour. Reg. v. Pomfret Liberty, 8 Jur. 910.

To hold Second Inquest]—A coroner has no power, after holding an inquest super visum corporis, and recording the verdict, to hold a second like inquest, mero motu, on the same body; the first not having been quashed, and no writ of melius inquirendum having been awarded. Reg. v. White, 3 El. & El. 137; 29 L. J., Q. B. 257; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 868; 2 L. T. 463; 8 W. R. 380.

Accident where no Death.]—A coroner has no ex officio jurisdiction at common law to hold any other inquest than one on a dead body, super visum corporis. He cannot, therefore, hold an inquest to inquire into the origin of a fire by which no death has been occasioned. Reg. v. Herford, 3 El. & El. 115; 29 L. J., Q. B. 249; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 750; 2 L. T. 459; 8 W. R. 579.

On Several Bodies.]—One inquisition may be taken on the bodies of several persons killed by the same cause and dying at the same time. Reg. v. West, 1 G. & D. 481; 1 Q. B. 826; 2 Railw. Cas. 613; 5 Jur. 484.

During an affray in which shots were fired by certain constables, A. was killed and B. and C. were mortally wounded by gunshots. A jury was summoned, pursuant to the precept of the coroner, and sworn upon an inquest upon the body of A. After viewing the body the inquest was adjourned to a subsequent day. B. died before the day to which the inquest stood adjourned, and the jury sworn upon A.'s inquest were, by the direction of the coroner, summoned to hold an inquest upon B.; and upon C.'s death, which occurred two days later, the same jury proceeded to investigate the circumstances attending the deaths of the three persons, notwithstanding the protest of counsel who appeared for the constables:—Held, that the proceedings were irregular and the inquisition was quashed. Mitchelstown Inquisition, In re, 22 L. R. Ir. 279.

Treasure Trove.]—The jurisdiction of a coroner with regard to treasure trove is confined to an inquiry as to who were the finders and who is suspected thereof. Att.-Gen. v. Moore, 62 L. J., Ch. 607; [1893] 1 Ch. 676; 3 R. 213; 68 L. T. 574; 41 W. R. 294.

—— Title of Crown—Grant to Subject.]—The Crown is primâ facie entitled to treasure trove, and it is not necessary that an inquest should be held for the purpose of informing the Crown as to its rights; but its title may be displaced by a grant to a subject of the franchise of treasure trove. Ib.

4. Privileges.

From Action.]—An action does not lie against a coroner for defamatory words spoken by him while holding an inquest. Thomas v. Churton, 2 B. & S. 475; 31 L. J., Q. B. 139; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 795; 6 L. T. 320.

Trespass will not lie against a coroner for turning a man out of a room where he is about to hold an inquisition. Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611; 9 D. & R. 657; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 221: 30 R. R. 467.

From Arrest.]—A coroner is privileged from arrest on civil process, while on his way to hold an inquest. See 6 H. & N. 501; 30 L. J., Ex. 77; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 3 L. T. 754; 9 W. R. 281.

—— Deputy.]—A deputy coroner for a county, whilst on his way to hold an inquest, is privileged from arrest on civil process. If arrested under such circumstances, the court will order his discharge. Middlesex Deputy Coroner, Ex parte, 6 H. & N. 501; 30 L. J., Ex. 77; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 3 L. T. 754; 9 W. R. 281.

5. Remuneration.

Salary.]—When the salary of a county coroner, holding office at the time of the passing of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, has once been fixed under that act at not less than the average amount of the fees, mileage, and allowances received during five years before the 31st of December, 1859, and where the salary of such coroner is subsequently revised after a period of five years, the salary may be fixed at less than the average amount of the fees, mileage, and allowances which would have been received during the preceding five years. Driffield, Ex parte, L. R. 7 Q. B. 207; 20 W. R. 240.

—— Quinquennial Period—Date whence Time runs—Successor—Remedy of Coroner—Mandamus.]—The quinquennial period of five years, for which a county coroner's salary is fixed under s. 4 of the County Coroners Act, 1860, ends with the coroner's death and his successor on his election is entitled to have a new settlement or fixing of his salary, and such salary so fixed continues for a period of five years from the time it is so fixed, without reference to the time when it was last fixed for his predecessor, and the coroner is entitled to the salary so fixed for the whole of the term of five years, even although in the meantime the district to which the coroner was assigned has been, by Order of the Privy Council, subdivided, and a new coroner appointed and assigned to a part of that district. The coroner, however, cannot bring an action against the justices of the county, quâ justices, or any number of them acting for the whole, claiming a declaration of rights that he is entitled to the full salary fixed, or a mandamus to enforce those rights; the action is not such an action wherein, under the Judicature Act or otherwise, a declaration of rights may be made, or a mandamus granted, as a declaration of rights is only made, or a mandamus granted, where the action is such that relief can be given, and the rights claimed, enforced in that action, whereas in a case like the present the only appropriate remedy is the prerogative writ of mandamus to the justices

Baxter v. London County Council, 63 L. T. 767 ; 55 J. P. 391.

Fees before 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116.]—The coroners of franchises which did not contribute to the county rates were not entitled to the fees given by 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, or to any fees to be paid by the county. Rex v. Yorkshire, W. R. JJ., 7 Term Rep. 51.

A coroner under 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, s. 1, was not entitled to any compensation for the miles travelled by him in returning to his usual place of abode from taking an inquisition. Rex v. Oxfordshire JJ., 2 B. & Ald. 203.

The court refused to compel the sessions to allow an item in the coroner's account, because the justices were of opinion there was no ground for holding the inquisition. Rex v. Kent JJ., 11 East, 229 ; 10 R. R. 484.

A coroner was not entitled to be paid for an inquisition taken upon a dead body, under 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, unless it was signed by all the jurors. Rex v. Norfolk JJ., 1 Nolan, 141.

Where a coroner held two or more inquisitions at the same place on the same day, he was only entitled to one sum of 9*d.* a mile for travelling expenses from the place of his abode to the place were the inquisitions were holden. Rex v. Warwick JJ., 5 B. & C. 430 ; 8 D. & R. 147 ; 4 L. J., K. B. (O.S.) 206 ; 29 R. R. 281.

A coroner was not entitled to the fee of 20*s.* mentioned in 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, for holding an inquest, unless in the judgment of the quarter sessions it was proper that such inquest should have been held, and the court would not review the judgment of the sessions on this point, and refused to grant a mandamus to the sessions to pay such fees. Reg. v. Gloucestershire JJ., 7 El. & Bl. 845 ; 27 L. J., M. C. 15 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 980 ; 5 W. R. 655.

But the court made absolute a rule for a mandamus to pay the fee of 6*s.* 8*d.* on inquests which the sessions had held not to be duly holden, that the question might be discussed on the record whether, under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 68, the coroner was entitled as of right to the fees and disbursements mentioned in that statute. Ib.

The due taking of an inquisition by a coroner was a condition precedent to his being entitled to remuneration under Geo. 2, c. 29. Reg. v. Carmarthenshire JJ., 2 New Sess. Cas. 679 ; 10 Q. B. 796 ; 16 L. J., M. C. 167 ; 11 Jur. 819.

But a coroner was entitled to be reimbursed the compulsory payments made by him under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 89, and 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 68, s. 2, and the justices in quarter sessions had no discretion. Ib.

—— Compensation on Division of District.]—The power of ordering compensation to coroners for the loss of emoluments arising out of a change made under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, in the divisions of a county for the purpose of holding inquests, is confined to cases where such county has been customarily divided into districts for the purpose of holding inquests during the space of seven years before the passing of the act, as provided by s. 6. Reg. v Lechmere, 16 Q. B. 284 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 169 ; 15 Jur. 558.

6. Removal.

In what Cases.]—On an order for a removal of a coroner from his office, the practice still prevails of issuing writs de coronatore exonerando and de coronatore eligendo at the same time since 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 6. Ward, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 700 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 775 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 853 ; 4 L. T. 458 ; 9 W. R. 843.

A coroner was discharged from his office for neglect of duty by the authority of the great seal. Pasley, Ex parte, 3 Dr. & War. 34.

Confinement in prison out of the county is a sufficient ground for the removal of a coroner from his office, although during his absence another coroner of the same county performed his duties. Parnell, Ex parte, 1 J. & W. 451.

The great seal has power independently of the 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, to remove coroners from their office for neglect of duty. Ib.

Notice to a coroner of a petition for his removal is not necessary. Ib.

The practice is to issue the writs de coronatore exonerando and de coronatore eligendo at the same time ; the latter is dated last, but it is not irregular to execute it before a return made to the former. Ib.

The court has power to remove coroners where they misbehave or live out of the county ; but will not order a writ de coronatore exonerando till an affidavit of service of the petition at his last place of abode. Warwick Freeholders, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 184.

7. Duties.

Misbehaviour in Office—Unnecessary Delay.]—A coroner is not justified in delaying the inquest upon a dead body in a state of decomposition for so long a period as five days in order that the body may be identified, and buried and registered under the right name, and the mere fact that it has been placed in a mortuary can make no difference. Hull, In re, 9 Q. B. D. 689.

—— Neglect or Refusal to hold Inquest—Discretion.]—A coroner received from the proper police authorities a report with a view to an inquest, that a man within his district, aged sixty-one, had been found dead in his bed. It did not appear on the one hand that there had been any previous disease or illness, or, on the other hand, that there was any suspicion of violence, suicide, or crime. A medical man, moreover, refused to give a certificate of the cause of death, and the friends and relatives of the deceased made no objection to an inquest :—Held, that the coroner had, in the absence of further information as to the cause of death, no discretion to refuse to hold an inquest upon the ground that it was unnecessary. Ib.

When a precept is issued and a jury is summoned to attend an inquest, the coroner is bound to proceed with the inquiry, and cannot dismiss the jury without doing so. A refusal to proceed with an inquest under such circumstances is a misbehaviour within s. 6 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116. Ward, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 700 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 775 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 853 ; 4 L. T. 458 ; 9 W. R. 843.

—— Taking Bribe.]—A coroner is guilty of an indictable offence in taking a sum of money for not holding an inquest ; whether he has any pretence for holding the inquest or not, he is equally criminal in having extorted money to refrain from doing his office. Rex v. Harrison, 1 East, P. C. 482.

—— In Taking Verdict.]—After the jury retired, the coroner, upon being informed that they had agreed, but before their verdict was given, entered the room where they were in consultation and took their verdict in the room before returning into open court :—Held, that this was misconduct on the part of the coroner, and the inquisition was quashed. Michelstown Inquisition, In re, 22 L. R. Ir. 279.

Fresh Inquiry.]—When material evidence has been rejected at a coroner's inquest, and the jury has brought in an inconclusive verdict, and fresh evidence which will throw light upon the inquiry is forthcoming, the court will quash the inquisition, and send it down to the coroner to hold a fresh inquiry before a fresh jury. Such fresh inquiry must be held super visum corporis. Reg. v. Carter, 45 L. J., Q. B. 711 ; 34 L. T. 849 ; 24 W. R. 882 ; 13 Cox, C. C. 220.

At an inquest the question to be decided by the jury was whether the deceased was shot by accident or by her husband ; the latter was examined and cross-examined, but the body was not examined as to the direction of the bullet :—Held, that a second inquest was unnecessary, as from the incidents of the struggle, the point as to suicide or murder was not likely to be explained satisfactorily. Reg. v. Coulson, 55 J. P. 262.

Preventing Inquest being held — Misdemeanour.]—It is a misdemeanour to destroy a dead body with intent to prevent an inquest in a case where a coroner has jurisdiction to hold one. Reg. v. Stephenson, 53 L. J., M. C. 176 ; 13 Q. B. D. 331 ; 52 L. T. 267 ; 33 W. R. 44 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 679 ; 49 J. P. 486—C. C. R. S. P.. Reg. v. Price, 53 L. J., M. C. 51 ; 12 Q. B. D. 247 ; 33 W. R. 45, n. ; 15 Cox, C. C. 389.

Duty as to Evidence.]—On inquests held on the bodies of dead bastard children, it is the bounden duty of the coroner to tell the jury, in all cases where there is not the most clear and decisive proof that the child was born alive, that they ought never to think of returning a verdict of wilful murder against the mother. Rex v. Bayley, Car. C. L. 243.

An inquisition jury ought to have pointed out the precise time at which the accident happened that caused the death of the deceased, and also the precise time at which the death took place. Reg. v. Brownlow, 3 P. & D. 52 ; 11 A. & E. 119 ; 8 D. P. C. 157 ; 9 L. J., M. C. 15 ; 4 Jur. 103.

A coroner on an inquisition super visum corporis ought to hear evidence on oath, not only on the part of the crown, but on the part of the person accused. Rex v. Scorey, 1 Leach, C. C. 43.

It is the duty of a coroner, in a case of death occurring in a pugilistic encounter, to examine a surgeon as to the cause of the death. Rex v. Quinch, 4 Car. & P. 571.

It is the duty of a coroner to read over to every witness examined on the inquest the evidence which he has given, and to desire the witness to sign it. Reg. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600 ; 8 Jur. 921.

A coroner ought not to exclude the testimony of parties who have material evidence to offer, on the ground that their testimony may tend to criminate themselves. Wakley v. Cooke, 4 Ex. 511 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 91.

Where, on a criminal information against a coroner for corruption in his office, by secretly examining witnesses before the jury was sworn, he was found guilty, the judge refused to commit him or hold him to bail, no disposition to escape or abscond being manifested or shown. Rex v. Whitcomb, 1 Car. & P. 124.

Binding over Witnesses.]—It is the duty of a coroner to bind over all those witnesses who prove any material fact against the party accused, and not those who are called for the purpose of exculpating him. Reg. v. Taylor, 9 Car. & P. 672.

However, if a coroner binds over all the witnesses on both sides, no blame is imputable to the clerk of indictments, if he requires them all to be put on the back of the bill, and examined before the grand jury. Ib.

Expenses of Permanent Medical Witness.]—An agreement by the corporation of the City of Dublin to pay a fixed yearly salary, in lieu of fees, to a medical practitioner permanently appointed by the coroner to attend as medical witness at all inquests to be held in the city of Dublin, is not warranted by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 37, s. 28 ; and payments made on account of such salary ought not to be allowed by the public auditor. Reg. v. Finlay, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 498.

Identifying Accused.]—A party had been committed for trial upon a charge of murder. A coroner's jury was sitting upon the dead body of the deceased. The court refused an application for a habeas corpus to bring up the prisoner for the purpose of identifying him, as he might be identified by the evidence of the witnesses who were examined before the magistrates, or by a witness sent to the prison for that purpose. Cooke, In re, 7 Q. B. 653 ; 14 L. J., M. C. 188 ; 9 Jur. 869.

Quære, whether the court has power to grant the writ in such a case ; Coleridge, J., affirming that it has. Ib.

Adjournment.]—If an inquest on a dead body is adjourned, and on the day appointed, the court is not formally opened and further adjourned, the proceedings drop, and the court is dissolved, and everything else done in the matter of the inquest is coram non judice ; and this is so even where the adjournment takes place only for the purpose of drawing up a formal inquisition after the jury has in substance agreed upon their verdict. Reg. v. Payn, 34 L. J., Q. B. 59 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1150 ; 11 L. T. 488, 707 ; 13 W. R. 206, 383 ; 10 Cox, C. C. 64. S. P., Reg. v. Mallet, 1 Cox, C. C. 336.

Discharging Jury.]—When a coroner's jury cannot agree on an inquest to inquire into the death of a person, the coroner cannot discharge them, but they must be remitted to the judges of the next assizes for the county, and if they cannot agree, the judge of the assize trying prisoners will discharge them. Reg. v. Reinheatz, 4 F. & F. 1094.

When a precept is issued and a jury is summoned to attend an inquest. the coroner is bound to proceed with the inquiry, and cannot dismiss the jury without doing so. Ward, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 700 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 775 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 853 ; 4 L. T. 458 ; 9 W. R. 843.

Committal for Trial of Persons Charged.]—When a person is committed for trial on a coroner's inquisition for manslaughter. the case ought properly to be investigated by the magistrates, in order that the prisoner may have the opportunity of calling witnesses, and having them bound over to appear at the trial, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 3. Reg. v. Spoor, 11 Cox, C. C. 550.

8. Inquisitions.

a. Form and Mode of Taking.

Jury—Exemptions.]—The exemptions in the schedule to the Juries Act, 1870, apply to jurors summoned to serve upon coroners' inquests. Reg. v. Dutton, or Dutton, In re, 61 L. J., Q. B. 190; [1892] 1 Q. B. 486; 66 L. T. 324; 40 W. R. 270; 56 J. P. 455.

Swearing Jurors, and View.]—It is not necessary that the jurors should be sworn super visum corporis, or that they should all be sworn at one time, or that they should all view the body at the same time. Reg. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257; 33 L. J., Q. B. 183; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 968: 10 L. T. 456; 12 W. R. 793; 9 Cox, C. C. 508.

After a jury had viewed the body and heard part of the evidence, another person was sworn, viewed the body, and took part in the proceedings on hearing that portion of the evidence which had been previously taken read over to him:—Held, a sufficient ground for bringing up the inquisition. Reg. v. Yorkshire Coroner, 9 L. T. 424; 9 Cox, C. C. 373.

Where the court has quashed an inquisition and sent it down to the coroner to hold a fresh inquiry before a fresh jury, such fresh inquiry must be held super visum corporis. Reg. v. Carter, 45 L. J., Q. B. 711; 34 L. T. 849; 24 W. R. 882; 13 Cox, C. C. 220.

Presumption as to Number.]—After a verdict, the court will presume that a coroner's inquisition was found by twelve jurors, if twelve were necessary. Taylor v. Lambe, 6 D. & R. 188; 4 B. & C. 138.

Form of.]—A coroner's inquisition is an indictment, within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to set forth therein the manner in which, or the means by which, the death of the deceased was caused. Reg. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257; 33 L. J., Q. B. 183; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 958; 10 L. T. 456; 12 W. R. 793; 9 Cox, C. C. 508.

It is no objection to an inquisition for murder that the offence is stated to have been committed on the 26th day June, omitting the word "of." Rex v. Huggins, 3 Car. & P. 414.

An inquisition in which the thing causing the death was described as "the goods and chattels of the proprietors of the H. & S. railway" (without mentioning their corporate name):—Held, bad. Reg. v. West, 10 L. J., M. C. 133.

An inquisition for manslaughter, stating the inquest to have been held on the 5th of January, in the 7 Will. 4, and in the year 1837, and that J. M. of, &c., on the 28th of December, in the year aforesaid, made an assault, &c., is bad, as the offence is charged to have been committed on an impossible day. Rex v. Mitchell, 7 Car. & P. 800.

—— Negligent Omission of Duty.]—A coroner's inquisition which, after stating the cause of death of the deceased to be injuries caused by a fall, alleges that by the neglect of three specified persons to fence, or cause to be fenced, a quarry, the deceased fell therein, "and that, therefore" the three specified persons did feloniously kill the deceased, may be quashed, inasmuch as it professes to be founded on particular facts under which the duty to fence, or cause to be fenced, arose, but omits to set out any facts from which such a duty as that alleged would arise. Reg. v. Oxford Circuit Assize Clerk, 66 L. J., Q. B. 271; [1897] 1 Q. B. 370; 76 L. T. 260; 45 W. R. 543; 18 Cox, C. C. 518; 61 J. P. 197.

An inquisition was quashed in which no neglect of duty was set out such as would constitute the crime of manslaughter. Reg. v. Pocock, 5 Cox, C. C. 172.

—— What Defects may be Amended.]—An omission in an inquisition to state the time at which the offence was committed, when time is not of the essence of the offence, is cured by s. 2 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83. Reg. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257; 33 L. J., Q. B. 183; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 968; 10 L. T. 456; 12 W. R. 793; 9 Cox, C. C. 508.

By s. 20 of the Coroners Act, 1887, if in the opinion of the court having cognisance of the case an inquisition finds sufficiently the matters required to be found thereby, and where it charges a person with murder or manslaughter, sufficiently designates that person and the offence charged, the inquisition shall not be quashed for any defects, and the court may order the proper officer of the court to amend any defect. On a rule for a certiorari to bring up and quash an inquisition charging that "the directors of the Great Western Railway Company" did feloniously kill and slay G.:—Held, that the Queen's Bench division had no power to amend the inquisition by sufficiently designating the directors by name, because the power to amend was limited by s. 20 to the court before whom the persons charged should be brought for trial. Reg. v. G. W. Ry. Directors, 37 L. J., M. C. 31; 20 Q. B. D. 410; 58 L. T. 765; 36 W. R. 506; 16 Cox, C. C. 410; 52 J. P. 772.

An inquest omitting to state the place where the death happened, or where the body was found, were defects in substance, and could not be amended, and the inquisition was quashed. Rex v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247; 9 D. & R. 237; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 36.

—— Signature and Names.]—It must be signed as well by all the jurors as the coroner. Rex v. Norfolk JJ., 1 East, P. C. 383.

If the names of the jurors were not set out in the caption, and the inquisition was not signed by the jurors with their names at length, the inquisition was bad. Rex v. Bowen, 3 Car. & P. 602.

If some of the jurors signed with their marks, such marks ought to have been verified by an attestation. Ib. S. P., Reg. v. Stockdale, 8 D. P. C. 517.

A juror who has put his mark must be taken primâ facie to have done so in the presence of the other jurors. Lewin's Case, 2 Lewin, C. C. 125.

It was no objection that one of the jurors did not sign his christian name at length, if the names of the jurors were set out at length in the body of the inquisition. Rex v. Bennett, 6 Car. & P. 179.

If several persons on an inquest had the same christian and surname, it was not necessary, in the caption or the inquisition, to distinguish them by abode or addition. Rex v. Nicholas, 7 Car. & P. 538.

—— Affirmation.]—If an inquisition states it to have been taken on the affirmation of a man, it should state that man to be either a Quaker or a Moravian. Rex v. Polfield, 2 D. P. C. 469.

On Parchment, not Paper.] — A coroner's inquisition should be on parchment, and not on paper. Rex v. Bearers, 1 East, P. C. 383.

An inquisition, finding a person felo de se, will be quashed if written on paper. Reg. v. Whalley, 7 D. & L. 317; 19 L. J., Q. B. 14.

b. Quashing.

Proceedings.]—Though the court will sometimes quash an inquisition on motion for palpable defects, the most convenient course is to put the party contesting it to demur. Reg. v. Brownlow, 11 A. & E. 119; 3 P. & D. 52; 9 L. J., M. C. 15.

A rule to quash an inquisition upon an objection relating only to the finding as to one person named therein, need not be served upon the other persons named. Reg. v. Mallet, 1 Cox, C. C. 336.

An inquisition may be quashed where a verdict has been found against a person confessedly innocent, but the court will not quash it where there has been any evidence, even though it may be insufficient to warrant the finding of the jury. Six Mile Bridge Inquisition, In re, 6 Cox, C. C. 122.

If an inquisition be insensible as it stands, and there are no words the rejection of which would make it clearly intelligible, it must be quashed. Reg. v. Midland Ry., 2 Cox, C. C. 1.

Jurisdiction.]—The jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench Division to quash an inquisition for irregularity on the face of it is left untouched by s. 20 of the Coroner's Act, 1887. Reg. v. G. W. Ry. Directors, 57 L. J., M. C. 31; 20 Q. B. D. 410; 58 L. T. 765; 36 W. R. 506; 16 Cox, C. C. 410; 52 J. P. 772.

On what Grounds.]—It is no ground for a certiorari to bring up an inquisition that evidence not upon oath was received. Reg. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257.

Or that the direction of the coroner to the jury was improper. Ib.

Or that there was no evidence to warrant the finding of the jury. Ib.

The court refused to quash an inquisition on the ground that evidence was received not upon oath, there being no mala praxis, and no mischief having resulted, and the jury having found their verdict upon the other evidence only. Reg. v. Staffordshire Coroner, 10 L. T. 650.

On an application to quash a coroner's inquisition, the court will not examine the depositions returned by the coroner on certiorari, for the purpose of inquiring whether the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of the coroner's jury. Mitchelstown Inquisition, In re, 22 L. R. Ir. 279.

The court will quash an inquisition in which the facts of the case are stated, and the verdict found is not warranted by such facts. Cully, In re, 2 N. & M. 61; 5 B. & Ad. 230; 2 L. J., M. C. 102.

The court will not quash an inquisition unless it appears bad on the face of it, or fraud is shown. It is no ground to quash it that it is alleged that the coroner misdirected the jury. Reg. v. M'Intosh, 7 W. R. 52.

Partly Bad.] — Where a jury found that a deceased person committed suicide "whilst suffering under the cruel conduct of Mr. S.," a clergyman, and the coroner had taken this down as the finding of the jury:—Held, that the court would not grant a certiorari to bring up the inquisition for the purpose of quashing so much of the finding as was irrelevant. Scratchley, Ex parte, 2 D. & L. 29.

An inquisition charging two persons with having caused the death may, for misconduct in the coroner in reference to one only, be quashed as to that one only. Reg. v. Mallet, 1 Cox, C. C. 336.

An inquisition may be quashed in part for uncertainty, and stand good for the residue. Carruthers, Ex parte, 2 M. & Ry. 397.

In Particular Instances.]—See SUPRA.

Action for Imprisonment — Costs.] — In an action for causing the plaintiff to be taken into custody, and imprisoned, it appeared that he was arrested, by a coroner's warrant, for manslaughter. He was admitted to bail, with two sureties, and afterwards, on his application to the Queen's Bench, the inquisition was quashed:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, as part of the special damage, the cost of setting aside the inquisition. Foxhall v. Barnett, 2 El. & Bl. 928; 2 C. L. R. 273; 23 L. J., Q. B. 7; 18 Jur. 41; 2 W. R. 61.

c. Removal for Trial.

In what Cases.]—The Court of Queen's Bench will remove a coroner's inquisition, or an indictment to be found at an ensuing assizes, for murder, from a county at large to the Queen's Bench by certiorari, if it appears that a fair trial cannot be had in the county. Reg. v. Palmer, 5 El. & Bl. 1024; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 235.

And by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, the court may direct the trial to take place at the Central Criminal Court.

d. Admissibility in Evidence.

In Civil Cases.]—The finding of a jury on a coroner's inquisition throws the burden of proof in a civil case on the party alleging the contrary. Prince of Wales Association Co. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605.

In Information for Libel.]—Information for libel alleged that a person unknown had committed a murder on G., and that H. had been charged with it. The information set out the libel, and charged that it imputed the murder to C. The libel, as set out, spoke of the murder of G., and stated H. had been accused of it:—Held, that the indictment was proved by evidence, that a person had been murdered, that H. was charged with the murder, and that, on an inquest held upon the body, witnesses called the dead person by the name of G. Reg. v. Gregory, 8 Q. B. 308; 15 L. J., M. C. 38; 10 Jur. 387.

Held, also, that the last fact might properly be proved by the coroner who held the inquest, and that he might for the purpose use an instrument which he had drawn up as an inquisition, whether it was or not a valid and formal inquisition. Ib.

An inquisition on paper only, instead of parchment (but not having been quashed), is admissible in evidence, not as an inquisition proving the statements therein contained, but to show that an inquiry into the subject-matter of it did in fact take place Ib

Depositions]—Depositions taken before the coroner of a witness too ill to attend may be sent before the grand jury Reg v Mooney, 9 Cox, C C 411

So depositions of a prisoner at a coroner's inquisition, after a caution by the coroner, may be read Reg v Colmer, 9 Cox C C 506

The court will not grant a rule nisi to remove the depositions taken before a coroner, and to bail a party charged upon the inquest with manslaughter without an affidavit of what took place before the coroner Rex v Mills, 4 N & M 6

Statements made before Coroner] — In an action by a widow to recover compensation for the death of her husband, who was accidentally killed by a brougham on the highway, evidence as to a statement made by F the driver of the brougham, before the coroner, to the effect that "he had a Russian prince, who did not understand the English language and that he would not allow him to pull up as he was in a hurry to go to a wedding which was the cause of his not stopping at the time of the accident, and that the brougham belonged to the defendant, and that F was driving it for him, is inadmissible Brooker v Floyd, 13 L T 79

9. Other Matters

Execution of Process] — An attachment against the sheriff must issue to elisors in the first instance if the coroner is the defendant in the cause Reg v Glamorganshire Sheriff, 1 D (N S) 308, 5 Jur 1010

The directions in 8 & 9 Vict c 18, s 39, requiring inquisitions to be held before coroners where sheriffs are interested, were introduced for the protection of the party against whom the interest would operate and may be waived by him Baddeley, Ex parte, 5 Railw Cas 542

Semble, that the court has no power under 3 & 4 Will 4 c 17 to direct a writ of trial to the coroner Levy v Magnay, 10 M & W 664, 2 D (N S) 512, 12 L J, Ex 345

Deodands]—Forfeiture in respect of, abolished by 9 & 10 Vict c 62 Previously thereto see Reg v Polworth, 1 G & D 211, 1 Q B 818, 10 L J, M C 118, 6 Jur 190

Four deodands having been estreated into the Court of Exchequer, under 3 & 4 Will 4, c 99, s 29, upon four coroner's inquisitions, which found that the deaths of four persons were respectively caused on a certain day, by a certain steam-engine, and each imposed a deodand of 125*l* on the engine, the court refused to stay proceedings on three inquisitions on payment of one deodand of 125*l*, but left the defendants to their remedy by traversing, or quashing the inquisition Att-Gen v Eastern Counties Ry, 3 Railw Cas 145.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 50), ss 8, 241

Proper Title]—The proper style of municipal corporations in cities, under 5 & 6 Will 4, c 76, is the "Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens, and not the "Mayor Aldermen and Burgesses' of the city Att-Gen v Worcester Corporation, 2 Ph 3, 15 L J Ch 398 S P, Rochester Corporation v Lee, 15 Sim 376

Effect of 5 & 6 Will 4, c 76]—Municipal corporations, as altered by 5 & 6 Will 4, c 76 are but a continuance of the old corporations Att Gen v Kerr, 2 Beav 420 S P, Att Gen v Leicester Corporation, 9 Beav 546, Ludlow Corporation v Tyler, 7 Car & P 537

Description]—The mayor, jurats, and commonalty of the ancient town of Rye were held to take lands by a devise to the right worshipful the mayor, jurats, and town council of the ancient town of Rye Att Gen v Rye, 7 Taunt 546, 1 Moore, 267

The 'mayor, aldermen and commons, in common council assembled, are not sufficiently described in the proceedings under a private act of parliament, by 'the mayor and commonalty and citizens, though in fact the latter includes the former Rex v Croke Cowp 29

In ejectment, the demise was laid to be by the mayor, burgesses &c, of the borough town of M, and, on the trial it turned out from the charter that the name of the corporation was "the mayor, &c, of M" —Held, that this was no variance, it appearing from the charter which was in evidence that M was a borough town Doe d Walden v Miller, 1 B & Ald 699, 19 R R 427

Where corporation mistake their name in granting leases, help given in chancery Anon, Cary, 31

Whether Corporation a "Person"]—The 39 Eliz c 5, enables "all and every person and persons" to found hospitals for the poor, and to incorporate them A municipal corporation is included in the words "every person and persons," and may exercise the powers given by the act. Newcastle Corporation 12 Cl & F 402

Trustees of a will had power to grant leases to any 'person or persons they should think fit — Held, that this authorised them to grant a lease to a limited company Jeffreck's Trusts, In re, 51 L J, Ch 507

A corporation is included in words 'person or persons Hereford Corporation v Morton, 15 L T 187, 15 W R 110

Under a local act a summary remedy was provided against a person accidentally damaging a lamp and a pillar attached thereto, which had been set up by any person or persons at his or their private expense or which belonged to the company supplying the gas —Held, that the act applied to a lamp and pillar set up by a corporation, although the gas was provided by contract between a company and the corporation Ib

Whether the word "person in a statute can be treated as including a corporation must depend on the consideration of the object of the statute, and of the enactments passed with a view to carry that object into effect Pharmaceutical Society v London and Provincial Supply Association, 49 L J Q B 736 5 App Cas 857; 43 L T 389, 28 W R 957, 45 J P 20—H L. (E)

Primâ facie Evidence of Existence]—The insertion of the name of a town in Schedule (A) of the 5 & 6 Will 4, c 76 is primâ facie evidence of the existence of a municipal corporation there. Rex v Green 1 N & P 631, 6 A & E 548, W W & D 291

It is not necessary to produce the charter of a city to prove that it is a municipal corporation, the production of the minutes of the council at which the alderman was chosen for the ward is sufficient evidence if it proves that the councillors of the ward were present on the occasion, and it is a sufficient compliance with 5 & 6 Will 4, c 76, s 43 Reg v Turner, 12 Cox, C C 313.

a GRANT

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 50), ss 210—218

Validity of—Petition, Counter-Petition, Question for Jury]—A petition, which had been agreed upon at a meeting of the ratepayers of the parliamentary borough of Manchester, convened by public advertisement and which was in fact attended by 1 000, and which petition was afterwards signed by 4 000 inhabitant householders of the borough, was presented to her Majesty, praying for the grant of a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants under the 7 Will 4 & 1 Vict c 78, s 49 Afterwards, and before the day appointed for this petition being taken into consideration by the privy council, a counter-petition, signed by 6,000 of such inhabitant householders, was presented to her Majesty, praying her not to grant such charter The whole number of such inhabitant householders of the borough amounted to 48,000 —Held, that the second petition did not necessarily, in point of law, deprive her Majesty of the power to grant such charter upon the first petition, but that, whether the first petition was, under all the circumstances, the petition of the inhabitant householders of the borough, so as to authorise the exercise of the powers conferred by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 49, was a question of fact for a jury; and that the determination of the privy council to advise the crown to grant the charter upon such petition was not conclusive of its validity. Rutter v. Chapman, 10 L. J., Ex. 495; 8 M. & W. 1—Ex. Ch.

Prerogative of Crown.]—The grant of such charter of incorporation is an exercise of the common-law prerogative of the crown, although it extends to the new corporation the powers of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, which the crown has power to do only by virtue of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 49. Ib.

The crown may, by its common-law prerogative, appoint, in such charter, the number, and set out the limits, of the wards in the new borough. Ib.

To Part of a Borough.]—Such charter may be granted to a part only (to be defined therein) of the borough, from the whole of which the petition emanated, and need not be conferred upon the inhabitant householders of the whole borough. Ib.

Power of Appointing—Delegation.]—The crown may also, by such charter, delegate to an individual the power of appointing the first members of such corporation; or may, at all events, appoint a person to ascertain the individuals who compose the class to whom the charter is granted. Ib.

Such charter is not void, because it directs the person appointed to make out the first list to include in it only "all inhabitant householders within the borough who shall possess the qualification required by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76," instead of including also all persons occupying shops, &c., within the borough, and being inhabitant householders residing within seven miles thereof, according to the schedule. Ib.

Petition not Signed by Majority.]—Under the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, the crown may grant a charter of incorporation, though the petition for it is not actually signed by a majority, either in persons or property, of the inhabitant householders. Reg. v. Boucher, 2 G. & D. 737; 3 Q. B. 641; 6 Jur. 851. Reg. v. Warwickshire JJ., 11 L. J., Q. B. 299.

When Town within a County.]—There having been a de facto grant of a charter of incorporation to a town within a county, and a de facto grant of a separate quarter sessions to it, the court quashed a county rate which included the town, and refused to entertain objections to the validity of the grant of quarter sessions, on the ground that the grant of the crown ought in such a case to be directly impeached by scire facias. Ib.

Presentation of Petition.]—The power of the crown to grant a charter of incorporation under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 49, attaches on the presentation of a petition under the act, and whatever happens afterwards only affects its discretion. Reg. v. Aberavon (Corporation), 11 L. T. 417; 13 W. R. 90.

Such a petition must be a petition representing the wishes of the majority of the inhabitant householders, and this is a question of fact for the jury. Ib.

Semble, that inhabitant householders in that section includes compound householders (under 13 & 14 Vict. c 99) as well as ratepayers. Ib.

Validity of Charter, how questioned.]—Where the crown had granted a separate court of quarter sessions to a borough, but the county justices afterwards made an order assessing the borough to the county rate on the ground that the grant was invalid, the court quashed the order of justices, and refused to consider the validity of the grant by the indirect proceeding of a certiorari to quash the rate. Reg. v. Warwickshire JJ., 11 L. J., Q. B. 299.

The court of chancery will not inquire into the validity of a charter, but will act upon it as being valid until proper proceedings are taken to set it aside. Att.-Gen. v. Avon Corporation, 33 Beav. 67; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1117; 11 W. R. 709. Affirmed on appeal, 9 L. T. 187—L. J.

See Robinson v. London Hospital, 10 Hare, 19; 22 L. J., Ch. 754.

—— Quo Warranto.]—The court will not grant a quo warranto against an individual to try the legality of a charter of a municipal incorporation. Reg. v. Jones, 8 L. T. 503. S. P., Queen v. Taylor, 3 P. & D. 652; 9 L. J., Q. B. 219.

Explanation by Usage.]—A grant of immunity to burgesses, their heirs and successors, was expounded by the usage to be a grant to burgesses, corporators only, and not to the burgage tenants and their heirs. Tewkesbury v. Bricknell, 2 Taunt. 120; 11 R. R. 537.

—— Inhabitants.]—The word inhabitants, in a charter, has not, in itself, any definite legal meaning, but must be explained in each case, extrinsically, as by evidence of usage, or by reference to the context and objects of the charter. Rex v. Mashiter, 6 A. & E. 153; 1 N. & P. 314; 6 L. J., K. B. 121. S. P., Rex v. Davey, 6 A. & E. 374.

Effect of.]—A charter of incorporation granted under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 49, to a borough previously possessing a body corporate, but not named in the schedules to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, confers upon it the same powers and privileges as if it had been so named. Att.-Gen. v. Avon Corporation, supra.

The corporation established under the charter is identical with that previously existing, although the governing body may be different, and the property of the old corporation becomes vested in the new by virtue of the charter. Ib.

b. CONSTRUCTION.

Words of Permission—Obligatory.]—If there are words of permission in a charter to do an act which is clearly for the public benefit, they are obligatory; therefore, where a charter declared that the mayor and jurats of an ancient town might hold a court of record for the holding of pleas, but which had been long disused, the court granted a mandamus to compel such court to be held, at the instance of an inhabitant of the town, though he was not a corporator. Rex v. Hastings, 1 D. & R. 148; 5 B. & Ald. 692, n.; 24 R. R. 657.

Charter confirming Privileges.]—By several charters the sheriffs of Norwich were to be chosen by the citizens and commonalty from themselves; a subsequent charter confirming former privileges, and regulating the time and mode of electing sheriffs, omitted the words "from themselves." The usage, however, both before and since had been to elect from among the freemen:—Held, that the last charter was not meant to vary the qualification; and that the restriction in the former charter could not be dispensed with; and that the election of a person not free was irregular. Rex v. Grout, 1 B. & Ad. 104.

Tolls—Grant of Exemption.]—By a charter of Eliz., her majesty granted to the inhabitants of T. to be incorporated by the name of the mayor and burgesses of the borough of T., and also granted and confirmed to the mayor and burgesses, and their successors, "all messuages, lands, tenements, customs, privileges, immunities, advantages, &c., within the borough, which the mayor and burgesses or inhabitants, by whatever names or name, corporate or incorporate, by reason or colour of any prescription, for fifty years past, had held; and that the burgesses and inhabitants of the borough, and their successors, thenceforth for ever should be free from toll, passage, pontage, murage, anchorage, coynage, wharfage, cranage, keyage, &c., for all goods which were their own, throughout the kingdom of England, except the city of London":—Held, that this exemption from tolls and dues did not extend to tolls and duties arising and due by prescription to the corporation of T. within that borough. Truro v. Reynalds, 1 M. & Sc. 272.

Immemorial Custom—Licence to Fish.]—The corporation of Colchester having in 1740 become suspended by reason of proceedings on quo warranto, an act was passed for preserving the Colne fishery, which had been by ancient charters vested in them. By that act, after reciting the charters and letters-patent of incorporation, that the mayor and commonalty, and their predecessors, had from time immemorial, as well by virtue of their prescriptive rights as of the letters-patent, granted licences to oyster-dredgers to dredge and take oysters in the fishery, and had held courts, and made rules and orders for governing and preserving the fishery; and that, by reason of the judgment of the King's Bench, there remained no mayor, alderman or justices of peace, nor persons to hold courts, or make or enforce rules for the government and preservation of the fishery, it was enacted, that it should be lawful to and for the justices residing within the borough, or within the Colchester division of the county of Essex, and they were thereby required, to hold courts, appoint officers, and grant licences to such oyster-dredgermen as should apply for the same, under the usual and accustomed payments and fees, and in such manner as the corporation, or their predecessors, had theretofore used to grant such licences. By the act a penalty was imposed upon non-licenced persons dredging in the fishery, and the payments and fees for licences, and all fines, were to be paid to the justices, and after the re-incorporation of the borough, to the chief magistrate, and applied in the first place in payment of the necessary charges of obtaining the act, and then to the assignees of a mortgage on the estates of the late mayor and commonalty. In 1763, by a charter of Geo. 3, the borough was re-incorporated. In an action against the new corporation for refusing to grant a dredging licence to the plaintiff, the declaration averred that he, before and at the time of his applying for such licence, was an oyster-dredgerman, qualified and entitled to apply for, demand, and have a licence from the corporation under the act of parliament to dredge and take oysters in the fishery under the usual and accustomed payments and fees; that he claimed at the proper court to be licensed: and that the corporation refused to license him; —Held, that, whatever the immemorial custom might be, there was nothing in the act of parliament which imposed upon the corporation the duty or obligation of granting licences for any accustomed payment or fee, and that consequently the declaration was bad. Mills v. Colchester Corporation, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 635.

Necessary Majority.]—A charter granted to a corporation, consisting of two bailiffs and twelve assistants and commonalty, or the greater part of them, of whom the bailiffs for the time being shall be two, to do corporate acts:—Held, that the necessary majority must consist of the two bailiffs and a majority of twelve assistants. Godmanchester Corporation v. Phillips, 6 N. & M. 211; 4 A. & E. 550; 1 H. & W. 686; 5 L. J., K. B. 108.

Exclusion of County Justices.]—A charter granting jurisdiction to borough magistrates over a district not within the borough, does not exclude the county justices, without express words. Blankley v. Winstanley, 3 Term Rep. 279; 1 R. R. 704.

And though such charter contains words of reference to former charters, in which exclusive jurisdiction is given to the borough justices within the borough, and adds that they shall have jurisdiction within the new district in tam amplo modo et formâ, &c.; yet if there is in the latter charter a saving clause of the rights of the crown and of all other persons, the borough magistrates have only a concurrent jurisdiction with the county justices. Ib.

Until Oath Taken, Title Incomplete.]—By a charter, Edw. I. granted to the burgesses of C., that the constable of his castle of C. for the time being should be mayor of that borough, "sworn as well to the king as to the burgesses, who, on oath for preserving the king's right being first taken, should swear to the burgesses, that he would preserve the liberties of the burgesses, granted by the king, and faithfully do those things which to the office of mayoralty belong in the borough." By letters patent, William IV. granted the office of the castle of C.:—Held, that until oath taken, according to the charter, the title of the grantee was incomplete. Rex v. Roberts, 5 N. & M. 130; 3 A. & E. 771; 1 H. & W. 444; 4 L. J., M. C. 118.

Residence.]—Where a charter of a borough directed that when any of the capital burgesses should happen to die, or dwell out of the borough, or be removed, it should be lawful for the remainder to elect others in the place of those so happening to die or be removed, omitting the intermediate circumstance of dwelling out of the borough:—Held, that these words were not so unambiguous as to warrant the court to interfere, by granting a mandamus calling on the mayor and burgesses to elect and swear in two capital burgesses, in the room of two non-resident capital burgesses, who had not been previously removed by the corporation from their offices, for the purpose of taking this matter into consideration. Rex v. Truro, 3 B. & Ald. 590; 2 Chit. 257.

Usage differing from Charter.]—Election of burgesses must be as directed by charter, though usage different. Powell v. Rex, 2 Bro. P. C. 298.

Extension of Words beyond Natural Import.]—The words of a grant from the crown, by a contemporaneous exposition and constant usage, may be extended beyond their natural import, so as to confer a right to exercise an office within a city and the liberties thereof, granted only to be exercised within the city. London v. Long, 1 Camp. 22; 10 R. R. 618.

Limitation of Words]—But "burgesses" who, by charter, have the right to elect a mayor, cannot be limited by usage. Rex v. Goldsmith, 4 B. & Ad. 835.

In Latin.]—Evidence of usage and practice admitted to explain a charter in the Latin language, and of the reign of Philip and Mary. Att.-Gen. v. Boston Corporation, 9 Jur. 838.

Usage contrary to Charter void.]—See Rex v. Salway, 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 277; 9 B. & C. 424; 4 Man. & Ry. 314.

By-law contrary to Charter bad.]—See Rex v. Bumstead, 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 321; 2 B. & Ad. 699; Tucker v. Rex, 2 Bro. P. C. 304; Hoblyn v. Rex, 2 Bro. P. C. 329.

Conservancy of River.]—By a public act passed in the reign of Henry VIII. the corporation of the city of Exeter was empowered to remove obstructions to the navigation of the river Exe, paying compensation to the owners of the soil, where the obstructions were situated:—Held, first, that this act did not confer the conservancy of the river on the corporation. Exeter Corporation v. Devon (Earl), L. R. 10 Eq. 232; 23 L. T. 382; 18 W. R. 879.

Held, secondly, that it did not entitle the corporation to file a bill in equity to restrain the erection of a pier in the river. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it did not confer any right or privilege on the corporation within the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, s. 14, so as to prevent the erection of a pier in the river without their consent being obtained. Ib.

City of London—Right to Fines.]—The charters of the city of London vest in that body, fines for misdemeanours committed within the city, though imposed or adjudged by the court of king's bench, sitting in banc in Westminster, after a trial at the sittings at Guildhall. Rex v. London Corporation, 1 C. M. & R. 1; 4 Tyr. 709; 3 L. J., Ex. 223.

"Amercement"—Bail—Forfeited Recognisance.]—A charter of the year 1399 granted to a corporation "all fines for trespass and other offences whatsoever and also fines for licences to agree and all amercements ransoms and forfeited issues forfeitures year day waste and estrepment. . . ." A second charter of the year 1448 granted to the same corporation "all issues fines and amercements from whatsoever pledges and mainpernors." . . .:—Held, that the words did not in either case include recognisances estreated on the failure of persons accused of felony or misdemeanour to appear and take their trial at assizes. Nottingham Corporation, In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 883; [1897] 2 Q. B. 502; 77 L. T. 210: 61 J. P. 725—D.

Grant to Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses—No Right, in absence of Usage, in Individual Burgesses.]—See Potter v. Berry, A. III. a.

c. RENEWAL OF.

Effect of]—A new charter granted where there is a prior subsisting one, is void ab initio; because two corporations, for the same purposes of government, cannot legally exist within the same place, and at the same time. Rex v. Amery, 2 Bro. P. C. 336.

But a new charter of incorporation, granted after a judgment of seizure quousque, &c., to a new body in the same place, is good, notwithstanding a charter of restitution is afterwards granted to the old corporation; and such charter of restitution is absolutely void. Rex v. Monk, 2 Term Rep. 515: 1 Term Rep. 575. But see S. C., 4 Term Rep. 122.

A right of free fishery was granted to a borough, by a charter of Richard I., which recited a previous enjoyment of the franchise by the borough. In 1740, by reason of judgments of ouster against all the existing members of the corporation, it became incapable of continuing itself, and there was no mayor or alderman till 1763, when a new charter of incorporation was granted to the borough, by which all the former rights, liberties and fisheries were ratified, confirmed and restored to the new corporation:—Held, that there had been no entire dissolution of the corporation, and that, by virtue of the new charter of incorporation, the revived one became owners of all their former franchises, and were entitled to the fishery. Colchester Corporation v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; 15 L. J., Q. B. 173; 10 Jur. 610.

New Charter varying Modes of Election.]—By an ancient parliament roll, it appeared that the commons, by their petition exhibited in parliament, prayed Edward III. that the charter made to his liege subjects, burgesses of the town of Bristol, and the franchises by him granted to his burgesses, should be ratified and confirmed in that parliament. The answer to the petition was, that it was assented to and agreed in parliament that the franchises whereof the petition made mention should be ratified and confirmed under the great seal. The charter was ratified by Edward III. accordingly:—Held, that the crown was not prevented by this proceeding in parliament from granting a new charter to the burgesses of Bristol, varying the mode of electing the mayor from that provided for in the charter recited in the petition to the king in parliament. Rex v. Haythorne, 5 B. & C. 410; 8 D. & R. 228.

Queen Anne, by a charter, granted to the burgesses of Bristol, that they should be a body corporate, and released to the corporation that power of removing its members which had been reserved by a former charter of King Charles II., and released any just cause of complaint which might be against the corporation for having acted in opposition to it:—Held, that it did not thereby appear that the queen granted this charter in consideration of the former charter granted by Charles II., and that the queen's charter was not therefore void, although the supposed charter of Charles II. did not exist. Ib.

d. ACCEPTANCE OF.

Sufficient Acceptance.]—By a new charter, an old corporation, consisting of a mayor and burgesses, was made to consist of a mayor, aldermen, chief burgesses and burgesses; the three former to constitute the common council. The common council and a majority of the burgesses expressed their assent to the new charter, some by voting at an election held under it, and others by a written declaration:—Held, that this was a sufficient acceptance of a new charter. Rex v. Hughes, 1 M. & Ry. 625; 7 B. & C. 708; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 190; 31 R. R. 288.

Effect of.]—A corporation being disabled to act, accepting a new charter, is not dissolved, but dormant; and after such acceptance the new corporation is the same as the old one. Colchester v. Seaber, 3 Burr. 1866; 1 W. Bl. 591.

By letters-patent the king granted to the mayor and burgesses of Lyme Regis, the borough or town so called, and also the pier, quay, or cob, with all liberties and profits belonging to the same, and remitted also twenty-seven marks of their ancient rent, payable to the king; and he willed that the mayor and burgesses and their successors, all and singular the buildings, banks, sea shores, &c., within the borough, or thereto belonging, or situate between the same and the sea, and also the pier, at their own costs and charges thenceforth for ever should repair, maintain, and support, as often as it should be necessary:—Held, first, that the mayor and burgesses of Lyme, having accepted the charter, became legally bound to repair the buildings, banks, sea shores, and mounds; secondly, that, this obligation being one which concerned the public, an indictment would lie, in case of non-repair, against the mayor and burgesses for their general default, and an action on the case for a direct and particular damage sustained in consequence by an individual. Lyme Regis v. Henley, 2 Cl. & F. 331; 8 Bligh (N.S.) 690; 3 B. & Ad. 77; 5 Bing. 91; 3 M. & P. 278.

III. CORPORATE BODY.

a. BURGESSES.

See Election Law, II. 1.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 9, 201–209.

Rights of.]—Burgesses created by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, are not entitled to any share or benefit of the corporate property enjoyed by the freemen and burgesses of a borough before that act passed. Hulls v. Estcourt, 2 H. & C. 47; 32 L. J., Ex. 193; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 695; 8 L. T. 539; 11 W. R. 672.

In an action by some (on behalf of all) of the freemen of a borough to establish the right of all the individual freemen to share for their private benefit the net proceeds of certain properties vested in the corporation:—Held, on demurrer, that the effect of the saving of rights in s. 2 of the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835 was to legalise the beneficial interests therein mentioned, without reference to the legality of their origin, and, in particular, to obviate any objection which might otherwise arise in respect of the tendency towards a perpetuity of any such beneficial interest. Prestney v. Colchester Corporation, 51 L. J., Ch. 805; 21 Ch. D. 111.

An action to establish such rights as aforesaid may be brought by parties claiming to be entitled, without an information by the attorney-general. Ib.

In such an action it was held on demurrer that in order to enable the plaintiffs to avail themselves of such saving of rights as aforesaid, it was sufficient for them, after stating the title of the corporation by charter or otherwise to the property in question, to aver that at the time of the passing of the act the rents, tolls, and profits claimed by them were not, nor ever had been, nor ought to have been, held and applied to public purposes, but then were, and always had been, held and applied for the particular benefit of the freemen, and without pleading that such rents, tolls, and profits had been enjoyed or acquired by virtue of any specific statute, charter, by-law, or custom, or expressly to aver that any custom to such effect as aforesaid existed. Ib.

In cases where the land belonging to a corporation is taken by a railway company, and the purchase money is paid into the bank, the court will not allow any steps to be taken with reference to the final application of such purchase unless it be satisfied that the freemen are represented. Lincoln Corporation, Ex parte, G. N. Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 738.

A burgess filed a bill in equity against a corporation not within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and their solicitor, alleging that they were trustees of estates for themselves, the town, and the inhabitants, and that he, as a senior burgess, was individually entitled to rights in the lands, most of which had been sold, and praying that the corporation might be restrained from selling what remained of the corporation estates:—Held, that if the plaintiff had any right he was entitled to it in his corporate and not in his individual capacity. Evan v. Avon Corporation, 29 Beav. 144; 30 L. J., Ch. 165; 6 Jur. 1361; 3 L. T. 347; 9 W. R. 84.

If a burgess claims an individual right of pasturage in a part of the corporate estates, it must be considered as made in his corporate and not in his individual capacity, and where the particular lands had been sold, no distinct claim could be made by him individually for compensation out of the unsold property of the corporation. Ib.

By the Freemen of the Borough of Leicester Act, 1845, certain allotments of land were vested in the "deputies" in trust for the freemen of the borough of Leicester and their widows, resident within the borough. By the Leicester Extension Act, 1891, the boundaries of the existing borough were extended so as to comprise certain additional places:—Held, that the latter act extended the benefits of the Freemen's Act to all freemen resident within the extended area of the borough. Leicester Freemen v. Lewitt, 62 L. J., M. C. 51; 5 R. 211; 68 L. T. 201; 57 J. P. 344—D.

A right of election given by charter to "the burgesses" cannot be limited by usage to the capital burgesses. Rex v. Goldsmith, 4 B. & Ad. 835.

An entry by two persons, who were burgesses of a borough, on a field in private occupation in the borough for the purpose of sporting cannot be justified under a charter granting sporting rights within the borough to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, in the absence of evidence of the right under the charter having been exercised by individual burgesses. Potter v. Berry, 6 W. R. 71.

Under s. 233 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, burgesses are entitled to inspect the minutes of all acts of committees submitted to the council, whether these acts are finally approved or not. Williams v. Manchester Corporation, 45 W. R. 412.

b. COUNCILLORS AND ALDERMEN.

See Election Law, II. 2. b.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 34—42.

Mode and Time of questioning Title to Office.]—An application for a quo warranto calling on a person to show by what warrant he holds the office of alderman, must be made within twelve months of his becoming disqualified. It is not sufficient that it is within twelve months of notice of his disqualification by his name being struck off the burgess list. Birkbeck, Ex parte, L. R. 9 Q. B. 256; 22 W. R. 229. But see now Municipal Elections Act, 1882.

Disqualification from Acting—Composition or Bankruptcy.]—The plaintiff, an alderman, by letter proposed to his creditors a composition on his debts, and on their agreeing to accept it, he gave a bill of sale of his stock-in-trade to raise money to pay the composition:—Held, that he did not thereby cease to hold office as alderman, for he had not compounded either "by deed" according to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, s. 52, or "under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869," according to s. 21 of the Debtors Act, 1869. Aslatt v. Southampton Corporation, 50 L. J., Ch. 31; 16 Ch. D. 143; 43 L. T. 464; 29 W. R. 117; 45 J. P. 111.

Held, also, that under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, an injunction would be granted to restrain the town council from declaring his office void and electing a successor. Ib.

Held, further, that an action for this purpose was not business assigned to the Queen's Bench Division by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34. Ib.

The act of compounding with creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, does not of itself render an office void, though it disqualifies the officer from acting by the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 52. The acceptance of a composition by creditors does not amount to the "obtaining of a certificate or payment in full of debts" within that section. Hardwick v. Brown, L. R. 8 C. P. 406; 28 L. T. 502; 21 W. R. 639.

Incompatible Offices—Accepting New Office.]—A corporator accepting a new office incompatible with the old one, thereby absolutely vacated and surrendered the latter. By a charter of a borough, there were to be ten aldermen and ten capital burgesses; and vacancies in the body of aldermen were to be filled up out of the capital burgesses:—Held, that the acceptance of the office of alderman by a capital burgess, even under a void election, operated as a surrender of the latter office. Rex v. Hughes, 6 D. & R. 443; 8 D. & R. 708; 5 B. & C. 886. S. P., Rex v. Hubbald, 9 D. & R. 143; 6 B. & C. 139; 5 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 24.

The acceptance by a person holding a corporate office of another incompatible office, does not operate as an absolute avoidance of the corporate office, though it might be ground of amotion; and the acceptance of an incompatible office does not operate as an absolute avoidance of a former office, in any case where the party could divest himself of that office by his own act, and without the concurrence of another authority to his resignation or amotion, unless such authority is privy and consenting to the second appointment. Rex v. Patteson, 4 B. & Ad. 9; 1 N. & M. 612; 2 L. J., K. B. 33.

Held, also, that as long as he was an alderman and justice of the peace of a city of a county he was not a person capable of being appointed county treasurer. Ib.

Where a rule is obtained for a quo warranto, upon the ground that a party has vacated a corporate office, by having accepted a second incompatible office, the affidavits must show a valid appointment to the second office, the acceptance of which is made the ground of amotion. Rex v. Day, 9 B. & C. 702; 4 M. & R. 541; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 308. See Rex v. Pateman, Rex v. Jones and Rex v. Tizzard, A. VII. a.

Action for Penalties—Procedure.]—An action under section 224 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, to recover a fine from any person for acting in a corporate office without being qualified is not a "proceeding" to which the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applies, and therefore section 224 of the act of 1882 is not repealed by the act of 1893. Humphriss v. Worwood, 64 L. J., Q. B. 437.

Resignation—Power to Withdraw.]—Under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 36, which enacts that a person elected to a corporate office may at any time, by writing signed by him and delivered to the town clerk, resign the office, on payment of the fine provided for non-acceptance thereof, the resignation is completed by the delivery of the writing to the town clerk and the payment of the fine, and cannot afterwards, even with the assent of the corporation, be withdrawn. Reg. v. Wigan Corporation, 54 L. J., Q. B. 338; 14 Q. B. D. 908; 52 L. T. 435; 33 W. R. 547; 49 J. P. 372.

Deputy of, not a Justice of the Peace.]—A charter provided that there should be two aldermen in a borough who should act for one year, by themselves, or their deputies; that, on their death or removal, other aldermen should be elected, who should act for the rest of the year, by themselves, or their deputies; that, in the absence of the aldermen, new aldermen might be elected in their room; and that the aldermen for the time being should be justices of the peace for the borough:—Held, that the deputy of an alderman was not a justice of the peace for the borough. Jones v. Williams, 5 D. & R. 654; 3 B. & C. 762; 1 Car. & P. 459, 699; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 112; 27 R. R. 474.

c. AMOTION OF MEMBERS.

By-law giving Power of Amotion for just Cause, good.]—See Rex v. Richardson, B. IX. b.; and O'Grady v. Mercers' Hospital, B. V.

Effect of Municipal Corporation Acts, 1835 & 1882.]—Per Lopes, L.J.: The Municipal Corporation Acts have not taken away the power of a corporation to amove any of its members who is guilty of corrupt and dishonest conduct in his office. Booth v. Arnold, 64 L. J., Q. B. 443; [1895] 1 Q. B. 571; 14 R. 326; 72 L. T. 310; 43 W. R. 360—C. A.

Power to Amove, how to be Exercised.]—If a corporation amoves a member upon a non-charter or prescription day, it is as necessary that each member should be summoned, and have notice of the particular business intended to be proceeded upon, as in the case of a select number. Rex v. Doncaster, 2 Burr. 738; 2 Ld. Ken. 391.

A particular summons of a corporation assembly is requisite to amove a member. Rex v. Liverpool, 2 Burr. 723; 2 Ld. Ken. 424.

A power reserved to the crown in a charter of incorporation to amove, by order of council, one or more of the corporators, which declared that all or any of them so amoved should actually, and without further process, be amoved, and which also provided, at the same time, that upon such amotion the remaining corporators might proceed to fill up the vacancies, cannot be exercised to such an extent as not to leave a sufficient number to make a re-election; and therefore an amoval of all is illegal and void. Rex v. Amery, 1 Anstr. 178; 2 Br. P. C. 336; 2 Term Rep. 515; 1 Term Rep. 575; 1 R. R. 306, 533. But see 4 Term Rep. 122.

Where a charter declared that "it should be lawful for the mayor and capital burgesses to remove any of their body for non-residence within the borough":—Held, that this gave them a discretionary and not a compulsory power of amotion. Rex v. Westlooe, 5 D. & R. 414.

Where non-residence is a ground for removing a corporator, it is unnecessary to summon him previously to come and reside. Rex v. Lyme Regis, 1 Dougl. 149.

A mandamus was refused to compel a corporation to meet for the purpose of considering the propriety of removing non-resident members, where the charter in terms required residence. Rex v. Totness, 5 D. & R. 481.

For what Cause.]—An alderman of London in custody in execution, and under an escape warrant, without probability of discharge, may be amoved. Rex v. London, 4 Dougl. 361.

A corporation, possessed of a common, made a by-law that every freeman might stock thereon with ten sheep. A freeman, who had stocked his full number, stocked ten more in the name of another freeman. For this he was disfranchised by the corporation:—Held, to be no cause of disfranchisement; and a peremptory mandamus was ordered to restore him. Rex v. Great Grimsby, 1 L. J., M. C. 23.

Remedy for Illegal Amotion.]—A town council, upon insufficient grounds, and by an illegal mode, passed a resolution removing an alderman, and declaring his office void. At the next meeting the council formally rescinded the previous resolution. The alderman obtained a rule for a mandamus to the corporation to restore him, on the ground that he might be liable to proceedings, if he continued to act merely upon the rescission of the resolution:—Held, that the corporation had done all they could do, and that there was no wrong which the mandamus could remedy. Reg. v. Ryde Corporation, 28 L. T. 629.

As to removing a Member without hearing him.]—See Reg. v. Saddlers' Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 404, post, B. IX. b.

As to the Duty of the Council to declare the Office of Mayor, Alderman, or Councillor to be vacant on Bankruptcy or Absence.]—See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 39.

IV. MAYOR.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 15, 16, 34-42.

Cannot sue as Individual on Contract entered into by him on behalf of himself and the other Burgesses.]—The highest bidder for lands sold by auction, and the mayor of a corporation, on behalf of himself and the rest of the burgesses and commonalty of the borough, the vendors of the lands, signed a contract in which they mutually promised to fulfil the conditions of sale on their respective parts; the conditions stated the title of the corporation to the premises, and stipulated that they should convey and might re-sell on default; the only act therein mentioned to be done by the mayor was the receiving the deposit:—Held, that he could not maintain an action in his individual capacity against the purchaser for breach of this contract. Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 374.

Disqualification—Interest in Contract.]—In an action against a defendant for penalties for acting as mayor while disqualified, it appeared that persons who had contracted with the council, who were constituted the local board of health, to construct public works in the borough, purchased from the defendant iron work for the purpose of fulfilling their contract:—Held, that the defendant had not an interest in the contract within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 28. Le Feuvre v. Lankester, 3 El. & Bl. 530; 2 C. L. R. 1426; 23 L. J., Q. B. 254; 18 Jur. 894; 2 W. R. 307.

The defendant, having contracted with commissioners under a local act to erect waterworks for supplying the town with water, assigned by deed the contract and the works in an incomplete state to the commissioners. The deed contained a covenant on the part of the commissioners to pay the defendant 850*l.* if they should abandon the works, or, having completed them, should obtain a specified supply of water of a certain quality. There followed a covenant on the part of the defendant not to molest or obstruct the commissioners in proceeding with the works. By the order of the general board of health, by which the town council was constituted the local board of health, the powers, contracts, and property of the commissioners were vested in the town council. The sum of 850*l.* remained unpaid when the defendant was elected and acted as mayor:—Held, that he was not disqualified from acting as mayor by the deed, because the first covenant was a security for the payment of money only, within the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 104, s. 1, and both covenants were merely ancillary to the assignment, and therefore, independently of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 104, s. 1, not within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 28. Ib.

Acting without Authority—Costs of Relator.]—A quo warranto alleged that there was a town called Bala, and that the defendant, without right, exercised the office of mayor of the town, and, together with two other persons, the powers and privileges of a body corporate, by the name and description of the mayor and bailiffs of the borough of Bala. He let judgment go by default, whereupon judgment of ouster was entered up with costs to the relator:—Held, that the relator was entitled to costs under 9 Anne, c. 20, s. 5, as on this record it must be taken against the defendant that the office which he was charged with assuming was a corporate office in a corporate place. Lloyd v. Reg., 2 B. & S. 656; 31 L. J., Q. B. 209; 10 W. R. 625—Ex. Ch.

Appointing Deputy.]—Until he has taken the oath of office, a mayor cannot appoint a deputy. Rex v. Roberts, 5 N. & M. 130; 3 A. & E. 771; 1 H. & W. 444; 4 L. J., M. C. 118.

Acting as a Justice of the Peace.]—A mayor of a borough (who is a justice of the peace by virtue of his office, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 57) is not a justice of the quorum. Per Cockburn, C.J. Semble, by Blackburn, J., that he is. Reg. v. Llangian, 4 B. & S. 249; 32 L. J., M. C. 225; 8 L. T. 422; 11 W. R. 776.

Before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 75, s. 1, the mayor was not entitled under 5 & 6 Will, 4, c. 76, s. 57, to preside at meetings of the justices. Lloyd, Ex parte, 30 L. J., Q. B. 2; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1094; 3 L. T. 270; 9 W. R. 34.

Salary of.]—Sums of money to meet payments for purposes unauthorised by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, should not be added to the mayor's salary so as to evade the provisions of that act. Att.-Gen. v. Cardiff Corporation, 63 L. J., Ch. 557; [1894] 2 Ch. 337; 8 R. 268; 70 L. T. 591.

A reasonable addition may be made to the salary of the mayor in anticipation that increased expenditure may be incurred by him in celebrating some national event. Ib.

V. TOWN COUNCIL.

Powers — Purchase of Lands.]—The town council of a borough contracted to purchase baths and washhouses which had been commenced by a private society, and were held under a sub-lease of a portion of lands comprised in a lease of land demised by the owner of the fee, and which were thus subject to a rent in addition to the rent reserved in the sub-lease, and to the covenants and conditions in the original lease:—Held, that it would be a breach of trust for the town council to purchase lands, the interest in which might be lost by the default of others, and that specific performance ought not to be enforced. Mulholland v. Belfast Corporation, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 292.

—— Contract for Prison Purposes.]—Where a grant of quarter sessions has been made by the crown, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, to a newly incorporated borough without a gaol, the town council has no power, under 5 Geo. 4, c. 85, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, to contract with the justices of the county to send the borough prisoners to the county gaol. Reg. v. Lancashire JJ., 3 P. & D. 86; 11 A. & E. 144; 9 L. J., Q. B. 9; 4 Jur. 121.

Court of Requests — Regulation of Fees.]—By an act of parliament a court of requests was created at Bristol, and fees, according to a table, were fixed to be paid to the assessor and officers of the court, with power for the justices of the peace for the city, at any general quarter sessions of the peace, to lessen or reduce them. By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 105, s 8, everything provided in any local act of parliament to be done by the justices or by some particular class or description of members of such body corporate, being justices, at some court of general or quarter sessions assembled, and which does not relate to the business of a court of criminal or civil judicature, shall and may be done by the council at some quarterly meeting of the council. The town council, acting under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 124, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 8, by an order of council reduced the fees payable to the assessor and clerk of the court:—Held, that the regulation of the fees of the court of requests was a matter relating to the business of a court of civil jurisdiction, and that the town council had no authority to interfere with it. Palmer v. Powell, 6 M. & W. 627; 9 L. J., Ex. 209; 4 Jur. 825.

Meetings—Notice of.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 69, requires notice of the business to be transacted at meetings of the town council to be given to every member three days before the meeting, but excepts the four quarterly meetings for the transaction of general business:—Held, that this exception only applies to the ordinary routine business, and would not justify the transaction of special business, such as the election of a coroner, without notice. Reg. v. Grimshaw, 10 Q. B. 747; 16 L. J., Q. B. 385; 11 Jur. 965.

When the powers of trustees under a local act have been transferred to the body corporate of a borough, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 75, the procedure is to be according to that directed by s. 60, and not that directed by the local act; and therefore the notice of meeting directed by s. 69, for the meetings of the town council, is the proper notice to enable them to exercise the powers under the local act. Kidderminster Town Council v. Court, 1 El. & El. 770; 28 L. J., M. C. 148; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1055.

A local act for paving a borough provided that all orders and proceedings of the commissioners for executing the act should be made at a public meeting, of which notice in writing should be given, by affixing the same upon the door of the parish church, on the Sunday, and upon the town hall two days preceding such intended meeting. Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 75, the powers of the commissioners were transferred to and were thenceforth exercised by the town council of the borough. By s. 69, all acts whatsoever authorised or required by virtue of this act to be done by the council of such borough may be done by the majority of members present at any meeting held in pursuance of this act; provided always that, previously to any meeting of the council held by virtue of this act, a notice of the time and place of such intended meeting shall be given three clear days at least before such meeting, by fixing the said notice on or near the door of the town hall of the borough:—Held, that notice of a meeting of the town council, for the purpose of appointing overseers to make a rate for the purposes of the local act, was properly given by affixing the same on or near the door of the town hall, in accordance with 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 69. Ib.

Where a notice of a meeting for corporate purposes is regularly given, a majority of those present has power to do any corporate act: but if the meeting is accidental, they can only proceed to business if they are unanimous: for if one member only dissents, he has an absolute negative. Rex v. Kynaston, 2 Selw. N. P. 1143.

—— Minutes of.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 69, the minutes of a meeting of a town council ought to be entered and signed by the chairman at the time of the meeting, and not afterwards. Reg. v. Evesham Corporation, 3 N. & P. 351; 8 A. & E. 266; 1 W. W. & H. 428; 2 Jur. 819.

VI. RECORDER.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 163, 165—168, 175—177.

Jurisdiction.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 105, the recorder of a municipal borough has no power in quarter sessions to hear an appeal against a refusal to grant a licence for keeping an inn. Reg. v. Cockburn or Bristol Recorder, 4 El. & Bl. 265; 24 L. J., M. C. 43; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 3 W. R. 69. See also Reg. v. Deane, 2 Q. B. 96; 10 L. J., M. C. 126.

The recorder of a borough has jurisdiction to hear an appeal against an order made by justices for the costs of removing an insane pauper to a lunatic asylum. Reg. v. St. Lawrence, 11 Ad. & E. 170; 3 P. & D. 155; 4 Jur. 245.

The recorder of a borough, which is a county of a city, has jurisdiction to appoint inspectors of weights and measures for the district, and to audit their accounts, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 105. Reg. v. Kingston-upon-Hull Recorder, 7 L. J., M. C. 100.

The plaintiff was appointed by the justices of the county of S. in quarter sessions inspector of weights and measures, for a district comprising the town of B. Subsequently the town of B. was incorporated, and obtained a grant of a separate court of quarter sessions. The recorder of B., in quarter sessions for B., appointed the defendant inspector of weights and measures. The justices for the borough of B. in petty sessions appointed the plaintiff inspector:—Held, that the appointment was neither in the recorder in quarter sessions, nor in the justices of the borough in petty sessions, but in the quarter sessions for the county of S., in virtue of whose appointment the plaintiff recovered. Daly v. Sharwood, 6 El. & Bl. 830; 25 L. J., M. C. 122; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 4 W. R. 775.

The justices of the borough of L. made an order for the removal of a pauper from L. to A.; notice of appeal was given by the overseers of A. to the sessions of the county in which L. was situate, instead of to the borough sessions, and on discovering their error, a letter was written one day before the holding of the borough sessions, abandoning the notice, whereupon the respondents attended at the last-named sessions, and obtained an order for their costs:—Held, that the recorder for the borough had jurisdiction to make such order, and that under the circumstances the respondents were entitled to their costs. Reg. v. Leeds Recorder, 3 El. & El. 561; 30 L. J., M. C. 86; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 210; 3 L. T. 699; 9 W. R. 270.

The recorder of a borough has power, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, to reserve questions of law for the consideration of the judges. Reg. v. Masters, T. & M. 1; 1 Den. C. C. 332; 3 New Sess. Cas. 326; 2 Car. & K. 930; 18 L. J., M. C. 2; 12 Jur. 942; 3 Cox, C. C. 178.

The authority of a recorder of a borough is not determined or suspended by the coming of the judges into the county, and acting under their commissions of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery; and therefore he may hold quarter sessions of the peace during the time of the assizes in the same county. Smith v. Reg. 3 New Sess. Cas. 564; 13 Q. B. 738; 18 L. J., M. C. 207; 13 Jur. 850.

—— Costs.]—The recorder of a municipal sessions may, on ordering costs, refer the taxation of the amount to an officer of the court; but such taxation must be adopted by him during the continuance of the same sessions. An order for such costs, founded on a subsequent adoption, is invalid. Reg. v. Long, 1 G. & D. 367; 1 Q. B. 740; 6 Jur. 98.

Writ of Error, to whom Directed.]—A writ of error should be directed to the judge, and not to the recorder of a borough court, but, in such case, an amendment will be allowed. Spencer v. Haggiadur, 5 D. & L. 68; 11 Jur. 948.

Deputy Recorder—Jurisdiction.]—On an appeal against a poor-rate at a borough quarter sessions the rate was ordered to be amended, with costs, and the appeal was adjourned to the next sessions for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the costs. At the next sessions the deputy recorder, who was a ratepayer in one of the parishes in the union, made an order which fixed the amount of the costs:—Held, that the making such order was a judicial act; that the deputy recorder was not a justice of the peace for the borough, and therefore the 16 Geo. 2, c. 18, did not apply; and consequently the order was void. Reg. v. Cambridge Recorder, 8 El. & Bl. 637; 27 L. J., M. C. 160; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 334; 6 W. R. 80. See 40 Vict. c. 11.

—— Appointment.]—A borough having first received a recorder by a charter of Car. 1, a subsequent charter of Car. 2, after nominating S. to be the first and modern recorder under that charter, declared that it should be lawful for S., the modern recorder, to nominate a sufficient person to be his deputy in the office, and to have the same powers:—Held, that this did not extend the power of appointing a deputy to the successors of S. in the office of recorder. Rex v. St. Albans, 12 East, 559.

By charter a corporation was to have a capital seneschal or high-steward, and a sub-seneschal or under-steward, by the latter of whom the judicial ministerial functions of a recorder were to be performed, but no authority was given him to appoint a deputy; and although a by-law of the corporation required that the under-steward, or his sufficient deputy, should be attendant at every court, to discharge the duties of his office:—Held, that the under-steward could not appoint a deputy generally to discharge all his ministerial duties. Rex v. Gravesend Corporation, 4 D. & R. 117; 2 B. & C. 602; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 94.

A justification in an action stated that by custom a court of record had, from time immemorial, been holden before the steward and portreeve of a borough, or their sufficient deputy or deputies: and that a court was holden according to such custom before A., being the deputy of B., who was then steward and portreeve of the borough:—Held, that upon this plea the two offices must be taken to have been compatible, and that the steward and portreeve might be united in the same person; and that the appointment of the deputy by the person holding both offices was sufficient. Green v. Davies, 3 B. & Ald. 60.

a. TOWN CLERK.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 17, 43, 75.

Appointment.]—By a local act of parliament creating a court of request for a borough, it was enacted, that the mayor, recorder, deputy recorder, aldermen, and common councilmen for the time being of the borough, the justices of the peace for a certain district, together with other persons therein mentioned, should be the commissioners thereof; and that in case of a vacancy in the situation of clerk of the court, the mayor and aldermen of the borough for the time being, or the major part of them, should appoint a successor, and that until such appointment should be made, the commissioners, or any three or more of them, should nominate officers to do the business of the court. At a meeting of the town council, specially summoned for the purpose of electing a clerk, the plaintiff, who was a member of the council, was elected by the council, and before the end of the election he tendered to the mayor his resignation of the office of town councillor, together with 50*l.* as a fine on resignation, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 51. No by-law had been made to enforce a fine on resignation, and therefore the mayor returned the 50*l.* in the presence of the council, after the election. The plaintiff's seat in the council was afterwards filled by the election of another person; and at a quarterly meeting of the town council, of which no notice had been given, the plaintiff was again elected by the town council:—Held, first, that neither s. 73 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, nor s. 8 of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 104, was applicable to this case. Staniland v. Hopkins, 9 M. & W. 178.

—— Within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 72.]—Held, secondly, that the case was within s. 72 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76; the true construction of which was, that the body corporate, under that act, should be trustees or commissioners for executing, by the town council, the powers and provisions of all acts of parliament, of which powers and provisions the old body corporate, or any of the members thereof, in their corporate capacity, were sole commissioners or trustees before the election of the town council; and as the mayor and aldermen were, by the local act, sole trustees or commissioners for the purpose of appointing the clerk, that their powers devolved upon the town council, and that the plaintiff was duly elected at the first meeting; that, under all the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff's resignation of the office of town councillor was sufficient; but that, if it was not, his election to the office of clerk had the effect of vacating his office of town councillor. Ib.

A borough, until May 1st, 1836, had its own quarter sessions, and W. held the offices of town clerk and clerk of the peace. He resigned, and thereupon, by a resolution of the town council, on July 20th, 1836, S. was elected town clerk; but no step was taken towards investing him with the office. At an adjourned meeting of the council, July 25th, 1836, a resolution was passed, rescinding that of July 20th, and by another resolution T. was elected town clerk. In August, 1836, the borough obtained a grant of quarter sessions, and on August 15th T. was, by resolution of the council, elected clerk of the peace:—Held, on motion for a quo warranto information against T., at the instance of S., for claiming to exercise the two offices, that T. was legally appointed town clerk on July 25th, and clerk of the peace on August 15th; that the offices were not full at the time of such respective elections; that T. could not be presumed to claim the office of clerk of the peace as incidental to the office of town clerk, by the appointment of July 25th, no specific act appearing to have been done by him in the capacity of clerk of the peace between that time and August 15th. Reg. v. Thomas, 8 A. & E. 183; 3 N. & P. 288; 7 L. J., Q. B. 141; 2 Jur. 347.

Objection to Title.]—The office of town clerk, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is not the same as in the old corporations; and an objection to his title under that act is not aided by the fact of his having held the office for more than six years before the act passed, under a valid appointment. Rex v. Poole, 1 Jur. 942.

Fees and Remuneration.]—A town clerk of a borough cannot maintain an action against the corporation for fees in respect of the performance of the duties imposed upon him by the Reform Act or the Municipal Corporations Act; although he receives no stated salary as town clerk, and although the then corporation, in several years before the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, made payments to him for the performance of the duties imposed on him by the Reform Act. Jones v. Carmarthen Corporation, 8 M. & W. 605; 10 L. J., Ex. 401.

Salary in Lieu of Fees.]—An agreement between a municipal corporation and their town clerk, that he shall receive a fixed salary in lieu of the fees payable under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 124, and that, to carry out such agreement, he shall pay over to the borough fund so much of the amount received for fees as exceeds that salary, is illegal. Liverpool Corporation v. Wright, 1 Johnson. 359; 28 L. J., Ch. 868; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1156; 7 W. R. 728.

A town council resolved, "that one hundred guineas be fixed as the salary of the town clerk, for his attendance on the business of the council and committees, and that he be paid the usual charges in defending and bringing actions." On motion to review the taxation of the town clerk's bills:—Held, that the master proceeded on the right principle, in considering the salary as a remuneration for all business, except bringing and defending actions. Thomas v. Swansea Corporation, 2 D. (N.S.) 470; 12 L. J., Ex. 73.

Where a town clerk was appointed to his office upon a resolution of the council, fixing his salary, as town clerk, at 250*l.* a year, and setting out the duties of his office as town clerk to be, among other things, to prepare all precepts, orders, and other documents required for levying borough rates, to abide by and see all orders of the council properly carried out, and all necessary documents prepared for so doing, and to act as the professional adviser of the mayor and council in the business of the council, but with the proviso, that he be paid the usual professional charges for conducting or opposing actions or suits, and all travelling and other expenses out of pocket:—Held, that he was entitled to be paid his charges for documents prepared and attendance given as a solicitor, upon instructions of the council, in order to obtain legal advice as to the validity of a borough rate, against the enforcement of which the council was threatened with litigation; for that such charges were either, within the meaning of the resolution, charges for conducting or opposing an action or a suit, or they were charges for business done upon request, wholly without any of the terms or consideration of the resolution, since the duty of the town clerk, as such, as specified in the resolution, was, in such a case, only to advise to the best of his ability, and not to guarantee the legal accuracy of his opinion. Reg. v. Prest, 16 Q. B. 33; 20 L. J., Q. B. 17; 15 Jur. 554.

The business which a town clerk was to perform, as specified in his appointment, included "parliamentary proceedings":—Held, that he could not recover any remuneration beyond his salary for time occupied in attendance on and correspondence with the council, and journeys to London, with reference to bills in parliament relating to the town. Morgan v. Birmingham Corporation, 5 W. R. 291.

"Expenses Incurred."]—A town clerk cannot claim repayment of money expended by him in the employment of persons to do work in preparing the register of parliamentary electors which he and his clerks might have done. Reg. v. Kingston-on-Hull (Governors and Guardians), 3 W. R. 524.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, the town clerks of boroughs are directed to prepare the list of persons entitled to vote for the election of members of parliament; and by s. 55, the expenses incurred by them in carrying the act into effect are to be repaid:—Held, that the words "expenses incurred" are confined to costs out of pocket, and that a town clerk is not entitled to any further remuneration or the time and labour he may devote to the performance of the duties imposed on him by the act. Reg. v. Kingston-on-Hull (Governors and Guardians), 2 El. & Bl. 182; 22 L. J., Q. B. 324; 17 Jur. 914.

Under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 48, the town clerk of a borough is bound, incidentally to his office, to cause the lists of voters to be copied and printed, and to have the names arranged and numbered; and if he hires a person to do this for him, to make copies for the printer, and to superintend the printing, he is not entitled to be reimbursed the expense by the parish officers under s. 55, unless he cannot, by the reasonable labour of himself and his ordinary assistants, perform the duty without extra aid. But he is entitled to be reimbursed for the expense of printing. Reg. v. Allday, 7 El. & Bl. 799; 26 L. J., Q. B. 292; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 5 W. R. 625.

Lien as a Solicitor.]—A town clerk has a lien on papers of the corporation with respect to which he has done work as an attorney or a solicitor, but not on such as he holds merely as town clerk. Rex v. Sankey, 5 A. & E. 423; 6 N. & M. 839; 5 L. J., K. B. 255.

Incompatible Offices.]—Where a town clerk's accounts were allowed by the aldermen, or where a town clerk acted ministerially, under the aldermen, who were judicial officers, the offices were incompatible, and the appointment of an alderman to be the town clerk vacated his former office. Rex v. Pateman, 2 Term Rep. 777; 1 R. R. 621.

In a borough, by charter, the mayor, burgesses, and commonalty were to elect a town clerk, who was also to be clerk of the peace, clerk of assize, and prothonotary; and the mayor, recorder, and town clerk were to hold pleas of certain actions. The mayor, recorder, and a common council were to enact by-laws for the good order and government of the borough. None of the common council held any judicial office in any court where the town clerk officiated. His accounts were audited by a committee, named by the mayor and burgesses in common hall. No fixed salary was allowed by the corporation; but he was remunerated by certain fees of right payable to him:—Held, that the offices of common councilman and town clerk were not incompatible. Rex v. Jones, 1 B. & Ad. 677; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 103.

The common clerk of a borough was appointed by the mayor, aldermen, and bailiffs, removable at their pleasure, and with a salary variable at their pleasure; and it was his duty to attend the corporate meetings, and take minutes of the proceedings. The office of such common clerk, and that of alderman, are incompatible; and the acceptance of the former vacated the latter. Rex v. Tizzard, 4 M. & R. 400; 9 B. & C. 418; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 275.

A jurat of the corporation of Hastings might be elected town clerk of the corporation. Milward v. Thatcher, 2 Term Rep. 81; 1 R. R. 431.

But the two offices were incompatible, and the acceptance of the latter, though an inferior office, vacated the former. Ib.

Receiving Trust Moneys for Corporation.]—A municipal corporation were trustees of a charity. They permitted their town clerk to receive and retain the trust moneys, instead of seeing it applied to the purposes of the trust:—Held, that the corporation and the town clerk were liable for the breach of trust. Att.-Gen. v. Leicester Corporation, 7 Beav. 176.

As to Liability to Dismissal.]—See Tibbits, In re, Eggington, Ex parte, and Rex v. Harris, A. VII. i.

b. CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR BOROUGH AND CLERK TO BOROUGH JUSTICES.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 164, 159.

Nature of Appointment]—A clerk to the justices of a borough, appointed under 5 & 6 Will 4, c. 76, s. 102, holds office only during the pleasure of the justices, and therefore a quo warranto will not lie for his office. Reg. v. Fox, 8 El. & Bl. 939; 27 L. J., Q. B. 151; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 410; 6 W. R. 282.

—— Interest in Prosecutions.]—Where a person is interested in the prosecution of parties committed for trial by the justices of a borough, this does not disqualify him from being appointed clerk to the justices, nor is the office avoided if, after such appointment, he becomes so interested. He is only liable under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, as having acted illegally. Ib.

Acting as—Penalty.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, the penalty of 100*l* is confined to those persons who, being aldermen or councillors or clerks of the peace of the borough, shall act as clerks to the justices of the borough, and at the same time be employed in the prosecution or defence of any prisoner committed by such justices, and is not extended to all persons who shall act as clerks to the justices, and at the same time be employed in the prosecution or defence of any prisoner committed by such justices. Coe v. Lawrence, 1 El. & Bl. 516; 22 L. J., Q. B. 140: 17 Jur. 1115; 1 W. R. 146.

Interest in Prosecutions—Indictment.]—A clerk to the justices of a borough which had no separate quarter sessions was in partnership with P., who was clerk of the peace for the county, and who was entitled to receive fees upon the arraignment and trial of all prisoners at the quarter sessions of the county. By arrangement between him and P., the former was entitled to receive, and did receive, one-half of the fees taken by P.:—Held, that such clerk was liable to an indictment under s. 102, being interested in the prosecution of offenders within the proviso to s. 102. Reg. v. Fox, 1 El. & El. 729; 29 L. J., M. C. 54; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1241; 1 L. T. 216; 8 W. R. 93—Ex. Ch.

Held, by the Queen's Bench, that 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, s. 18, providing compensation to clerks of the peace for the diminution of their fees, did not affect the operation of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102. Ib.

A deed was subsequently entered into between the partners, by which the clerk to the borough justices was to have no interest in the fees received by P.:—Held, that the clerk thereby ceased to be interested in the prosecutions, the mere fact of partnership with P. not constituting such interest. Fox v. Williams, 3 L. T. 268.

Removal.]—The removal of clerk of the peace of a borough for misbehaviour is vested by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 105, in the recorder; such power of removal being given by 1 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 21, s. 6, to the quarter sessions in counties, and the town council has no power to remove. Reg v. Hayward, 2 B. & S. 585; 31 L. J., M. C. 177; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 45; 6 L. T. 285; 10 W. R. 558.

Salaries and Fees.]—As to the liability of the borough fund for the salaries of the recorder and clerk of the peace, and the fees of the clerk to the visiting justices of borough asylums, in boroughs where the population is less than 10,000 (the county council being only liable in such boroughs for the salary of the clerk to the borough justices at petty sessions), see Thetford Corporation v. Norfolk County Council, 67 L. J., Q. B. 55; 77 L. T. 498.

c. TREASURER.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 18, 43.

Appointment—Bond for Discharge of Duties.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 58, required that the council of a borough should annually elect the treasurer of the borough. While that act was in force, M. was elected treasurer for "the year ending 9th November, 1842, if it should so long please the council, but not otherwise." He gave a bond with sureties for the discharge of the duties of his office. The bond recited the election, and was conditioned for the due accounting by M. for all such moneys, &c., "as I, M., shall or may recover, or receive, in virtue of my appointment as treasurer as aforesaid, during the whole time of my continuing in the said office, in consequence of the election, or under any annual or future election of the council to the said office." After this bond had been given, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, was passed. The 6th section repealed the 58th section of the previous statute, and directed that, instead of the treasurer being annually elected, he should "hold his office during the pleasure of the council for the time being." M. was re-elected in November, 1843, after the passing of this latter statute; no fresh bond was taken:—Held, that, under the original bond, the sureties continued liable; that the election in November, 1843, was a future election, within the true intent and meaning of the bond. Oswald v. Berwick-upon-Tweed Corporation. 5 H. L. Cas. 856; 25 L. J., Q. B. 383; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 743; 4 W. R. 738. Affirming, 3 El. & Bl. 653—Ex. Ch.

—— Change in Tenure.]—A condition of a bond dated the 8th October, 1839, after reciting that P. had been appointed treasurer of a borough under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, was, that he should account for and apply all money which should come to his hands as treasurer "(whether by virtue of his present or any subsequent appointment to the office), according to the directions of the statute, and in every other respect act in conformance with the same, and all other laws and regulations now or hereafter to be in force touching the office of treasurer, or the person or persons performing or liable to perform the duties thereof." In an action against the sureties for a breach of duty by him as treasurer under an appointment by virtue of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 6, which enacted that the treasurer, instead of being annually elected, as under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 58, should thenceforth hold his office during the pleasure of the council for the time being:—Held, that the bond remained in force notwithstanding the change in the tenure of the office. Dartmouth Corporation v. Silly, 7 El. & Bl. 97; 26 L. J., Q. B. 90; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 434; 5 W. R. 255.

—— Year of Office.]—The condition of a bond, after reciting that S. had been appointed treasurer of a borough, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (which by s. 58 required the treasurer of every borough to be appointed every year), was, that he should faithfully, and according to the provisions of the act, and of such statutes as might thereafter be passed relating to the office, conduct himself in the office, and perform all the duties thereof:—Held, that the bond did not extend beyond the year of office for which S had been appointed at the time of the execution of the bond. Cambridge Corporation v. Dennis, E. B. & E. 660; 27 L. J., Q. B. 474; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 265; 6 W. R. 653.

Appointment by Majority of Members present at Meeting.]—See Cortis v. Kent Waterworks Co., B. II.

Payments by.]—The treasurer of a corporation paid to their former clerk (the defendant) his year's salary, both parties believing him authorised to make the payment. In fact he had no such authority, and the corporation afterwards repudiated the payment, and discharged the defendant from his situation. The defendant kept the money, treating it as having been paid on behalf of the corporation. The plaintiff having, as the present clerk to the corporation, brought an action to recover a sum of money paid to the defendant on account of the corporation, and the defendant having pleaded a set-off for unpaid salary, being the sum so paid to him without authority by the treasurer, the plaintiff relied on the payment of the salary as an answer:—Held, that the payment was an answer to the set-off, the corporation being entitled to ratify the act of their treasurer at the time of trial. Simpson v. Eggington, 10 Ex. 844; 24 L. J., Ex. 312.

Before the Municipal Corporations Act.]—By the Gravesend Pier Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 101, s. 18, the corporation is empowered to appoint clerks, treasurers, collectors, and such other officers or assistants as they may think necessary for the purposes of the act. By s. 19, it shall not be lawful for the corporation to appoint the person who may be appointed the clerk in the execution of the act, the treasurer for the purposes of the act; and a penalty is imposed on any person being the clerk, or his partner or clerk, who shall in any manner officiate for the treasurer:—Held, that by the latter section, the corporation was prohibited from appointing the clerk to such officer as assistant treasurer; but, where the corporation had so appointed the clerk, and he had discharged some of the duties of the treasurer, it was a question for the jury, whether he did so bonâ fide, and in the belief that he was legally appointed by them as an independent officer, or colourably and in evasion of the act; and, in the former case, he would not be liable to the penalty for officiating for the treasurer, but in the latter he would. Hawkins v. Newman, 4 M. & W. 613; 1 H. & H. 471; 8 L. J., Ex. 82.

Action Referred by—No Personal Liability.]—Where a company was authorised by statute to sue and be sued by their treasurer, who was to incur no personal liability, and two actions against and by the treasurer had been referred to arbitration, a motion for attachment against the treasurer for non-payment of the damages and costs awarded was refused, but a mandamus to him to pay was granted. Corpe v. Glyn, 1 L. J., K. B. 272.

d. JUDICIAL ASSESSORS.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 175—177.

Salary—Action for.]—The judge and assessor of a borough court, who has been appointed by the borough council with a salary, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, cannot maintain an action against the corporation for the amount of such salary. Addison v. Preston Corporation, 12 C. B. 108; 21 L. J., C. P. 146; 16 Jur. 643.

e. CORONER.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 171—174.

Appointment.]—Quære, whether a coroner in a borough, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, can regularly be (by s. 62) appointed before the grant of a court of quarter sessions has passed the great seal, though within ten days after her Majesty's pleasure to make the grant has been notified to the council. Reg. v. Grimshaw, 10 Q. B. 747; 16 L. J., Q. B. 385; 11 Jur. 965.

But a coroner having acted under such appointment, and been recognised in his office by the council, for several years:—Held, that the office was full, and that an information, in the nature of a quo warranto, lay to oust a subsequently appointed coroner. Ib.

A coroner cannot be elected at a meeting of the council, held by adjournment from a quarterly meeting, no summons or notice having been previously served upon the members of the council stating that such business was to be transacted. Ib.

—— Validity of.]—The validity of a charter incorporating a borough cannot be questioned by an information in the nature of a quo warranto against the coroner of the borough questioning his right to the office, to which he had been appointed under the charter. Queen v. Taylor, 3 P. & D. 652; 9 L. J., Q. B. 219.

Illegality—Costs of Relator.]—Previously to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, a mayor, by virtue of his office, was coroner of the borough. On the passing of that act, a separate court of quarter sessions was granted, and a coroner was appointed by virtue of s 62. Upon an information for exercising the office of coroner, judgment having been given for the crown:—Held, that the relator was not entitled to costs under 9 Anne, c. 20, the office not being a corporate office within the meaning of that statute. Reg. v. Grimshaw, 2 B. C. Rep. 146; 5 D. & L. 249; 12 Jur. 134.

See CORONER.

f. OVERSEERS.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 75, 238.

Appointment.]—The mayor or head officer of towns corporate and boroughs has the sole appointment of overseers by virtue of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. s. 6. Reg. v. Preston, 12 Q. B. 391; 3 New Sess. Cas. 312; 18 L. J., M. C. 10; 13 Jur. 7.

A person appointed to act as overseer for collecting a borough rate in a portion of a parish, under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, is not one of the borough officers who are to be appointed in every year under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 58. Birmingham Corporation v. Wright, 16 Q. B. 63; 20 L. J., Q. B. 214.

g. Officers of Gaol.

Chaplain.]—Prior to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the city of Bath was incorporated by the name of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of Bath. The charter contained the grant of a gaol and a limited criminal jurisdiction, to be exercised by the recorder and the corporate justices, but not extending to felonies. It also authorised the mayor, aldermen, and citizens annually to elect two of themselves to be bailiffs of the city, and directed that the bailiffs for the time being should be keepers of the gaol thereof. After the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the new corporation received the grant of a separate court of quarter sessions, with power to try felonies, and persons were appointed justices for the city by commission; but the corporation continued to elect one bailiff, who continued to be the keeper of the gaol, and appointed the gaoler. In 1842 a new gaol and house of correction were built under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, to which the town council appointed a chaplain:—Held, that the right to appoint the chaplain of the new gaol and house of correction, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 15, was in the town council, by virtue of their authority to appoint the keeper of the prison, and not in the borough justices. Reg. v. Bath and Wells (Bishop), D. & M. 173; 5 Q. B. 147; 12 L. J., Q. B. 324; 7 Jur. 766.

Keeper of Gaol.]—By 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78 (repealed), s. 38, all the powers of regulation which before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, were possessed by the justices having the government of any gaol, shall be exercised by the justices, "provided that no order made by the justices in pursuance of these powers, which shall require the expenditure or payment of any money, shall be of force until confirmed by the council of that city or borough":—Held, that the proviso gave to the council a control over the amount of the salary of the keeper of the gaol. Reg. v. York Corporation, 1 El. & Bl. 588; 22 L. J., M. C. 73; 17 Jur. 667; 1 W. R. 149.

In a borough there had been a prison for temporary confinement without a residence for a gaoler, and the corporation appointed him. That being inadequate, a second prison and house of correction, with residence for a gaoler, were built under local acts, and the power of appointing the gaoler thereto was vested in the justices of the borough in quarter sessions. That being also inadequate, a new prison was built as a substitute for it, under the Gaol Acts from 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, to 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56. By 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 25 (which did not extend to the borough), the justices in quarter sessions are empowered to appoint the keepers for every prison within their jurisdiction, except the keeper of the common gaol:—Held, that the power of appointing a gaoler to the new prison was conferred on the justices of the borough by the operation of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 38, which enacts, that all powers of regulation, and all things in relation to the regulation of gaols and houses of correction, should be exercised by the justices of the borough, or by the operation of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 1, which extends to all gaols and houses of correction the provisions of 4 Geo. 4, c. 64. Reg. v. Lancaster, 10 Q. B. 962; 16 L. J., M. C. 139; 11 Jur. 735.

Held, also, that this prison was not a common gaol, within 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 25; and that the appointment of a gaoler relates to the business of a court of criminal judicature, within the exception in 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 8. Ib.

Surgeon.]—The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 1, which enacts, that the 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, shall extend to all gaols, except as to the classification of prisoners, is to be construed with reference to 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, and its effect is to put all borough gaols, with reference to 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, on the same footing with the gaols of the boroughs enumerated in Schedule (A) of that act, so as to affect them by the provisions of that act, and by all subsequent enactments relative thereto. Hammond v. Peacock, 1 Ex. 41; 16 L. J., M. C. 154.

The appointment, therefore, of a surgeon of a gaol of a corporation is vested in the justices of the borough, and not in the recorder or town council, and they are to make the appointment at a quarterly sessions, and at a subsequent sessions to direct a reasonable sum to be paid to him as a salary, and also sums of money for medicines and other articles. Ib.

h. Constables.

Special.]—The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, is not repealed with respect to the appointment and remuneration of special constables within boroughs by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 83. Reg. v. Hulton, 13 Q. B. 592; 19 L. J., M. C. 32; 13 Jur. 1093.

A borough newly incorporated under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is (in respect of its liabilities under ss. 114, 117) a town contributory to the public rate for the county within the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 13; and its justices, therefore, may order the county treasurer to pay the recompense and costs of the staves of special constables appointed by them under the latter act. Ib.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 83, empowering borough justices to appoint special constables once a year, and to pay them out of the borough fund, does not supersede the general authority given to justices of any town, &c., by 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1, to appoint special constables on information that a riot may be apprehended. Ib.

Cost of Maintenance.]—The cost of the pay and clothing of the police of a borough (of which cost by the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 24, sub-s. 2 (j), the county council are to pay one-half), includes the cost of police belonging to another force and temporarily added to the borough force under s. 25 of the Police Act, 1890. Reg. v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council, 64 L. J., M. C. 145; [1895] 1 Q. B. 805; 14 R. 391; 72 L. T. 520; 43 W. R. 386; 59 J. P. 340.

Superannuation.]—The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, authorises the establishment of a police superannuation fund in boroughs, which is to be applied in paying superannuation or retiring allowances to police constables, as follows:—If a constable has served fifteen years he is entitled to retire on a superannuation allowance equal to half his pay; but if he is then able and willing to continue to serve, he shall then receive one-third also, and no more of the above-named allowance from the superannuation fund. By s. 3, no police constable shall be entitled to superannuation who is under fifty, unless reported unfit for service :—Held, that a policeman who had served fifteen years and continued in the force, but who was under fifty, was not entitled to receive the reduced allowance under s. 2. Hobson v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation, 4 El. & Bl. 986 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 251 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 892 ; 3 W. R. 405.

i. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST OFFICERS FOR MISCONDUCT.

Grounds for Removal.]—Semble, that to justify the removal of a corporate officer, there must be misconduct specially in the execution of his office ; and misconduct in duties which he has performed for the corporation, but which are not necessarily any part of his official duty, is not sufficient. Reg. v. Newbury Corporation, 1 Q. B. 751 ; 1 G. & D. 388 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 250 ; 6 Jur. 385.

Though a corporation may have by statute a power to remove one of its officers holding a freehold office, the Court of Queen's Bench will see that that power is exercised in a lawful manner, and will interfere if it should not be so. But if exercised in a lawful manner that court will refuse to interfere, on the mere ground that the power has not been wisely or discreetly put in force in the particular case. Osgood v. Nelson, 41 L. J., Q. B. 329 ; L. R. 5 H. L. 636. Affirming, 10 B. & S. 119 ; 20 L. T. 958 ; 17 W. R. 895—Ex. Ch.

In the case of removal from office of an officer of the corporation, upon an accusation of inability or neglect of duty, if there has been such evidence given as in an ordinary trial would justify the judge in leaving it to a jury to say, as a matter of fact, whether the accusation was made out, the court will not interfere with the decision arrived at by the corporation. Ib.

A refusal by the town clerk to deliver up to the town council certain corporation documents, and the corporation seal, and an opposition by him to a petition by the council to obtain the appointment of charity trustees, do not constitute sufficient cause to warrant his removal from an office held during good behaviour. Nor is such cause furnished by his acting in concert with another person, who addressed abusive language to an alderman and magistrate of the borough in a public part of the borough. Tibbits, In re, 2 P. & D. 498 ; 10 A. & E. 374.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 60, which gives a summary remedy against a corporate officer who refuses to comply with the provisions of the act, as to giving up to the town council of the borough all documents in his custody, and paying over moneys, does not take away the right of action which the corporation has against such officer for the breach of duty imposed by that section. Lichfield Corporation v. Simpson, 8 Q. B. 65 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 78 ; 9 Jur. 989.

The summary remedy provided by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 60, of committing to gaol town clerks or other officers appointed by a town council, who wilfully refuse to account or deliver up books to the council, is in the nature of civil process ; and an arrest under a warrant of commitment upon a Sunday is illegal. Eggington, Ex parte, 2 El. & Bl. 717 ; 2 C. L. R. 385 ; 23 L. J., M. C. 41 ; 18 Jur. 224 ; 2 W. R. 10. See Eggington v. Lichfield Corporation, 5 El. & Bl. 100 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 360 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 908.

A person so arrested cannot be legally detained under a second warrant, subsequently lodged against him, which has been issued at the instance of the same parties, though not in their capacity as town council, but as commissioners under a local act. Ib.

But a detainer under a ca. sa., subsequently issued by a third party, and without collusion, is a valid ground for refusing to discharge the prisoner. Ib.

A., having the office of town clerk of a borough to hold and exercise for life by himself or his sufficient deputy, appointed a deputy in 1823. A bill of indictment having been found against A. for forgery, he in April, 1829, quitted the country. The deputy died on the 23rd of April, 1830. At a meeting of the corporation held on the 31st of May, 1830, by adjournment from the 27th of April, one of the grand common days, it was resolved to remove A. from office, on the ground that he had neglected to attend, by himself or deputy, at that adjourned meeting, and at other meetings of the corporation :—Held, first, that the want of summons to A. was no objection to the removal, he not being within reach. Rex v. Harris, 1 B. & Ad. 936 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 165.

Held, secondly, that A. was properly removed from his office, inasmuch as under the circumstances he must be presumed to have left the country without any intention to return, and therefore, on the death of his deputy, there was no person capable of executing his office. Ib.

Notice.]—Held, thirdly, that no previous notice to the members of the corporation of the purposes of the meeting was necessary, inasmuch as it was held by adjournment from one of the grand common days, when every member of the corporation is supposed to be present. Ib.

Who may Remove.]—The clerk of the peace for a borough can only be removed by the recorder, and not by the town council. Reg. v. Hayward, 2 B. & S. 585 ; 31 L. J., M. C. 177.

Delegation of Powers.]—A corporate body having the power to dismiss one of its officers holding a freehold office on complaint against him, referred to a committee of its own body the task of examining into the complaint, and receiving evidence upon it and reporting thereon. The committee performed this duty. The report and evidence were duly furnished to the inculpated officer, who was then called on for his defence. He was afforded the opportunity of being heard, and counsel was heard for him, but the corporate body itself did not rehear the evidence. He was ordered to be dismissed from his office :—Held, that this was not a case of delegation of lawful authority, but was a due exercise of that authority by the corporate body itself. Osgood v. Nelson, supra.

VIII. BOROUGH RATES.

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 144—153.

Contributory to County Rates.]—Before the passing of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, the borough of New Windsor included part of the parish of Clewer in Berks, which was exempt from the county rate, and on the passing of that act a further part of the parish of Clewer, which part up to that time had been chargeable with the county rate, was added to the parliamentary borough. With this exception no part of the borough was liable to contribute to the county rate. Upon the passing of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the boundaries of the municipal borough were made co-extensive with those of the parliamentary borough. The borough has a separate court of quarter sessions and a charter containing a non-intromittant clause:—Held, that the borough of New Windsor was liable to contribute to the account for "other purposes" in respect of the part of the parish of Clewer which, before the passing of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, was chargeable with county rate. Reg. v. Monck, 46 L. J., M. C. 251; 2 Q. B. D. 544; 36 L. T. 720—C. A. Affirming, 24 W. R. 248.

The crown had granted a separate court of quarter sessions to a borough in pursuance of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 103, and there being no gaol in existence in the borough, the county justices assessed the borough to the county rate:—Held, that the rate could not be enforced upon the borough so long as the charter remained unrepealed, and that the validity of it could not be determined by the indirect proceeding of a certiorari to quash the rate. Reg. v. Boucher, 2 G. & D. 737; 3 Q. B. 641; 6 Jur. 851.

County Gaol in Borough.]—The 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 48, does not exempt a county gaol situate in a borough from borough rates. Bedfordshire JJ. v. Bedford Commissioners, 7 Ex. 658.

By whom "made and levied"—Precept by Mayor to Overseers of Parish.]—By a local improvement act "as to all rates made and levied by the municipal corporation of H., the N. Railway Company shall be assessed at one fourth of the net annual value." The H. corporation before and after the act obtained their borough and watch rates in parish S. by means of warrants addressed by the mayor to the overseers of S., ordering them to pay the several amounts required out of the poor rate, and the overseers assessed the ratepayers accordingly as in poor-rate valuations:—Held, that the H. corporation and not the overseers "made and levied" these watch and borough rates, and therefore that the N. railway were assessable in parish S. only at one-fourth the net annual value. North-Eastern Ry. v. Sutton Overseers, 51 J. P. 165.

Insertion in Precept of Amount to be levied in the Pound.]—The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (s. 144), provides that a town council may order a borough rate to be made, and for such purpose may assess the contributions on the several parishes in proportion to the total annual value of each parish ratable to the poor, and s. 145 provides that the overseers shall pay the contributions to the council, or as they order. The plaintiffs levied a borough rate, and in the precepts to the overseers, in addition to naming the amount of the contribution required from each parish, they stated the amount in the pound of the rate:—Held, that the insertion in the precept of the amount to be levied in the pound did not invalidate the rate. Durham Corporation v. Fowler, 58 L. J., Q. B. 246; 22 Q. B. D. 394; 60 L. T. 456.

Altered by Overseers.] — The council of a borough made a borough rate to levy 669*l.*, and assessed a portion of that sum on a parish within the borough. The rate ordered was 6*d.* in the pound on the value of messuages, and the council appointed overseers to levy it in the parish. The overseers, in consideration of circumstances peculiar to the parish, made and assessed the rate on that parish at 7*d.* in the pound:—Held, that the rate of 7*d.* was invalid. Reg. v. New Windsor Corporation, 7 Q. B. 908; 13 L. J., Q. B. 337.

Orders of Town Council.]—A town council of a borough, upon the recommendation of the finance committee, made an order that a fair and equal rate, for and as a borough rate, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, should be made on the several parishes, parts, and districts within the borough, for raising 1,654*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, and that part of the parish of S. which lies within the borough should be rated in 365*l.* 8*s.*, the sums rated being estimated at 1*s.* in the pound; and with respect to that part of the parish of S. which lies within the borough, it was ordered that the persons appointed to act as overseers within such part should levy, collect, and pay the amounts so rated, and that a warrant under the corporate seal should issue, directed to the town clerk, authorising him to demand, collect, and receive of such persons the amount so rated, and for that purpose to issue his warrant to such persons, requiring them to collect, levy, and pay the same to him. Such warrant was accordingly issued to the town clerk, commanding him to demand, collect, and receive of the persons appointed to act as overseers within such part of the parish of S. the sum rated; and to issue his precept to such persons to collect, levy, and pay the same to him. The town clerk issued his precept to the special overseers, requiring them, by virtue of an order of the town council, to levy, collect, and pay to him, by a fair and equal rate, to be made and collected by them, the sum of 365*l.* 8*s.* The special overseers thereupon made "a borough rate upon the messuages, &c., within that part of the parish of S. which is situated within the borough, after the rate of 1*s.* 2*d.* in the pound," for 427*l.* 17*s.* The town council also made an order for a watch rate, for raising 685*l.* 2*s.*, at 6*d.* in the pound, that part of the parish of S. within the limits of the borough being rated at 153*l.* 7*s.*; the same steps as in the case of the borough rate were taken to raise the amount; and the special overseers made a watch rate, after the rate of 6*d.* in the pound, for 160*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.* The sums assessed upon plaintiff were levied by two warrants of distress.—Held, first, that the orders of the town council for a borough rate and a watch rate were valid. Cobb v. Allan, 10 Q. B. 683; 16 L. J., Q. B. 397; 11 Jur. 1081.

Held, secondly, that the order of the town council, that the special overseers should levy, collect, and pay the amount rated, empowered them to levy and collect it by a rate. Ib.

Bygone Expenses.]—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, does not authorise the council to make a rate to satisfy bygone expenses. Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777; M. & H. 256; 6 L. J., M. C. 105; 1 Jur. 407. See Att.-Gen. v. Lichfield Corporation, 11 Beav. 120; 17 L. J., Ch. 472.

A municipal corporation has no power to levy a borough rate for the purpose of paying retrospectively for past liabilities. Reg. v. Dublin Corporation, 2 L. R. Ir. 371.

The borough fund, which was otherwise sufficient for all legitimate purposes, was rendered insufficient by reason of illegal payment having been made out of it, and the corporation imposed a borough rate to make up the deficiency :—Held, that the rate was illegal, and that all orders and resolutions of the corporation imposing it, and their precept to the collector-general to levy it, should be quashed. Ib. See also next case.

—— Rate made in Public.]—The borough fund being insufficient for the purposes specified in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, a meeting of the town council was held. At this meeting, which was not public, an estimate of expenses was made, and the estimate contained these items : "Compensation to the late town clerk, three years and a-half, 105*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*; law expenses, 800*l.*" The council ordered a rate to be made on the parishes within the borough ; and subsequently a warrant signed by the mayor was issued to the treasurer. This warrant directed the treasurer, "within 100 days from the date hereof, to demand, collect, and receive," from the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes, the respective sums assessed upon them. On the same day the treasurer issued his precept to the overseers and churchwardens of St. M. (a parish within the borough), requiring them to pay to him the amount of the borough rate assessed on that parish, "within 100 days next after the receipt hereof." On the 29th July, 1847, a copy of this precept was served upon one of the overseers of St. M. He appealed against the rate, but it was confirmed. He ceased to be overseer in March, 1848, and in August of that year, having been summoned for non-payment of the rate before the mayor and another justice of the borough, a warrant of distress was issued, signed by them, under which his goods were seized, and he thereupon brought replevin :—Held, first, that a borough rate need not be made in public. Jones v. Johnson (in error), 7 Ex. 452 ; 21 L. J., M. C. 102 ; 16 Jur. 840—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, assuming the words in the above section "to be incurred" have reference to the time of making the rate, yet that as it did not appear that the items in the estimate were really bygone expenses (the compensation to the town clerk not having been then fully ascertained, and the council, before the delivery of the solicitor's bill of costs, being justified in treating the expenses of litigation as expenses not actually incurred), the rate could not be said to be retrospective, and was, therefore, valid in this respect. Ib.

Freeing Bridge from Toll—Improvement not authorised—Payment out of General or Improvement Rate.]—A private improvement act gave the municipal borough power to levy general and improvement rates, and the latter were to be applied (amongst other ways) "in carrying the several purposes of this act . . . . into execution, and for the improvement or benefit of the borough in such manner as the corporation from time to time think fit." The corporation of the borough, in order to provide a free passage over a foot-bridge subject to tolls, made an agreement with the owner of the bridge that, in consideration of a yearly sum to be paid by the corporation, the bridge should be opened for the free use of passengers, but this improvement was not amongst those specifically authorised by the legislature :—Held, that this agreement was not ultra vires or void, but that no payments could be made thereunder by the corporation out of the general or improvement rates, and that only an accidental surplus (if any such existed after applying the rates to their respective purposes) could be applied for such payments. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation v. Att.-Gen., 62 L. J., Q. B. 72 ; [1892] A. C. 568 ; 1 R. 31 ; 67 L. T. 728 ; 56 J. P. 836—H. L. (E.)

Repair of Highways.]—Before the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, the borough of A. was divided into a town and a country district, each maintaining its own highways. That act was incorporated in a local act for the improvement of the borough of A., except so far as anything in the former act was varied or otherwise provided for by this. By the latter act, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of A. were empowered to cause any street in the borough to be sewered and paved at the expense of the adjoining landowners, and certify the same, when completed, to be a public highway ; and that it should be lawful for them from time to time to make a rate for the maintenance of such highways upon the occupiers of all houses and lands within the borough. By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, s. 48, commissioners (that is, the persons or body corporate intrusted to execute any local improvement act incorporated with this) shall be the surveyors of all highways within the limits of such local act, and shall have within those limits all the power of surveyors ; and the inhabitants of the district within those limits shall not be liable to highway rates in respect of roads within other parts of the parish in which the district is situate. By s. 49, the commissioners are to be indictable for non-repair of any public highway within the limits of such local act, in the same manner as the inhabitants thereof, or of any parish or other district therein, were liable before the passing of such act :—Held, that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of A. were bound, as commissioners, under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, to rate the whole borough for the repair of highways paved and certified under the local act, and likewise to rate the whole for repair of the public highways not so paved and certified ; and that a rate upon the country district alone for repair of the highways within it (not paved or certified) was bad. Slater v. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation, 18 Q. B. 398 ; 21 L. J., M. C. 185 ; 16 Jur. 992.

Watch Rates.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, the council of a borough was authorised to impose a watch rate on all property in the borough, situate within 200 yards of any street or continuous line of houses. By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 28, s. 1, the council is authorised, if they think fit, to cause the whole of the borough to be watched, and to order that the whole borough shall be assessed to a watch rate. Such an order having been made by a council of a borough :—Held, that all property within the borough, though situate more than 200 yards from any street or continuous line of houses, was liable to be rated ; and that there was nothing in the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 28, to limit that liability. G. W. Ry. v. Maidenhead Town Council, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 653 ; 31 L. J., M. C. 113.

Arable and meadow lands in a parish were exempt from a town rate under a local act. The town having been incorporated under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and the borough declared co-extensive with the parish, a borough rate was made for purposes including the expenses of the constabulary force:—Held, that under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 84, 92, all property within the borough was ratable to the watch rate, provided it was within 200 yards from a street or continuous line of houses, but that so much of the lands as was beyond that limit continued not ratable. Hallet v. Brighton Overseers, 7 El. & Bl. 342; 26 L. J., M. C. 61; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 237; 5 W. R. 198.

Limitation of Amount.]—By a local act a town council was empowered to make a rate for defraying the expenses of a library and a museum. It was provided that the amount to be levied should "not in any one year exceed 1*d.* in the pound upon the ratable value of the property within the borough liable to such rate":—Held, that the amount must not exceed 1*d.* in the pound upon the ratable value of the property within the borough actually capable of producing and yielding the amount. Brown, Ex parte, 31 L. J., M. C. 108; 6 L. T. 241.

Publication.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 88, the town council of a borough took on themselves the powers given to inspectors under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, as to lighting a township in the borough, and made an order on the overseers to collect and pay a sum named. Within the township was a parochial church or chapel, being the only place where poor rates had ever been published; but there were also, within the township, two other churches of the established church recently built, and some dissenting places of worship. The rate made by the overseers, in compliance with the order, was published in the first-named church or chapel only:—Held, an insufficient publication under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, and that the rate ought to be quashed on appeal. Reg. v. Whipp, 4 Q. B. 141; 3 G. & D. 372.

Appeal.]—The power of appeal against a borough rate, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, is confined to the grounds of appeal against a county rate, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 14, and therefore an individual cannot appeal for any personal grievance, or on the ground of the rate being retrospective. Reg. v. Bath Recorder, 1 P. & D. 622; 9 A. & E. 871: 8 L. J., M. C. 96.

—— Notice of.]—Notice of appeal against a borough rate must state directly that the party appealing is aggrieved, or must show facts from which it can be collected. Rex v. Bond, 6 A. & E. 905. S. P., Rex v. Poole Recorder, 1 N. & P. 756; W. W. & D. 497; 6 L. J., M. C. 119.

Notice of appeal to the town clerk is sufficient, as he is the officer of the town council who made the rate. Rex v. Carmarthen Recorder, 3 N. & P. 19; 7 A. & E. 756; 7 L. J., M. C. 17.

—— Rate for Particular Purpose.]—Where a borough rate on the face of it purports to be made for a particular purpose, and if no express power to appeal against it is given, an appeal will not be allowed merely to ascertain whether it is made for that purpose. Reg. v. Ipswich Recorder, 8 D. P. C. 103; 1 W. W. & H. 337.

Where no express power of appeal against a borough rate is given, none exists merely on account of its being a borough rate. Ib.

The 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 81, s. 2, authorised a borough rate to meet certain expenses not levied under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, and provided that "every such rate shall be made, levied, and recovered in the manner provided by the said act for regulating corporations, and by this act;" no appeal lies against the rate. Ib.

—— Rate abandoned.]—Where an appeal against a borough rate was, at the request of the town clerk, adjourned from the Epiphany to the Michaelmas sessions, but in the meantime the rate was abandoned:—Held, that the recorder ought to have heard the appeal, although there was no rate produced, and no secondary evidence of it given. Reg. v. Stamford Recorder, 1 P. & D. 72; 8 L. J., M. C. 49; 2 Jur. 965.

—— Assessment Committee.]—The council of a borough made a borough rate to meet the expenses of a local improvement act, and other sanitary acts, as well as for the purpose to which the borough fund is applicable under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76; and assessed the same upon a railway situate in that part of the borough which was in the commissioners' district. The railway company, who claimed exemption from so much of the rate as was applicable to sanitary purposes, gave due notice of appeal, but did not seek relief from the assessment committee:—Held, first, that the company had a right to appeal without going before the assessment committee, for the latter, there being no objection to the valuation list, could not have given any relief. Reg. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 46 L. J., M. C. 102.

Held, secondly, that the local improvement act was not repealed ipso facto by the later public acts, and an exemption granted to the railway company in 1848 still continued in force; such exemption must, therefore, be given effect to by the authority, whosoever that might be (whether the commissioners or the town council), who exercised the power of that act within the part of the district included in the borough. Ib.

Enforcing Payment—Warrant of Distress.]—A town council of a borough levied a borough rate under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92; an out township being one of the townships assessed by such rate. The rate was duly levied and paid. The overseers of the parish having appealed to the borough quarter sessions against the rate, the sessions made an order to amend the rate by increasing the amount at which the township was assessed. No notice of the appeal was given to the out township. The overseers of the out township having refused to pay the additional amount assessed:—Held, that the remedy of the town council, if any, for enforcing the payment of such additional rate was by a warrant of distress issued by the mayor or two justices for the borough, under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, and not by a mandamus to the overseers to enforce such payment. Reg. v. Hunslet Overseers, 1 El. & El. 775; 28 L. J., M. C. 180.

—— Mandamus.]—A peremptory writ of mandamus, requiring a corporation to enforce payment of the existing borough rates, or to cause to be collected another rate, and out of the same to pay money under a compensation bond, is bad, because it directs payment to be provided in a particular mode, by making or enforcing a borough rate, without showing that the existing borough fund is insufficient; and this objection may be made as an answer to a rule for an attachment against those who have disobeyed the writ. Reg. v. Poole Corporation, 1 G. & D. 728. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Ledgard, 1 Q. B. 616.

—— Against Overseer.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, councils of boroughs are authorised to order borough rates to be made within their boroughs, and for that purpose are to have all the powers which county justices have by virtue of the 56 Geo. 3, c. 51, for the levying of county rates. The council of a borough ordered a borough rate to be made, and assessed upon the township, in respect of a portion of it, namely, the hamlet, which was within the borough, a certain sum. An overseer of the township was called upon to pay the assessment, and having failed to do so, the mayor of the borough issued a warrant, under which the overseer's goods were seized. The overseer having brought an action against the mayor for the seizure of the goods:—Held, that the council of the borough had no authority to make the assessment in question, and that inasmuch as the mayor had no jurisdiction to issue the warrant, trespass was the proper remedy. Fearnley v. Worthington, 1 Man. & G. 491; 1 Scott (N.R.) 432; 4 Jur. 918.

The warrant of a treasurer to overseers is not vitiated by reason of its fixing a time for payment of the rate different from and more extended than that named by the justices in their warrant to the treasurer. Jones v. Johnson, 7 Ex. 452, supra, col. 601.

—— Distress.]—An overseer's goods are liable to distress, although he is out of office at the time of the seizure, the distress being given for the offender's goods. Ib.

A distress warrant is not less that of the mayor, although signed by another person in his capacity of a magistrate, as well as in that of the mayor of the borough. Ib.

A warrant is sufficient under the 27 Geo. 2, c. 20, although it does not fix the time for the termination of the sale. Ib.

Receiver.]—A corporation was authorised by act of parliament to raise money for local improvements upon the security of the borough rates. The act contained a provision that the corporation should in every year pay off at least 100*l.* of the principal of the borrowed money together with the interest due thereon, and that the creditors to be paid off should be determined by ballot:—Held, that the creditors were entitled to be repaid their principal only in the way mentioned by the act, and that a creditor who was unpaid could not by giving notice to the corporation to repay his principal, entitle himself to have a receiver of the rates appointed by the court. Preston v. Great Yarmouth Corporation, 41 L. J., Ch. 760; L. R. 7 Ch. 655; 27 L. T. 87; 20 W. R. 875.

Application of — Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery to control—Information at Suit of Attorney-General.]—Where a local act authorised a corporation to levy rates and to apply them in a particular manner, and particularly in a sinking fund, in order to extinguish the incumbrance of rates, being to cease upon payment of the debts:—Held, that a provision for laying the accounts before parliament annually, did not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. In such a case the crown has a right on behalf of those persons on whom the rates may in future be levied, to see that the funds are properly applied according to the act, and it may therefore proceed either by the ancient writ of account in the nature of a commission, or by the modern and more convenient proceeding by information at the suit of the Attorney-General and that with or without the assistance of a relator:—Held, that an information at the suit of the Attorney-General against the corporation stating the facts charging mismanagement, and praying that the act might be carried into execution and an account taken of moneys borrowed and rates received, &c., was improperly dismissed as for want of jurisdiction. Att.-Gen. v. Dublin Corporation, 1 Bli. (N.S.) 312; 9 Bli. (N.S.) 395; 3 Cl. & F. 289. And see Frend v. Dennett, 5 L. T. 73.

IX. BOROUGH FUND.

a. Application of.

Trust for Public Purposes.]—Liability of the new municipal corporations and the ratepayers of their borough for the breaches of trust of the old corporations, and the costs of obtaining redress. The new corporations succeed to the debts and duties of the old corporations, whose place they now occupy, as well as to their estates, property, and right. Att.-Gen. v. Leicester Corporation, 9 Beav. 546. And see Att.-Gen. v. Kerr, 2 Beav. 420; 9 L. J., Ch. 190; 4 Jur. 406.

By the Municipal Corporations Act (6 Will. 4, c. 76) the property of the old corporations thereby remodelled is to be held subject to the performance of their public duties, and the court has jurisdiction to interpose to prevent any disposition of such property which would be a violation of that trust. Att.-Gen. v. Liverpool Corporation, or Aspinall, 1 Myl. & Cr. 171; 2 Myl. & Cr. 613; 7 L. J., Ch. 51.

The members of the governing body are the agents of a corporation; and if they exercise their functions for the purpose of injuring its interests and alienating its property, they are personally liable for any loss occasioned thereby. Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1; 10 L. J., Ch. 53; 7 L. J., Ch. 76; 9 Sim. 30.

A borough fund is constituted, by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, a trust fund for public purposes, and, as such, is subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery for the prevention of breaches of trust and confidence, whether reposed in an individual or in a corporation. Parr v. Att.-Gen., 8 Cl. & F. 409; 6 Jur. 245. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Lichfield Corporation, 11 Beav. 120; 17 L. J., Ch. 472.

Promoting and Opposing Bills in Parliament.]—A municipal corporation will be restrained by injunction from employing the property vested in them towards promoting in parliament a bill that has been introduced by them to obtain new powers, whether the purposes of such bill are or are not of public utility, and although there is no evidence that there is any intention to defray the costs of applying for the bill out of such property. But an injunction to restrain the corporation from applying for such bill will be refused, at all events if the corporation agree that the parties applying for the injunction shall be treated as parties entitled to oppose the bill before the parliamentary committee. Att.-Gen. v. Waterford Corporation, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 522.

By the 5 Geo. 4, c. 49, the corporation of Plymouth were empowered to make certain waterworks, and were required to supply a certain daily quantity of pure, wholesome, fresh water for the use of her Majesty's naval establishments, in consideration whereof they were to be entitled to an annuity. They failed in an application for an act to extend their powers. They were restrained from applying any part of the borough fund in paying the expenses of the application to parliament. Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth Corporation, 1 W. R. 445.

Municipal corporations having been reduced by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, from the position of owners of property to that of trustees, possess the ordinary right of trustees to defend their trust property and their rights as trustees from attack at the expense of the trust estate. Consequently, a municipal corporation has the right, either under s. 92 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, or under the general law applicable to trustees, to defray, out of the borough funds or rates, the expenses of any attack made by bill in parliament, whether against their existence as a corporation, or against their property, or only against their rights, powers, or privileges; and that right is not taken away by the Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872. Att.-Gen. v. Brecon Corporation, 48 L. J., Ch. 153; 10 Ch. D. 204; 40 L. T. 52; 27 W. R. 332.

A waterworks company, established to supply water to a borough, was empowered by act of parliament to make rules and regulations, which before coming into force were to be approved of by two justices of the borough. Certain of such proposed rules and regulations having been brought before the justices for approval, it was thought by the corporation that they should be opposed. Expenses were incurred in so opposing them, and the opposition was, in great part, successful. The company also promoted a bill in parliament with the view of obtaining further powers. The corporation, conceiving that the bill was objectionable, opposed it in parliament, and eventually it was withdrawn. Orders were made for the payment, out of the borough fund, of the expenses incurred in opposing the rules and regulations, and the bill promoted by the company:—Held, that as the expenses above mentioned could not be expenses "necessarily incurred in carrying into effect the provisions" of the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), within s. 92, and as they did not fall within any of the payments specified in the act, that they were not chargeable upon the borough fund, and that the orders were invalid. Reg. v. Sheffield Corporation, 40 L. J., Q. B. 247; L. R. 6 Q. B. 652; 24 L. T. 659; 19 W. R. 1159.

A corporation is justified, if acting bonâ fide, in applying its funds in opposing parliamentary bills which would affect its existence, and materially injure its powers as a corporation, though no such power is expressly given to it by its incorporating act. Bower v. Sligo Commissioners, 4 Ir. R., C. L. 489.

During the progress of the Liverpool Tramways Act, 1871, through parliament, the Liverpool town council authorised the town clerk to make terms for the purchase of tramways with the company promoting the bill. Amongst other terms of arrangement he agreed that the corporation should pay the expenses of the bill if they resolved to take the tramways according to their powers in the bill. The council consented to these terms, and after the act was passed resolved to take the tramways; they afterwards resolved to pay the expenses agreed to. The surplus of the borough funds in the year of these resolutions was less than the amount of the expenses, but in the subsequent years the surplus was greater than that amount:—Held, upon mandamus to the town council to pay these expenses, that there was nothing in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, to prevent the payment of this claim. Reg. v. Liverpool Corporation, 28 L. T. 500; 21 W. R. 674.

An application by a corporation of part of the surplus borough fund, arising from borough rates, in payment of the costs of a partially successful opposition to the passing through parliament of a bill for the construction of waterworks, containing powers so to interfere with the stream of a river passing through the town as to prevent its efficient action in the removal of the sewage of the town, and thereby indirectly affecting the value of the ratable houses in the borough, the tolls of the market and other property constituting the borough fund, is not so clearly contrary to the spirit of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, which provides for the application of such surplus fund, as to form the ground of an interlocutory injunction by the Court of Chancery restraining such application. Att.-Gen v. Wigan Corporation, 5 De G. M. & G. 52; 23 L. J., Ch. 429; 18 Jur. 299; 2 W. R. 308.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, enables the surplus of the borough fund to be applied for the public benefit of the inhabitants and improvement of the borough. By an act subsequently passed, the corporation of a city was authorised to levy certain tonnage dues to be applied in a specified manner, and after they were satisfied, the remainder to be applied to certain purposes, some of which were the same as those to which the surplus of the borough fund was made applicable: and distinct accounts were directed to be kept of the tonnage dues and borough fund. The treasurer mixed the two funds at his banker's. The corporation proposed to obtain an act of parliament for improving a river flowing through the city, and applied money from the funds at the banker's in paying certain expenses. An information was filed by the Attorney-General, at the relation of ratepayers, praying an injunction to restrain this application to parliament at the expense of the borough fund, and the same was granted. Att.-Gen. v. Norwich Corporation, 21 L. J., Ch. 139—L.JJ.

Where the promotion of a bill in parliament had been consented to in accordance with s. 4 of the Borough Funds Act, 1872, in consideration of certain benefits being conferred upon the owners of property in a borough by such bill upon its becoming an act of parliament: and the promoters of the bill caused the coming into operation of the act at a later date than that at which the bill, as drawn at the time such consent thereto was given, intended:—Held, that the court could not allow advantage to be taken by the owners of the benefits under the act previous to its coming into operation, upon grounds of equity, and that no breach of faith had been committed by the promoters of the bill. Birkenhead Corporation v. Crowe, 46 J. P. 551.

—— Costs of Solicitor.]—A municipal corporation is not liable for the costs of an attorney conducting on their behalf an opposition to a bill in parliament affecting their privileges, unless the retainer is under the common seal. Sutton v. Spectaclemakers' Co., 10 L. T. 411; 12 W. R. 742.

Costs of Legal Proceedings]—The costs of defending quo warranto informations against an alderman of a borough, and of prosecuting a criminal information against a person for assaulting a justice, are not payable out of the borough fund. Reg. v. Bridgewater Council, 2 P. & D. 558.

But a municipal corporation is justified in discharging out of the corporate funds the expenses of defending quo warranto informations against individual members, if the object of such informations is to impeach the title or destroy the legal existence of the corporation as a body. Holdsworth v. Dartmouth Corporation, 11 A. & E. 490; 9 L. J., Q. B. 121; 4 Jur. 605. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Norwich Corporation, 2 Mylne & C. 406; 1 Jur. 398. See also Clifton, Dartmouth, and Hardness Corporation v. Holdsworth, 13 L. J., Ch. 178; 8 Jur. 741.

Expenses of resisting an application for a mandamus, directed to a corporation, in order to try a question, which of two councillors was legally elected, cannot be legally defrayed out of the borough fund, it not appearing that the rights of the corporation were in any way affected by the issue in question. Reg. v. Leeds Corporation, 4 Q. B. 796; D. & M. 143; 12 L. J., Q. B. 369; 7 Jur. 669.

Expenses of a prosecution by a mayor for a riot and assault upon him whilst engaged in the revision of the burgess list, will not be allowed to be charged upon the borough fund, unless there is an order or a resolution of the town council previously to the prosecution, authorising the expenses. Reg. v. Lichfield Council, D. & M. 491; 4 Q. B. 900; 12 L. J., Q. B. 308; 7 Jur. 670. S. P., Reg. v. Stamford Council, 13 L. J., Q. B. 177; 8 Jur. 538.

The costs of litigation undertaken by a corporation malâ fide and from improper motives, or in respect of a matter in which the corporation is only collaterally interested, cannot be charged upon the borough fund. If, however, the litigation is undertaken in the bonâ fide assertion of the rights of the corporation, the costs incurred may properly be charged upon the fund, although the litigation has not resulted in favour of the corporation. Reg. v. Tamworth Corporation, 19 L. T. 433; 17 W. R. 231.

Burgesses having been omitted from the list of voters obtained a rule nisi in the queen's bench, calling on the mayor to show cause why he should not hold a court to revise the list. The mayor instructed an attorney to show cause. The court made the rule absolute. The attorney brought an action against the corporation for his costs:—Held, that, the litigation on the part of the mayor having been justifiable, the costs were payable out of the borough fund. Lewis v. Rochester Corporation, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 401; 30 L. J., C. P. 169; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 680; 3 L. T. 300; 9 W. R. 100.

Where a town council removed a town clerk from his office by resolution for misconduct, and refused his claim of compensation:—Held, that the costs of an attorney employed in opposing a mandamus to assess compensation were properly chargeable to the borough fund, although the jury found the issues ultimately raised on the mandamus for the late town clerk, it not being shown that the town council acted otherwise than bonâ fide in the removal. Reg. v. Lichfield Town Council, 10 Q. B. 534; 16 L. J., Q. B. 333; 11 Jur. 888.

The attorney having been retained generally by a resolution of the town council, and having also been authorised and retained by resolution of the town council to take proceedings in opposition to the rule nisi for the mandamus:—Held, that this was a sufficient retainer to warrant the payment to him of the costs of defending the issues. Ib.

Held, also, that it was no objection to the order for payment on account, the attorney not having delivered a bill, and it not appearing that the sum ordered to be paid exceeded the sum due to the attorney. Ib.

Where money had been bonâ fide paid upon an order of the council, to a town clerk, for professional business done by him as a solicitor, upon instructions given by the corporation, the mere fact of his having had no retainer under the seal of the corporation is no sufficient ground why the court should, under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 44, quash the order of the council, as for a misapplication of the borough funds. Reg. v. Prest, 16 Q. B. 33; 20 L. J., Q. B. 17; 15 Jur. 554.

Costs incurred by a town council in taking legal advice as to the validity of a borough rate, which they intended to enforce, but concerning which they were threatened with litigation, if they should persevere in their intention, are costs chargeable upon the borough fund. Ib.

A corporation held trust estates for charitable uses, and the surplus of the proceeds was to be applied for the benefit of the borough. After the passing of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the town council presented a petition to the lord chancellor for leave to attend before the master and propose a list of persons, being members of the corporation, as trustees for those estates:—Held, that an order for payment out of the borough fund of the costs of those proceedings was illegal, the management of the trust estates being taken away from the corporation by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71. Reg. v. Warwick Corporation, 15 L. J., Q. B. 306; 10 Jur. 962.

—— Licensing Appeals.]—On August 13 the watch committee resolved to authorise the chief constable to obtain legal assistance at the licensing sessions. On August 21 the council passed a like resolution. The chief constable successfully opposed some licensees, five of whom appealed to quarter sessions. On October 10 the watch committee, having taken the opinion of counsel, refused to authorise the chief constable to act as respondent. On October 15 the council resolved to allow him to so act, and to pay his costs. When the appeals came on he appeared and opposed them, and they were dismissed with costs. The amount recovered on taxation was 132*l.* 5*s.* less than he had to pay. On November 19 the watch committee resolved to pay these costs. This action was brought by the plaintiffs as ratepayers to restrain this payment:—Held, that, under these circumstances, there was no right to use the borough funds for this purpose, for one watch committee has no power to apply to the council to pay certain moneys which a former watch committee has said ought not to be paid. Semble, that in certain cases a watch committee may have power to incur legal expenses in connection with the opposition to licences either at brewster or quarter sessions. Att.-Gen. v. Tynemouth Corporation, 76 L. T. 566.

—— Actions against Constables.]—The chief constable of a borough, having, by the direction of borough magistrates, laid an information against a person for conspiracy, an action for malicious prosecution was brought by such person against him and a verdict recovered for 200*l.* :—Held, that it was not competent to the town council to order payment of the chief constable's costs out of the borough fund or rate under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 82. Reg. v. Exeter Corporation, 6 Q. B. D. 135 ; 44 L. T. 101 ; 29 W. R. 441 ; 45 J. P. 158.

A member of the constabulary force of the borough of Liverpool was made the subject of a libellous article in a newspaper, in reference to his conduct as inspector of public-houses, in giving a good character to an applicant for a licence, at the meeting of the magistrates of the borough in licensing session, whom he knew to have been the keeper of a house of ill-fame. Upon an intimation from, though without the official sanction of, his superior authorities, he took criminal proceedings by way of summons before a magistrate against the publisher of the libel, and incurred expenses thereon. The watch committee, with the subsequent approbation of the town council, made an order on the borough treasurer for the payment of a sum of money on account of such expenses. The Liverpool borough fund has a surplus :—Held, that such order was not in respect of an allowance, nor a charge nor an expense for the purposes of the constabulary force within the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 82, nor an application of the fund for the public benefit of the inhabitants of the borough within s. 92, and that a rule must go for a certiorari to bring up the order for the purpose of being quashed. Reg. v. Liverpool Corporation and Town Council, 41 L. J., Q. B. 175 ; 26 L. T. 101 ; 20 W. R. 389. See Att.-Gen. v. Compton, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 417.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 82, a council of a borough cannot make an order that the treasurer shall pay costs of defending borough constables on a prosecution incurred by them in the discharge of their duty. Reg. v. Thomson, 5 Q. B. 477 ; D. & M. 497. S. P., Reg. v. Stamford Town Council, 13 L. J., Q. B. 177 ; 8 Jur. 558.

Such order must be made by the watch committee, with the approbation of the council. Ib.

—— Payment of Money under Illegal Contract—Action against Officer for Penalty—Order of Council for payment of Officer's Costs.]—Where an officer employed by a borough council, acting as the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, makes with the council a contract in which he is interested, in violation of s. 193 of that Act, the court when called upon under s. 141 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, to remove into the queen's bench division, and quash an order for payment of money to the officer under such contract, will not exercise the discretion given by the section so as to inquire whether the illegality of the contract is in substance or in form, but will, in pursuance of the policy of the Public Health Act, consider it to be of substance, and quash the order as of course ; and if an action be brought against the officer to recover the penalty provided by s. 193 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for being concerned in such contract, and the penalty be recovered, the court will also quash an order of the council for the payment of the officer's costs of defending the action. Reg. v. Ramsgate Corporation, 58 L. J., Q. B. 352 ; 23 Q. B. D. 66 ; 61 L. T. 333 ; 37 W. R. 781 ; 53 J. P. 740.

Compensation to Officers.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 66, 67, a corporation executed a bond for payment of an annuity to a person removed from office ; and also for payment, on demand, of arrears due before the date. The obligee consenting not to press for the arrears, the council passed a resolution to pay him interest thereon :—Held, that such resolution and orders of the council for payment of the interest were unsanctioned by s. 92. Reg. v. Warwick Council, 8 Q. B. 926 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 306 ; 10 Jur. 962.

A bond payable out of a borough fund, given by the town council to an officer to secure to him compensation for offices, some of which he continued to hold, and a rate levied for the purpose of discharging the bond, is illegal, and the rate being on that account illegal also, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction over both matters. Att.-Gen. v. Parr, 8 Cl. & F. 409 ; 6 Jur. 245.

Chain for Mayor.]—The purchase of a gold chain for the mayor of a borough, out of the borough fund, is illegal. Att.-Gen. v. Batley Corporation, 26 L. T. 392.

Jubilee Festivities.]—A municipal corporation passed resolutions to the effect that pursuant to s. 15. sub-s. 4, of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, a certain sum should be paid to the mayor by way of remuneration, and that the mayor should be requested to take such steps as he might deem proper for the due celebration of her majesty's jubilee. Some of the burgesses moved to restrain the corporation from applying any part of the borough fund for this purpose :—Held, that the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, had not been contravened, and that an interlocutory injunction would not be granted. Att.-Gen. v. Blackburn Corporation, 57 L. T. 385. See Att.-Gen. v. Cardiff Corporation, cols. 583 and 613.

Power to take Lands compulsorily for Public Improvement—Agreement to sell part of Lands to be so taken.]—A municipal corporation was empowered by act of parliament to take compulsorily, for the purpose of a public improvement, the lands comprised in the book of reference to the act, wherein were included the lands of A. The lands so comprised were more than were actually required for the purpose of the improvement, and the act empowered the corporation to raise money upon the lands authorised to be acquired, and to pay off the debt thus incurred out of the proceeds of superfluous lands. Before the act received the royal assent, the corporation agreed to sell to a railway company a portion of the lands of A., and, after the passing of the act, gave notice to A. of their intention to take all his lands. A. then filed a bill to restrain them from taking more than they actually required for the purpose of the improvement:—Held, that the corporation was entitled to take all the lands of A., including that portion which they only required for the purpose of the re-sale. Galloway v. London Corporation, 35 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 1 H. L. 34; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 747; 14 L. T. 865.

Held, also, that the agreement entered into in anticipation of the act did not incapacitate them from doing so. Ib.

—— Mortgage of Surplus Land.]—An act gave a corporation compulsory powers of purchasing land to make a market. The 29th section required it to sell the surplus not wanted, and to give certain parties a right of pre-emption, the produce to be applied "to the purposes of the act." The 30th section gave the corporation power to borrow on debenture, the 32nd section power to mortgage or sell any of its lands "for the purposes of the act," and the 33rd section provided that the act should not empower the corporation to sell without the approbation of the lords of the treasury:—Held, that the 32nd section did not authorise a mortgage of the surplus land for the purposes of the act, but that it must be sold as directed by the 29th section. De Winton v. Brecon Corporation, 26 Beav. 533; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 882.

Held, also, that a mortgage only of the lands of the corporation required the assent of the lords of the treasury. Ib.

Purchase of Site for and Erection of Corn Market.]—When a local authority was empowered by act of parliament to "enlarge and improve the market place" in a borough "with all proper works and conveniences connected therewith or belonging thereto," and, for the purposes of the act, to borrow money on the credit of the borough fund and to purchase lands:—Held, that the purchase of a site near the place where the principal market of the borough was usually held, and the erection thereon of a new corn exchange, was a lawful exercise of the powers conferred by the act, for which money might be borrowed on the credit of the borough fund. Att.-Gen. v. Cambridge Corporation, L. R. 6 H. L. 303; 22 W. R. 37.

Power under Private Act to contribute Capital—Interest before Payment—Public Benefit.]—A corporation of a borough, who are authorised by a special act to contribute 10,000*l.* to the funds of a college, and have resolved that the sum shall be paid at a time not yet arrived, are not entitled to pay interest on the sum in the meantime. Att.-Gen. v. Cardiff Corporation, 63 L. J., Ch. 557; [1894] 2 Ch. 337; 8 R. 268; 70 L. T. 591.

Payments by a corporation of a borough to a university college established within the borough are not "for the public benefit of the inhabitants and improvement of the borough" within section 143 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. Ib.

Borrowing Money.]—By an act passed in 1851, certain property before vested in commissioners, was vested in a corporation. Powers were given to the council of purchasing land for the purposes of the act, and of executing improvement works specified in a schedule; the expenses of the works for making new approaches to the town hall, and for enlarging and altering the existing streets to be defrayed by a street improvement rate, not exceeding 6*d.* in the 1*l.*, and mortgageable to the extent of 100,000*l.*; and all other expenses of carrying the act into execution to be defrayed by a borough improvement rate not exceeding 2*s.* in the 1*l.*, and mortgageable to the extent of 150,000*l.* From the street improvement rate certain classes of persons were wholly exempted, and canal and railway companies were in part exempted. Nothing therein contained was to alter any of the powers, privileges and authorities vested in the corporation by any past or future acts in relation to municipal corporations. By another local act, passed in 1861, other specified improvements were provided for, and it was declared that the expenses of widening and improving certain specified streets were to be defrayed out of the street improvement rate. The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 16 (Corporation Mortgages Act, 1860), empowers corporations generally, with the approbation of the treasury, upon application made after due notice given, to make purchases of land for public purposes; but nothing therein contained is to repeal, abridge or affect any power or authority of any body corporate or council under any local act. The corporation having contracted for the purchase of land for the widening of a street (not comprised in the works specified in the local acts of 1851 and 1861), and having (after due notice given, and after all parties interested in the scheme had been heard before a commissioner deputed by the treasury) obtained the sanction of the treasury to the purchase of the land, and the charging of the borough fund with the purchase-money:—Held, that the corporation was lawfully empowered to raise the purchase-money out of the borough fund. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham Corporation, L. R. 3 Eq. 552.

A covenant by a corporation to repay money borrowed after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is valid, although the money was not borrowed for any of the purposes to which the borough fund is applicable by s. 92, and although the covenant is contained in a mortgage deed, made without the approbation of the lords of the treasury. Payne v. Brecon Corporation, 3 H. & N. 572; 27 L. J., Ex. 495; 6 W. R. 801.

A bond given by a corporation, after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, but before the passing of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 104, to secure a sum of money borrowed for the purpose of paying debts contracted by the corporation before the passing of the first-mentioned act, is valid, notwithstanding the 92nd section of the former act might interpose a difficulty in the way of the obligee's obtaining satisfaction of a judgment thereon. Pallister v. Gravesend Corporation, 9 C. B. 774; and Arnold v. Gravesend Corporation, 2 Kay & J. 574; 25 L. J., Ch. 776; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 703; 4 W. R. 478.

Judgment upon a bond given by a corporation before the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, operates as a charge upon all lands and hereditaments of the corporation, whether acquired before or after the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, the court being of opinion that even if the latter statute, standing alone, would have prevented the judgment creditor from charging after acquired lands, which, semble, it would not, that objection was removed by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 104, s. 1; and that the power by that section given to corporations of charging their lands and hereditaments for securing repayment and satisfaction of any debt contracted by them before the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is a power which they might exercise for their own benefit, within the meaning of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, the words "for his own benefit" meaning no more than for his own use, not as a trustee. Ib.

A judgment entered up against a corporation for a debt contracted subsequently to the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is no charge upon any part of the corporate property not authorised to be charged therewith in the manner pointed out by s. 94. Ib.

A corporation borrowed 200*l.* of M., to enable them to pay L., their treasurer, sums which he had paid to creditors of the old corporation, and gave M. their promissory note for the amount. They did not, however, pay over the sum to L., but suffered him to receive their accruing income in reduction of what was due to him, and applied the amount to purposes to which the income would otherwise have been applicable:—Held, that the corporation had no authority to give the note, as it was not given to secure a debt due prior to the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. Att.-Gen. v. Lichfield Corporation, 13 Sim. 547.

Payment of Debts.]—Where money, the produce of the sale of corporation lands, has been paid into court under an act of parliament authorising the court to make such order concerning it for the benefit of the parties interested as the court shall think fit, it is not competent for the court, since the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92 (the Municipal Corporation Act), to order the principal money to be paid in discharge of corporation debts accruing since the passing of that act; the dividends only can be applied for that purpose. The trusts of the Municipal Corporation Act are applicable to personal as well as real estates. Hythe Corporation, Ex parte, 4 Y. & Coll. 55.

The compensation for lands of a corporation allowed to be applied in the redemption of an incumbrance upon other lands of the same corporation, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92. Cambridge Corporation, Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 6 Hare, 30.

Power of Alienation.]—The stat. of the 27 Eliz. c. 20, authorised the corporation of Plymouth to construct a watercourse or conduit for bringing a supply of fresh water from a distance to Plymouth, for public objects, as, for the supply of the ships and town, and to scour the haven. Mills were erected on the watercourse, and the corporation afterwards conveyed away a portion of their interest in the leat:—Held, that the corporation had undertaken the performance of a public trust, and could not divest themselves of the means of fully executing it; that the primary duty of the corporation was to provide for the public objects contemplated by the act; and that the surplus water only, after satisfying the public purposes, could be applied to the use of the mills. The court also considered it to be doubtful whether the corporation could alienate the watercourse, or any part, for satisfying their own debt. Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth Corporation, 9 Beav. 67; 15 L. J., Ch. 109.

Primâ facie a municipal corporation has full power to dispose of all its property, like a private individual, and it lies on the person alleging the contrary to establish a trust. Evan v. Avon Corporation, 29 Beav. 144; 30 L. J., Ch. 165; 6 Jur. 1361; 9 W. R. 84.

The attorney-general has power to restrain, or afterwards impeach, the alienation of corporate property made pending the granting of the charter. S. C., 33 Beav. 67; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1117; 8 L. T. 594; 11 W. R. 709. Affirmed, 9 L. T. 187.

General right of corporations, of whatever nature at law, to alienate their lands, held in fee, subject as to ecclesiastical corporations to the restraining statutes; and no instance of a trust attached upon the ground of misapplication, as not to corporate purposes, except the case of corporations holding to charitable uses. Colchester Corporation v. Lowten, 1 Ves. & B. 226; 12 R. R. 216.

—— Consent of Commissioners.]—The consent of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to the alienation of the property of a corporation required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 94, is sufficiently signified by a letter signed by their secretary. Such consent can authorise no alienation or charge of the corporate property, further than is specified in the memorial on which it is founded. Arnold v. Gravesend Corporation, 2 Kay & J. 574; 25 L. J., Ch. 776; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 703; 4 W. R. 478.

Taking in Execution.]—Execution cannot by virtue of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, be had against the property of a corporation, acquired since the passing of that statute, in satisfaction of a debt contracted by the old corporation. Arnold v. Rigge, 13 C. B. 745; 1 C. L. R. 309; 22 L. J., C. P. 235; 17 Jur. 896; 1 W. R. 389.

Vesting of Property on Incorporation—Transfer of Stock.]—The words "council of such borough" in s. 310 of the Public Health Act, 1875, mean the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council. The effect of the section, therefore, is that, when the district of a local board is incorporated as a borough, all the property of the board (including property acquired by them by purchase after the passing of the act) vests at once in the corporation, without the necessity of any conveyance or transfer. In such a case the Bank of England are bound, on the request of the corporation, to register in their corporate name government stock previously standing in the books of the bank in the name of the local board, without requiring any transfer to be executed. Hyde Corporation v. Bank of England, 51 L. J., Ch. 747; 21 Ch. D. 176; 46 L. T. 910; 30 W. R. 790.

Repairs to Pew.]—A corporation had, during all the time of living memory, repaired from the corporation funds a pew in a parish church, to which the members of the corporation had been used, in their character of corporators, to resort for worship. It did not appear that the corporation possessed any hall or other building within the parish:—Held, that such repairs might be defrayed, from time to time, under s. 92 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. Reg. v. Warwick Corporation, 15 L. J., Q. B. 306; 10 Jur. 962.

Fees.]—Fees, which a justices' clerk in a borough is authorised to take, by a table regularly allowed and confirmed, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 124, in respect of charges against persons apprehended and brought before the borough justices by constables appointed by the watch committee, disposed of by such justices, and which fees the clerk to the justices cannot recover from such person or persons, either on account of their not being specifically imposed on them by acts of parliament, or from their inability to pay, are expenses necessarily incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of the act, under s. 92; and a mandamus will go to direct their payment out of the borough fund. Reg. v. Gloucester Corporation, D. & M. 677; 5 Q. B. 862; 13 L. J., Q. B. 233; 8 Jur. 573.

Improvement not Specifically Authorised—Freeing Bridge from Toll—Agreement for, not Void, but Borough Fund not Applicable, excepting any Accidental Surplus.]—See Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation v. Att.-Gen., col. 602.

Non-Rateability of.]—Property forming part of the borough fund, which, by the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 92, is to be applied to purposes that are for the public benefit of the borough, is not rateable to the relief of the poor. Reg. v. Liverpool Corporation, 9 Ad. & E. 435; 8 L. J., M. C. 41.

A municipal corporation is not rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of its property, although outside the limits of the borough. Reg. v. Exminster, 9 L. J., M. C. 108.

Property Subject to Charitable Trust.]—A testator, in 1586, devised a manor to trustees for the founding, by the mayor and aldermen of Bristol, of a hospital for the education of poor infants and orphans, and that they should be for ever the governors of the same. Queen Elizabeth, by a charter, ordained that the mayor and common council, and their successors, should be called "The Governors of the Hospital of Queen Elizabeth of Bristol," and should have the government of all the orphans, and of all the lands, tenements, &c., and should be a body corporate and politic of itself, for ever capable of holding lands. The hospital and lands continued vested in the mayor and common council down to the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. By s. 71, where the body corporate of any borough shall stand seised of any estate or interest of any hereditaments in trust for charitable uses or trusts, all the estate, right, interest and title, and all the powers of such body corporate, in respect of the uses and trusts, shall continue in the persons who, at the time of the passing of the act, were trustees, until the 1st of August, 1836, or until parliament shall otherwise order. Provided that, if parliament shall not otherwise direct on or before the 1st of August, 1836, the lord chancellor shall make such orders as he should see fit for the administration, subject to such charitable uses or trusts, of such trust estates. No act of parliament was passed on the subject prior to the 19th of October, 1836, on which day the lord chancellor appointed new trustees of the hospital lands:—Held, first, that the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71, was that the estate and interest in the uses and trusts only, and not in the legal estate, were continued in those in whom it was vested by the act up to the 1st of August, 1836; secondly, that the legal estate remained, and always had been, vested in the corporation, the 71st section affecting only the equitable interest or right of administering the charitable funds; and therefore that the corporation was entitled to recover the lands in ejectment. Doe d. Bristol Hospital of Queen Elizabeth Governors v. Norton, 11 M. & W. 913; 12 L. J., Ex. 418; 7 Jur. 751.

Semble, that if property is granted to a corporation, subject to a payment for charitable purposes imposed by the grantor, this falls under the provisions of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71; and that s. 68 applies, not to such property, but to cases where the payment has been made by the gift of the corporation itself. Rex v. Sankey, 5 A. & E. 423; 6 N. & M. 839; 2 H. & W. 275; 5 L. J., K. B. 255.

Property of Hospital—Purchase by Corporation.]—A hospital having a corporate charter was established in close connection with a municipal corporation. The ex-mayor was to be the governor, the masters and assistants were elected from the corporation, and the mayor and aldermen were visitors:—Held, that the corporation and hospital were incapable of contracting, and a purchase by the corporation of property belonging to the hospital was set aside. Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth Corporation, 9 Beav. 67; 15 L. J., Ch. 109.

b. How Charge objected to.

Mandamus.]—An order made by a town council for the payment by the treasurer of a sum of money out of the borough fund having been brought up by certiorari and quashed, a mandamus was applied for, commanding the town council to cause the treasurer of the borough to render an account for the purpose of having that sum of money restored to the borough fund. The court discharged the rule, upon the ground that there had been no demand upon the town council, and subsequently refused a second application, founded upon a demand and refusal made since the first. Reg v. Stamford Corporation, 9 Jur. 159.

The court will not grant a mandamus to the mayor of a borough to hold a fresh meeting of the ratepayers of the borough for the purpose of granting or withholding their consent to the incurring by the governing body of a borough the expense of opposing a bill in parliament under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, after a prior meeting has been held where a poll has been refused, in order that at the fresh meeting a poll of the ratepayers of the borough may be taken, upon the application of a ratepayer of the borough, who is also one of the promoters of the bill. Reg. v. Peterborough Corporation, 44 L. J., Q. B. 85; 23 W. R. 343.

Register of Owners and Proxies, whether necessary—Poll.]—The town council of a borough is not bound, under the Public Health Act, 1875, sched. II. r. 19, to keep a register of owners and proxies for the purpose of taking a poll in the borough with respect to the application, under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 91, of the borough funds in opposing local and personal bills in parliament. Ward v. Sheffield Corporation, 56 L. J., Q. B. 418; 19 Q. B. D. 22.

By Certiorari.]—Where an order for payment of money out of a borough fund is brought up by certiorari, and quashed with costs, the court should decide, when the quashing is ordered, who is to be charged with the costs as the prosecutor of the order, and the name of such party should be inserted in the rule. Reg. v. Dunn, D. & M. 737; 5 Q. B. 959; 13 L. J., Q. B. 237; 8 Jur. 773.

An order signed by the mayor, at the meeting of a town council properly convened, and in which the majority concurred, for payment of certain illegal expenses and sum of money out of the borough fund, may be removed by certiorari, though it is not signed by three members of the council, and countersigned by the town clerk, according to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 59. Reg. v. Lichfield Town Council, D. & M. 491; 4 Q. B. 670; 12 L. J., Q. B. 308; 7 Jur. 670.

Where an order of the council of a borough for the payment of a sum of money out of the borough fund is removed by certiorari, objections not appearing upon the face of it may be shown by affidavits. Reg. v. Lichfield Town Council, 10 Q. B. 534; 16 L. J., Q. B. 333; 11 Jur. 888.

The court is not bound either wholly to confirm, or wholly to disallow, the order of the council of a borough, brought before it by certiorari, but has a discretion over the order as well as over the costs, and therefore no less power to modify than either to confirm or disallow the order. Reg. v. Prest, 16 Q. B. 33; 20 L. J., Q. B. 17; 15 Jur. 554.

X. BOROUGH BY-LAWS.

And see cases, post, B. IX. (col. 644).

See Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 23, 24.

Validity—Prohibition of Music in Street.]—A by-law made by the council of a borough under s. 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, provided that no person not being a member of her majesty's army or auxiliary forces, acting under the orders of his commanding officer, should sound or play upon any musical instrument, in any of the streets in the borough on Sunday:—Held, that such by-law was unreasonable and ultra vires, and therefore void. Johnson v. Croydon Corporation, 55 L. J., M. C. 117; 16 Q. B. D. 708; 54 L. T. 295; 50 J. P. 487.

Sect. 90 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, gives powers to boroughs to make by-laws for the good rule and government of the borough, and for the prevention of all such nuisances as are not already punishable in a summary way. Under these powers the city of Truro made the following by-law:—"Every person who shall sound or play upon any musical instrument, or sing or make any noise whatsoever in any street, or near any house within the said borough, after having been required by any householder resident in any street or house, or by any police constable, to desist from making such sounds or noises, either on account of any illness of any inmate of such house, or for any reasonable cause," &c. Edwin Gay was summoned before the justices of Truro, on the 13th October, 1883, and convicted by them of an offence against the above by-law, and fined 2*l.* 2*s.* and costs. It was proved that Gay was a captain in the Salvation Army, and that on the morning of Sunday the 7th October, he was in Victoria Square, Truro, playing a concertina, and surrounded by a large crowd; that he was requested by the superintendent of police to desist from playing the concertina, but he refused to do so, the superintendent at the same time telling him that he had reasonable cause for asking him to desist, as several complaints had been made by the inhabitants. It was also proved that on many previous occasions the Salvation Army had marched through the streets, playing musical instruments, tambourines, and triangles; that they had been frequently cautioned and required to desist, as many complaints had been made of their proceedings. On a rule for a certiorari to remove the conviction into this court:—Held, that the by-law was not unreasonable, and that the conviction thereunder ought to stand; also that there was reasonable cause for calling on the prosecutor to desist from playing. Reg. v. Powell, 51 L. T. 92; 48 J. P. 740.

A by-law made by the town council of a borough under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 90, provided that every person who in any street should sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument, or should sing, recite, or preach in any street without having previously obtained a licence in writing from the mayor; and every person who, having obtained such licence, should fail to observe, or should act contrary to any of the conditions of such licence, should forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 20*s.*, and not less than 1*s.*:—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable and ultra vires, and therefore void. Munro v. Watson, 57 L. T. 366; 51 J. P. 660.

B. used a concertina in a street in a borough, a by-law of which, made under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, prohibited the use of any noisy instrument to the annoyance of any of the inhabitants. The justices found it was a noisy instrument, and some inhabitants proved being annoyed:—Held, that it was not necessary to prove that the instrument was a public nuisance to all the inhabitants, and that the by-law was not ultra vires. Booth v. Howell, 53 J. P. 678.

See Innes v. Newman, infra.

—— Prohibition of Juvenile Street Vendors.]—The N. corporation made a by-law that parents should be liable to a penalty if they suffered a child to be selling articles in the street after a certain hour:—Held, that the by-law was in excess of the powers given by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, as being too general and absolute, and void. Macdonald v. Lochrane, 51 J. P. 629.

—— Prohibition of Slaughter-houses.]—A by-law that no person should slaughter animals within the walls of a city under certain penalties, is good, because merely a regulation of trade, and not a restraint, and other inhabitants are bound, as well as the members of the corporation. Pierce v. Bartrum, Cowp. 269.

—— Regulation of Trades.]—The common council of the city of London has by custom a right to make ordinances for regulating carts worked within the city for hire, restraining their number, licensing them, and regulating the manner in which they should be licensed A by-law was made in common council, that 420 of such carts, and no more, should, by the president and governors of Christ's Hospital, be allowed or licensed to work for hire within the city:—Held, that such by-law was supported by the custom; and that the discretionary power of licensing was rightly and ex necessitate delegated by the common council to a smaller body. Shaw v. Pope, 2 B. & Ad. 465.
